THE TREASURE-SEEKER.

BY GOETHE

MANY weary days I suffered,
Sick of heart and poor of purse;
Riches are the greatest blessing—
Poverty the deepest curse!
Till at last to dig a treasure,
Forth I went into the wood—
"Friend! my soul is thine for ever!"
And I signed the scroll with blood.

Then I drew the magic-circles,
Kindled the mysterious fire,
Placed the herbs and bones in order,
Spoke the incantation dire.
And I sought the buried metal
With a spell of mickle might—
Sought it as my master taught me;
Black and stormy was the night.

And I saw a light appearing
In the distance like a star;
When the midnight hour was tolling,
Came it flashing from afar;
Came it flashing, swift and sudden;
As if fiery wine it were,
Flowing from an open chalice,
Which a beauteous boy did bear.

And he wore a lustrous chaplet,
And his eyes were full of thought;
And he stepp'd into the circle,
With the radiance that he brought.
And he bade me taste the goblet;
And I thought—"It cannot be,
That this boy should be the bearer
Of the demon's gift to me!"

"Taste the draught of pure existence,
Sparkling in this golden urn,
And no more with baneful magic
Shalt thou hitherward return.
Do not dig for treasure longer;
Let thy future speed-words be
Days of labor, nights of resting;
So shall peace return to thee!"

GOLD HUNTING—TWO PICTURES.

The First Picture.

Extract from a letter from Thos. O. Larkin, Esq., late Consul, and now Navy Agent of the United States, to the Secretary of State, dated at Monterey, November 16th, 1848:

The digging and washing for gold continues to increase on the Sacramento placer, so far as regards the number of persons engaged in the business, and the size and quantity of the gold obtained.

I have had in my hands several pieces of gold, about twenty-three carats fine, weighing from one to two pounds, and have it from good authority, that pieces have been obtained sixteen pounds in weight. Indeeed, I have even heard of one specimen which weighed twenty-five pounds. There are many men at the placer, who in June last had not one hundred dollars, now in possession of from five to twenty thousand dollars, which they made by digging gold and trading with the Indians. Several, I believe, made more.

A common calico shirt, or even a silver dollar, has been taken by an Indian for gold, without regard to size; and a half to one ounce of gold—say eight to sixteen dollars—is now considered the price of a shirt, while the price of a blanket is from three to ten ounces. One hundred dollars a day, for several days in succession, was and is considered a fair remuneration for the labor of a gold-digger, though few work over a month at a time, as the fatigue is very great. From July to October one half of the gold diggers have been afflicted either with fever and ague or the intermittent fever, and twenty days absence from the placer during those months is necessary to escape the diseases. There have not been many fatal cases, however.

The gold is now sold, from the smallest imaginary piece in size to one pound weight, at sixteen dollars per troy ounce, for all the purposes of commerce; but those who are under the necessity of raising coin to pay duties to the Government, are obliged to accept from ten to eleven dollars an ounce. All the coin in California is likely to be locked up in the vault of the Custom-House, as the last tariff of Congress is in force here in regard to the receipt of money.

The Second Picture.

Extracts from an article published in the St. Louis Republican, and addressed to a company of adventurers about to start from that city for California by the overland route:

"Tell me how all have come out that went into the diggings. We hear that six thousand persons are employed, and make from eight to thirty-two dollars per day. Who gets the money? Not those who dig and toil, but the trader and speculator, and he who hires hands and shows them where to dig, furnishes tools and the means of living. The laborer, as in this country, barely makes a living. You hear a flaming account of how one Mr. Smith or Mr. Brown has made in one week $1,500. He might have gambled among the laborers, traded with them, and in a thousand other ways obtained the fruit of their labor, but the particulars are not given that he stripped off his coat and jacket, with spade and pick in hand, waded into the earth hat-band deep, into a hole, and dug out the pure stuff. How was it in Peru, one of the richest mining countries on the face of the globe? In the lead mines, and all other mining operations throughout the world? Does every one come out rich—full of gold? Does every tenth man, every fiftieth or hundredth man, better his condition, and become wealthy, after years of trouble and toil? Just look at the Galena lead mines and the surrounding country, in 1827, where there were fifty thousand men at work. How many came out well? Not one-half, not even the quarter, or hundredth man. So with the Potosi mines; and so with all others." * *

"By the time you reach the Gold Regions, you will have expended some two hundred dollars, worn out all your clothes, become weary from the long march, eat up all you carried with you, had all your tools stolen from you, weak, sick, and unable to work, without friends to administer to your wants, without a comfortable house or home—thrown in among thousands of idle, dissipated, unfeeling brutes, intent on gain; penniless, poor, and without strength, or friends to assist you; surrounded by vulgar, rough and uncouth rowdies, all engrossed in the pursuit of gold—tattered, ragged, and morose—without law, discipline or control—every one his own master—stealing here and lying there—inventing schemes to deprive the unsuspecting of their prospects and gains—laying hands on everything palatable, wearable, and useful; where might and strength determine right, though wrong 'and coward guilt to sheltering caverns fly,' until sickness, disease, and death close the scene. Then you can easily imagine worse than this picture—human vultures preying upon your carcase, like cannibals gormandizing, in their hoarse laugh over fallen victims! It is, nevertheless, truer than fiction—the certain results of rash and premature enterprise." * * *

"Before I would lie out on the cold ground, among Indians, wolves, snakes lizards, half starved for want of food, famished for water, three or four months, and dig in the dirt and mud day after day, three thousand miles from home, for three or four months more, for a few glittering sands, away from domestic happiness, friends, and earthly comforts, with a competence for life; before I would quit father and mother, brothers and sisters, wife, children and friends, and travel two thousand miles over a dreary desert, among wild beasts, and more than savage Indians, to get a handful of gold, suffer sickness, diseases, fevers, and all the ills this life is heir to, I would turn into a dog, and hire somebody to kill me."

ENCOUNTER WITH A PRAIRIE WOLF.

I have never known these animals, rapacious as they are, extend their attacks to man, though they probably would if very hungry, and a favorable opportunity presented itself. I shall not soon forget an adventure with one of them, many years ago, on the frontiers of Missouri. Riding near the prairie border, I perceived one of the largest and fiercest of the gray species, which had just descended. I at once prepared for a chase, and being without arms, I caught up a cudgel, when I betook me valiantly to the charge, much stronger, I soon discovered, in my cause than in my equipment. The wolf was in no humor to flee, however, but boldly met me full half way. I was soon disarmed, for my club broke upon the animal's head. He then 'laid to' my horse's legs, who, not relishing the conflict, made a plunge, and sent me whirling over his head, and made his escape, leaving me and the wolf at close quarters. I was no sooner upon my feet, than my antagonist renewed the charge; but being without weapon, or any means of awakening an emotion of terror, save through his imagination, I took off my large black hat, and using it for a shield, began to thrust it towards his gaping jaws. My ruse had the desired effect; for, after springing at me a few times, he wheeled about and trotted off several paces, and stopped to gaze at me. Being apprehensive that he might change his mind and return to the attack, and conscious that, under the compromise, I had the best of the bargain, I very resolutely took to my heels, glad of the opportunity of making a draw game, though I had myself given the challenge.

NELSON.

Human nature is very frail. No man ever had a stronger sense of it under the influence of a sense of justice, than Lord Nelson. He was loath to inflict punishment, and when he was obliged, as he called it, 'to endure the torture of seeing men flogged,' he came out of the cabin with a hurried step, ran into the gangway, made his bow to the General, and, reading the articles of war the culprit had infringed, said, 'Boatswain, do your duty.' The lash was instantly applied, and, consequently, the culprit cried, 'Forgive me, admiral, forgive me!' On such occasions, Lord Nelson would look around with with wild anxiety, and, as all his officers kept silence, he would say, 'What! will none of you speak for him? Avast! cast him off!' And then add to the suffering man, 'Jack, in the day of battle remember me!' and he became thenceforth a good fellow. A poor man was about to be flogged, a landsman, and few pitied him. His offence was drunkenness. As he was about to be tied up, a lovely girl, contrary to all rules, rushed through the officers, and, falling on her knees, clasped Nelson's hand, in which were the articles of war, exclaiming, 'Pray forgive him, your honor, and he shall never offend again!' 'Your face,' said the admiral, 'is sufficient security for his good behaviour. Let him go; the man cannot be bad who has such a lovely creature in his care.' This man subsequently became a lieutenant; his name was Pye.

SINGULAR DISEASE OF THE EYE.—The Glasgow (Canada) Chronicle says that a singular case recently occurred at the Glasgow eye infirmary. A girl of sixteen years of age, having applied on account of blindness of one eye, the cause was ascertained to be the presence of a living worm hyatid, (the cysticer cus of scientific naturalists,) in the eye, close before the pupil, which it completely obstructed. This species of animal consists of a round bag about the size of a small pea, from which on one side springs the body, which is a filament, consisting of numerous rings, and capable of being elongated and retracted at the creature's will. The body ends in the neck and head, and the latter is supplied with four lateral suckers. All this was plain to the naked eye in this instance, but was still more so when the animal was viewed through a microscope. As the existence of such a creature in the interior of the eye not only prevents vision, but ultimately destroys the whole texture of the organ, it was resolved to remove it by operation. This was successfully effected. The patient behaved with perfect steadiness, and found her vision immediately restored. The animal continued to live for upwards of an hour after being extracted. As only four similar cases are on record, the worm excited much curiosity, and was examined by many.

MEXICAN WOMEN.—A recent traveler in Mexico says that while the men have often been censured for their indolence, mendacity, treachery, and cruelty, the women are active, affectionate, open-hearted, and even faithful, when their affections are reciprocated. Though generally not initiated in the arts of reading and writing, the females possess, nevertheless, a strong common sense, and natural sympathy for every suffering being, be it friend or foe; which compensates them in some degree for the want of a rational education. The ill-usage of the Texan prisoners, is but one of the numerous instances where the cruelties of the Mexican men, were mitigated by the disinterested kindness of the women.

A LITTLE WATCH.—The New Orleans Picayune of the 5th ult., notices a most astonishing piece of mechanism in the form of a watch, at the store of Mr. Louis Muh, in that city. It is a perfect bijou, says the Picayune, and was made by Mr. Augustus Matthey of Geneva, and was over three years in construction. Of course, he was only occupied at intervals in producing this extraordinary piece of workmanship. This wonderful time-piece is perfect; keeps good time. It is about as thick as three half-dimes laid upon one another—including case, crystal, and all—and measures just half the size of a half-dime. It has a spring-case of enamel, gold dial, and steel hands, cylinder escapement, with ten holes jeweled in ruby, it runs twenty-five hours without winding up. Besides, it is so arranged as to admit of being worn in a broach or finger-ring. It is a rare curiosity. Mr. Muh authorizes us to say, that he will give one thousand dollars reward to any watchmaker who will produce a smaller watch in the space of two years. He also goes further, and says he will pay any one who will take the watch to pieces and put it together again, one hundred dollars—provided they first deposit fifteen hundred dollars, its estimated value, as a guarantee not to ruin it in the attempt.

THE LAST OF BRADDOCK'S MEN.—The Lancaster (Ohio) Gazette announces the death, at that place, on the 4th instant, of Samuel Jenkins, a colored man, aged one hundred and fifteen years. He was born a slave, the property of Captain Baoadwater, in Fairfax county, Virginia, in 1734. He drove his master's provision wagon over the Alleghany Mountains in the memorable campaign of Gen. Braddock, and remained in the service at the Big Meadows until its close. He continued a slave until about forty years ago, when, upon the death of his master, he was purchased by a gentlemen who brought him to the State of Ohio, and thus released him from bondage. Soon after his liberation he settled in Lancaster, where he continued to reside until his death. Although his bodily frame had given way he retained his mental faculties to the last. It is thought that he was the last man living, either white or colored, who served in Braddock's expedition, 1755, against the French and Indians, and which terminated on the banks of the Monongahela, twelve miles above Pittsburg, so fatally to the British General and his troops, and so much to the military reputation of Washington then a young man.

LADY JANE GREY.—A London paper says that in the course of some excavation in the Minories, for the formation of a sewer which is being constructed by order of the City Commissioners, and which will extend in various directions about two miles, a perfect skeleton (that of a female) was found in a maiden earth, at a depth of about twenty feet from the surface, and not far from Towerhill. The teeth were firm in the jaws, and the enamel on them was almost as pure as when first placed in the earth, which must now be some hundred years ago. It is said by some of the inhabitants of the neighborhood, that Lady Jane Grey was buried about this spot. A few days previous, on Towerhill, at some distance from the above spot, some human skulls, an ancient sword and buckle, several coins, &c., were discovered. The above female skull, which is finely formed, is in the possession of Mr. Cook, Jr., the contractor of the works, who reïnterred the other remains.

AN ANTEDILUVIAN RELIC.—The public have perhaps already had notice of some bones lately dug on the top of a mountain in Vermont. In crossing the mountain a few days since, I called to examine them. Enough has been excavated to enable an anatomist to make out the size and shape of the animal, and his habits of life. One of the tusks measures six feet seven inches, and weighs thirty-six pounds. The material, its color and texture, resembles horn, but its shape is more like a tusk. A single tooth weighs seven pounds. These remains were scattered about in miry earth, eight or ten feet beneath the surface. The pair of tusks or horns were one hundred feet apart. That it is an antediluvian animal there can be no doubt. The men at work on the railroad, who found him, thought he came down to drink, and sunk in the mire. But it is not improbable that he perished when the windows of heaven were opened—when the fountains of the great deep were broken up—when the swelling floods of the sea rolled up the mountain side.

PAUPERS IN MASSACHUSETTS.—The abstract of the Annual Returns of the Overseer of the Poor of Massachusetts for the year ending November 1st, 1848, has recently been submitted to the Legislature. From forty-one towns no returns were received, but in the 174 alms-houses in those heard from, the number of persons supported as paupers is given at 18,693—of whom 7,166 have a legal settlement in the Commonwealth; 9,431 are State paupers, and 6,707 are Foreigners from England and Ireland; the number of foreign paupers who have come into the State during the year was 1,494. Beside these, 9,817 persons have been aided or supported out of the alms-house, at an average weekly cost of a fraction less than one dollar and eight cents.

A PROPHETIC JEST BY LOUIS PHILIPPE.—A few years ago, a very distinguished nobleman, Lord B——m, having had the honor of dining with the King in the unceremonious manner in which he delighted to withdraw himself from the trammels of State, the conversation was carried on as if between two equals, and his majesty, inter alia, remarked that he was the 'only sovereign in Europe fit to fill a throne in Europe.' Lord B——m, somewhat staggered by this piece of egotism, muttered out some trite compliments, upon the great talent for government which his royal entertainer displayed, &c., &c., when the King burst into a loud fit of laughter, and exclaimed, 'No, no, it is net that I mean; but kings are at such a discount in our days, that there is no knowing what may happen; and I am the only monarch who cleans his own boots.'

Shadrack Barnes, who was tried and convicted at Madison (Kentucky) Circuit Court, of the murder of Agee in May last, and sentenced to be hung on the 2d of February, committed suicide by hanging himself on Thursday night.

POLYNESIAN ITEMS.

Three vessels cleared from Honolulu for California the week ending August 26, and one man started in a whale-boat.

The gold stories from California, told in Honolulu, are quite as extravagant, perhaps more so, than here. A mountain of pure gold, somewhere in the Sierra Nevada, is said to exist, from which all that have yet been found are mere washings.

The Tahitians fired one hundred guns for the new French Republic, and promptly silenced a few grumblers thereat. At Honolulu there was the same joy among the French residents, and an address was forwarded to Lamartine.

At Monalau, Messrs. Sea & Summer gave His Majesty a grand dinner, after which the sport of target-shooting was the order of the day. The Governor of Oohu blew off one of his fingers with a revolver, whereupon the scene was changed, and riding wild horses concluded the sports of the day.

The Valparaiso Neighbor records forty severe shocks of earthquake within sixteen months.

The Oregonians voted at their legislative election, by a small majority, to refuse licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors.

VARIETY.

When Benedict Arnold was about to die, he rose from his bed, and with difficulty clothed himself in an old suit of the American uniform, with which he had never parted during all his peregrinations; and then, with the name of his country upon his lips, he expired. Poor Arnold! but for one false step no general officer in the Revolution would have reaped more honor than he. A braver man never existed—and his perseverance and energy in his Canada campaign were alone enough to immortalize him.

The insipid French novels, says Bishop Potter, with which our country is deluged, are the seeds of robbery, arson, piracy, and assassination. They give false views of life, and taint with every touch. It is absurd to call them literature at all. But, it may be asked, do they shine? Yes, like rotten logs, or a putrescent carcass, which is phosphorescent because it is decayed. When our people learn to read good books only, then may we look for a return of good morals, and not till then.

A French medical writer states that the practice in the Hotel Dieu, when leeches refuse to suck blood, is to wrap them for a few moments in a linen cloth wrung out of undiluted wine. This renders the most sluggish of them so fierce, that they will pierce the skin instantly, and gorge their blood-thirsty bodies till they can drink no more. A great many men, who are naturally amiable, become as blood-thirsty as leeches, and manifest an irresistible propensity to bite, after being steeped in wine, either undiluted or mixed.

A French teacher resident in Oxford, named Ducance, called upon Mr. Wickham for a vest pattern, but could not recollect the name of the material he wanted. He said he thought it was 'de English for de diable.' Mr. Wickham very politely called over the several appellations of his infernal Majesty—Old Nick, Beelzebub, &c. 'No, no, it vas not zat,' was the reply. At length Mr. W. thought of Satan. 'Ah, zat is him,' said Mounseer, 'I vant a satan vestcoat.'

The New Jersey State Prison Reports were made to the Legislature at Trenton on the 17th instant. On the 31st of December, 1847, there were in the prison one hundred and fifty-three convicts, since which time the number has increased to two hundred and sixty-one. Of these, seventy-one have been discharged during the same period upon the expiration of their sentences, twelve by pardon, (four of them pardoned one day before the expiration of their term,) and two died—one by suicide; making altogether eighty-five; leaving in confinement on the first day of this year one hundred and seventy-six prisoners.

From sundry recent experiments, the fact is established, that fine saw-dust or rasped wood, steeped in a mixture of concentrated sulphuric and nitric acids, and afterwards washed and dried, will explode similar to common gunpowder, and, if rightly managed, with much greater force. The greatest wonder about it is, that it was not discovered earlier.

A short time since, in Hartfordshire, were written on a grave rail these lines—

'Remember me as you pass by,
As you are now, so once was I;
Therefore prepare to follow me.'

Underneath was written—

'To follow you I'm not content,
Unless I know which way you went.'

The following example of mal-punctuation strongly illustrates the necessity of putting stops in their proper places,—Cæsar entering upon his head, his helmet on his feet, armed sandals upon his brow, there was a cloud upon his right hand, his faithful sword in his eye, an angry and glare saying nothing, he sat down.

Human knowledge is a proud pillar, but it is erected in the midst of a desert of ignorance, and those who have ascended the highest, have only gained a more extended view of the waste.

If the plague had offices to bestow, the plague would find worshipers, said Madame de Stael.

The Legislature of Louisiana have appropriated the sum of one thousand dollars for the purpose of supporting public schools for children of color.

Mr. James Thompson, Junior, of East Haven, Connecticut, while on his passage from N. York to Philadelphia, on the 6th instant, lost or was robbed of a parcel of money in bills, amounting to $1,800.

A French religious and literary journal is proposed to be published in this city, by Rev. C. H. Williamson, Rector of the church du St. Saveur. It is to be called 'L'Annaliste Religieux et Litteraire,' and is to be issued weekly.

THE fourth volume of this magazine commenced with January, 1849. It aspires to be, both in the character of its articles and in its mechanical execution, a model of taste and excellence; and it is universally conceded that it stands at the head of all works of its class. The following are a few of the many commendatory notices of the press, in different parts of the Union, which the magazine has received:—

"It is beautifully illustrated, and evinces great ability and interest."—N. Y. Evangelist.

"The editor is one of our best writers for the young."—N. Y. Com. Adv.

"We know of no journal devoted to the interests of the youth of our country, that will compare with this, either in the beauty of its appearance, or the rich and varied excellence of its contents."—N. Y. Christ. Mess.

"It is full of pleasing things, finely illustrated, and familiarly described."—N. Y. Obs.

"Whatever the editor does is well done, and in a sweet and gentle spirit. His pretty monthly is commendable in all respects, and wonderfully cheap"—N. Y. Christ. Inq.

"The Cabinet still maintains its supremacy as the first and most beautiful juvenile in the land."—Hartford Repub.

"Its contents are scarcely susceptible of any improvement, the work having attained a pre-eminence among works published for the young."—Sentinel, Fort Wayne, Ind.

"A prettier thing of the kind could scarcely be imagined." —Balt. Meth. Prot.

"The best and cheapest youth's magazine in the country." —Courier, Zanesville, Ohio.

"This, as we have before told our readers, best fills our idea of what a magazine for children ought to be."—Windham Co. Dem., Brattleborough, Vt.

"It gives us pleasure to recommend this magazine to our Southern friends. Our more intimate acquaintance with it serves only to increase our favorable opinion of it."—Balt. West. Continent.

ALLEDGED CHANGE OF THE SABBATH AT THE RESURRECTION OF CHRIST.

[Section X. of J. A. Begg's Treatise on the Sabbath.]
[Concluded.]

Even if the interpretation given to the words of the Pharisee by those who vindicate a change of the Sabbath were correct, the utmost advantage fairly derived from this admission would be a proof that the word employed has these two significations of week and Sabbath. And then, for this one instance of its signifying week, that it has the signification of Sabbath in almost every other case, being the only word ever used in the New Testament for the weekly Sabbath, is what no person would attempt to deny. And if the word had these two significations, this fact would just render it necessary for us, in every instance in which it is used, to seek to discover which of these meanings it is there intended to have. Here we should then be led to ask, when the Evangelists give the account of our Lord's resurrection, do they mean to use this word of two significations in the sense in which on the one single instance it has been supposed to be used by the Pharisee, or do the Evangelists mean to use it in the sense in which it is commonly employed? For even on the supposition that the word might signify week, we are not entitled to assume that this is the sense which is here intended, contrary to more common usage. Now there is the farther difference between the two cases, that the word employed in reference to our Lord's resurrection is in the plural, while in the case of the Pharisee's fast, which we have been considering, it is in the singular. If the language of the Pharisee could be translated, "I fast twice in the week," we require to remember, that a corresponding translation in the account of our Lord's resurrection would read "of the weeks." However it may be explained, or whatever the interpretation given, this is the fact, and it is not to be forgotten in seeking the meaning of the text.

And we have to take farther into consideration, that in each account of the resurrection, and in the immediate context of the disputed text, the same Greek word is used indisputably to express "the Sabbath," and is also so rendered. The same word which in Matt. 28: 1 is translated week (in "the first day of the week,") is, in the beginning of the same verse, rendered Sabbath ("in the end of the Sabbath;") in Mark 16: 2, the same word which is rendered "week" ("the first day of the week") is translated "Sabbath" in the first verse ("when the Sabbath was past;") in Luke 24: 1, it is the same word which is rendered "week" ("upon the first day of the week,") that is translated "Sabbath day" in the last verse of the preceding chapter, ("and rested the Sabbath day, according to the commandment;") in John 20: 1, it is the same word which is rendered "week," ("the first day of the week,") which is twice translated "Sabbath," a few verses before, when we are informed of the desire of the Jews, "that the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the Sabbath day, for that Sabbath day was an high day." John 19: 31. Is it then to be assumed, that the inspired penmen thus use the word Sabbath to express both "Sabbath" and "week" indiscriminately, without indicating in any manner when they mean it to be understood in the one sense, and when in the other? Is it in the least degree probable, that all of the Evangelists should in the same connection employ the word "Sabbath" in its usual signification, as confessedly they do, and that when immediately afterwards they write "of the Sabbaths," they now intend that we should read "of the week?"

The Scriptures neither attach importance to the particular day of the week upon which Christ's resurrection took place, nor give us express information concerning it. If it is to be ascertained at all, it is only in the way of inference. With the ordinary view, however, of the time at which He was crucified and interred, we do not see how it is possible that the resurrection could have been on the morning of the first day. It is assumed that he was taken from the cross and laid in the tomb on Friday evening, about sunset, and that he arose from the dead on Sunday morning, immediately after dawn. It was "when the even was come," (Matt. 27: 57, 58; Mark 15: 42,) and therefore when this day was past, that Joseph went to Pilate even to beg the body. But supposing that the day had not fully expired, and that there still remained a small portion of its time when the body was laid in the sepulchre; the Saviour would then have been entombed only—

| Days, | Nights, |
|---|---|
| Friday afternoon—a short time, | Sabbath night, |
| Sabbath—whole day, | Sunday night. |
| Sunday morning—a short time. | |

We should have thus one entire day and brief parts of other two, the representatives of "three days." But we have only two "nights." This, however, is not in accordance with our Lord's own prediction of the duration of His continuance in the tomb. His declaration on this point is very explicit: "For as Jonah was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of Man BE THREE DAYS AND THREE NIGHTS in the heart of the earth." Matt. 12: 40. This is an important declaration; it is a testing truth by which to try the truth of human theories. Tried by it, the current theory is found wanting. And it is also worthy of notice, that the record explicitly affirms that "Jonah was in the belly of the fish, three days and three nights." Jonah 1: 16. We may not doubt, therefore, that in Christ's case, also, it was absolutely fulfilled—that He was not only three days, but also three nights, in the heart of the earth. It was the sign expressly given by the Saviour in proof of His Messiahship—the sign given to His enemies, watchful to find Him in any thing, and in any degree, at fault. It is the prediction of an important truth, often repeated by the Saviour; appealed to repeatedly by His disciples after its accomplishment, and never questioned by any adversary who admitted His resurrection at all. We believe, then, that it was really fulfilled—fulfilled with a degree of truth, and in an accordance with the letter, which the ordinary interpretation does not and cannot exhibit.

We do not question, we do not doubt, that part of a day is in Scripture and Jewish reckoning accepted for a whole. This admits of full and clear proof. But the very same reason which requires at least a part of each of the three days, surely equally demands that the principle be extended to corresponding parts of each of the three nights. Our Lord's declaration is not less strong concerning the three nights than concerning the same number of days, and appears to be much too precise to admit of its having been fulfilled by His being in the tomb only two nights. Yet such is the exact amount of time admitted by the ordinary computation. According to that theory, He is averred to have been crucified on the sixth day of the week (Friday;) He was immediately laid in the tomb. During this night and the following night only, He was in the heart of the earth; for He was already arisen before the women reached the tomb, "very early in the morning" of the ensuing day. We cannot, then, find in this, three days and three nights.

☞ We cheerfully make room for the following article, because it throws a good deal of light upon the subject of which it treats. But we must be permitted to express some doubt as to the correctness of the writer's opinion, that missionary efforts should be directed mainly to the most barbarous and uncivilized nations.

THE GOSPEL EARLY PREACHED IN CHINA.

I have long been of the opinion, that no country was ever civilized until it was Christianized, or taught the precepts and principles of the Christian religion; and that it is our duty, when we attempt to send our missionaries abroad, in obedience to the injunction left us by the great head of the church, to select fields for their labors where the greatest pagan darkness prevails—where the people possess neither the light of Christianity nor the benefits of civilization. Is China a place of this description? I think not. On the contrary, I believe that the Chinese have at some former period enjoyed the blaze of gospel light—that the Gospel was taught them by the apostles and disciples of our Lord in the early dawn of Christianity, but that, through the difficulty of multiplying copies of the Scriptures into their language, their day-star has disappeared, and they are left in heathen darkness, to worship images and idols; still enjoying, however, a high degree of civilization. They build cities equal in extent to any on the earth—possess the mechanic arts in a high degree—cultivate the soil to the best advantage—are for the most part civil and courteous to strangers—enjoy an extensive commerce with most of the civilized world—and last, but not least, the theory of their government, and the administration of their laws, are not surpassed by any nation in existence. Rev. S. W. Williams, late missionary to the East, in his account of China, says:

"We see there the highest stage of civilization which has as yet been attained by any nation independently of Christian institutions. In saying this, we speak advisedly and deliberately, and believe we shall be sustained by a fair comparison of Chinese with Athenian or Roman culture. It has brought agriculture, and many of the arts of practical utility, to a high degree of perfection; and what perhaps proves more conclusively than any other point of comparison its superiority to any form of ancient civilization, it has gained a sufficient ascendancy for self-preservation; and, though it reached its culminating point many centuries ago, it has not yet begun to decline." "From the picture given us of Chinese society, we can imagine no external organization which would minister to its improvement. The people are industrious and frugal, as chaste and temperate as most civilized nations, and distinguished by some virtues, such as respect for age, and filial piety in its most reverential type, which are fast growing obsolete in Christendom."

I think there can no longer remain a doubt of the civilization of China; and, as I have already stated, I have no doubt that they were previously Christianized. But as this is not quite so visible and clear, I will quote a few items from ancient history, and refer those who wish for more extended information, to the life and opinions of Rev. William Milne, D. D., missionary to China; Christian Researches in Asia, by Rev. Claudius Buchanan, L. L. D.; and an Account of China, or a survey of the Chinese Empire and its inhabitants, by S. W. Williams, the latest publication of the kind.

Rev. C. Buchanan, in his Researches in India, says:—

"There have lately been discovered Sanscrit writings containing testimony of Christ. They relate to a prince who reigned about the period of the Christian era, and whose history, though mixed with fable, contains particulars which correspond in a surprising manner with the advent, birth, miracles, death, and resurrection of our Saviour. These important records have been translated by a learned orientalist, and he has deposited the originals among the archives of the Asiatic Society. From these and other documents he has completed a work entitled the History of the Introduction of the Christian Religion into India, its progress, and decline; and at the conclusion of the work, he thus expresses himself: 'I have written this account of Christianity in India, with the impartiality of an historian, fully persuaded that our holy religion cannot receive any additional luster from it.' Again, it may be proved, says Mosheim, by the Syriac records, that in the fourth century Christianity was flourishing in the provinces of Chorasan Mavaralhara; and from a variety of learned testimony, that although it is not certain (though such is the tradition) that the gospel was first introduced into China by the Apostle Thomas himself, it was yet proclaimed there by the first Christian teachers after the Apostolic age. Arnobius, who flourished in the third century, expressly mentions the SERES amongst the people who had then embraced Christianity; and it is universally acknowledged, that the Chinese nation is meant. Again, he says, The antiquity of Christianity is proved by La Croze in the clearest manner; and then argues, that as the archiepiscopal See of China was originally conjoined with that of India, the metropolitan seats must have been chosen at the same time. But why, he asks, should a metropolitan have been appointed, unless the religion of Jesus had been spread far and wide long before, and unless there had been many Bishops?

"In the epitome of the Syrian canons, St. Thomas is called the Apostle of the Hindoos and Chinese. The Syrian chronicles call him the first Bishop of the East; and Ebedjesus says, India and all the regions about received the priesthood from him. Amru, also, the best of the Syrian historians, traces both Thomas and Bartholomew through Arabia and Persia into India and China. And all the Syrian writers quoted by Asseman, agree in stating that a few of the twelve, and many of the seventy disciples, went far into northern Asia, preaching the gospel. Now even Mosheim acknowledges that at a little later period the gospel was carried to China, Seres, and Tartary, and that it was proclaimed there by the first teachers after the Apostolic age.

"Dr. Wilson, the Bishop of Calcutta, calls the Christians of St. Thomas by their right name, when he says, they are an ancient Church preserved in the midst of idolatry from the days of the Apostles. This will be their name and memorial forever, in spite of all verbal criticisms."

"I do not think myself ill employed," says Dr. Milne, "in trying to create public sympathy with the old lights of China, as well as for its present darkness. It probably had the light before Britain, and certainly had more of it in the fifth century than Augustine brought here at the end of the sixth century. Christianity lasted longer at Cambalu (now Pekin) than in some places where the apostles themselves planted it; and remained, while it lasted in the northern capital of China, purer than it was then, or now is, in Rome."

It has long been a question among Christians, why so few of the twelve are mentioned in the acts of the Apostles, if they were on their mission to evangelize the world? But no one, I believe, at that time had ever dreamed that they were as zealously employed in Asia as the others were in Rome and the adjacent countries. "If they were not in Asia, where were they? They were not dead. We cannot trace them in the spheres of Paul, Peter, or John. We cannot believe they were idle, or less faithful to their commissions, than their brethren. We cannot suspect Luke of either partiality or prejudice, in writing the Acts of the Apostles. Thus nothing is so probable as that most of the Apostles, whom we cannot trace in the wide circle of what we call apostolic churches, were in spheres beyond that circle, and especially in the Asiatic spheres, throughout which portions of the ten tribes were scattered, as it was the duty of all the Apostles to begin with the lost sheep of the house of Israel wherever they went preaching the gospel."

Dr. Doddridge, quoting from Dr. Young, says that Jude preached in Persia, Phillip and Andrew in Scythia, Bartholomew in the northern and western parts of Asia, and Thomas in several of the eastern parts; in most of which places, Christian Churches were planted in less than thirty years after the death of Christ. Dr. Buchanan, after quoting his authority, (which is of little consequence here,) says: "I am satisfied that we have as good authority for believing that the Apostle Thomas died in India, as that the Apostle Peter died at Rome."

Another idea that strengthens my opinion that the Christian religion has been known in India, is the form and spirit of their prayers, several of which La Croze has translated. Some of them are very remarkable; and though I have already exceeded my limits, I will transcribe one of the least length, and may take another opportunity of making a few more remarks, and transcribing another of greater length:—

"Let our prayer be to God! Thou who art raised above all creatures, give us wisdom. Thou true Lord, be merciful, and bless me as thou hast promised. Send my guardian angel at every hour, every day. Be ever with me. Never withdraw thyself. Send, Lord, according to thy promise, thy angel to our whole assembly. May the blessing promised to God's assembly be upon me. May the blessing of the strengthening angel be upon me. May my prayer overflow and diffuse like water in the spring!"

"This is not much like heathenism," says Dr. Phillips. J. S.

THE TRAVELER IN PALESTINE;

OR,

Bible Scenes brought to Mind.

Blest land of Judea! thrice hallowed of song,
Where the holiest of memories, pilgrim-like throng;
In the shade of thy palms, by the shores of thy sea,
On the hills of thy beauty; my heart is with thee.

With the eyes of a spirit I look on that shore,
Where pilgrim and prophet have lingered before;
With the glide of a spirit I traverse the sod
Made bright by the steps of the angels of God.

Blue sea of the hills! in my spirit I hear
Thy waters, Gennesaret, chime on my ear;
Where the Lowly and Just with the people sat down,
And thy spray on the dust of his sandals was thrown.

Beyond are Bethulia's mountains of green,
And the desolate hills of the wild Gadarene;
And I pause on the goat-crags of Tabor to see
The gleam of thy waters, O dark Galilee!

Hark! a sound in the valley! where, swollen and strong,
Thy river, O Kishon, is sweeping along;
Where the Canaanite strove with Jehovah in vain;
And thy torrent grew dark with the blood of the slain.

There, down from his mountains, stern Zebulon came,
And Naphtali's stag, with his eyeballs of flame;
And the chariots of Jabin roll'd harmlessly on;
For the "Arm of the Lord" was Abinoam's son!

There sleep the still rocks, and the caverns which rang
To the song which the beautiful prophetess sang.
When the princess of Issachar stood by her side,
And the shout of a host in its triumph replied.

Lo, Bethlehem's hill-side before me is seen,
With the mountains around and the valleys between;
There rested the shepherds of Judah, and there
The song of the angels rose sweet on the air.

And Bethany's palm-trees in beauty still throw
Their shadows at noon on the ruins below;
But where are the sisters who hastened to greet
The lowly Redeemer and sit at his feet?

I tread where the twelve in their wayfaring trod;
I stand where they stood with the chosen of God—
When his blessing was heard, and his lessons were taught,
When the blind were restored, and the healing was wrought.

Oh, here with his flock the sad wanderer came;
These hills he toil'd over in grief, are the same;
The founts where he drank by the wayside still flow,
And the same airs are blowing which breathed on his brow.

And throned on her hills sits Jerusalem yet,
But with dust on her forehead and chains on her feet;
For the crown of her pride to the mocker hath gone,
And the holy Shechinah is dark where it shone.

But wherefore this dream of the earthly abode,
Of humanity clothed in the brightness of God?
Were my spirit but turn'd from the outward and dim,
It could gaze even now on the presence of Him!

Not in clouds and in terrors, but gentle as when,
In love and in meekness, he moved among men;
And the voice which breathed peace to the waves of the sea,
In the hush of my spirit would whisper to me!

And what if my feet may not tread where he stood,
Nor my ears hear the dashing of Galilee's flood,
Nor my eyes see the cross which he bowed him to bear,
Nor my knees press Gethsemane's garden of prayer.

Yet, loved of the Father, thy Spirit is near
To the meek, and the lowly, and penitent here;
And the voice of thy love is the same, even now,
As at Bethany's tomb, or on Olivet's brow.

Oh, the outward hath gone! but in glory and power
The SPIRIT surviveth the things of an hour;
Unchanged, undecaying, its pentecost flame
On the heart's secret altar is burning the same! WHITTIER.

SOLOMON AND CHESTERFIELD.

'Vanity of vanities, all is vanity and vexation of spirit.' With such a confession did the man go off the stage of existence, who, of all the human race, was the best qualified to give an opinion upon such a subject. If the possession of royalty, unbounded wealth, peace, surpassing wisdom, and all the sources of sensual gratification, could satisfy the desires of an immortal spirit, then had not Solomon been compelled by experience to reduce the sum total of the world's power of giving happiness to two mere cyphers, and pronounce it to be nonothing but vanity and vexation.

And now hear the testimony of another, by whom the world, with its fashions and its follies, its principles and its practices, has been proposed in form to Englishmen, as the proper object of their attention und devotion. Lord Chesterfield has avowed as much with respect to himself, and by his writings said in effect to it, 'Save me, for thou art my god.' He has tendered his assistance to aid as priest on the occasion, and conduct the ceremonial. At the close of life, however, he found his god was about to forsake him, and therefore was forsaken by him. You shall hear some of his sentiments and expressions, which have not been before, so far as I know, duly noticed and applied to their use; that of furnishing an antidote, and they do furnish a very effectual ono, to the noxious poisons contained in his volumes. They are well worthy of your strictest consideration.

'I have seen,' says the man of the world, 'the silly rounds of business and pleasure, and have done with them all. I have enjoyed all the pleasures of the world, and consequently know their futility, and do not regret their loss. I appraise them at their real value, which in truth is very low; whereas those who have not experienced, invariably overrate them. They only see their gay exterior, and are dazzled by their glare; but I have been behind the scenes; I have seen all the coarse pulleys and the dirty ropes which exhibit and move the gaudy machines; and I have seen and smelled the tallow candles which illuminate the whole decoration, to the astonishment and admiration of an ignorant audience. When I reflect upon what I have seen, what I have heard, and what I have done, I can hardly persuade myself that all that frivolous hurry, and bustle, and pleasure of the world, had a reality; but I look upon all that is past, as one of those romantic visions which opium commonly occasions; and I by no means desire to repeat the nauseous dose for the sake of the fugitive dream. Shall I tell you, that I bear this melancholy situation with that meritorious constancy and resignation which most people boast of? No; for I really cannot help it; I bear it because I must bear it, whether I will or no. I think of nothing but killing time the best way I can, now that he has become mine enemy. It is my resolution to sleep in the carriage during the remainder of the journey.'

When a Christian priest speaks slightly of the world, he is supposed to do so in the way of his profession, and to decry, through envy, the pleasure he was forbidden to taste. But here, I think, you have the testimony of a witness every way competent. No man ever knew the world better, or enjoyed more of its favors, than this nobleman. Yet you see, in how poor, abject, and wretched a condition, at a time when he most needed help and comfort, the world left him, and he left the world. The sentences above cited from him compose, in my humble opinion, is the most striking and affecting sermon upon the vanity of the world, ever yet preached to mankind. Such was the confession, in his old age, to a son that afterwards died by his own hand, of Lord Chesterfield, the oracle of English gayety and manners. [J. A. James.

AN INCIDENT IN REAL LIFE.

Business called me to the United States Land Office. While there, awaiting the completion of my business, a lad apparently about 16 or 17 years old came in, and presented to the receiver a certificate of purchase for 40 acres of land. I was struck with the countenance and general appearance of the lad, and inquired of him for whom he was purchasing the land; the reply was, 'For myself, sir.' I then inquired where he got the money; he answered, 'I earned it by my labor.' 'Then,' said I, 'you richly deserve the land.' I inquired, 'Where did you come from?' 'New York,' said he. Feeling an increased desire to know something more of this lad, I asked him whether he had parents, and where they lived; on this question, he took a seat, and gave me the following narrative:—

"I am from New York State—have there living a father, mother, and five brothers and sisters—I am the oldest child. Father is a drinking man, and often would return home from his day's work drunk, and not a cent in his pocket to buy food for the family, having spent all his day's earnings in liquor with his drinking companions; the family had to depend chiefly on mother and myself for bread; this distressed mother much, and had a powerful effect on my feelings. Finding that father would not abstain from liquor, I resolved to make an effort in some way to relieve mother, sisters, and brothers, from want. After revolving things over in my mind, and consulting with mother, I got all the information I could about the Far West, and started for Wisconsin with three dollars in my pocket. I left home on foot. After spending my three dollars, I worked occasionally a day, and renewed my travel so long as money lasted. By labor occasionally, and the charitable treatment I got on the road, I landed in Wisconsin. Here I got an axe, set to work and cleared land by the job—earned money, saved it, till I gathered $50, which money I now pay for the 40 acres of land."

'Well, my good lad, (for by this time I became much interested in his story,) what are you going to do with this land?' 'Why, sir, I will continue to work and earn money, and when I have spare time, prepare some of my land for culture, raise myself a log-house, and when prepared, will write father and mother, brothers and sisters, to come to Wisconsin and enjoy this home. This land now bought by me, I design for my mother, which will secure her from want in her declining years.' 'What,' said I, 'will you do with your father if he continues to drink ardent spirits to excess?' 'Oh, sir, when we get him on the farm, he will feel at home, will work at home, will keep no liquor in the house, and in a short time he will be a sober man.' I then replied, 'Young man, these being your principles so young, I recommend you to improve on them, and the blessing of God will attend you. I shall not be surprised to hear of your advancement to the highest post of honor in the State; with such principles as you have, you are deserving of the noblest commendation.'

By this time the receiver handed him his duplicate receipt for his 40 acres of land; rising from his seat, on leaving the office, he said, 'At last I have a home for my mother!'

ANECDOTE OF JOHN HOWARD.

During his stay at Vienna, Howard was introduced to the Queen of Hungary, and had the honor of dining with her on some public occasion, when the nobles of her court, and the foreign ambassadors, were her guests. A circumstance also occurred at Vienna, which strongly evinces his love for truth, and the fearlessness of his character when speaking it, at all times, and in all companies. Dining one day at the table of Sir Robert Murray Keith, the English Ambassador at the Austrian Court, the conversation turned upon the torture, when a German gentleman observed, that the honor of abolishing it in his own dominions, belonged to his Imperial Majesty.

'Pardon me,' said Mr. Howard, 'His Imperial Majesty has only abolished one species of torture, to establish in its stead another more cruel; for the torture which he abolished lasted at most but a few hours; but that which he has established lasts many weeks, nay, sometimes even years. The poor wretches are committed to a noisome dungeon, as bad as the Black Hole at Calcutta, from which they are liberated only on condition that they confess what is laid to their charge.'

'Hush!' said the Ambassador, 'your words will be reported to his Majesty.'

'What!' replied he, 'shall this tongue of mine be tied from speaking truth by any King or Emperor in the world? I repeat what I asserted, and maintain its veracity.'

Deep silence ensued, and every one present admired the intrepid boldness of the man of humanity.

THE SUNDAY IN FRANCE.

Our readers cannot have failed to notice, in the items of intelligence from France which have been published within a few months past, how many important events have transpired on Sunday. In connection with the Revolution, and the subsequent insurrectionary movements, Sunday was a prominent day, and upon it was transacted business vitally connected with the establishment of the Republic. The election, at which the first National Assembly was chosen, occurred on a Sunday, and passed off very quietly. When the Assembly had completed its great work of forming a Constitution, that document was publicly proclaimed on Sunday, in a solemn and imposing manner. Two or three thousand persons had been employed for several days previous in making preparations; and when the hour for the proclamation arrived, instead of the difficulties which were apprehended, everything was quiet. The President of the Assembly read the Constitution, while profound silence reigned throughout the vast concourse of people. The Archbishop of Paris, assisted by four Bishops, performed mass, which was followed by the Pontifical benediction. After the benediction, the clergy chanted the Domine salvam fac rempublicain, and returned in procession to the Church of the Madeleine. This was followed by the firing of cannon at the Hotel des Invalide, and several other places; and then the National Guard and other military corps commenced defiling before the National Assembly, which lasted at least four hours. On Sunday evening all the public buildings were illuminated, and the fete was continued on Monday and Monday evening. Subsequently, the election of the first President of the Republic was held on a Sunday, and but little disturbance occurred, although much was apprehended. One of the first public acts of the new President was to attend a grand military review; and this, according to the prevailing custom, was held on a Sunday.

Thus it will be seen, that some of the most interesting and important events connected with the overthrow of Monarchy and the establishment of Republicanism in France, have transpired on Sunday, the first day of the week, commonly called the Lord's Day. This circumstance, taken in connection with the remarkable success which has attended the revolutionary movements in France, seems to perplex some of the good people of this country, who are in the habit of representing the desecrators of Sunday as in imminent danger of the divine vengeance. In one of our exchanges we find an allusion to the fact that the first President of the Republic was elected on a Sunday, to which is appended the admonitory remark, that "trampling on an ordinance of Jehovah, by a whole nation, is a fearful beginning of a democratic career; in all Roman Catholic countries, the Sabbath is well nigh an obsolete institution." In another exchange we fiud an account of the proclamation of the Constitution, to which this remark is appended: "What a nation this France is! The Lord's Day has long been the great day of recreation and amusement among the people, and it now seems to be selected as the day for political action. Reform in such a nation of infidels—for though professedly papal it is in reality infidel—can hardly be expected. Nevertheless, nothing is too hard for the Lord. The conduct of the people of France, however, has some apology. Little else is taught them by their clergy but superstitions and papal mummery, which the great majority have no confidence in. It is not surprising, therefore, that they should be infidel." In both of these extracts the writers evidently started with the idea of reproving the neglect of Sunday, and suggesting the probability of retribution; but in both they come to the conclusion, that the French have only done what infidelity prompts, and Popery sanctions, on which account they are comparatively innocent. How powerless are all such reproofs! If the men who administer them would only cease to symbolize with Popery in observing the festival of Sunday, and would conform to the law of God in keeping the seventh day of the week, there would be some sense and consistency in their reproofs. Until they are ready to do so, they may as well hold their peace, for they are in the same condemnation with those whom they reprove. No doubt the French are in great danger, as these writers suggest, of making a wreck of their democracy. But how those who openly charge them with infidelity, can with consistency covertly convey the impression that their danger springs from an outward neglect of the Sunday, is more than we can tell.

Baptist Mission among the Creek Indians.—A missionary meeting, held lately in Louisville, Ky., was addressed by Rev. A. S. Hay, missionary among the Creek Indians. Mr. H. has been publicly adopted by the old chief as his son, in the place of the one deceased. His church has now two hundred and nineteen members; the whole number in the Mission being over six hundred. Some of the most distinguished chiefs have been baptized—among them General Chilly McIntosh—and are active and useful members of the church. The whole Mission is represented at present to be in an exceedingly interesting and encouraging state.

LETTERS FROM ILLINOIS—NO. 7.

Pleasant Hill, near Farmington, Ill.,
16th of 1st mo., 1849.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Several inquiries have reached me respecting the price and titles of lands in this district. I propose, therefore, in this letter, to give your readers such a view of the matter as may answer these and similar inquiries. All the lands in this district are reckoned from the fourth principal meridian, which may be found on the maps I have recommended, running north from Beardstown, on the Illinois River, to the junction of the forks of Rock River, and striking the Mississippi River at a point in Rock Island County. On it will be observed a series of small figures, which indicate the range of the square townships northward. To find a given township, we count the squares from a given number on the principal meridian, East or West, as the case may be. Thus, Farmington is not marked on the map, but it is township 8 N., 4 E. To find it, look on the principal meridian, above mentioned, for the figure 8, and count four squares East of it, and the inquirer has the township sought. This district, between the Illinois and the Mississippi Rivers, is called "the Military Bounty Tract," because, when first surveyed, the soldiers who served in the last war with Great Britain had a patent awarded to them for 160 acres of this land to each man. It was not all so patented, however, but only such parts as were then judged and reported by the surveyors to be of the first quality. In a plot of a township now lying before me, and which I obtained from the United States Land Office, I find 66 quarter sections marked patented; 74 quarters Congress land; and 4 quarters appropriated to common school purposes. Some of the patents were never taken out of the land office; some sold their patents; others have suffered them to lie without paying the State and County taxes on them; consequently the latter class of lots have been subject to sale for the taxes. The sale proceeds in this way: The county assessor advertises the delinquent lands, and at the specified time, in public vendue, inquires who will pay the taxes on the specified lot for the least quantity of said land. Usually they are bid off for a given number of acres; sometimes buyers are so rife that it will go for a few feet; and in some instances I am told that the taxes have been paid for a few inches. Whatever may be the quantity, the assessor gives the purchaser a certificate of the same, which constitutes what is called a tax title; and many persons hold whole quarter sections of land by this tenure alone. To meet the exigencies created by these circumstances, the State of Illinois has passed an act to entitle all the owners of tax titles to double all the outlays upon the lands, if ever the owners of the patents should make their claims. Of course this may soon be made to cover the whole value of a farm; so that these titles are as safe as any others. Most people, however, choose to have the patent and tax title too, where there has ever been any sale for taxes. But there are cases in which neither the owner of the patent nor his heirs can be found. These circumstances have made fine business for lawyers and land speculators, and require care on the part of the honest purchaser. The claims of nearly all, however, are now well known, and there is but little difficulty in ascertaining the validity of every owner's title. A large portion of the unsettled lands belong to land companies and land jobbers, who have their offices and agents in most of the principal towns hereabouts. These are usually very ready to sell their lands on credit, to persons who can make a small deposit on the purchase, and the remainder in such annual installments as the purchaser thinks he can make. Some of the most valuable lands in the country are now being offered on these conditions; and, so far as I can learn, they are as advantageous as any in the western country. I have made many inquiries of persons who have visited the newly-surveyed districts in Iowa, and other western parts, and they uniformly assure me, that as soon as any new district is surveyed and offered in market, there are crowds of speculators to buy up all the choicest and most promising lots, so that actual settlers seldom get these except at second hand, and often, in the beginning, at prices above what the same class of lands can be purchased at, twelve or thirteen years after the first settlements are made. This is the case here, yet it is obvious that the advantages to new comers are vastly greater in a settlement twelve or thirteen years old, than they are to go into places where the wilderness is almost unbroken. In the older settlements, we have society, improved roads, school-houses ready built, mills, and other mechanical establishments accessible, and stores and markets convenient for the export and import trade. Personal observation upon these things, led me to the conclusion, that our people can concentrate to better advantage in these parts than they can in the frontier settlements. Besides these things, the character of society improves with the improvement of the circumstances and intercourse of families. The restless and the rude sell out their improvements, and go where they have more room and less restraint; and thus, by exchanging the rude for a more cultivated class, society improves with a double ratio. In this respect our settlements here may be considered as opportune and inviting. The United States land agent for this district informs me, that there is more or less Congress land in every township in the three counties which corner at the north-west corner of the town of Farmington. In a plot of a township lying before me, I see that there are over 1,400 acres marked Congress land. This, of course, at present, is $1 25 per acre; but there is a bill now before Congress to reduce the price of such lands as these to 25 cents per acre. In some parts of these counties, lands of good quality can be bought of land jobbers for $2 per acre. Generally, however, unsettled lands of the best quality are held at from $3 to $5 per acre. Lands fenced and improved, rate from $5 to $12 per acre, according to the character of the improvements made upon them. In my former letters, I have mentioned the cost of rails, wood, and of breaking the prairie, and the labor of putting in a crop of wheat; and putting the whole together, I find that a section, or 640 acres, of land, might be fenced and sown with wheat for $3500, cost of soil $3200, making together $6700. This includes the labor and the seed. Then suppose the yield 30 bushels to the acre, and the market price of the wheat 65 cents per bushel, and the crop would bring $12,480, which, after paying the expenses of gathering, threshing, and taking to market, would leave a balance in favor of the farmers, after paying for the soil, greater than many will find who go to gather the golden harvests of California. There are much surer and quieter prospects for industrious young men to gain property here in combined agricultural pursuits, than in adventures in the gold mines of that far-off region.

MATTERS AND THINGS IN CHINA.

[Farther extracts from our familiar letter.]

July 20.—Our letters were to have been at the ship to-day, but a terrible typhoon is abroad, and we cannot send them if we would. However, as no ship would venture to sea in such a gale, we can sit down to write with as much composure as the uproar in the elements without will allow. And this is just the anniversary of that dreadful typhoon we encountered in the China Sea! We cannot judge of the intensity of this, at sea, but it is very violent on land, and we have reason to fear the horrors of that never-to-be-forgotten day will find a repetition in this its first anniversary. You have probably long since learned, that a ship in company with us that morning, has never been heard from since. It was the Don Juan, considered a quick sailer, and had on board the Overland Mail. We have ever considered it a remarkable providence, that we were prevented from engaging a passage in that ship, as we should doubtless have labored to do, had we known of its sailing before our passage was engaged on board the Sir E. Ryan. Thus has our Heavenly Father preserved us, through dangers seen and unseen.

If you saw this storm-beaten city to-day, or even should you traverse any of its streets on the sunniest of its sunny days, you would hardly imagine the Elysian spots that lie concealed behind its high, dead walls, with their tiled summits, and black, sepulchral-looking doors.

The most wonderful of these gardens, is the Ching-kwang-miau, "the temple of the god of the city." His title is, "Illustrious Protector and Superior." His life was so eminently good and active, that this title was conferred on him before his death. He died young, and was buried in Shanghai. His image, as also that of his wife, are in the Ching-kwang-miau, where they are worshiped twice every month. I will give you a short extract from the Chinese calendar, written by Dr. Bridgeman, descriptive of this spot:—

"It was originally of small extent. At first, the god received his divine honors in what was called the 'fresh water well temple.' Subsequently the magistrate took a temporary pavilion, and changed it into a temple, standing in the north-west corner of the city, not very far from the north gate. From that small beginning, it has risen, and become spacious and splendid, so as to be scarcely, if at all, inferior to any of its kind in all the provinces. In the summer of 1842, it was for a time the head-quarters of the British army; and the Major General, with his staff and four battallions, found there spacious and airy lodgings, and the buildings would have afforded accommodations to twice that number, had such been needed. The extent of ground covered by the temple is said to be twelve mau and six tenths—such it was when first built; but there have since been made to it two additions, consisting of two gardens, making both together more than seventy Chinese acres. The eastern garden was built in the fortieth year of Kanghi. Its pavilions, terraces, pools, alleys, bridges, &c., are elegant, and some of them have been extolled in verse. The western garden, like the eastern, has many pavilions, and terraces, with miniature mountains, rude imitations of nature, where you see rocks piled upon rocks. There, too, is an almond tree, said to have been planted by Pivan Nyan's own hands. In this great temple and its gardens, and contiguous to them, are many minor temples, some of them rich and spacious, all dedicated to gods and demi-gods."

Thus you have a beautiful description, and true as it is beautiful, of a most beautiful spot. But it is not full enough. It does not show you the head of the huge serpent that lies twisting his stony length along the top of the wall that encloses these gardens. It does not tell you how the pavilions at the summit of the terraces are gained by ruder, and of course more natural steps, than ever nature invented; nor how nature herself has again been entirely outdone, in the throwing together of rocks and pebbles, and in the slightest of all resemblances to the petrified heads of beasts, whose very names must have been forgotten centuries before the flood; nor the rifts in the side of the rocks, which draw the astonished vision to any thing but a chasm; nor the zig-zag bridges, whose unforseen terminations remind you of the mazes of the celebrated labyrinth of Crete. Neither does he tell you how this "temple of the god of the city," is filled with the most devoted worshipers of "the god of the city," Mammon. Perhaps the goddess of pleasure should have a place at his side, as the gaming table elbows the counter, and the arena looks defiance at the envious bazaar and tea-shop on either hand.

Here, too, is the foreigner's mirror for vanity. At the numerous picture shops, filled with original paintings, he will soon learn the estimate which the artist puts upon his tastes and manners, and he will find the burden of Burns' petition most satisfactorily answered:—

> "O would some power the giftie gie' us,
> To see oursel' as ithers see us," &c.

It is all accomplished in the picture galleries of "Ching-kwang-miau." This delightful spot is distant from our residence about one mile, but we have its counterpart, in miniature, only a little distance off, the "Jui-chu-kung," the seat of a public school or college; and yet it is only within the last few days that we have known of its beauty, or its proximity to us. Its lofty turret, surmounted by a stork, had often been the subject of our notice and remark from the city wall; but we knew not the academic shades that lay concealed beneath, nor dreamed of such a classical retreat, behind the somber walls, which, if they have ears, (as walls are said to have,) are at least, in China, wonderfully deficient in tongues. It is true, we had often noticed, in passing, the mock representation of a gate-way, with its columns and entablature, its two couchant lions guarding these door-posts of wisdom, and the well of living water at their feet; but all these were too common in Shanghai and the surrounding country to demand more than a passing notice, and had almost ceased to be observed at all. And we might have gone through life ignorant of this walled Parnassus, but for the kindness of a native youth, who often meets us in the street with the most friendly "Sea-sang, haw-la-va?" (Teacher, how do you do?) and who politely begged the favor of showing us the grounds. The "Jui-chu-kung," comprises all the beauties of the "Ching-kwang-miau," without its annoyances. It contains no shops, or theatrical grounds, and comparatively few loungers. It has also ravines, and subterranean passages; and the quiet waters, into which you look from the narrow angular bridges that are constantly inviting you on, are almost hidden in some parts by the broad, peltate leaves of the Nelumbium, or sacred lotus, whose form and hue, reflected from the bosom of the mimic lake, remind you of a sea of emeralds, adorned with the richest flowers of ruby and gold. These tulip-like flowers are very large, and hang over the leaves somewhat like the nasturtion. Add to these, the deep quiet which the scholastic habits of the inmates demand, and you have the most enchanting of Chinese solitudes.

I do not wonder that the name of China is associated with its walls and canals; but my former idea, that the Great Wall and the Imperial Canal, were the sources of its popularity, has undergone something of a modification. They abound every where, and are as indispensable, and will be as enduring, as the prosperity of China, or its national existence.

Well, the typhoon is abating; the shades of evening are gathering around us, and I would gladly exchange my pen-and-ink chat, for a face-to-face one in your little family circle. I would spend the hours of darkness, by telling you of the heavier shadows that rest upon this benighted land. It is very sad, to go out in the face of the glorious day, and look abroad upon this land, which God has made also very glorious. You see, as it were, but one continuous garden; for there is no division of lands by fences, as among us, no arid spots which only the foot of herds and hinds may press. The beautiful face of nature is marred only by the hand of superstition, and the loathsome rites of paganism, and heathen degradation. The glorious earth is every where strewn with the unsightly coffins of the unburied dead. Beside the mound, the tomb, and the grave, in the field, the grove and the garden, by the wayside and beneath the very windows of the dwellings, the dead are laid. Even the covering of brick, which is often built over them, soon crumbles, and you may see the whitening bones, as they lie scattered or piled, and apparently uncared for. Yet the ceremony of gathering the bones is one of note; and then you will see at those periods, urn after urn, with its contents of gathered dust, labeled, and placed by the wayside, to be removed and deposited in due time among the ancestral relics. In one of our rambles in the country, we were astonished to find what we supposed to be several huge granite rocks, or boulders; and Mr. C. had secured a piece as a rare geological specimen, when, passing around the opposite side, he surprised me by pronouncing them all tombs—the openings in the side plainly revealing the coffins deposited within, and our boulders dwindled to the every-day matter of cement, which the Chinese use with singular effect in imitating, and even excelling, nature. Think you our hearts are not sickened, at the sight of this great charnel house—this open sepulchre? But there are sadder sights than these. I mean the charnel house of souls—the living dead! O how deploringly does the eye of pity

> A dead soul's epitaph in every face?"

But the eye of faith looks forward to brighter days. China is included among the nations for whom Christ died, and the few mercy-drops that have fallen upon it, betoken a glorious shower, that shall make the desert bud and blossom as the rose. Then let the prayer of faith ascend; let the petitions be laid before the throne of grace; not only for the poor heathen, but for the poor missionary, who feels that in God alone is his help.

CENTRAL ASSOCIATION—SEMI-ANNUAL MEETING.

The Central Association held a semi-annual meeting with the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Scott, Cortland Co., N. Y., commencing Jan. 9th, 1849. Eld. E. S. Bailey took the chair; prayer by Eld. Varnum Hull. The Clerks of the Association not being present, D. F. Randolph was appointed Clerk pro tem. The several churches were called, and delegates present took their seats. (The number of delegates was small, owing, as was presumed, to the exceedingly inclement weather, and the deep snows which had recently fallen.) The usual resolution was passed, inviting all present, members from sister churches, to participate in the deliberations of the session.

A call for letters to the Association being made, a letter from the Church at Hounsfield was presented, in relation to the occupancy of the missionary field in Diana and vicinity, by Eld. Enoch Barnes, who was appointed to that station at the last annual session of the Association; one from Eld. Samuel B. Crandall, reporting his labors as missionary; and also one from Eld. Joshua Clark, in reference to his missionary labors in Otselic.

Bro. James Hubbard was appointed Treasurer pro. tem., and an Auditing Committee was appointed, consisting of H. C. Hubbard, E. G. Potter, and Silas Maxson.

After some deliberation in reference to our future missionary operations, a committee was appointed to recommend fields of labor, and more efficient measures in regard to missionary operations. The Committee consisted of E. S. Bailey, V. Hull, E. G. Potter, J. Clark, Silas Maxson, and Norman Palmer. A resolution was also passed, to have a missionary discourse in the evening, after which the Association adjourned till to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

Missionary discourse in the evening by Eli S. Bailey.

Jan. 10th.—Met pursuant to adjournment, when the business was preceded by a discourse from Eld. J. Clark, on John 12: 26.

The committee to whom was referred the missionary operations, being called upon, presented a report, from which the following extract is taken:—

"The regions of Diana and vicinity, and Newport, are fields now occupied by Elders Barnes and S. B. Crandall, and of course will not demand any new supplies. We would recommend that the Church at Otselic should be supplied during the interval between this and the next annual meeting of the Association. We are of the opinion, that the little Church in Clifford, Pa., should be aided in obtaining a pastor, which we hope will receive the attention of the next annual meeting. Indeed, it is our decided opinion, that in most cases it will be the better way to aid feeble churches in obtaining a settled pastor, rather than granting them temporary supplies. We farther recommend, that an address should be presented through the Sabbath Recorder, to the several churches composing this Association, urging them to a liberal contribution to sustain our domestic missions."

After remarks from several brethren, the report was adopted, and the Corresponding Secretary was instructed to address the several churches of this Association in accordance with the report.

Resolved, That Eld. Joshua Clark be appointed as a missionary, to labor at Otselic and vicinity as much of the time, from this until the annual session of the Association, as he can.

Resolved, That the Corresponding Secretary of the Association be instructed to correspond with the Church in Otselic, and also request them to inform said Secretary how much they can do towards the support of a minister with them.

Resolved, That all our missionaries are hereby requested to communicate with the churches of this Association from time to time, through the medium of the Sabbath Recorder, with regard to the amount of their labors, their prospects, and results.

Resolved, That Bro. H. C. Hubbard prepare an abstract of the minutes of this Association for publication, and forward it for insertion in the Sabbath Recorder

Resolved, That the Clerk of this Association revise and keep on file the minutes of this meeting, and present them to the next annual session of the Association.

Adjourned to the next annual meeting.

ELI S. BAILEY, Chairman,
D. F. Randolph, Secretary.

Emancipation in Kentucky.—The Maysville Eagle publishes the following project as that which meets the views of most of those in Kentucky who desire the emancipation of their slaves:—

First: Let all the slaves in existence, or born in Kentucky before the 1st of Jan., 1860, remain slaves for life.

Second: Let all male slaves born after January, 1860, be free at twenty-five, and all females born after the same period be free at twenty-one—provided, that upon reaching the age of twenty-one they shall be hired out for two years, or longer if necessary, until a fund shall be accumulated sufficient to transport them to Liberia, and give them a start in the Colony.

Third: No emancipated slave shall remain in Kentucky as a freeman.

That is 'gradual emancipation' with a vengeance. Ten years are to be allowed slaveholders to get ready for emancipation by collecting as many slaves for life as they please. Then twenty-five years more must elapse before the first slave can be emancipated; and even after that, their emancipation is made contingent upon their leaving the State, thus forsaking fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, and every association which makes life desirable! We do not envy the man who conceived this 'project,' or the community which sanctions it. To call it a project for emancipation, is a misnomer, and adds insult to the injuries already inflicted upon the poor blacks of Kentucky.

Notice from the Church at Adams.—At a meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Adams, Jefferson Co., N. Y., held on the 7th of January, 1849, it was Resolved, That the membership of such persons as have removed from the bounds of this Church, shall cease in one year from this date, unless they shall, within that time, communicate to the Church their wish to continue members.

By order of the Church,
Charles Potter, Clerk.

◆

Baptists in Texas.—A Baptist State Convention has been formed in Texas, to meet annually on the Friday before the second Sunday in May. At the last meeting reports were made in favor of the benevolent enterprises of the day, the tenor of which shows that the Baptists of Texas are determined to be far from hindmost in the cause of Christ.

◆

Fruit of Christianity.—The Native Church at Hilo, Sandwich Islands, has recently sent to the American Peace Society the sum of one hundred dollars, in aid of its operations. Only a few years ago, these people were barbarous and warlike heathens. What a change has been wrought among them by the preaching of the Gospel.

Newspaper Wit and Fun.—The following truthful and judicious remarks on this subject occur in an editorial of the Christian Mirror. We are glad to have reason for believing, that the class of papers to which they refer, is every year diminishing :—

"The affectation of wit and fun, which constitute the attractions of many papers for the young, are absolutely disgusting to a well-disciplined and well-informed mind. Very much of the wit is made up of bad English. This is read in the papers, and passes into the conversation of the young, by whom it is hackneyed to death. The hearers' 'ear is pained, and his soul sick.' Another portion is made up of polluting inuendos, which inflict foul stains on the mind, that will cleave to it with ruinous tenacity. Another, of gross thrusts at whatever is stable in sound moral habits, serious in religion, or conscientious and punctual in its outward observances. And, as a whole, the reading of them dissipates the mind, and robs it of its strength. It is not the aliment suited to its nature; it induces disease, mental debility, and at length destruction ensues. It is no help, but a serious impediment, to a preparation for the duties of life."

◆

The Slave-Trade in the District.—In our last week's report of Congressional Proceedings, mention was made of a petition against the Slave-Trade, from the members of the Washington City Government, presented Jan. 22. Here it is :—

To the Honorable, the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled.

The undersigned, members of the Board of Aldermen and Common Council of the City of Washington, having in common with their fellow-citizens long regarded with disapprobation the importation of slaves into the District of Columbia for purposes of sale or traffic elsewhere, and deeming it alike prejudicial to the interest of our city, and offensive to public sentiment, request your honorable body to restrain such traffic by the enactment of some law similar in its provisions to that embraced in the code of Laws for the District of Columbia, reported to the House of Representatives in the year 1832, by Mr. Wilde of Georgia, and to the Senate by Mr. Chambers of Maryland; the enactments in the adjoining States of Maryland and Virginia on this subject; or grant to the respective corporate authorities of Washington and Georgetown such powers as will enable them to remedy this evil.

The California Fever in England.—When the last steamer left, the California fever raged in England quite as violently as it has done in this country. Great numbers of vessels were up for the Gold Region—some carrying passengers to Chagres, others to Galveston, &c., rates ranging from twenty-five pounds upward. All sorts of schemes for raising companies and capital are advertised. One of the companies alone proposes to raise a capital of six hundred thousand pounds, reserving half to be taken in the United States. The Times cautions the public against these schemes, many of which are mere swindles. It says :

"That the country will be a Pandemonium long before any one can reach it from this side, is hardly to be doubted, unless, indeed, the United States Government shall have been able to establish a blockade and cordon, in which case the new arrivals will have to get back as fast as they can. But there is no question that the first-comers stand the chance of large gain, if they are able to fight for it; and there is no danger of starvation, since the district abounds with deer and rabbits, and grain will flow there in quantities from the southern republics, while, as regards articles of manufacture, the Sandwich Islands, long overstocked, will be able to send supplies. Those who go out have, therefore, at all events, some compensating prospect for their risk; but for those at home, who may be deluded into parting with their money, not a hope of its return can exist."

◆

Marketing at Cincinnati.—The Cincinnati Gazette says: "Poultry is low; turkeys of fair size can now be bought at 40 a 60 cents each, and those weighing 14 to 18 pounds, at 80 a 100 cents; ducks and chickens, 12 1-2 a 15 cents; geese, 20 a 35 cents; good mutton, 4 a 6 cents a pound; eggs, 12 1-2 a 15 cents per dozen; good veal, 5 a 6 cents; choice beef-cuts, 6 a 7 cents. Butter is now retailing at 12 1-2 a 25 cents per pound; and potatoes, 5 a 10 cents per peck; carcase beef, 2 a 3 cents per pound for fore and hind quarters; rabbits are still brought in plentifully, good and fat, and sold at 12 a 15 cents each; squirrels are in good supply now, at 6 a 8 cents each; partridges vary from 80 to 125 cents per dozen."

LAST WEEK'S CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

January 29.

In the Senate, a number of petitions were presented, among which was one by the Vice-President, which attracted considerable attention, praying for the construction of a Telegraph across the Atlantic Ocean; the petition was referred to the Committee on Commerce. Mr. Cameron, of Pa., presented several petitions, which were appropriately referred; also several memorials on the subject of Slavery, which, according to the standing rule, were laid upon the table. The Committee on Territories reported a bill for the admission of California as a State, and also providing for the admission of New Mexico, when she shall have acquired a sufficient population; the bill was ordered to be printed. The bill embracing Mr. Whitney's project for the building of a Railroad to the Pacific was taken up, and after an animated discussion was postponed. The bill for the construction of a Railroad across the Isthmus at Panama was taken up, and a substitute proposed, but no action was taken upon it.

In the House, an ineffectual effort was made to bring up the bill for the construction of a railroad from Lake Michigan to the Pacific. The bill for the establishment of a mint in New York, was made the special order of the day for Feb. 6. The bill respecting the Military Academy at West Point was discussed, but not acted upon. The Revolutionary Pension Bill, and the Navy Pension Bill, were considered and passed.

January 30.

In the Senate, the morning hour was spent in the reception of petitions, reports of committees, and of several communications from the Departments, and in the transaction of the ordinary routine of business. The Indian Appropriation Bill came up for consideration, and, after being materially amended, was passed. The consideration of the bill for the construction of a Railroad across the Isthmus by the Panama route was then resumed, which called forth an interesting and protracted discussion.

In the House, a resolution was passed in favor of printing 10,000 copies of Mr. King's report respecting the Panama Railroad. The Naval Appropriation Bill was farther considered, in connection with which the subject of slavery came up for discussion.

January 31.

In the Senate, Mr. Jones of Iowa reported a bill enforcing the payment to the State of Iowa of a portion of the proceeds of certain public lands for educational purposes, which was, by unanimous consent, considered, read a third time, and passed. A resolution was adopted, directing a survey to be made by the Topographical Corps, in order to ascertain the best route for a railroad from the Mississippi River to San Francisco, California. The bill granting a right of way and a preëmption right for a Railroad through the State of Illinois, was then taken up and passed. The bill making provision for the construction of a Railroad across the Isthmus at Panama was then taken up, and after some discussion the Senate adopted an amendment giving the Secretary of the Navy discretion to make a contract for the building of the Road or not, as might be deemed advisable. The bill was laid over till to-morrow.

In the House, various reports from committees were made, among which was one from Mr. Ingersoll, who reported to the House sundry small bills, which were severally sanctioned and passed. The Committee on the District of Columbia reported a bill prohibiting the introduction of slaves into the District for sale or hire; upon which an animated discussion arose, but no action was taken upon the bill. A resolution from the Senate was adopted, providing for a joint committee to open and count the votes cast in the late election for President and Vice President. The Naval Appropriation Bill was taken up, and the principal dsscussion was upon an amendment making it optional with sailors to receive spirit rations or their equivalent in money.

February 1.

In the Senate, the Chairman of the Committee on Finance, submitted a report in favor of coining gold dollars and double eagles. After some debate about the public printing, the Senate took up the bill for the relief of the captors of the frigate Philadelphia. The bill was amended by inserting a provision in favor of the late Commodore Decatur's widow and heirs, and then passed.

The House, after the transaction of some business, not of general interest, resumed the consideration of the Navy Appropriation Bill. The amendment making it optional with the sailors to receive spirit rations, or their equivalent in money, was adopted.

February 2.

The Senate took up the Postage Reform Bill, but passed it over informally, after a speech from Mr. Niles. Various petitions were presented, among which was one signed by four thousand citizens of Philadelphia, praying for a modification of the present Tariff Laws. A resolution was submitted, and referred to the Committee on Pensions, in favor of printing five thousand copies of the Pension Laws for distribution.

The House, in Committee of the Whole, was occupied principally with the Private Calendar, and passed some thirty bills, all of which were on the calendar and not objected to.

February 3.

The Senate was not in session.

In the House, the Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill making certain provisions for the support of the Post Office Department, which was read and referred to the Committee of the Whole. The private calendar was then taken up in Committee of the Whole, when five bills were passed, and reported to the House. A resolution was adopted, granting to Mr. Sibley, Representative from the State of Wisconsin, the same books and public documents which had been voted to the other Members.

The New Yore Mirror states that the receipts at the Astor Place Opera House are now averaging about three thousand dollars a week, being at least one thousand a week over all expenses.

SUMMARY.

By some means or other the stove in one of the cars on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, was overturned, setting fire to the car. The passengers, some thirty in number, in their eagerness to get from the car, broke through it helter skelter. The car being in rapid motion, all hands were more or less injured, some of them very severely, and one it is thought fatally.

The Worcester Ægis sends the following crumb of comfort to the gold-diggers! 'A load of three hundred stools, manufactured in Sterling, in this county, passed through our streets last week, boxed up for California. They are designed as seats for diggers. They are worth here about 50 cents, but may be considered as good for ten to twenty-five dollars each in California.

Recent accounts from Chili give information of the discovery of a gold mine near Copiapo, on the coast, and north of Valparaiso, which for richness, if the accounts be true, flings into the shade even the Sacramento diggings, which we heretofore thought were rather ahead of all the auriferous regions discovered or discoverable.

Amos Peters, a sergeant in the Revolutionary Army, died at Mount Airy, Hunterdon Co., New Jersey, on the 14th ult., aged ninety years. Several matrons of that period have left us within a few days, all over ninety years of age; and among them Mrs. Amelia Lippincott, the grandmother of Stephens, the traveler and author, who died at Shrewsbury, Monmouth Co., on the 27th ult., in the ninety-sixth year of her age. She retained the possession of her faculties to the last.

The bill making an appropriation of fifteen thousand dollars to enable the New York Institution for the Deaf and Dumb to pay its indebtedness—went through all its stages last week, by consent, and passed by a unanimous vote; a strong and deserved token of the high favor in which this noble and beneficent charity is held throughout the State.

The Legislature of Ohio is composed of persons pursuing business as follows: 40 Farmers, 36 Lawyers, 6 Printers, 4 Physicians, 4 Merchants, 4 Manufacturers, 2 Millers, 2 Mechanics, 1 Clothier, 1 Potter, 1 Factor, 1 Fisherman, 1 Tanner, 1 Carriage-maker. Married 96, Single 9, Engaged 1.

The leg of a child has been found in a state of petrifaction near Cincinnati, Ohio, on the estate of Mr. S. Hazen. Each muscle was distinctly observable, and the teeth and nails were perfect. On digging farther, two large frogs were found, also petrified, and perfect in their form. The curiosities have been placed on exhibition.

Lieut. Maury cites numerous facts to prove the existence of a rock, very near the surface of the water, directly on the track to Europe. Captain Walsh is almost positive that he saw it on his last trip, and describes it as appearing about the size of the hull of a ship of five hundred tons.

Henry Clay has been elected to the United States Senate by the Kentucky Legislature, for six years from the 4th of March next, in place of Thomas H. Metcalfe, whose term expires with the 30th Congress.

FARM FOR SALE.

THE subscriber offers for sale his farm, situated in the town of Genesee, county of Allegany, N. Y. Said farm codsists of 280 acres of first-rate land, 175 of which is level, ann the remainder gradually rising side-hill; all of which is susceptible of cultivation, mostly adapted to grazing purposes. About 75 acres, however, is a gravely quick soil, as productive of wheat and corn, as any in the southern part of said county. Upon said farm is about 100 acres improvement, two framed barns, and a large two-story framed house, well inclosed, lately built, and conveniently calculated. There are two good wells of water upon said farm, and it is also abundantly supplied with numerous brooks and springs. Said farm is situated in a good neighborhood, and convenient to school, and the central place of business for the western part of said town; and on the main traveled road from Angelica to Smithport. For pleasantness and locality it is not surpassed by any in the township or vicinity. To those wishing to purchase a good farm, the present opportunity offers rare inducements. The farm will be sold low for cash; or, if desired, by paying one-half of the purchase money down, the balance will be arranged to accommodate purchasers for any reasonable length of credit. A careful view of the premises by a discerning individual, is only requisite to a thorough conviction that an investment made under such favorable terms as the subscriber offers, is but safe and a fair speculation. For farther information, address the subscriber, P. M. at West Genesee, Allegany Co., N. Y., or inquire at his house. JARED MAXSON.

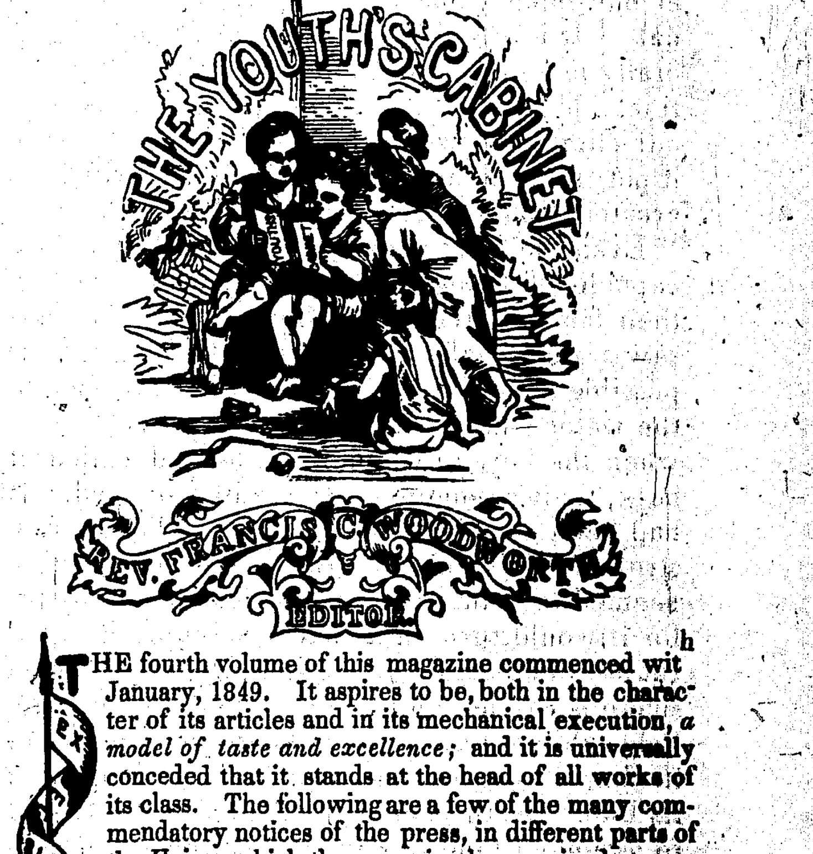
DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y., June 12, 1848.



THE fourth volume of this magazine commenced with January, 1849. It aspires to be, both in the character of its articles and in its mechanical execution, a model of taste and excellence; and it is universally conceded that it stands at the head of all works of its class. The following are a few of the many commendatory notices of the press, in different parts of the Union, which the magazine has received:—

"It is beautifully illustrated, and evinces great ability and interest."—N. Y. Evangelist.

"The editor is one of our best writers for the young."—N. Y. Com. Adv.

"We know of no journal devoted to the interests of the youth of our country, that will compare with this, either in the beauty of its appearance, or the rich and varied excellence of its contents."—N. Y. Christ. Mess.

"It is full of pleasing things, finely illustrated, and familiarly described."—N. Y. Obs.

"Whatever the editor does is well done, and in a sweet and gentle spirit. His pretty monthly is commendable in all respects, and wonderfully cheap."—N. Y. Christ. Inq.

"The Cabinet still maintains its supremacy as the first and most beautiful juvenile in the land."—Hartford Repub.

"Its contents are scarcely susceptible of any improvement the work having attained a pre-eminence among works published for the young."—Sentinel, Fort Wayne, Ind.

"A prettier thing of the kind could scarcely be imagined."—Balt. Meth. Prot.

"The best and cheapest youth's magazine in the country."—Courier, Zanesville, Ohio.

"This, as we have before told our readers, best fills our idea of what a magazine for children ought to be."—Windham Co. Dem., Brattleborough, Vt.

"It gives us pleasure to recommend this magazine to our Southern friends. Our more intimate acquaintance with it serves only to increase our favorable opinion of it."—Balt. West. Continent.

Miscellaneous.

From Chambers' Edinburg Miscellany.

TAMING AND CHARMING OF SERPENTS.

A great many species of serpents are capable of being domesticated, and they may be made to know those who feed and caress them, as well as a cat or dog knows its master or mistress. 'I had,' says the author of British Reptiles, 'a common snake, many years since, which knew me from all other persons; and when let out from his box, would immediately come to me, and crawl beneath the sleeve of my coat, where he was fond of lying perfectly still, and enjoying the warmth. He was accustomed to come to my hand for a draught of milk every morning before breakfast, which he always did of his own accord; but he would flee from strangers, and hiss if they meddled with him.' Mr. White, in his Natural History of Selbourne, states that he knew a gentleman who had one in his house quite tame. Though this was usually as sweet in its 'person as any other animal, yet, whenever a stranger, or dog or cat, entered, it would begin to hiss, and soon filled the room with an effluvia so nauseous, as to render it insupportable. 'An intimate friend of mine,' says Mr. Sheppard, 'had a common snake in his rooms at Cambridge, which became so familiar as to lie in a serpentine form, on the upper bar of his chair. It would crawl through his fingers if held at a little distance before its head, or lie at full length on the table while he was writing or reading, for an entire hour at a time. When first brought into the room, it would hiss, and dart out its tongue, without emitting any unpleasant odor. It was in all its actions remarkably cleanly. Sometimes it was indulged with a run upon the grass in the court of the college; and at times it would swim in a basin of water, which it appeared to enjoy very much.' In the Dictionnaire d'Histoire Naturelle, there is an instance related of a snake which had been so completely tamed by a lady, as to come to her whenever she called it, to follow her in her walks, writhe itself around her arms, and sleep in her bosom. One day, when she went in a boat a distance up a large river, she threw it into the water, presuming that its fidelity would lead it to follow her, and that, by swimming, it would readily overtake the boat. The poor animal exerted all its efforts; but the current at that juncture proving unusually strong, owing to the advance of the tide, notwithstanding all its efforts, it was borne down the stream, and unfortunately drowned. We have ourselves known the common ringed snake of our heaths so tamed by a herd-boy, as to coil and uncoil itself at his desire, to follow even in the fields a short distance, and to retreat into the box in which it was kept on his giving a peculiar signal. This specimen was the largest of its kind we have ever seen, being more than two and a half feet in length; it lived for several summers, and died, as we believe, from being overfed, and not being allowed the necessary duration of torpidity during the winter. The boas of our zoological gardens and traveling menageries, might also be instanced as evidence of the degree of tameness to which serpents may be brought by kind and gentle treatment. Most of our readers must have seen these serpents come forth at the call of their keeper, coil themselves about his neck and arms, stretch themselves out at full length, and perform other movements, according to certain known signals. It is true that the boas exhibited are generally more dull and lethargic than lively and tractable; but this is owing to the coolness of our climate, in which they could not exist, were it not for the artificial temperature which is created around them.

Even the most venomous, it would seem, are capable of being tamed, if once deprived of their fangs. Hector St. John says that he once saw a rattlesnake in America as gentle as it is possible to conceive a reptile to be. It went to the water and swam whenever it pleased; and when the boys to whom it belonged called it back, their summons was readily obeyed. It had been deprived of its fangs. They often stroked it with a soft brush, and this friction seemed to cause the most pleasing sensations, for it would turn on its back to enjoy it, as a cat does before the fire. In India, the hooded snake is carried about in a basket, to be publicly exhibited as a show, being first deprived of its fangs, to secure the men from the danger of its bite. At the sound of a flageolet, it is taught to assume a kind of dancing attitude and motions, which it continues as long as its master continues his music. According to Catesby, the black snake is found to be extremely useful in America in clearing houses of rats, which it pursues with wonderful agility, even to the very roofs of barns and outhouses; for which it is cherished by the generality of the Americans, who are at great pains to protect and increase the breed. All the mischief this species does is to the farmer's wives, in skimming the milk-pans of their cream, and robbing the hen-roosts of their eggs. It is not uncommon to find it coiled up in a nest under a setting hen. It has even been seen drinking milk out of the same dish with children, without biting them, though they often gave it blows with their spoons on the head, when it was too greedy.

Seeing that many of the serpent family, whether venomous or non-venomous, are tamable to a certain degree, we shall be better able to comprehend the so-called 'art of charming,' about which so much has been said and gainsaid in almost every country. This art is peculiar to the East, having been practiced in India, Syria, and Egypt, by a race of half-mendicant vagrants, from time immemorial. To charm a serpent, is, in other words, to possess some mysterious power over the reptile, by which it may be called forth at pleasure, be made to submit to any experiment, and, if venomous, to forego its noxious nature, and become mild and tractable. More than this, the charmer professes to be proof against the fangs of the most venomous, without having recourse to any medicine, and merely by the potency of the spell which he possesses. Such a power is utterly denied by the majority of naturalists, who believe that the so-called charmers act only upon tame serpents, or upon such as have their fangs extracted; on the other hand, some less skeptical entertain the modified belief, that while the charmers may thus often impose upon the public, they sometimes perform very extraordinary feats, partly through hardihood, and partly through their superior skill in handling the reptiles so as not to irritate them.

The Psylli, a people of Lybia, are celebrated by Roman writers for charming and destroying serpents. The truth seems to be, that they were very expert in curing the venomous bites of these reptiles, by which their country was much infested, and that this expertness, rather than any mysterious power in charming, was that which caused, the admiration of the Romans. Cassaubon says that he knew a man who could at any time summon a hundred serpents together, and draw them into the fire Upon a certain occasion, when one of them, larger than the rest, would not be brought in, he only repeated his charm, and it came forward like the others, to submit to the flames. Philostratus describes particularly how the Indians charm serpents. 'They take a scarlet robe, embroidered with golden letters, and lay it before a serpent's hole. The golden letters have a fascinating power, and, by looking fixedly, the serpent's eyes are overcome and laid asleep.' In India, snake-charming is still extensively practiced by a class of itinerants, who live by it as a profession. These individuals carry about with them a few tame serpents, which they exhibit for a small gratuity, making the animals assume a dancing attitude to the sound of a rude flageolet, calling them from a box in which they are kept, coiling them round their necks and arms, and even irritating them until they snap at the hands and fingers—of course harmlessly, as the snake is said to be charmed; in honest language, deprived of its fangs by extraction. The charmers also pretend to rid premises infested with these unwelcome visitants, receiving from the owner some reward for their services. For these ends they pretend to handle all kinds of snakes with impunity, to make them come and go at call, and, in short, to exercise a cabalistic authority over the whole race. For example, one of these individuals will assert to a householder that there are snakes about his premises, and, partly from motives of fear, and partly from curiosity, the householder promises the man a reward if he succeeds in showing and removing them. The charmer goes to work, and soon snakes are seen to issue from some corner or another, obedient to his call. The performer takes them up fearlessly, and they meet like old friends. In fact, the opinion of the more enlightened residents in India is, that the snakes and their charmer are old friends; that he hid them there, and of course knew where to find them; and moreover, that having long ago extracted their poisonous fangs, he may well handle them without alarm. Still, a large portion of the community, European as well as native, believe that these charmers have strange power over the snake tribe.

'In Madras, however,' says a correspondent, 'while I was there, this belief received a sad shock by a circumstance which occurred. A noted charmer about the district chanced one morning to get hold of a cobra of considerable size, which he got conveyed home. He was occupied abroad all day, and had not time to get the dangerous fang extracted from the serpent's mouth. This at least is the most probable solution of the matter.

In the evening he returned to his dwelling, considerably excited with liquor, and began to exhibit tricks with his snakes to various persons who were around him at the time. The newly-arrived cobra was brought out with the others, and the man, spirit-valiant, commenced to handle the stranger like the rest. But the cobra darted at his chin, and bit it, leaving two marks like pin points. The juggler was sobered instantly. 'I am a dead man,' he exclaimed. The prospect of immediate death made the maintenance of his professional mysticism a thing of no moment. 'Let the creature alone,' said he to those about him, who would have killed the cobra; 'it may be of service to others of my trade. To me it can be of no more use. Nothing can save me.' His professional knowledge was but too accurate. In two hours he was a corpse! I saw him a short time after he died. His friends and brother jugglers had gathered around him, and had placed him on a chair in a sitting position. Seeing the detriment likely to result to their trade and interest from such a notion, they vehemently asserted that it was not the envenomed bite that killed him. 'No, no; he only forgot one little word—one small portion of the charm.' In fact, it was declared that he was not dead at all, but only in a sort of swoon, from which, according to the rules of the cabalistic art, he would recover in seven days. But the officers of the barracks, close to which the deceased resided, interfered in the matter. They placed a guard of one or two men on the house, declaring that they would allow the body to remain unburied for seven days, but would not admit any trickery. Of course, the poor charmer never came to life again. His death, and the manner of it, gave a severe blow, as has been already hinted, to the art and practice of snake-charming in Madras.

The American Indians pretend to possess the same secret power, as do also the Arabs, and many wild African tribes. In Egypt and Nubia, its exhibition is of almost daily occurrence, and Bruce, who often witnessed these performances, affirms that there can be no doubt of its reality. 'Some,' he says, 'have believed that it was a trick, and that the animals so handled had been first trained, and then deprived of their power of hurting; and, fond of the discovery, they have rested themselves upon it, without experiment, in the face of all antiquity. But I will not hesitate to aver, that I have seen at Cairo, (and this may be seen daily, without trouble or expense,) a man who came from above the catacombs, where the pits of the mummy birds are kept, who has taken a cerastus with his naked hand, from a number of others lying at the bottom of a tub, has put it upon his bare head, covered it with the common red cap he wears, then take it out, put it in his breast, and tie it about his neck like a necklace; after which, it has been applied to a hen, and bit it, which has died in a few minutes; and to complete the experiment, the man has taken it by the neck, and, beginning at the tail, has ate it, as one would eat a carrot or a stock of celery, without any seeming repugnance. I can also avouch, that all the black people in the kingdom of Sennaar, whether Funge or Nuba, are perfectly armed against the bite of scorpion or adder. They take the cerastes in their hands at all times, put them in their bosoms, and throw them at each other as children do apples or balls, without having iritated them by this usage so much as to bite.

THE DYING CHILD.

Why do you weep?
 I am falling asleep,
And Jesus, my Shepherd,
 Is watching his sheep;

His arm is beneath me,
 His eye is above;
His Spirit within me
 Says, "Rest in my love;

With blood I have bought thee,
 And wash'd thee from sin;
With care I have brought thee
 My fold to be in;

Refresh'd by still waters,
 In green pastures fed,
Thy day has gone by—
 I am making thy bed." [Script. Tracts.

IMPERIAL FAMILY OF CHINA.

The statutes about the imperial clan are undergoing great alteration. Since the accession of the Mantchoo family to the throne, the various imperial branches have very rapidly increased. Their numbers make the keeping of genealogical tables a matter of great difficulty. The princesses are married to various Mongul and Mantchoo Chiefs, but many remain maidens without a suitor. Only a few princes receive civil and military appointments; the remainder pass an idle life, some of comfort, and others of great misery, either at Pekin or in Leaou-tung.

In general, the allowance is very small, and quite inadequate for their maintenance; hence the shifts to which these scions of an illustrious house have frequently to betake themselves, and the disgraceful conduct of which they are often guilty. Having no employments, they acquire vicious habits, so that gambling, opium-smoking, and rioting, are ordinary occurrences. Few have any money of their own, and nearly all are dependent upon the imperial bounty; and, on account of their profligate babits, are continually in debt. There are many laws for the regulation of their conduct, but on account of their high birth, they enjoy considerable privileges, which enable them in general to defy such regulations.

A very common punishment to which they are subjected, is solitary confinement in an empty dark room, to allow them time to reflect upon their misdeeds. Others are banished to the wilds of Tsit-si-har, or to the Yunnan Swamps, whence few ever return. The present Emperor has been very lenient towards his kinsmen, but nearly all his predecessors treated them with the utmost severity, and not unfrequently, with Turkish jealousy, exterminated an entire tribe.

The attention of the Imperial Government seems to be directed solely to the suppression of piracy, which abounds in all its waters, the apprehension and execution of numerous daring robbers, the quieting of constant revolts, and the replenishment of its sinking treasury. piracy seems to flourish bravely, the Government being unable to get its naval forces to operate against the freebooters. To bribe the former to do something, several officers have been rewarded for services which are entirely fictitious.

HOMESTEAD EXEMTION IN PENNSYLVANIA.

The following is the bill presented in the Senate of Pennsylvania, to exempt the homesteads of insolvent debtors from levy and sale, when the yearly value of the property does not exceed $300:—

An act to exempt the Homesteads of Insolvent Debtors from Levy and Sale.

Whereas, it is the duty of a free and enlightened Commonwealth to provide by law for the relief of Insolvent Debtors; to prevent or mitigate extreme social inequalities arising from an uneven distribution of property, and to secure its citizens alike against the exactions of avarice, and the humiliations of pauperism, therefore,

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in General Assemby met, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, That from and after the 4th day of July, 1849, the real estate of every citizen, femme sole trader, or widow residing within this Commonwealth, which shall be owned or occupied by him, her, or them, as a family residence or homestead, shall be exempt from levy and sale, lien and sequestration, from any debt contracted by him, her, or them, subsequent to the purchase or erection thereof: Provided, that such real estate shall not exceed, in clear yearly value, the sum of three hundred dollars; and Provided farther, that this act shall not be construed so as to divest or impair any existing lien or mortgage.

HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION IN OHIO.

Dr. Dimmonk has introduced a bill in the Senate of Ohio, to exempt homesteads from forced sales on execution. It provides that any resident of Ohio, the head of a family, may set apart and hold for the benefit of himself and family, exempt from forced sale on execution, a lot of land not exceeding in extent 100 acres, nor in value, together with the buildings, the sum of $1,000. It also provides that the owner of a house on land not his own, may set apart and hold said house as his homestead, a house and lot in any village, town, or city, not exceeding the value of $1,000. It provides that in case a house and lot or other homestead shall be appraised at more than $1,000, the plaintiff may accept a sum annually, equal to a fair rent for said premises, until said debt is paid, or, at his option, he may cause the homestead to be put to sale; and $1,000 of the proceeds shall be paid over by the Sheriff in execution, and the balance be applied in discharge of the debt. But such homestead shall not be sold for less than its appraised value. It also exempts to the heads of families not owning a homestead, chattel property to an amount not exceeding $1,000.

A correspondent of the Newburyport Herald gives an account of the sentence of one Glines of New Bedford, who induced a young girl to go with him in a chaise, on the plea that her father was sick, and after getting her into the woods committed an assault upon her, from the effects of which she did not recover for some time. He put in the plea of insanity, in mitigation of the crime, but without avail. He was sentenced by Judge Mellen to twenty years confinement at hard labor in the State Prison.

A TERRIBLE AFFLICTION.—Mr. Richard Mosher, of Duchess county, N. Y., has been confined to his bed for twenty-five years, a victim to disease and intense suffering. During the first year of his attack, his knees were dislocated and ossified, and subsequently other joints in his lower limbs were drawn asunder and ossified. Two years after these disastrous afflictions, his pains became less acute, and being naturally industrious and ingenious, he commenced making shoes, whips, and other articles, as he could, while lying in bed. He thus helped to maintain himself, and for eleven years he continued to work, until his arms were dislocated and became ossified. For the last eleven years he has been unable to help himself in the least. His jaws were set some years ago, and his teeth have been broken out, that food might be placed in his mouth. The only joints which he is now able to move are the extreme of his index fingers, and one or two joints of his toes.

PUBLIC INSTRUCTION IN IOWA.—The Burlington Hawkeye presents various interesting facts and statistics relative to the progress of education in that portion of the Far West. The permanent School Fund of the State, is given in the report of the Superintendent of Public Instruction, is $49,017 65—being an increase of only $4,986 95 in one year. The whole number of districts in the State is 673; of children between 5 and 21, 40,646. The wages paid to teachers are from twelve to twenty-five dollars a month—the former amount to females, and the latter to males. 101 male teachers have been employed, and 23 females—while only 105 schools are in operation, and 7,077 pupils taught.

SUMMARY.

The Mussulman writers speak of an ignorant Arab, who, being asked how he knew anything about the existence of a God, replied—'Just as I know by the tracks in the sand, whether a man or beast has passed there; so, when I survey the heavens, with its bright stars, and the earth, with its productions, do I feel the existence and power of God.'

During the visit of an Indian Chief to one of our northern cities, he asked on seeing the jail —'What is that building for?' The interpreter who accompanied him, in order to make himself intelligible, observed—'that when a white man owed skins and could not pay them, they put him in that building.' The Chief, after a little reflection, drily replied—'Hugh! white man no catch skins there!'

From some experiments made at the Agricultural Institute, at St. Germain, in France, it appears that the sheep, that gained in weight three and a quarter pounds a month, increased double that amount in the same length of time, when about one-tenth of an ounce of salt was added to the food of each per day.

About two thousand years ago, when the old Roman, Colummella, was asked what constituted good farming, he answered, 'Frst, good ploughing.' On again being asked what came next, he replied, 'good ploughing;' thus impressing the importance of good tillage over every other consideration.

During the dreadful visit of cholera in Cuba, on its former appearance, there were the official records of sixteen thousand interments at Havana, in ten weeks. One day the number amounted to nine hundred, when a change in the wind and temperature took place, and the ensuing day the number of deaths was only two hundred, and the next week after, the disease had entirely disappeared, and never afterwards returned.

Hon. B. H. Green has patented a machine to coat telegraph wires, after they are stretched ready for use on the poles. The composition at once insulates the wires, and prevents them from rusting. The machine, weighing about eight pounds, is hung on the wires, and drawn along with a cord from post to post. The brushes employed in the process supply themselves with the composition.

Absolutely pure gold is 24 carats. The coin of England is an alloy of 11 parts gold, and 1 copper. One pound troy is now coined into 46 29-40 sovereigns. Our gold coin contains 11 parts pure gold, and 1 of alloy composed of silver and copper. Our eagles contain 270 grains of standard gold, of which 247 1-2 are pure gold and 22 1-2 alloy.

Oranges equal to those of Havana are raised near Mobile, at Pascagoula, and on the coast near New Orleans. The proprietor of thirty trees on Mon Louis Island, twenty miles south of Mobile, realizes from eight hundred to one thousand dollars a year for his oranges. He sent twelve oranges to an editor, on a single branch.

Captain Mordecai, of the Ordnance Department, at Washington, has ascertained that the velocity of a thirty-two pound shot, varies from twelve to nineteen hundred feet per second, or nearly twenty miles per minute.

Out of the three thousand two hundred Paris insurgents transported, there are no less than one hundred and fifty artists, or about one twentieth of the whole. Whilst every other nation in Europe is represented amongst them, there is not one Englishman, or even Irishman.

It has been decided by the Supreme Court of Louisiana, that a common fire insurance policy does not cover loss from the explosion of a steamboat boiler. The case was one in which sugar and molasses to the amount of six thousand five hundred dollars were destroyed by the explosion of a steam boiler used in the manufacture, but in which no conflagration occurred.

Dates have been received from Mexico, via, New Orleans, to Dec. 28. The Government was much embarrassed. The Indians were committing high-handed outrages and murders; gangs of robbers on all hands defy the police. Congress was to meet on the 1st of January; fears were entertained that there would not be a quorum, and $100 fine was imposed on members failing to attend.

The Manchester (N. H.) Democrat says that during the first twelve days of the year 1849, there was but a single instance of death in the city of Manchester, among a population of 13,000.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

W. C. KENYON, A. M., } Principals.
IRA SAYLES, A. M., }

Assisted by nine able and experienced Teachers, five in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

The Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past ten years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to also continue to merit a share of public patronage

Extensive buildings are now erected for the accommodation of students, and for Recitation and Lecture Rooms. &c. They occupy an eligible position, and are finished in the best style of modern architecture; and the different apartments are heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical

Ladies and Gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board and rooms can also be had in private families, if particularly desired.

Each room for those who board in the Hall is furnished with a bed and bedding, a table, two chairs, and a pail.

The plan of instruction adopted in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the student, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The Health, the Manners, and the Morals of our Students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

REGULAR ACADEMIC EXERCISES.

The regular exercises, at which all the students will be required to attend, unless specially excused, are, Chapel exercises each morning during the term; Recitations, from two to four, five days each week, from Monday morning till Friday evening. Compositions and Declamations, one-half day, once in two weeks, Literary, Scientific, and Moral Lectures by the Principals. Public Worship, once in each week, either on Saturday or Sunday, according as the students may be in the habit of keeping the Sabbath, either on the seventh or first day of the week.

ADMISSION.

Candidates for admission as students, must present testimonials of good moral character, or be known to possess such a character, and must be willing to comply unreservedly with the foregoing regulations; and no one will be permitted to receive instructions in any class, until all academic bills, for the term in prospect, be paid or satisfactorily arranged.

ACADEMIC TERMS.

The Academic Year for 1848-9 consists of three terms as follows;

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 15, 1848, and ending Thursday, November 23, 1848.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, December 5, 1848, and ending Thursday, March 15, 1849.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, April 3, 1849, and ending July 12, 1849.

As the plan of instruction in this Institution, laid out for each class, will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue through the term, and accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the terms.

N. B. Students who are expecting to teach during the winter or summer, will specify such intention on entering in the beginning of the fall or spring term; and, for the special accommodation of such, a day will be set apart at first, on which they can leave, if they wish; and they will not be permitted to leave on any other day, nor will any other than teachers be permitted to leave on the day specified.

Farther, it is of the utmost importance that the student be present at the day of the opening of the term, as on that and the succeeding day, the students entering are examined and classified.

EXPENSES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Board, per term, | from $14 50 to | $18 00 |
| Room-rent, | | 1 50 |
| Washing, | | 2 50 |
| Fuel, | spring and fall, 75 cents, winter, | 1 50 |
| Tuition, | from $3 50 to | 5 00 |
| Lights, | | 1 50 |
| Incidental Expenses, | | 25 |
| EXTRAS—Music on the Piano Forte, | | 10 00 |
| Oil Painting, | | 7 00 |
| Drawing, | | 2 00 |

The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, except the extras above mentioned, need not exceed eighty-five dollars.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment, or satisfactory arrangement.

Every student wishing to have washing done in the Hall, should have each article marked, so as to avoid exchange and losses.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

INCIDENTS IN TRACT DISTRIBUTING.

From a letter of Eld. Samuel Davison to the Executive Board of the American Sabbath Tract Society.

After my appointment to the Western Mission by the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association, I applied at your depository and obtained an assortment of tracts. . . . . I distributed several sets to gentlemen with whom I became acquainted on my journey to Illinois; and these were mostly persons who had never before been acquainted with such an anomaly as a Seventh-day Baptist. They were from nearly all the Western States. It would be tedious to relate all the incidents that occurred in connection with distributing the tracts, but a few of them I will relate. I supplied the boat I was on, and two of the adjacent ones; also several gentlemen from Springfield, Dayton, and Bellefontaine, (Ohio,) and St. Louis and other minor places in Missouri and Illinois, who appeared desirous of a candid inquiry into the matter. A good old Baptist brother from the western part of Missouri, took some for his own use, and some for his minister. I also supplied a young clergyman from Gettysburg, Pa., just going to take charge of a Lutheran congregation at Beardstown, Ill.; a Catholic priest just from Munich, Germany, going to seek a charge at the hands of the bishop of St. Louis; and a Baptist minister from Illinois, with whom I was formerly acquainted, and had been a fellow-laborer in New York State, eight or ten years ago. Besides these, I have supplied the families of our brethren in Illinois, and furnished them with some for their neighbors. I likewise supplied several streets in the city of Wheeling, Va., and individuals in St. Louis.

While on my passage from Pittsburg to Cincinnati, I became acquainted with a Baptist preacher named J—— B——, from Pittsburg, with his family, going to take charge of a church in the State of Ohio. He told me that he had been somewhat acquainted with our sentiments, was much staggered with the arguments we employed, and did not know how some of them could be answered; and confessed that he had been somewhat tried in mind about it, but said that uniformity was so desirable, in a question of such general concernment and so important, that he thought it was not best to break fellowship with Christian brethren in the matter; especially where a person was not very conscientious about the point in dispute. I remarked, that a Baptist should be the last professor of religion in the world to plead uniformity in justification of religious observances that could not be satisfactorily proved valid by the word of God; and reminded him of some arguments that he had employed the day before, in a discussion on baptism with the Lutheran minister before mentioned. After shifting the argument, he affirmed that we did not know certainly when the seventh day in the order of creation occurred. I affirmed that we did. He then publicly pledged himself to keep the seventh-day Sabbath, if I could convince him that the day we observe as a Sabbath is the same in the real weekly succession from the seventh of the creation. This I pledged myself to do, and so that he should acknowledge it was done, provided that he would listen to a fair argument, and abide by preliminary positions that should be mutually agreed upon; or I would give up my position, and admit that I did not know. This having been agreed to, I proceeded as follows:—

Sir, you wish to know how many years, months, and weeks, it has been since the creation?

Ans.—Yes, and that you cannot tell, because there have been so many changes in the epochs of nations, and in the modes of reckoning time, that there is little or no certainty about it. The chronology acknowledged by one part of the Christian world is disputed by another.

Reply.—I admit the obscurity of the subject of chronology; but, supposing it to be all as you affirm, the application of this mystery of chronology to the subject of Sabbath or weekly succession, is only so much fog raised by learned divines, which becomes so much the denser before the world, by the depth of the learning that is moved to make it; and until I can clear it off from your vision, we can proceed no farther.

Ans.—Do you mean to say, that there have been no changes in the mode of reckoning time?

Reply.—By no means, sir; I know something about changes in the reckoning of time; but I affirm, and can prove to you, that these never made any difference in the order or succession of the week. Neither years nor months begin or end with the beginning or ending of a week. The week is independent of the year, and the year is independent of the week.

Ans.—Oh, but you are mistaken! The French nation abolished the week, and established a decade in its place. The English and other nations have changed their reckoning from old style to new style; and it is impossible but that the week must have been affected by leaving ten or twelve days out of the month of October or September.

Reply.—I am aware that these nations made the changes you have mentioned; and I would farther admit, that the heathen pontiffs of ancient Rome had the regulation of their festival times, and often fixed the commencement of their ides, months, and years, very capriciously. But this is not a question to be determined by the practices of any single nation in their notation of time, but a question respecting the actual succession of a religious division of time, which no nation originated, and which none have ever adopted into their civil reckoning. No nation on earth dates their eras by the beginning or number of weeks, nor reckons their civil affairs by a weekly division of time. All legal and commercial transactions are dated and reckoned by the days of the month, and the month by its succession in the civil year.

Ans.—But did not the change from old style to new style, leave out one week from the reckoning of those nations that made it?

Reply.—No, SIR! Pope Gregory XIII. omitted ten days from the calendar month of October, 1582, and the British Parliament omitted twelve days from the calendar month of September, 1752; but there was neither Sunday nor Sabbath in either of them.

Ans.—How could that be?

Reply.—Suppose the Congress of the United States were in session to-day, and it were laid before them that the Julian year, i. e., the year by which our time is reckoned, were shorter than the true solar year, and that since its adoption it had got twelve days ahead of the solar equinoxes, and they should, by a vote of both Houses, order that this 5th day November should be henceforth reckoned the 17th of November, would it make any difference to your observance of the present succession of Sunday?

Ans.—I cannot see that it would; but do you know that such was the case when these changes were made? Did the English Parliament merely order that change in the calendar reckoning of time, without interfering with the week?

Reply.—Yes, I do know that such was the nature and extent of the change then made, and I can prove it to your satisfaction. Bring me the Rubrick of the Church of England, and the act of Parliament, and I can show you that although, by the same statute, their "moveable feasts" were altered, such as easter, lent, &c., and a reformed table of them ordered, the succession of Sunday was the same as that made in the reign of Edward VI. But as we have not these authorities at hand, I appeal to your own knowledge of facts, and the judgment of the company of gentlemen present at this discussion. The Established Church of Russia is the Greek, the primate of which is the Patriarch of Constantinople, who has always contested the primacy with the Roman Pontiff, and the Russian government has never adopted what is called the new style, or the reformed calendar; yet Russia and the Greek church keep the same succession of Sundays on the same day, and, by the reckoning of American missionaries and American sailors, on the same day of the month as you do.

Ans.—Well, I believe I must give this point up, and admit that it is the same succession of Sundays as was had before the reformed calendars. But this does not settle the question, for the reckoning of time was lost while the people of Israel were in Egypt.

Reply.—I am glad, sir, if the fog of clerico-chronological erudition has cleared off from your horizon; but I must beg of you to keep it out of your eyes in all farther inquiries upon this subject. Do you see clearly what you mean by the reckoning of time being lost while the people of Israel were in Egypt? If you mean that the people of Israel did not keep an exact reckoning of the years, together with their genealogies, I must refer you to their own historians and the sacred writers; but as far as this remark concerns the question of the true sabbatical succession, it is only the same objection over again, which you have agreed to give up; and I must hold you to the agreement on which we started. If you are yet befogged with this question of the enumeration of months and years, or even of weeks, I want to know it; for I know it will be of no use to any of us to rest the question on that. I hold you to your admission, that the enumeration of civil, legal, and commercial time does not effect the succession of weekly time, or sabbatical observances.

Ans.—Well, I will try and avoid getting back upon it. Go on, and state your own positions.

Reply.—I hold the true succession of Sabbath time as an article of faith, besides the prophecies concerning it. Our Lord Jesus Christ affirmed, that it is easier for heaven and earth to pass away, than for one jot or tittle of the law to fail. That law says, "The seventh day is the Sabbath," and refers the reader to the succession of days in which Jehovah made and finished this lower creation. But if the weekly Sabbath succession be lost, more than a jot has failed—the very thing which the law requires to be observed, viz. Jehovah's hallowed seventh-day rest, has failed to be known. Suppose we were commanded to keep the birth-day of David, the King of Israel; we should want some god-like Pope to tell us when it should be, for no mortal could tell us from the chronicles of men; and then our observance must stand in the wisdom of men, and not in the appointment of God. Such a law could be of no force on the consciences of men, except such as worship the creature more than the Creator. It is not my intention, however, to rest my argument upon a mere article of faith, however well founded, because there is independent proof enough without it, and a commandment and an institution given to MAN by Jehovah is not made dependent upon an act of Christian faith. My first position is, that the weekly division of time was divinely made, solely for religious purposes. The first six days were each specifically marked by particular works of Jehovah's hand, and the seventh day by a religious appointment and sanctification, and they are so enumerated by the sacred historian.

Ans.—I object to this position, because it is impossible to prove that the seven days of the beginning, mentioned by Moses, were periods of 24 hours. Christian geologists, such as John Pye Smith, D. D., author of many important theological works, and other like eminent men, have shown that geology proves that it must have taken thousands of years to form the various strata of earth over the first formations of animal and vegetable life, which are now found imbedded in even primary formations; and that, therefore, we are to take the language of Moses in the same latitude of meaning as when our Lord said, "Abraham saw my day," that is, a period marked by some great event, as an era, and each day might be one thousand years.

Reply.—I do not profess to be a geologist; I am a simple-minded Christian, and receive the word of God in its plainest import, and not in the wisdom of men, however eminent they may be. But if I were to adopt the principles of such geologists for rules of interpreting the Bible, I could prove that it took twenty-one years to make Adam a man, and four years to make a jackass, and one year to make a goose, for it takes so long now by the laws of nature for these living beings to come to maturity; whereas Moses says that God made the goose on the fifth day, and the jackass and the man on the sixth day. But according to this geological argument, the goose might have been a thousand years older than Adam, when God brought it to him to see what he would call it, and Adam called it a goose. If you please, sir, we will wave this geological argument, by waving the position that I took; and I will ask you one question; Did the Israelites keep the same Sabbath that Jehovah sanctified, while they obeyed the fourth commandment?

Ans.—I suppose they did, but what of that?

Reply.—I assume that position, and wish it fixed as a point on which we may agree. The penal statutes of Israel made the wanton violation of the Sabbath day a capital crime; but if it was not a day of well-defined succession, and of limited and specified duration, no court could safely convict the Sabbath-breaker. Any uncertainty respecting the sanctified time must effectually nullify the penal character of the law.

Ans.—I admit that, sir; but that was for the Jews, and not for us.

Reply.—The penal laws of the Jews were in force during the ministry of our Lord Jesus Christ; and on the subject of the Sabbath, the Jews, after the return from Babylon, were more stringent than their forefathers. Did Christ and his apostles keep the same Sabbath in true succession as the Jews did at the giving of the law on Sinai.

Ans.—I have no reason to dispute it, that I know of.

Reply.—The whole question, then, is resolved into this, Has the Sabbath time been lost since the resurrection of Christ?

Ans.—Yes; but I suppose you know that the date of the Christian era is disputed.

Reply.—Yes; and we have decided that such questions are not relevant to our present inquiry. All we have to prove is, that the religious observance of the seventh day of the week has continued in constant succession from the days of Christ to the present time. In proof of this, we have an enduring monument, whose base is as broad as the earth, and whose top reacheth up to heaven, on which is inscribed, "The day before the weekly festival of the sun, the day before that on which Christians celebrate the resurrection of Christ, is the seventh day, the Sabbath of Jehovah." You are well aware that I refer to the Jewish people. They are scattered over the whole earth; they inhabit all the great commercial cities of the world; and although they have no organized correspondence with each other, they all uniformly keep the same identical day, and that in the face of national edicts against them in so doing. There has always been a strong antipathy between them and the Christian world, and if they had ever diverged from the true succession of their Sabbath observance, the Christian world would instantly have accused them of it. Had the Christian world changed their reckoning of the weekly first-day, the Jews would have been ready to charge this upon them, as the Christian world profess to celebrate the resurrection of their Saviour on that day, which their own scriptures affirm to have been, as soon as the seventh day Sabbath was ended. Besides, history records no such interruption of the true succession, but on the other hand confirms the fact of its succession, by showing that the rites of Apollo, the god of the sun, were continued down to the days of Constantine the Great, who, as Pontiff of the Roman Empire, at his professed conversion, substituted the celebration of the resurrection of the Sun of Righteousness for the ancient rites of his former favorite god Apollo. Since the seventh century, the Mohammedans observe the sixth day of the week as their Sabbath, and all these parties enumerate the seven days of the week just as we do, so that no fact of ancient standing is better attested than that of the true Sabbath succession.

Ans.—Well, I must admit that this wears the appearance of a fair argument; and I do not know but it is so; but I think the seventh-day people are doing a great deal of injury to the morals of the people, by their efforts to undo the Lord's day observance. I formerly lived at Clarence, N. Y., where there is a Seventh-day Baptist church; and the members and the minister would be about their worldly business on the Lord's day, and took pains to do it where they would be sure to be seen. And although there is a Baptist church, and a Presbyterian church, all that they and their ministers could do, they could not keep their young people from desecrating the day. They would go hunting, or riding, or after some other amusement, on Sunday; and it was all through the influence of the seventh-day people. They tried to have it so.

Ans.—If any man does wrong, interrupting his neighbors on any occasion, let him bear the blame as a wrong-doer, and not as a Sabbath-keeper. It is the same cruel prejudice that indiscriminately aspersed the Jews, that asperses all Christian Sabbath-keepers, even those they have never seen. But supposing the fact universal, that where Sabbath-keepers are known, the Sunday observance is relaxed, who is to blame for that? If the arguments on the seventh-day observance are stronger than the arguments used to enforce the first-day, let them see to it that use them; it is not we that have troubled Israel, but those who have departed from the law of the Lord.

Thus this gentleman forgot or forfeited his pledge, and turned away from the truth; yet, on the subject of baptism, he was as strenuous as any minister could be.

RE-UNION IN HEAVEN.

If yon bright stars which gem the night,
Be each a blissful dwelling sphere,
Where kindred spirits re-unite,
Whom death has torn assunder here:
How sweet it were at once to die,
And leave this blighted orb afar,
And soul meet soul to cleave the sky,
And soar from star to star.

But oh, how dark, how drear, and lone,
Would seem the brightest world of bliss,
If wandering through each radiant one,
We failed to find the loved of this;
If there no more the ties shall twine,
That death's cold hand alone could sever;
Ah! then these stars in mockery shine,
More hateful as they shine forever.

It cannot be—each hope, each fear,
That lights the eye or clouds the brow,
Proclaims there is a happier sphere
Than this bleak world that holds us now;
There is a voice which sorrow hears,
When heaviest weighs life's galling chain,
'T is heaven that whispers—Dry thy tears,
The pure in heart shall meet again.

HOW TO GO TO CHRIST.

" * * * Go, my dear son, to Jesus Christ, the Friend of sinners, and ask him to pardon your sins, and give you a new heart."

"But, mother, how shall I go to him."

"I will relate to you a story, which will help you to understand what I mean by going to Christ, or believing in him:

"The father of a little girl between two and three years old, whose name was Mary, one day opened a trap-door, that is, a door made in the floor, and descended into his cellar. Mary went close to the door and said,—

"'Father, are you there?'

"'Yes, my dear, I am here. Does Mary want to come?'

"'It is dark, father, I can't see you.'

"'Well, throw yourself down here, and I will catch you in my arms. You need not be afraid, for I am right here, I will not let you fall.'

"'Mary hesitated a moment, then jumped down; and when she found herself in her father's arms, she exclaimed, 'I knew, father, you would not let me fall.'

"Now Mary believed her father. Though it was dark, and she could not see him, she had faith in his promise that he would not let her fall. This shows how you must believe in the Saviour of sinners. Though your mind may be darker than the cellar into which Mary looked to find her father; and you may say, it does not seem as if Christ would receive me if I do go to him, yet you must feel, He has promised to save me if I will believe on him; I know he will do everything he has promised, and I will trust his promise, and cast myself into his arms.

"It is time now, my son, for you to retire. But won't you remember, when you enter your room, that Christ is as able and willing to save you to-night as he ever will be. He says to all, 'Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation.'"

After Edward had retired to his chamber, he thought over all his mother had said to him. He said to himself, I will try to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and go to God through him. But his mind was all darkness and confusion. He thought, 'Well might my mother compare my mind to the dark cellar into which Mary looked. But at length the reflection occurred to him, If my mother had made me a promise, and I would not believe her, she would be more grieved with me for doubting her word, than for almost anything else I could do. How very wrong then it must be for me, when Jesus Christ has promised he will not cast me out, if I come to him, not to believe his word. At this thought his heart melted. Then he knelt down and prayed to the Saviour to pardon all his sins, and give him a new heart, that should delight in loving and serving God all the rest of his days. While he was offering up his petition, it did not seem to him, as it had done, that it was of no use to pray. But his whole heart went up with his petition. After this he felt calm and peaceful, and soon fell asleep.

The next morning, as soon as he awoke, he recalled all that had passed the night before. His first thought was—I don't see how I could help believing in the Saviour, when he told me in his Holy Word that he would save all who would come to him.

As soon as his mother found time to converse with him, he said to her—

"Mother, you do not know how differently everything seems to me from what it did yesterday."

"How differently, my son?"

"Why, yesterday it did not seem as if I ever could, or should love God. But now I wonder how I, or any one, can help loving him. I then thought it was hard for God to punish us for not loving him, if we tried to do right. But now, mother, it seems so right that we should love God, and so right that God should require us to love him; I wonder it never appeared to me before. It is all very plain now; and not to love God appears the greatest of sins."

EFFECTS OF BAD LIVING.

Some months since, says a correspondent of the Newburyport Herald, you copied a statement made by Rev. Theodore Parker, respecting a court in Boston, where all the children which were born were blind. You took occasion to doubt the accuracy of the report, and a recent investigation has confirmed your dissent from the startling rumor. There was a time, however, when the story was strictly true, and had Mr. Parker made use of his information immediately upon its reception, it would have been correct, as there is high medical authority for the statement, that in a court in Boston, there were several children born blind, and up to a certain date, every child born in that court was born blind, and even to the present time, though some twenty odd births have occurred there, a very small proportion of those thus born have had perfect eyes.

No one would doubt this statement, after visiting the place where these infants have been born. The court is called "Limerick-place," and is near the end of Hanover-street. It is about eighty feet long, by twelve feet wide. The land upon which the buildings are erected is about fifty feet wide, from which the twelve-foot passage-way is taken. This narrow opening is bounded on each side by a four-story building of brick. Each building is divided into tenements, and upon this small spot of land no less than twenty-eight tenements have been placed. Each of these miserable abodes, consists of a square room with two windows opening in the narrow court, and from this dark room there is a door leading into a small apartment in which there is neither window nor fireplace—no light, save that which is borrowed from the "outer darkness," and no ventilation, except such as is afforded by the cracks and shrinking work of poor and shiftless workmen.

Each of these tenements is not more than 16 by 18 feet square, and is occupied by one, two, or three families, according to their degrees of poverty. In those narrow, dark, and cold apartments, children are born, (they cannot be said to "see the light,") and it is no miracle that Nature takes severe judgment upon those who thus violate her laws, for, physically, "the iniquities of the parents are visited upon their children." One of the tenants informed me that each one of these wretched holes lets for $1 25 a week, or $65 a year! One of the females said they could not look neater, as the only way they had to dry their clothes consisted of stretching a string from one of their windows to the other, a distance of only a few feet, though probably enough for their scanty wardrobes.

Misery is said to like company, and as far as my experience goes, it usually selects dogs as companions, and Limerick-place is no exception to this rule, for in less than three minutes after entering its gloomy and filthy precincts, I was beset by four or five ill-looking and half-starved mongrel dogs, whose noise soon brought the inhabitants to the windows, and revealed a large and doleful assortment of faces, where wretchedness, want, and woe, were stamped in indelible lines, reminding one of Hogarth's delineation of Gin-lane, and its miserable inhabitants.

SUPERSTITION CURED BY SUPERSTITION.

Dr. Duncan's memoir contains an incident which strikingly illustrates the power of superstition in the dark minds of Irish Papists, and which shows how much more ready such superstitious minds are to yield to frivolous concurrences, than to the force of truth and reason.

Dr. Duncan happened to be walking in front of the manse one fine day in summer, when he was accosted very civilly by an Irishman.

Papist.—Would your reverence have the kindness to christen a baby?

Dr. Duncan.—Who desires it?

P.—Myself, please your reverence.

Dr. D.—But who are you? I never saw you before. Are you a parishioner of mine? Are you a Protestant? Surely you don't attend church.

P.—True, I am your parishioner, for I live in your parish, and have done this six weeks bygone; as for attending church Reverend Sir, I must inform your reverence I once heard a Protestant preacher in Armagh; but I took a complaint in my hip the week after, and I vowed to the Virgin, that if she would recover me but this once, I never would enter a Protestant church more. So I could not, if I would, come to your church; and that is the only reason, your reverence. But if your reverence would come to my cabin and christen the baby, I'd be forever obliged to you.

Dr. Duncan addressed the poor man very seriously, showing him the folly and sin of his vow, and tried to convince him of his need of seeking light from the Scriptures. He spoke earnestly, and the Irishman seemed to be seriously impressed. At this instant, a pet monkey of the Dr.'s. that had been watching the interview from the branch of a tree above him, leaped down upon his master's shoulder, grinned, chattered, and gestured, assuming an earnest and threatening aspect towards the Irishman, seconding the Dr.'s condemnation of his conduct. The Irishman, struck with horror, conceived it to be some familiar spirit come to enforce the lesson of the Protestant priest, and fell on his knees and prayed for mercy. "I'll do anything your reverence bids me—say the word—I'll come to church, I'll read the Bible—anything, only don't let the creature come near me."

BAPTISTS IN MASSACHUSETTS.—There are in Massachusetts 12 Baptist Associations, embracing 238 churches and 241 ordained ministers; number added by baptism during the year, [illegible]. Total, 29,876. Three churches have been constituted in the Commonwealth within the year; six meeting-houses have been dedicated; nine ministers have been ordained; and four have deceased. Twenty-four churches have received aid during the year.

OUR FOREIGN MISSION.

Letters have recently been received from our missionaries in China, which show that they are steadily progressing towards a readiness to fulfill the great work for which they were sent to that empire—the preaching of the "everlasting gospel." It is possible that they are already engaged in this work, as they expected to become fitted for it in two years from the time of their leaving America. It is a cause of thankfulness, that their lives have been spared, and that they have enjoyed so large a measure of health, thus enabling them to prosecute their studies almost without intermission. Surely, God has much for them to do in that great country. Every communication tends to confirm us in the opinion, that it was of God that we were moved to engage in missions to the heathen, and that the occupancy of that field, in preference to all others, was prompted by the same all-wise Being.

The following is from brother Wardner, dated Shanghai, July 20th, 1848. After alluding to their finances, and some other matters not concerning the public, he writes as follows:

"We are in possession of facts on various subjects, which may or may not be interesting to you. I will note a few at a venture. The Episcopalian missionaries from America have erected a large and beautiful building for their school, occupying one of the most delightful locations to be found in the region of Shanghai. It is situated across the river from the English reservation, furnishing them a delightful view of the city, river, shipping, and surrounding country, and at the same time is sufficiently retired. Bishop Boone expects soon to put up a dwelling adjacent to it; and a gentleman in Boston has recently contributed five thousand dollars for building a chapel. Rev. Messrs. McClatchin and Farmer, of the London Episcopal Society, I understand, are expecting to locate near them. The London Congregational Society, we are informed, has become involved to the amount of sixty thousand dollars. Their press is now idle, and all extension of operations is suspended.

"The melancholy news concerning the death of Dr. James and wife, of the Southern Baptist Board, has probably reached you. This stroke of God's providence seems to be deeply felt by the missionaries of this place. Information has lately arrived that Rev. Mr. Johnson, of Canton, who arrived last summer, is soon expecting to sail for America as his only hope of recovery, having been sick most of the time since his arrival. Rev. Mr. Piercy, of the same place, is also dangerously ill. The wife of Rev. Mr. Johnson, who lately joined Bro. Dean, of Hong-Kong, died a short time since. Mrs. White, of Fuchau, has also gone. Such are some of the mysterious dealings of Providence with His children. But if for the sacrifice of each earthly tabernacle, a soul is redeemed unto God, the prize is cheaply bought. It is a consoling reflection, that the work of evangelizing the world, does not depend entirely upon human strength or skill.

"These streets often become scenes of quarrels, in which the weaker party is sometimes bound and cruelly beaten. An ancestral hall, situated a few miles distant, was broken open last spring, and a large number of coffins robbed of the jewelry, clothing, and other articles of value, which the Chinese are in the habit of burying with their dead, for their use in another world. About the same time, a young man near Woosung, wishing to sell his wife, and being opposed by his grandmother, became enraged, and murdered her. He was soon apprehended, his hands nailed to the coffin of his victim, and being compelled to kneel in a hole dug by its side, he was buried, with the exception of his head, and thus left to die. Owing to the apathy and want of public spirit among the so-called administrators of justice, such outrages upon humanity are often allowed to pass unnoticed. But how can we expect different things where God and His laws are unknown. 'They know not what they do.'

"On the 10th of May, I saw fields of wheat ready for harvest. Apples, plums, peaches, cucumbers, &c., have been in the market for several weeks, and now green-corn is coming in. Peaches, and some other kinds of fruit, are nearly ruined by reason of the unusually rainy season we have experienced. For the last two months, I should judge, we have had rain nearly every other day on an average, and frequently in large quantities. The highest elevation of the mercury, to my knowledge, has been ninety-two degrees in the shade.

"17th.—Visited the Shanghai military parade. The men were drawn up in ranks of thirty or forty deep, standing far enough apart to allow a file of men to pass between them. Their guns were about six feet long, heavy and awkward, with percussion locks, and managed by two men. They marched to the beating of a gong, and on stepping into the front rank, the one carrying the muzzle end crouched a little, while the other discharged the piece: they then retired to the rear to load, quickening their steps with the beating of the gong, and stopped when that stopped. At the sound of a bugle, the banners would advance or retreat as the case might be. When this exercise was done, they formed a hollow square, in which six men were called out at a time to engage in gladiatorial exercises, with sabres, spears, and shields.

"The chairs of mandarins, and other distinguished persons, are borne by four men, and attended by an escort of from two to six, who carry circular ensigns, about three feet across, with a circle of cloth suspended from the edge, about two feet wide, generally of a scarlet color, and mounted on a pole ten or twelve feet long. All persons in the street are expected to stop and give the road for them to pass. On approaching their place of destination, the escort, one by one, sing out, each at the top of his voice, as long as he can command breath, when the next catches the sound, proceeding in the same way through the whole.

"A few weeks ago, while in conversation with our cook, I asked him if China people feared to die? He answered, Yes. In reply to the question why, he said, because they knew not what was to become of them. Good men, he supposed, had happiness in another world; but bad men were whipped and tormented. The future was all dark; and consequently they did not like to think of death, but to make the best of the present life. Such are the forebodings of those who know not the Saviour.

"The ideas the common people get from reading, without explanation, are extremely vague. The darkness which overshadows their minds is almost incredible. Repeated and protracted efforts are necessary to make them understand the simplest truths. We make it a point to spend a portion of each evening and Sabbath with our men, separately, reading and explaining portions of the New Testament, and hope to be prepared for operations on a larger scale, as soon as means are furnished for fitting up a chapel.

"On the 6th of June we recited the last of a thousand characters we had been learning with Messrs. Syle and Spaulding. We have also made ourselves familiar with many more by reading. On the same day we visited an establishment devoted to the manufacture of oil from beans. In the first place, were three granite wheels, four or five feet in diameter, and one and a half thick, attached to long sweeps, and drawn by buffaloes. In front of each wheel was a small box, furnished with a valve at the bottom, with an upright rod attached to the valve, and also to a lever which was depressed by means of cogs in the side of the wheel, elevating the valve, by which means the beans were scattered in front of the wheel and crushed by its weight. The crushed bean was again submitted to the action of heavier wheels, six or seven feet in diameter, made narrow at the edges, and running in grooves; whence it was taken, put into small measures, and well strained. It was next put into bamboo-hoops, lined with sea-grass, with a stamp at the bottom, containing the name of the owner and of the establishment. These cheeses were then placed edgewise in vats, made of strong timbers, with an orifice at the bottom for the oil to escape, where they were pressed by means of wedges. The oil thus extracted averages about one-tenth the weight of the beans, and sells for about five or six cents per pound. The cheeses are used for feeding cattle and hogs, and also for manure. Just back of the building is a large vat, filled with water, in which the buffaloes regale themselves after having performed their respective tasks, which seemed to afford them the highest enjoyment.

"There have been two excursions made into the country, the distance of two or three hundred miles, by English and Americans, within a few weeks past. The last paid a visit to the silk country, passing through Loo-Chow twice on their route. Both companies returned in safety, bringing favorable reports of the country, and of the treatment they received from the natives. But the Taouti, as I am informed, was much displeased. A circular was sent round yesterday by Mr. Woolcot, informing the American residents of Shanghai, that a treaty had been ratified with the government, limiting their excursions into the country to a day's journey, going and returning, which will render such excursions more unsafe in future.

"My teacher informs me, that there is a certain star in the constellation Ursa-Major, called the Emperor's star, by which astrologers pretend to foretell, at the time of his election, his character and success during his reign. If the star is bright, the Emperor is a good man, and is to have a prosperous reign. If dim, he is a bad man, and trouble is to be expected. But when the country is without an Emperor, this star is black. Six of these stars are said to be the residences of so many ancient Emperors, by whom the spirits of the dead are obliged to pass in going to the other world. Consequently, when a rich man dies, six dollars are put into his coffin to pay his passport. And six cash are put into the coffin of a poor man for the same purpose. How generally this superstition is believed, I am unable to say."

The remainder of Bro. W.'s letter is devoted to a subject, in reference to which, it is altogether probable, we shall be brought into painful collision with the missionaries of other denominations. If the facts are as they are represented by our brethren, (and we know that they would not be guilty of willful misrepresentation,) they show that we have a double work to perform among the heathen. We have not only to attempt their conversion directly, but also to contend against those perversions of divine truth already introduced among them, which go far to neutralize its converting power. In such a contest may God make us, and our missionaries, "wise as serpents, and harmless as doves." Besides the present letter from Bro. W., we have more communications touching the same subject, which we shall lay before our denomination as we can find room.

"In your last letter, an inquiry is made in regard to how the term Sabbath is translated into the Chinese language. The extract which I made in my letter last summer, was from a phrase-book published by Rev. Mr. Dean. What farther information I obtained, was from Mr. Macy, teacher of the Morrison Institute, at Hong-Kong, who said that such was the general method of numbering the days of the week among the Chinese by foreigners, both in talking and translating. In addition to what has hitherto been forwarded, I will state a few facts which will speak for themselves.

"In a translation of the Acts of the Apostles, got up by the London Society at Hong-Kong, I find the term Sabbath represented by the Chinese characters, "sa-pa-nyi." On presenting them to my teacher, although a man of good information, I found he could do no more than to pronounce their names. I then presented them to Bro. Carpenter's teacher, who said they meant one day of seven, indefinitely—that it was a word out of use, and understood only by a few.

"In a translation of Matthew's gospel, published by the London Congregational Society of this place, I find that "le-pai-nyi," (ceremony worship day,) and "ur-se-nyi," (rest-day) are used interchangeably as a translation of the Greek word "Sabbaton." In the 12th chapter, "le-pai-nyi" is used in the 10th and 11th verses, and "ur-se-nyi" is used in other parts of the chapter, where the word Sabbath occurs.

"The following is from a tract which has been widely circulated, published by Rev. Mr. McClatchin. It is written in the form of a dialogue under the names Yaw and Neo. Neo says, 'To-day I hear there is to be a play at the ching-waung-meau; shall we go to see?' Yaw said, 'To-day is the ceremony worship day; therefore I wish to go to church and worship Jesus!' Neo, having heard this, and not understanding, said, 'Why call it ceremony worship day?' Yaw says, 'In the beginning, the God of heaven, in six days, made all heaven, earth, and all things; arriving at the seventh day, He rested; therefore God established this day to be reckoned a holy day, and called it rest-day; that rest-day is the ceremony worship day,' &c. Pages 2, 3.

"The object is evidently to impress upon the minds of the Chinese, that 'ur-se-nyi' and 'le-pai-nyi,' are synonymous. And as the latter is generally known by the natives, so far as they are acquainted with foreigners, to be applied by them to the first day of the week, and that day only, if this object is attained, both titles will be understood to apply solely to the first day of the week. Such is the doctrine proclaimed both from the pulpit and the press. As yet I have neither seen nor heard any thing addressed to the Chinese about a change of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week, nor of the Sabbath being abolished at the resurrection of our Saviour. The main object appears to be, to make the fourth commandment sanction Sunday, so that they can enforce that day by a 'thus saith the Lord.'

"In regard to Matthew 28: 10, those translations which I have examined, render it much like our English version: 'After the rest-day, as the first day began to be light,' &c. But as Sunday is represented to be the rest-day, and Monday the first day after the rest-day, it is evident that no Chinaman, on reading that passage, would think of applying the language to any other day. One brother, in conversation, acknowledged to me, that the Chinese, in reading the Scriptures as they have them translated, would naturally understand them to teach that the first day was the Sabbath.

"I learn by a note addressed to Bro. Carpenter from Rev. Mr. Shuck, that the missionaries at Ningpo have adopted the practice of designating their working days by the word koong-foo, (laboring,) as koong-foo-yi, (laboring day the first,) koong-foo-nyi, (laboring day the second,) &c., making the rest-day (Sabbath) of the fourth commandment, laboring day the sixth.

"I think I have already mentioned to you concerning an essay which Rev. Mr. Gutzlaff informed me had been written by a native convert, proving from the nation's history, that the ancient Chinese observed the seventh day as the Sabbath. I have written to him, requesting a copy, but have not received an answer. I intend to repeat my request, fearing the former may not have reached him.

"I see by your report, that at a meeting at DeRuyter, in September last, I had the honor of being made a life-member of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association; for which favor, I wish to express to all who contributed for that purpose my most grateful acknowledgments, praying that our united efforts for the extension of the Redeemer's Kingdom may be owned, and abundantly blessed, by the Great Head of the Church."

The Learned Slave.—The editors of the New Orleans Presbyterian have received letters from Rev. H. W. Ellis, familiarly known as the learned slave, purchased and sent out by the Synods of Alabama and Mississippi to Africa as a missionary, in which he speaks in the highest terms of the new land of his adoption. He has been carried safely through the acclimating fever, with all his family, and is now engaged in the active duties of a missionary. He says:—

"I preach twice on the Sabbath, attend the Sabbath-school, and superintend a Bible-class. I have been solicited to organize a new church at Kentucky, about ten miles from Monrovia. I shall preach to the people there for the present, but I am not disposed to organize a church until I receive instructions from the Board. I am also studying two of the dialects spoken by Western Tribes, and am trying every means in my power, that I may soon be able to preach to them in their own language. These tribes are very friendly to me, and I can have easy access to them. The Mandingoes claim me for their countryman, as my grandfather was born in Africa. Some of the priests of this Mohammedan tribe are intelligent, and can read Hebrew, if written in the Arabic character. They have made some excellent promises, if I will visit them, which I intend to do in the proper time."

A RELIGIOUS PAPER IN EVERY FAMILY.

One of our exchanges tells of several churches which have recently determined to supply each family within their bounds with a religious newspaper. The plan is a good one, and ought to be adopted in every church. There is no way in which so much good could be done with so little labor and expense. How many of the pious poor would be comforted, and the ungodly rich admonished, by such a movement! If each family in our churches were supplied with a religious newspaper, from which they might learn what is being done for the renovation of the world, the churches would prosper, and there would be vastly less difficulty in sustaining the various institutions of benevolence. This is not mere theory; it has been demonstrated by facts. Show us a church in which the religious papers are generally read, and we will show you a church in which the calls of benevolence are promptly responded to. Some pastors seem not to understand this; but have a lurking suspicion, that the press is some how inimical to them, and to the spiritual prosperity of the churches. Occasionally such persons are afraid to have the claims of the press, and of benevolent societies, presented to their people, lest it should distract their attention, and hinder their supporting religious institutions at home. This is all wrong. The people who occasionally listen to calls from abroad, will generally be found most ready to supply the calls near home. On the other hand, the people who are in the habit of putting off all applications from abroad, will in most cases be found wonderfully dexterous in resisting home calls. Instances could be given, to illustrate both these positions, if illustrations were needed. But we presume those who desire them can find illustrations within their own spheres of observation.

The Unitarian Revival.—We see a great deal in our exchanges about a religious movement among the Unitarians of Boston. It seems that many of them have become impressed with the necessity of more spirituality, and that they have established a sort of conference meeting, held on Sunday evenings, and attended by ministers and laymen from all the Unitarian churches, at which they talk and pray about the matter. We are glad to hear of such a state of things, and hope it may continue; for we have no doubt it will do more than all their controversies to teach them the need of such a Saviour as Jesus Christ claims to be. Meanwhile we think there is no better course for the orthodox people, so-called, than to leave the Unitarians to themselves, and make their comments at some future day, if ever.

Dr. Judson's Visit to Ava.—Some time ago, Dr. Judson entertained the plan of visiting Ava, the capital of the Burman Empire, for the purpose of bringing to a higher perfection his great work, the Burman and English Dictionary. A very favorable opportunity then offered, but he had not funds, and was compelled to give up the plan, to his own grief, as well as the grief of all the Baptist churches in America. He has recently written, that there is a prospect of being able to accomplish the object yet, if funds can be supplied; and accordingly the Executive Committee of the Baptist Missionary Union have appropriated one thousand rupees for the purpose.

Selling Sunday Papers in Philadelphia.—The news-boys in Philadelphia, charged with desecrating the Sunday by vending newspapers, had a trial before the Mayor last week. His Honor, after severely lecturing the boys, and receiving the solemn promise from each that he would sell no more papers on Sunday, ordered them to be discharged, but told the parents of the children, who were present, that if they were brought up again on a similar charge, he would send them to the House of Refuge.

---

A Sad Wreck.—The London papers announce the death of that child of wondrous promise, Hartley Coleridge, son of Samuel T. Coleridge. Intemperance hastened his disease, and to that vice must be attributed the early decay of powers which promised to link his name with the glory of his father's. How many have already made shipwreck on this rock! And how many will yet fail to profit by their example.

THE MINISTER'S DREAM.

"For God speaketh once, yea twice, yet man perceiveth it not. In a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon man, in slumberings upon the bed; then he openeth the ears of men, and sealeth their instruction, that he may withdraw man from his purpose, and hide pride from man."

Meeting a first-day minister one day, he said to me, "Well, brother, I had a dream the other night in regard to the Sabbath. I thought I saw the Saviour, and he was the most beautiful and lovely person I ever saw. I asked him which was the day of the week that should be observed as the Sabbath. He would not tell, but said, 'The Bible is sufficiently plain upon that point, and you need not expect a new revelation.'"

The minister continues in the observance of the first day, notwithstanding his dream, although there is neither precept or example in the Bible for his practice. M. L. D.

LATEST FROM THE GOLD REGION.

Robert Atherton, Esq., a California merchant, arrived at New York on Sunday last, in 61 days from San Francisco. He brings 34 days later news, confirming the reports of the abundance of gold in California, but showing that it is not the easiest business in the world to pick it up. The N. Y. Tribune publishes the following items of intelligence brought by Mr. Atherton. Of course our readers will make some allowances:—

The gold region is now understood to embrace a territory, a thousand miles in length and three hundred in width. The gold is distributed over this vast extent, though by no means equally, some parts being of surpassing richness, while others are comparatively barren of the precious metal. No limit can be fixed to the number of men who may find employment in extracting it, or to the length of time for which good digging may be profitable. But the business of mining has nothing that is agreeable, except the gold that it sometimes—not always—produces. In short, it requires the hardest kind of labor, such as only strong constitutions and muscles indurated by toil can undertake with a prospect of success. Young men, delicately brought up, and more familiar with the drawing-room, counting-room, or lawyer's office, than the plow or sledge-hammer, had better keep their imaginations free from all visions of placers, rivers floating with gold dust, and big lumps of the real stuff to be had for the picking up. Gold is not to be procured in that way even in California, but yields itself only to strength and skill. Even these are not always successful. Mr. Atherton knew one company which went out from San Francisco with all the proper tools, machines, and accessaries, and whose members, after digging some time with better zeal than fortune, came back each with a flea in his ear, and not a jot of gold in his pocket.

However, a man of the right sort in respect to health, strength, and skill, may, with fair luck and hard and steady work, obtain three ounces of gold on an average per day. It is not often found in lumps. Still Mr. Atherton has seen one mass weighing 7 lbs., and a friend of his had seen another weighing 21 lbs. The number of persons who had been to the mines when he left is estimated at 10,000, but there had not been more than 2,500 digging at any one time. One man of his acquaintance, a blacksmith, had got ten thousand dollars worth in three weeks. A good many Indians had been employed as laborers by the miners, but they are poor assistants. They do not work steadily, and never can be kept at it above a month at a time, when they leave for San Francisco to spend their earnings in dissipation.

Remarkable Coincidence.—One of the German Colporteurs of the American Tract Society, laboring in the Far West, recently wrote to the Secretaries that he expected his wife to arrive from Germany, via New Orleans, in the spring. A gentleman from the Tract House, well acquainted with this colporteur, was in the office of the German Emigrant Society the other day, when a woman came in and inquired of one of the officers, if he had a letter from her husband for her. The gentleman alluded to, hearing the name of his western colporteur friend, asked the woman if such a man, giving his name, was her husband. She said he was, and she wanted to hear from him. She said she had just arrived from Germany, with four children, having started before the time she had named, and had taken her passage for New York rather than New Orleans. The gentleman in question then handed her a letter which he had recently received from her husband, and singular as it may appear, he was the only gentleman this side of Wisconsin, who could have given her any information concerning him! This resolute woman, with four children, crossed the Atlantic, and after paying her passage, was landed in this strange city, and among entire strangers, with scarcely five dollars in the world.

Temperance in Iowa.—For two years past a law has been in force in Iowa, leaving the question of granting licenses for retailing spirituous liquors to be determined by the voters of the different counties. The consequence has been, that no licenses were allowed except in one or two counties. But the law has failed in its beneficial operations on account of the difficulty of finding persons to complain of its infringement, and thus bring the offenders to punishment. The system has been modified by a late act of the General Assembly. The question of granting licenses is now left to the discretion of the several Boards of Commissioners; the penalty of selling without license is much increased, being both fine and imprisonment; the license high; and the prosecution committed to the District Courts by indictment, which, it is supposed, will prove a remedy for the defects of the former bill.

Christian Liberality.—The Presbyterian Herald says that a pious member of the Methodist Church in the city of Cincinnati, desirous of exciting his brethren to greater liberality in their contributions to religious objects, has purchased one thousand copies of Harris's great work, entitled 'Mammon,' for gratuitous distribution among them. He desires that every member of the church may be brought to see and feel his responsibility for the use of all his property. The volumes are neatly covered with paper, and are to contain a card, requesting that the reader should return the volume to his minister, to be loaned to others. The donor, who does not wish to be known in the transaction, is said to be a man of moderate circumstances, and was a Sunday-school teacher. In the library of the school was a copy of this volume. Seemingly by accident, without knowing much respecting its character, he took it from the library, became interested in its perusal, and, as the result, has contributed upwards of one hundred dollars to place it before others.

☞ Seraphina—not Seraphim, nor Serapina—is the name of the instrument mentioned in the Report on the State of Religion in the Rhode Island Churches. So says the writer of the Report.

LAST WEEK'S CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

February 5.

In the SENATE, a resolution was submitted, and laid over, calling on the President to communicate certain documents relative to the secret history of the Treaty with Mexico, and inquiring if there is not a Protocol extant which nullifies the amendments of the Senate to the Treaty. Resolutions were presented from the Legislature of Virginia, reaffirming the resolutions which were passed in the same body, in the year 1847, with regard to the Wilmot Proviso, and the question of Slavery in the Territories. The Postage Bill was under discussion, but not acted upon.

In the HOUSE, the principal discussion was upon a resolution, which was adopted, respecting the supposed Protocol to the late Treaty with Mexico.

February 6.

In the SENATE, among numerous memorials and petitions, one was presented from a company of citizens proposing to carry the mail in coaches from St. Louis to the Pacific. Resolutions were submitted from the Legislature of South Carolina, against the application of the Wilmot Proviso to the new Territories, and also expressing the usual sentiments of the South on Slavery. A resolution was passed, providing for ten Assistant Surgeons to the Medical Staff of the United States Army, and ten additional Chaplains. The resolution offered yesterday, in relation to the Protocol, was adopted. The Panama Railroad Bill was then taken up and discussed to the close.

The HOUSE received, and ordered printed, a bill in relation to Patent Medicines. The Naval Appropriation Bill was passed, after rejecting the amendment substituting money for spirit rations.

February 7.

In the SENATE, Mr. Benton, from the Committee on Military Affairs, introduced a bill providing for the location and construction of a central national road from St. Louis to San Francisco, with a branch to the Columbia River. Mr. Benton spoke at great length on the subject, after which the bill was referred to the Military Committee. The Pension Appropriation Bill was passed; also a bill making appropriations for the Military Academy at West Point.

The HOUSE spent considerable time in discussing a bill from the Senate for an additional Judicial District in Western Louisiana. A debate on the Fortification Bill occupied the remainder of the session.

February 8.

In the SENATE, a bill was presented making farther provision for the widows and orphans of the officers and soldiers who died in consequence of diseases contracted while in the service of the United States in the late Mexican War. A resolution was offered by Mr. Webster, instructing the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire into the expediency of passing a law authorizing State authorities to exact security from emigrant paupers, so as to prevent them from becoming chargeable upon the Public Treasury. A bill was passed providing for the establishment of a port of entry at Brazos Santiago, Texas.

In the HOUSE, Mr. Ashmun endeavored to introduce a resolution instructing the Judiciary Committee to inquire into the expediency of framing a law to prevent foreign paupers arriving in this country, and becoming a public burden. A message was received from the President, in relation to the Protocol, which he regarded as a memorandum, rather than a portion of the Treaty, on which account he did not present it to the Senate.

February 9.

In the SENATE, various petitions were presented and appropriately referred. A resolution was submitted, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, in favor of some plan for improving the condition of the Indians.

The HOUSE made the necessary arrangements for counting the Presidential votes. The bill to establish a Commission for the settlement of private claims, was considered, but not acted upon.

February 10.

The SENATE received a message from the President, in relation to the Protocol, spent the session in discussing what disposition to make of it, and finally adjourned without any action upon the subject.

The HOUSE was mainly occupied in discussing a bill making an appropriation for fortifications, which was passed.

◆

NEW JERSEY BANKING LAW.—A bill has been introduced into the New Jersey Legislature, by Mr. Pickel, 'To establish General Banking in the State.' It authorizes any person or association of persons in the State to do banking business by opening offices of discount, deposit, &c., provided they do not issue notes payable to bearer on demand, intended for circulation as currency, nor circulate any other than lawful money of the United States, or specie-paying banks of New Jersey. The aggregate capital shall not be less than one hundred thousand dollars, and the remaining sections are an exact copy of the General Banking Law used in the State of New York, providing that if notes are issued as currency they shall deposit it with the Secretary of State Stocks of the United States, or other reliable security, for the full amount of the notes issued, which shall be countersigned by the Secretary of State.

◆

PENNSYLVANIA BANKING LAW.—A bill to authorize the business of Banking, and provide a sinking fund for the gradual extinguishment of the State debt, is now before the Legislature of Pennsylvania. It provides for the issue of registered notes to the amount of four-fifths of the value of United States or State Stocks deposited with the Auditor, said stocks not to be received at above par, or for more than their market value. The dividends on these stocks are to be paid to the owners, with the exception of one-half of one per cent, which is to go towards the formation of a sinking fund for the redemption of the State debt.

FOURTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Niagara reached Boston on Sunday last, in fifteen days from Liverpool. The intelligence she brings, which is fourteen days later than previously received, is quite important in a commercial point of view. American Stocks had materially improved, cotton had also risen, and the corn and flour markets were sctive.

From Ireland, we learn that the Queen's Bench had overruled the errors assigned in the case of William Smith O'Brien, and his fellow prisoner. The Court was unanimous in its decision, and it remains to be seen whether they will persevere in carrying their hopeless appeal to the House of Lords. It was confidently stated, that application had been made for the requisite permission from the Lord Lieutenant in the case of O'Brien, but that Mr. Meagher declines to proceed farther, and is resolved to submit to his fate. Any hope of overturning the verdict is entirely delusive.

In France, the dissolution of the National Assembly is under discussion. To the surprise of almost everybody, M. Boulay de la Meurthe has been elected Vice President of the Republic.

The German Empire is in trouble about who shall be Emperor, but it is not easy to say exactly what the trouble is.

In Hungary, the Imperial army is having its own way. Pesth has been taken, without firing a shot. Kossuth has retired before the Imperialists, and Windisegbratz had captured Count Balthianc, one of the principal insurgent leaders; and confiscation and extermination was the order of the day. Martial law has been proclaimed in Gallicia, in which direction the notorious Bem had escaped.

The Pope demands the intervention of Austria to reseat him in temporal power, and both Sardinia and France strongly remonstrate against this determination. As to the Roman people, they seem to have lost all reverence for the Pope, as an ecclesiastic, no less than as a prince. The anathemas which he has issued against them have been treated with contempt.

The Sultan of Turkey has taken a great step in religious toleration, having issued a decree, according to Christians the privilege of attaining the highest dignities, even that of Pacha or Vizier.

The California mania has extended to the continent of Europe, and in the ports of Germany and Denmark there are already vessels fitted up for the conveyance of adventurers to that region. The English papers are still full of advertisements of vessels loading, companies organizing, and stock companies forming, all set in motion by the continued favorable news of the marvelous riches of the new discovery.

◆

RAILROAD ACROSS THE ISTHMUS.—It seems to be pretty definitely settled, that a Railroad over the Isthmus of Panama, for the purpose of uniting the two oceans, is to be built without delay. The contract was originally made by the Government of New Grenada with a French Company, and has been recently transferred, with some additional stipulations, to Messrs. Aspinwall, Stephens, & Chauncy, of New York City. The Grenadian Government grants to the Company the exclusive right of constructing and occupying a railroad across the Isthmus for fifty-nine years, including the exclusive use, for purposes connected with the Road, of the two ports at the extremities of it, and also all the public lands required for the Road through the whole extent, together with those which may be wanted as depots, wharves, warehouses, &c. In addition to this, the Government guarantees absolutely upwards of one hundred thousand acres of land, to be selected by the Company, in the provinces of Panama, and Veneguas. Any mines on the lands so selected are to be the unconditional property of the Company, by whomsoever discovered. The Grenadian Government is to take possession of the Road at the end of the forty-nine years, in consideration of the advantages offered to the Company, or at the end of twenty years, by paying the Company five million dollars. The Road must be completed in less than six years. It can be done in less time than this; possibly in three years. The Company ask of the United States an appropriation of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars annually for twenty years, in consideration of which certain privileges are to be accorded to this Government, in the transportation of military stores, &c.

◆

CALIFORNIA EXPORTS.—The Dry Goods Reporter publishes a list of articles shipped at New York for California, in December and January last. We know not whether the goods were selected according to the wants of the adventurers, or the expected demands of residents in California, but certainly the proportionate amount of different articles taken is curious, if not characteristic. Thus, it appears that eight hundred and nineteen barrels, of rum, and six hundred and one of brandy, were taken, and seven packages of books!—eight hundred and seventy-three gold-washers, and forty-seven ploughs—one case of musical instruments, and two hundred and fifty-four packages of medicine—twenty-eight boxes of pipes, and three hogsheads, seventeen bales, and nine hundred and ninety-two packages, of tobacco—four cases of umbrellas, and twenty-four casks of crucibles—twenty-one frames of houses, and sixty-four packages of clocks.

◆

THE FIRST DAILY NEWSPAPER IN CANADA.—There are about three millions of people in the ancient Kingdom of Scotland, but as the taxes on newspapers range between three and four cents per sheet, not one daily journal is issued there, so far as we have heard. In Michigan and Wisconsin there is no lack of dailies; but, until the present month, Upper Canada, with a population of seven hundred thousand, did not even support one. There was no stamp tax there, no censorship, and yet there was no daily press. Dr. Barker, an enterprising, persevering Englishman, who has been connected with Colonial politics since 1833 or 34, at last supplies the void, in the form of the Daily British Whig, of the dimensions of 26 inches long by 20 broad.

MISSOURI ON FREE SOIL.—The Senate of Missouri, on the 2d instant, passed the following resolution:—

"Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Missouri as follows: That the Constitution of the United States confers on Congress no powers to legislate on the subject of slavery within the territories of the United States, or to pass any laws affecting the right of persons or property, within said territories.

"That the Wilmot Proviso, by which Congress attempts to prohibit the existence of slavery in certain territories, is an act unauthorized by the Constitution, and therefore void. If it were not so, it would be an act of grossest despotism—the people of the territories have the same rights of government over themselves within the territories, that the people of the States have over themselves within the States."

◆

FEAR AND CHOLERA.—The New Orleans Delta relates the following anecdote as an illustration of the effects of fear in producing cholera: "A gentleman who resides in the vicinity of the Calaboose, or Parish Prison, sent his servant, a stout, hearty negro woman, to market one morning. On her return, the woman having to pass by the prison, was attracted by a crowd gathered about a cart. Prompted by the curiosity which she had inherited from mother Eve—the woman forced herself into the crowd; and there—oh, horror! a ghastly object met her sight. It was the head of a collapsed, emaciated corpse, which, by the jolting of the cart over our abominable streets, had been forced out of one end of a rough box or coffin, into which it had been deposited by the keepers of the prison, where the unfortunate victim died. The sight produced such horror in the poor black, that she had hardly strength to drag herself home, when she was immediately seized with all the symptoms of Spasmodic Cholera. Timely aid, however, restored her, after a violent sickness.

◆

TRUE PROGRESS.—The people of Massachusetts voluntarily taxed themselves last year one million dollars for the support of the Common Schools. There is not a native born child in the State, old enough to learn, who cannot read and write. In Boston, two hundred thousand dollars was expended in building school-houses, during the three months preceding April last. Within the past year, individuals have given two hundred thousand dollars to Harvard College. The State is constructing a Reform School, for vagrant and exposed children, at a cost of one hundred thousand dollars. The State educates all the deaf, dumb, and blind, and has also recently established a school for idiots.

◆

VESSELS FOR CALIFORNIA.—The New York Herald publishes a list of the vessels that have sailed for California since December 7, with the number of their passengers and crews. By the Cape route, 80 vessels have sailed with 4,476 persons; via San Juan, 1 vessel; via Vera Cruz, 2; via Brazos, 2; via Chagres, 14, with 807 passengers. Total 99 vessels, with 5,917 persons. This includes all the ports of the country. And there are now nearly one hundred and fifty vessels advertised to sail for San Francisco, which will probably sail within the next six weeks, and carry out 8,000 more gold-seekers,

◆

RATE OF INTEREST IN WISCONSIN.—Both branches of the Legislature of Wisconsin have, by decided majorities, passed the annexed law regulating the rate of interest in that State.

SEC. 1. Any rate of interest agreed upon by parties in contract shall be legal and valid.

SEC. 2 When no rate of interest is agreed upon or specified in a note or other contract, seven per cent per annum shall be considered the legal rate.

SUMMARY.

Charles Ellett, a civil engineer, proposes and defends the practicability of a plank road to the Pacific, through the columns of the Philadelphia North American. In ten, or at most, twelve days, one might go from St. Louis to San Francisco on such a road, allowing seven miles to the hour, and in less than eighteen days the Pacific might be reached by a traveler from New York.

Mr. Bacon, of Worcester, Mass., has submitted a proposition to the Legislature of Massachusetts, which, if adopted, may affect more business transactions at the North than may be readily imagined. The proposition is, to declare null and void all future contracts made in that State, the consideration whereof shall be the sale or transfer of slaves in other States or Territories.

'Many a man,' says the Noncomformist, 'has been ruined by hearing of 'something to his advantage.' Many a nation has been reduced to beggary by discovering a short cut to wealth. It may sound parodoxical, but we verily believe that Ireland will do more to render Great Britain prosperous, than will California the United States."

The Albany Evening Journal, of the 7th instant, says: 'We had a call to-day from James McDonald, who was born in Scotland in 1749; and is now ninety-nine years old. He served through the Revolutionary War, and is happy on his Sergeant-Major's pension. He is now returning from a visit to his descendents in the Western States, traveling alone, and is as active as a man of fifty.

A new school-house, recently erected in the city of Lawrence, Mass., at a cost of fourteen thousand dollars, was dedicated last week. It is to be called the Oliver School, in honor of General H. K. Oliver, who furnished it with a complete and valuable apparatus in the departments of Philosophy, Astronomy, and Chemistry.

Hon. John L. Snyder, of Cherry Valley, Otsego county, New York, was stunned by a blow from a barn-door, driven by the wind, and fell with his face in the chaff, where he smothered.

Sixteen cars laden with black walnut lumber, arrived recently at Sandusky, O., by the Mad River Railroad.

The mercury was below zero at Albany on the 8th instant.

The tavern and grocery of Peter Valecalt, near Fort Wayne, Indiana, was burned on the night of the 25th ult., and his son, about twenty-one years of age, perished in the flames in endeavoring to rescue a sick brother. A dozen teamsters escaped by jumping from the windows.

The average temperature of the month of January, in Portland, Me., was 17 degrees—two and a half degrees colder than the average of January for the last thirty years. In Philadelphia the temperature of the month was one degree warmer than the average for forty years.

A bill has been introduced into the N. York Assembly, for the suppression of pugilism, providing for the punishment of prize fighting, and extending to parties leaving the State for that purpose, and also to parties training for that purpose, and also to their trainers.

The packet ship Cambridge arrived at New York on the 4th instant, after a stormy passage, with three hundred and thirty-eight steerage passengers from Liverpool and Cork. Twenty-five of her passengers died on the way, from ship-fever, and small-pox, and a large number of sick were taken on shore to the hospital, on the arrival of the vessel.

The Chemung Railroad, a very important branch of the Erie, has been put under contract to Messrs. Brayton, Condor, Carmichael, King, & Co., and is to be completed by the 1st of October next. At the same time the Erie road will be opened to Elmira, and with that branch, and a steamboat on Seneca lake, will furnish the shortest route to Geneva and Buffalo.

Much sickness, of a serious nature, prevails in Jackson county, Indiana. Some fifteen or sixteen persons have recently died in one locality. We learn that the disease is Winter Fever.

It is stated that Professor George W. Green, of Brown University, is writing a biography of his illustrious ancestor, Major General Nathaniel Green, which is to be issued in two octavo volumes.

A fire at Cooperstown, Otsego county, in the extensive publishing establishment of H. E. Phinney & Co. involved a loss of fifty-five thousand dollars, of which only twenty-five thousand was insured.

A Resolution has passed the Michigan Legislature in favor of transporting the United States Mail from Buffalo to Detroit through Canada during the suspension of lake navigation.

The trial of Rev. Ezra Dudley, at Plymouth, N. H., for the murder of his wife, has resulted in his conviction. The murder was committed in March last.

DIED,

In DeRuyter, N. Y., Feb. 1st, at the residence of her son-in-law, Dea. John Maxson, Mrs. MARY STARR, widow of Jesse Starr, of Groton, Ct., in the 88th year of her age. Mrs. Starr became confirmed in her hope in Christ about ten years since, and joined the Seventh-day Baptist Church in DeRuyter; and although, from her advanced age, she has not been permitted fully to participate in the privileges of the Church of Christ, she maintained her profession unwaveringly, and died in full expectation of a glorious immortality. Down to the time of her death, she retained her mental faculties literally unimpaired, and seemed perfectly conscious of approaching dissolution. She was able, till within about three days of her death, to be about the house, and help herself from place to place. On the evening of the 28th of January, she had an attack of the pleurisy, which was the cause of her decline. Her mind was active and clear. A few hours prior to her decease, she was asked, if her Saviour appeared precious to her then, at the trying hour? She replied, emphatically, in the affirmative, and exclaimed, "O that I was with him now!" She soon after quietly fell asleep, without a struggle or a sigh. The loss her friends have sustained is doubtless her eternal gain.

In Scio, N. Y., Jan. 29th, Mrs. POLLY WITTER, consort of Clarke Witter, aged 58 years. She was a worthy member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Scio, highly esteemed by all who knew her, for her piety and amiable disposition, in all the walks of life. She has left a husband, and a large circle of relatives, to mourn their loss. R. B.

In Plainfield, N. Y., on the 4th inst., Mrs. ELIZA COON, wife of Daniel C. Coon, and daughter of Benj. Clarke.

Near Leonardsville, N. Y., on the 4th inst., Mr. NATHAN ROGERS, son of Capt. John Rogers, aged 25 years.

In Stonington, Ct., Oct. 6th, 1848, THOMAS E., son of Emery and Esther Sheffield, aged 9 years.

In Charlestown, R. I., in November last, LYDIA PRIMAS, a colored woman, aged 20 years.

FARM FOR SALE.

THE subscriber offers for sale his farm, situated in the town of Genesee, county of Allegany, N. Y. Said farm codsists of 280 acres of first-rate land, 175 of which is level, ann the remainder gradually rising side-hill; all of which is susceptible of cultivation, mostly adapted to grazing purposes. About 75 acres, however, is a gravely quick soil, as productive of wheat and corn, as any in the southern part of said county. Upon said farm is about 100 acres improvement, two framed barns, and a large two-story framed house, well inclosed, lately built, and conveniently calculated. There are two good wells of water upon said farm, and it is also abundantly supplied with numerous brooks and springs. Said farm is situated in a good neighborhood, and convenient to school, and the central place of business for the western part of said town; and on the main traveled road from Angelica to Smithport. For pleasantness and locality it is not surpassed by any in the township or vicinity. To those wishing to purchase a good farm, the present opportunity offers rare inducements. The farm will be sold low for cash; or, if desired, by paying one-half of the purchase money down, the balance will be arranged to accommodate purchasers for any reasonable length of credit. A careful view of the premises by a discerning individual, is only requisite to a thorough conviction that an investment made under such favorable terms as the subscriber offers, is but safe and a fair speculation. For farther information, address the subscriber, P. M. at West Genesee, Allegany Co., N. Y., or inquire at his house. JARED MAXSON.

| TUITION, according to studies, | $3, $4, or $5 0 |
| EXTRAS—Drawing, | 1 00 |
| Painting, | $2 00 or 4 00 |
| Tuition on Piano, | 8 00 |
| Use of Piano, | 2 00 |
| Chemical Lectures, and Experiments, | 1 00 |
| Writing, including Stationery, | 50 |
| Study rooms, with stove, chairs, table, and bedstead, | 1 50 |
| Board in private families, per week, | $1 00 to 1 50 |

TEACHERS' CLASSES.

Classes will be formed at the opening of the First Term and middle of the Second Term, to continue seven weeks, with daily lectures and instructions in relation to the duties of those intending to teach, accompanied by a thorough review of the Common English branches. Tuition, $2 50.

AGRICULTURAL AND ANALYTIC CHEMISTRY.

Instructions in this Department, will be equal to any that can be obtained in the State, but will not be fully opened until about the first of January. A circular explaining more fully this Department, will be forwarded to any wishing it, by applying to the Principal, at DeRuyter; or Gurdon Evans, Analytic Labratory, Yale College, New Haven, Ct. Text books furnished at the lowest prices.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango, for this place, at 4 o'clock P. M.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS, &C.

From the President of the United States.

"To Mr. E. Walker—Dear Sir:—I have found your Statesman's Manual a valuable work, and exceedingly useful and convenient. Yours, J. K. POLK."

From the Hon. Henry Clay.

"My Dear Sir:—Your Statesman's Manual is a very valuable work for reference."

State of New York:
Secretary's Office,
Department of Common Schools, } Albany, Sept. 18, 1846.

I have examined the "Statesman's Manual," in two volumes octavo, compiled by Edwin Williams, and am of opinion that it is a proper work for school district libraries, and deserving of a place in these institutions, designed for the diffusion of useful knowledge.

Signed, J. S. RANDALL,
Dep. State Sup't Com. Schools.

From the Journal of Commerce.

"This is one of the most important books published in the United States for a long time."

From the N. Y. Courier and Enquirer.

"This is the most important contribution to American political history ever published."

From the Democratic Review.

"The whole forms a most complete library in itself, of all that concerns the politics of the country. No individual should be without these two volumes at hand for prompt reference. How many hours of idle discussion and senseless debates might be spared to heated partizans, were these books at hand for appeal. We shall have frequent occasion to refer to them."

From the N. Y. Express of August 21, 1846.

"This is emphatically a national work, and as such eminently deserving of a national support."

From the Commercial Advertiser.

"Such a work is invaluable, and is offered at a comparatively low price, in expectation of a large sale."

From the Luzern Democrat.

"The Statesman's Manual is a very valuable work, comprising a complete condensed political history of our country from the formation of our government until the present time."

From the Washingtonian, Ohio.

"It is but scanty praise to say, that no work of equal value to the American Statesman, Politician, Journalist, Historian, &c., &c., has ever before appeared."

From the Harrisburg (Pa.) Argus, August 26, 1846.

"No politician, no man who desires to understand the history of the several administrations of the General Government, should be without a copy of it. As a book of reference, it is invaluable."

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office. It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt [illegible], $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, full gilt, [illegible]. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to Geo. B. Utter, [illegible] Spruce-st., New York.

A LETTER ABOUT THE GOLD MINES.

The following letter from Anthony Ten Eyck, American Commissioner at the Sandwich Islands, addressed from San Francisco, to his mother at Watertown, N. Y., is published in the Jeffersonian. It is under date of August 6th. He is a gentleman of known character for veracity and integrity. His account confirms the abundance of gold, as well as the desperate character of the population. When he remarks, that he would not live there for all the gold in the mines, he speaks our sentiments exactly:—

"I have visited the famous gold mines at the base of the California mountains, and upon the southern tributaries of the Sacramento river, some two hundred miles from here. I crossed from here to the north side of the bay, and went up by land on horseback. I returned in an open boat by water, down the Sacramento and the bay. The journey was long, tedious, fatiguing, and disagreeable in every respect. The weather, after getting twenty miles from here, was very hot, and the farther I advanced into the interior, the more oppressive it became. I was absent from this place just three weeks, and during that time I ate scarcely anything that I did not cook myself, or assist in cooking, and made my bed and slept upon the ground. I could have slept most of the time in a California house, but preferred being out of doors to avoid the fleas, which infest every house in the country. After May, and until late in October, it never rains in California; therefore, there is no danger of being wet in traveling here in this season of the year. The country I find pleasant and interesting. It can never be an agricultural country, and is only valuable for grazing. The vicinity of the mountains, and for many miles down the streams, which take their rise amongst the mountains, abound in gold, which is now being collected by thousands of people in very large quantities. The mineral region covers a very large extent of territory, and the gold seems to be inexhaustible. There are now probably three thousand persons digging gold, and I do not exaggerate when I say they will average from forty to sixty dollars a day each person. Some men have made large fortunes already, after three or four weeks' labor.

"I know two men who collected from the surface of the ground, and within a very small space, in two days, $14,000 in value. Within a circumference of three hundred yards, some 100,000 dollars were gathered in five days; this is calculating the gold worth 15 dollars the ounce, 12 ounces to the pound.

"It is almost astonishing, but nevertheless is true. I suppose no gold mines have ever been discovered of equal extent, and yielding such quantities, with so little labor, as those of this country; and it will be years before it can be exhausted. I have visited the 'diggings,' some 40 miles along what is called the 'American Fork' of the Sacramento. Almost every yard is occupied, and all are getting out quantities of ore. I have about $5 worth of gold dust, which I washed out myself in the course of two or three hours. I shall keep it, of course, as a memento of what I have done myself in gold digging. The effect of this discovery will be bad for the morals of the country, and will ruin all its prospects as a farming or agricultural country. I would not again go through what I have, to see the country, and I would not settle down to live in it, for all the gold in the mines. The mode of life is horrible, and a more dissipated and immoral set of people I never yet saw. People are flocking in here from all parts of the coast, and as soon as the news reaches foreign parts, the worst of their population will emigrate hither. I pity any decent white man who may live in this region six months hence."

A CHINESE DINNER.

The Pennsylvanian publishes a letter dated Macao Roads, October 25, 1848, from which we take the following account of a Chinese Diplomatic Dinner:—

It was during my stay at Canton, that the interview took place between Dr. Davis, United States Commissioner to the Celestial Empire, whom we brought out in the Plymouth, and the Chinese Commissioner. Such a sight I would not have been deprived of for any consideration. It was held in one of their large 'pack-houses,' as they call them, some slight distance from the city. We had some twenty officers present, and, being in full uniform, they of course made an imposing show. Commissioner Sue evinced a very friendly disposition, and responded to Dr. Davis's observations concerning the relations of the two countries, in a very sensible manner for a Chinaman.

After Dr. Davis delivered his credentials, and the business was finished, we sat down to a regular Chinese dinner of bird-nest soup, duck's feet, and I do not now remember one-half; but I do know, that we had thirteen courses of soup, of all of which, we of course had to partake, as not to taste would have been considered uncourteous. After we got through with the Chinese dinner, we had to commence on another, cooked according to the Tartar fashion, which was far more like ours than the Chinese. There were about one hundred Mandarins present, all waiting on and teaching us 'outside barbarians' how to handle the chop-sticks. These, you must know, are two sticks, somewhat like our pen-holders, only a little longer, with which the Chinese eat all their food; when they eat rice, they hold the bowl up to the mouth, and shovel it in most dexterously with these sticks; and so, in fact, with all their food, which is always cut fine.

The dinner, and, indeed, all the ceremonies of the day, passed of pleasantly and happily, and we left for the city in a good humor with our entertainers, not even suspecting that we had eaten dogs, or cats, or rats, as some began to imagine we had; but I do not and will not believe it. It is estimated by those initiated in Chinese affairs, that each one present ate upwards of one hundred dollars worth, or at least what cost them that amount. You may form some idea, therefore, of the extent and magnificence, in their way, of the entertainment. I do not care particularly, however, about eating another Chinese diplomatic dinner, especially with chop-sticks, unless I am allowed to see it cooked.

THE VEGETABLE SOAP OF MEXICO.

Among the products of New Mexico, is a species of palm, called by the natives lechuguilla, which has been denominated soap-weed, from the fact that the Mexicans use its root as a substitute for soap, for which it answers perfectly. Indeed, it is considered superior to it for washing woolens. This singular shrub, which is to be met with on the prairies, but where it never grows to any considerable extent, consists of a trunk very pithy, surmounted by a fine head of stiff leaves, each of which is about two feet and a half in length, and armed with a long thorn. The leaves project from this stalk on all sides, and sit as close as possible, and are of a dark green color. The flower is white, and very pretty. As each year's foliage decays, it drops down against the trunk, and is of a light brown color. These leaves, when fire is applied, flash up like gunpowder, and burn with a bright light.

The plant is applied to many uses by the natives; of its leaves they make their hats; also, when dressed like hemp, it is formed into rope and sacks, looking like the material known as the Manilla hemp, though it is somewhat coarser.

The author of 'A Campaign in New Mexico,' observes—'These plants have a singularly provoking quality—being from two to eight feet in height, they will assume to the eye in the twilight the most deceptive forms of men; and many an unconscious weed has run the chance of a sentry's shot from not answering the challenge, 'Who goes there?' If your mule or horse has strayed from camp, and you start to hunt for him in the gray of the morning, you are sure to be led first in one direction, and then in another, by one of these shrubs, which, from a short distance, has taken the form of your beast. Time after time you may have in this manner been deceived, yet never benefiting by experience. [Hunt's Merchant's Magazine.

MANAGEMENT OF HOT-HOUSE PLANTS.

Inquiries are frequently made respecting the successful management of green-house plants, which are kept in the rooms of dwellings. A chief error in their winter treatment consists in making no distinction between their condition while rapidly growing, and in a dormant state. When vegetation is in full progress, warmth, and a full supply of water is indispensable. But during the period of rest, plants should be kept cool, and rather dry. A temperature of fifty degrees is much better than that of ordinary living apartments. While in this stationary condition, very little moisture is given off through the leaves; while growing, it is given off more rapidly. Hence, water is to be applied very sparingly, and at remote intervals, in winter, as very little escapes by direct evaporation from the soil. So long as a moderate degree of moisture is found beneath the surface of the soil in the pots, watering should be omitted. Thorough draining is also of importance, and is well effected by filling one-fifth of the pot at the bottom with fragments of charcoal. Washing the foliage from dust should also be attended to, and may be conveniently done by syringing with tepid water, turning the pot at the moment on its side, that the soil contained in it may not be too much soaked. In the absence of a syringe, a small watering-pot, with fine perforations, held at a little height, will answer a good purpose. The chief requisites, then, for good management, may be summed up as follows: 1. Spare watering. 2. Low temperature. 3. Plenty of light. 4. Drainage. 5. Washing foliage.

THE WIFE OF BISHOP CHASE.

We make an extract to show how highly the Bishop appreciated the aid rendered him by his excellent wife, in the complicated concerns which claimed his attention:—

"This family amounts to nearly one hundred persons. My wife is the main-spring of this immense domestic machine, so that if it be asked in future ages, 'How could the college in the woods, and in the want of so many ordinary means and facilities, ever have succeeded?' let it be replied, 'There was an humble female, who, though surrounded by her own little children, stood at the helm, as mother in the Israel of God—advising the doubtful—encouraging the timid—frowning on the refractory—soothing the sorrowful—comforting the afflicted, and administering to the sick; and, in an uncommon degree, causing all to look to her for example, especially in deprivations and in sufferings; and all this with such unostentatious deportment and unperceived effort, as to appear (except to those who carefully observed her) no more than any other.'"

An Interesting Incident.—The delegation of Chippewa chiefs and warriors were recently escorted around the Capitol, at Washington, by their intelligent agent and interpreter, Major J. B. Martell. They frequently expressed their wonder and admiration at the extent and grandeur of the building, and the splendid paintings strongly attracted their attention. From the Capitol they proceeded to the Statue of Washington, followed by a crowd of ladies and gentlemen. They walked up to the front of the Statue, and gazed at it for several minutes, with looks of deep interest depicted on their painted faces; then, sitting down facing the Statue, one chief filled his splendid Pipe of Peace, and held it out towards the statue, saying—"My Great Father, we all shake hands with you. We have traveled a great way through the great country that you acquired for your people by the aid of the Great Spirit. Your people have become very great; our people have become very small; may the Great Spirit, who gave you success, now protect us, and grant us the favor we ask from our Great Father, who now fills the high place first occupied by you."

This simple supplicatory address was faithfully interpreted to the bystanders by Major Martell.

The Girard Estates.—The estate of the late Stephen Girard, now in possession of the city of Philadelphia, consists, in real property, within the limits of the city proper and the county, of 177 buildings; of which 39 are small houses, 77 large do., and 61 stores. The taxes and water rents on the property is about $25,000 yearly; to which an additional sum of $15,000 has been annually applied, for making repairs and permanent improvements, for several years. The total amount of the income of the estates, last year, was $106,000.

"The Schoolmaster Abroad."—A writer of graphic 'Sketches of Modern Reforms and Reformers,' in the National Era, understood to be Henry B. Stanton, Esq., in a sketch of Lord Brougham, gives the origin of this very popular phrase:

No orator of our time is more successful in embalming phrases, full of meaning, in the popular memory. The well-known talismanic sentiment, 'The schoolmaster is abroad,' is an instance. In a speech on the elevation of Wellington, a 'mere military chieftain,' to the premiership, after the death of Channing, Lord Brougham said—"Field Marshal the Duke of Wellington may take the army—he may take the navy—he may take the great seal—he may take the mitre—I make him a present of them all. Let him come on with his whole force, sword in hand, against the Constitution, and the English people will not only beat him back, but laugh at his assaults. In other times, the country may have heard with dismay, that that 'the soldier was abroad.' It will not be so now. Let the soldier be abroad if he will; he can do nothing in this age. There is another personage abroad—a personage less imposing—in the eyes of some, perhaps insignificant. The schoolmaster is abroad; and I trust to him, armed with his primer, against the soldier in full military array."

Plan for Educating and Providing for Destitute Children.—In the Williamsburg Advocate, Dr. Jacob Townsend, well known as the inventor of an ice-boat, proposes a plan, which we have been desired to notice, for supporting, educating, and eventually providing for the destitute and orphan children of this city, now stationed on Randall's Island, with their teachers and nurses.

His plan is that the State should assume the guardianship of all the pauper children, purchase a tract of land in the western territories, erect buildings, and employ children upon it, educate them to be farmers and mechanics according to their choice, and keep them until of age, when they should be settled on new lands purchased at government prices, and stocked with the cattle, utensils, and household furniture necessary to make a beginning—eighty acres being assigned to each male, and forty to each female—the land to be paid for in 21 years, and the personal property, estimated at reasonable prices, in fifteen, or earlier if possible. The mechanics, instead of farming utensils, are to be provided with the tools of their trades. This plan, Dr. Townsend thinks, will create no additional burden, by any tax on the people, while it would elevate the condition of their children, and inspire them with self-respect. We give the outlines of it for such as occupy themselves with benevolent projects for the benefit of their less fortunate fellow creatures. [Eve. Post.

A Beautiful Custom.—A very simple custom prevails among the natives of these parts, says the Liberia Herald, which we do not remember to have seen adverted to. It is this. When a native, in traveling in the territory of another tribe, or through the territory of a different clan of his own tribe, approaches a town, he invariably provides himself with a leafy branch from some tree or bush. We have observed them go some distance from the road to provide themselves with this emblem of peace. This they hold in the hand, or if they carry a kinjah, or other wallet, they attach it thereto, and hold it in a conspicuous position. If there be fifty in a company, each one thus provides himself with a peace-offering, and it seems to be the first object to which the inhabitants of the town direct their attention, as soon as they enter; especially if there has recently been a war, or rumor of war, they deposit all their baggage and trading apparatus in some conspicuous place, surmounted by the friendship-declaring twig.

A Naval Fisherman.—Coming down the river a few days ago, says the Liberia Herald, we espied a huge alligator, lying on the sloping margin of the river, his lower jaw submerged in the water, while the upper was suspended in the air, showing a formidable array of teeth. We stopped to gaze at him. Anon, a hapless mullet ventured within the dread hiatus, when the treacherous jaws suddenly closed, and severed the fish asunder. The native boys who were with us, took this opportunity to assign the rationale of some of the alligator's movements. They say he lies with his mouth open to attract a certain insect which floats upon the surface of the water. These collect in large numbers about his mouth. Fishes feed upon them, and when lured by the desired prey within the vortex, they become a prey themselves.

Overflowing Meadows.—The overflowing of meadows, for the purpose of promoting vegetation, was among the pursuits of the ancient cultivators of the then existing pasture lands. Columella says: 'Land that is naturally rich, and in good heart, does not need water set over it, because the hay produced in a juicy soil, is better than that excited by water; yet when the poverty of the soil requires, the land may be overflowed." We find on record, also, the following opinion of Cato: "As much as is in your power, make water meadows." Again, from the observations of other authors, it is fair to infer, that water meadows were numerous in former ages, from the want of good herbage for their stock. [Am. Agriculturist.

Pronunciation.—As we are now in a way to have much occasion to pronounce the following words, we give from the Journal of Commerce the following effort at lexicography—Ch, in Chargres, should be pronounced as in champion; the ag as in rag; and the res as in trees, only shorter. Attach the g to the first syllable; Chag-res. Panama should be accented on the last syllable, which is pronounced exactly like Ma, when used as a substitute for mother. Attach the n to the first syllable. Pan is pronounced like the English word pan: Pan-a-mah.

A writer in the National Intelligencer mentions the horse skates, by means of which, in the cold latitudes, an ordinary horse has been known to travel as much as an hundred miles in the short space of three hours, without apparent fatigue. A full set, he says, of these marvelous skates, bedecked in the Norwegian style, has been deposited in the Patent Office.

The Malay's Test of Honor.—A New England sea-captain, who visited "India beyond the Ganges," was boarded by a Malay merchant, a man of considerable property, and asked if he had any Tracts he could part with. The American, at a loss to account for such a singular request, from such a man, inquired, "What do you want of Tracts? you cannot read a word of them." "True, but I have a use for them, nevertheless. Whenever one of your countrymen, or an Englishman, calls on me to trade, I put a Tract in his way, and watch him. If he reads it soberly, and with interest, I infer that he will not cheat me; if he throws it aside with contempt or a profane oath, I have no more to do with him—I cannot trust him."

Fire and Heroism.—The Hagerstown News describes a fire near that town, by which the house of Christian Hawbecker was destroyed, and his wife saved from being burned to death, under very singular and affecting circumstances, by the heroism of her husband. The wife it appears was and for some years has been a maniac, and was obliged to be kept chained, to prevent injury to herself and those around her. Her apartment was, at the first discovery, enveloped in flames, through which Mr. Hawbecker, rushing to her rescue with an axe, with which he succeeded in severing the chain, was obliged to pass a second time, bearing her off in his arms.

Threefold Crime.—The Jefferson City (Mo.) Metropolitan details a horrible tragedy which recently occurred in that vicinity. A German, a citizen of Gasconade county, with a rifle and two pistols, went to the house of another German, named Beck, and shot him. He then shot a woman who was at Beck's, and immediately after blew out his own brains. The woman was shot through the head, and died instantly. Beck was shot through the body, and it is thought may recover. Derangement, it is supposed, was the cause of the tragical affair.

Breach of Promise.—In Detroit, recently, a suit was brought by Miss Abby Claus, a lady about sixty-five years of age, against Andrew Stute, a young man aged twenty-six, for an alledged breach of promise, and to obtain damages for the same. The complainant fully proved that Andrew had 'often told his love,' and the announcement had been publicly made in the church, of the intended union. The jury gave a verdict of ten dollars in favor of the injured maiden.

Rhode Island.—The total debt of Rhode Island is about forty thousand dollars, besides the sums taken from the deposit fund, which amount to one hundred and fifty-two thousand dollars. The average annual deficiency in the revenue of the State for the last five years, has been about ten thousand dollars. The Select Committee of the General Assembly on Taxation, have reported a bill, proposing to raise twenty-five thousand dollars annually, to supply the deficiency in the present revenue, and to have a surplus for unforseen demands.

Impressive Mortality.—The York (Pa.) Republican mentions the fact that John M. Koch, and his father, John Koch, died in the same house within a half-hour of the same time, and that on Monday morning, about thirty-six hours after, his mother died. No epidemic or contagious disease caused their deaths, but complaints to which man is liable under the most salubrious skies, and in the healthiest climes. They were all buried at one time, side by side.

Kissing to some Purpose.—A story has reached our ears, says the Sandwich Observer, of a singular scheme for raising funds, which was hit upon and put in practice at a donation party held not more than a thousand miles off. It appears that some of the kissable ladies present actually allowed their sweet lips to be tasted at the rate of fifty cents a kiss—this being considered a suitable price for the privilege!

VARIETY.

The editor of the Protestant Churchman, now in Europe, in writing to his paper from London, in December, has the following item: "London is brilliantly illuminated by the newly-invented charcoal light, kindled on the top of a pillar in one of the parks at West End. The application of this to light-houses, promises to be of the greatest benefit. So far, the success of the experiments has been complete, and warrants the highest anticipation of its extended usefulness."

Mr. Bancroft has discovered in the British State Paper office, the dispatch of Sir James Wright, dated 20th of June, 1775, in which he transmits the copy of a newspaper containing resolutions declaring independence of Great Britain, passed by a convention at Charlottetown, Mecklenburgh County, North Carolina, in the May of that year, and of course more than a year prior to the national declaration to the same effect.

From a recent Report of the Board of Directors of Girard College, giving an account of the expenditures and liabilities of the Institution, from its first operation up to the 31st of December, 1848, we gather the following items. The total expenditures and liabilities are $65,199 99—expenditures, $55,450 90; liabilities, $9,749 09. The appropriations amount to $56,978 22; a balance is thus left on hand of $527,32.

A wag of our acquaintance, sawing with a saw that was not the sharpest in the world, after trying vainly to saw with it, broke out at last as follows, "Of all the saws that I ever saw saw, I never saw a saw saw as that saw saws."

From a recent statement of the Episcopal Church in Ohio, it appears that there have been 510 baptisms, and 420 communicants added during the past year. 310 members have died.

A mad dog was recently killed in Foxboro, Mass. Eighteen dogs were bitten by him before he was killed.

A bright plowshare is the cheapest commodity ever used by a farmer. [Cobbett.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

W. C. KENYON, A. M., } Principals.
IRA SAYLES, A. M., }

Assisted by nine able and experienced Teachers, five in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

The Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past ten years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to also continue to merit a share of public patronage.

Extensive buildings are now erected for the accommodation of students, and for Recitation and Lecture Rooms, &c. They occupy an eligible position, and are finished in the best style of modern architecture; and the different apartments are heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical

Ladies and Gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board and rooms can also be had in private families, if particularly desired.

Each room for those who board in the Hall is furnished with a bed and bedding, a table, two chairs, and a pail.

The plan of instruction adopted in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the student, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The Health, the Manners, and the Morals of our Students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

REGULAR ACADEMIC EXERCISES.

The regular exercises, at which all the students will be required to attend, unless specially excused, are, Chapel exercises each morning during the term; Recitations, from two to four, five days each week, from Monday morning till Friday evening. Compositions and Declamations, one-half day, once in two weeks, Literary, Scientific, and Moral Lectures by the Principals. Public Worship, once in each week, either on Saturday or Sunday, according as the students may be in the habit of keeping the Sabbath, either on the seventh or first day of the week.

ADMISSION.

Candidates for admission as students, must present testimonials of good moral character, or be known to possess such a character, and must be willing to comply unreservedly with the foregoing regulations; and no one will be permitted to receive instructions in any class, until all academic bills, for the term in prospect, be paid or satisfactorily arranged.

ACADEMIC TERMS.

The Academic Year for 1848–9 consists of three terms as follows:

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 15, 1848, and ending Thursday, November 23, 1848.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, December 5, 1848, and ending Thursday, March 15, 1849.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, April 3, 1849, and ending July 12, 1849.

As the plan of instruction in this Institution, laid out for each class, will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue through the term, and accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the terms.

N. B. Students who are expecting to teach during the winter or summer, will specify such intention on entering in the beginning of the fall or spring term; and, for the special accommodation of such, a day will be set apart at first, on which they can leave, if they wish; and they will not be permitted to leave on any other day, nor will any other than teachers be permitted to leave on the day specified.

Farther, it is of the utmost importance that the student be present at the day of the opening of the term, as on that and the succeeding day, the students entering are examined and classified.

THE TRADES IN CHINA.

There is in this city a Chinese Museum, by visiting which one may obtain a pretty good idea how things appear in China. In one corner of the room is a case containing an Itinerant Barber exercising his vocation, a Fortune Teller with his fixtures around him, a Street Doctor with his medicines, and a Street Broker with his money. In the Catalogue we find the following account of these tradesmen :—

The number of itinerant workmen, of one kind or another, which line the sides of the streets, or occupy the areas before public buildings, in Chinese towns, is a remarkable feature. Fruiterers, pastrymen, cook-stalls, venders of gimcracks, and wayside shopkeepers, are found in other countries as well as China; but to see a traveling blacksmith or tinker, an itinerant glass-mender, a peripatetic umbrella-mender, a locomotive seal-cutter, an ambulatory barber, a migratory banker, a peregrinatory apothecary, or a walking shoemaker and cobbler, one must travel thitherwards. These movable establishments, together with fortune-tellers, herb-sellers, chiromancers, &c., pretty well fill up the space, so that one often sees both sides of the street in Canton literally lined with the stalls or tools of persons selling or making something to eat or to wear.

As the Chinese shave the head as well as the beard every ten or twelve days, barbers constitute a numerous class in their communities. The greater part are itinerant, and with the chest of drawers, which answers for customers to sit upon as well as to contain their tonsorial apparatus, and a water-vessel over a small furnace, slung on a pole carried on the shoulder, they traverse the streets, making known their presence by occasionally twanging their call, which somewhat resembles the pitch-pipe used by singers. Their common appellation is Ti-tow-le, meaning shave-head-old-man.

Some estimate may be formed of their number in China, from the fact of there being 7,300 in the single city of Canton, every one of whom has been obliged to obtain a license before commencing the trade, and all of whom, like the other mechanics, form a community whose business is regulated by laws made amongst themselves. They use no soap in shaving, merely wetting the head and face with warm water before applying the razor, which, from its short clumsy blade, appears better suited to opening oysters than shaving, but which, nevertheless, answers the purpose intended very well.

The barber's whole apparatus is near him, and his razor and other small implements are seen in one of the open drawers of the case, and in his hands. In addition to shaving, some of them exercise the function of shampooing, and practice cleaning the eye and the ear, oftentimes to the manifest injury of the former, to diseases of which, the Chinese are particularly subject. A person is here seen undergoing the ear-cleaning operation, and the effect produced by the tickling sensation in the ear is faithfully delineated upon his countenance. The barber's remumeration is generally twenty or thirty cash, (two or three cents,) but no regular charge is made, the amount being left entirely to the generosity of his customers. As in other countries, the barber is the repository of local information, and his success is usually proportioned to his powers of making himself agreeable to his customers.

The Chinese of all classes are very superstitious, and fortune-tellers consequently abound amongst them, who, for a trifling consideration, by consulting the stars, the lines on the hand, or by shaking several bamboo slips, with characters written on them, from a case full, will predict, with confidence, the destiny of an individual. Our fortune-teller uses the latter method, which is the most common, and his advertisement informs the public of his abilities and charge for the different information furnished, whether it be to foretell the fortunes of some new-born babe, the future fate of some hitherto luckless wight, a lucky day for a marriage or funeral, or the proper location for a house or tomb. This class pretend to few secrets; by taking the characters from the slips thrown out, and combining them upon the writing-board according to rules for the different information wanted, they form sentences which are explained by referring to a book, and frequent appeals are usually made to the crowd around, as to the correctness of the mode of proceeding in obtaining the explanations. There are sometimes ten or a dozen of these wise men to be seen in the street, on the west side of the American factories at Canton, in the space of a few hundred feet, and generally some of them are Budhist and Taouist priests.

The street doctor is another ambulatory genius met with in China, and in Old China Street (the one just mentioned) they generally exceed in number the fortune-tellers. A person can hardly pass through this thoroughfare without seeing some of them exhibiting their skill in dressing a sore, pulling teeth, or prescribing for some of the ills of the body. Some are surrounded with roots and herbs, some have long strings of teeth which they have extracted, in front of them, and others, like our Esculapius, have their medicines exposed in small jars for sale, with printed advertisements of their virtues, and directions for use. Occasionally one may be seen with some large bones, or thick skin, such as that of the rhinoceros and elephant, disposing of them in small pieces to the passers-by, who suppose them to possess eminent strengthening properties. One of this last-mentioned class of Chinese M. D.'s might be seen at the entrance of the American grounds, in the latter part of 1844, with the skeleton of an ourang-outang, which he was disposing of in the manner spoken of, and as an evidence of the virtues of the medicine, an unhappy-looking chicken stood upon one leg, beside the skeleton, with a duck's foot and leg banded on to the other.

In addition to the street doctors, there are some who have acquired sufficient experience and reputation in their profession to find plenty of employment among the wealthy, and are consequently not obliged to resort to the thoroughfares for support. As dissection is never practiced, they have very imperfect ideas of anatomy, and as an evidence of their ignorance of the circulation of the blood, they distinguish twenty-four different and distinct pulsations in the body, and twenty-four different diseases at each of three pulses on each arm. They also seem to be ignorant of the existence of muscles and nerves, and, as an instance of their ignorance of the latter, Dr. Parker, the American medical missionary at Canton, informed us, that a Mandarin, whom he had treated for tic douloureux, was previously under the hands of a native physician, who told him that the acute pain arising from this nervous affection was caused by the movement of a worm, existing in the flesh, which he endeavored to kill, but the worm changed his position so rapidly, that he eluded all his endeavors. Another physician, who practiced in Old China Street, the Doctor said he had seen cutting off the edge of the gum around an aching tooth, and exhibiting it to his satisfied patient, who was eased for the time by the counter-irritation, informed him it was the worm which had caused all his pain. When a Chinese physician is unsuccessful, he retires with the adage, "that there is medicine for sickness, but none for fate." As there are no medical schools in China, the only way for a person wishing to become a physician is to seek for some celebrated practitioner, and become his pupil.

Notwithstanding the low state of medical science in China, which, in its connection with astrology, closely resembles the practice of the healing art in Europe, less than two centuries since, the Chinese appear to enjoy as good health, and as many attain old age, as in other countries.

Comparatively little appears to be known by foreigners regarding the bulk of medicines used by the Chinese, although it is known that they have several similar preparations of mercury and other minerals to those in use with us, and that the former are administered in the same classes of diseases. They also have some similar vegetable medicines to ours; but ginseng, which once sold for eight times its weight in silver, stands with them at the head of all remedies.

The street broker is a more stationary being than the others spoken of, but his stand is seen at every turn. For a small per-centage, he is ready to exchange pieces of silver, or to buy and sell the only national coin, called by the Chinese Tchen, and by foreigners cash, which is an alloy of copper and zinc principally, and of which 1,000 are intended to equal in value a tael, or Chinese ounce of silver (about $1 1-3;) but 1,200 and more are sometimes given in exchange for a dollar. On the introduction of Spanish dollars in commerce, they were at first found to be so convenient, that the coinage of dollars in imitation was for a time allowed; but though these commenced at a higher rate than the foreign dollars, they soon sank greatly below the standard, while the foreign coin preserved its wonted degree of purity. The manufacture of imitation dollars being now prohibited, is still carried on to a considerable extent at some places on the coast, and at the north the opium traders occasionally receive dollars with Chinese and Mantchou characters and devices upon them, purporting to be issued by the present Emperor. The Spanish dollars imported at Canton soon become punched into such a state, with the private marks of all those through whose hands they pass, as to be saleable only by weight. The fraudulent even introduce bits of lead into the punch-holes; and none but freshly-imported dollars can ever be received without a very strict examination, called shroffing, in going through which process the jingling of coin may be heard in the foreign residences throughout all hours of the day. Small payments, if not made in copper coin, are effected by changing bits of silver, whose weight is ascertained by such small ivory balances as that seen in the hands of the broker in this case, with which all persons provide themselves. The payments to government not made in kind, are in silver of a prescribed rate of fineness, which the officers charged with the collection of the revenue generally deposit in some of the private banking establishments, called n' gan po, (money shops,) selected for the purpose, who, for a per-centage, refine the silver until it contains only two per cent. alloy, and cast it into ingots of one and ten taels weight, called Sysee, upon which the name of the banker and date of refining is stamped, to prevent fraud on the part of the refiner. There are no chartered or privileged banking companies, but the private banks receive deposits from individuals, either on interest not exceeding twelve per cent., or drawable at will without interest. The legal rate of interest is three per cent. per month, and thirty per cent. per annum; but this, of course, is very seldom reached, except in pawning and other such short loans. All compound interest is unlawful; and whatever number of years may have elapsed, the government does not enforce any claim for interest accumulated above the amount of the principal; or, in the Chinese phrase, "the offspring must not be greater than the mother." The ordinary rate of interest at Canton is from twelve to fifteen per cent. per annum.

According to the Memoirs sur le Chinois, the motive of the government in legalizing such a high rate of interest, is partly to facilitate loans, and partly to discourage luxury and prodigality by hastening the ruin of such as borrow merely to spend.

MY FATHER BLESSED ME.

My father raised his trembling hand,
And laid it on my head:
"God bless thee, O my son! my son!"
Most tenderly he said.

He died—but left no gold nor gems;
But still I was his heir;
For that rich blessing which he gave
Became a fortune rare.

Still, in my weary hours of toil
To earn my daily bread,
It gladdens me in thought to feel
His hand upon my head.

Though infant tongues to me have said,
"Dear father," oft since then,
Yet, when I bring that scene to mind,
I'm but a child again.

ROWLAND HILL'S FAVORITE STANZA.

When Rowland Hill died, as many of our readers may be aware, he was nearly ninety years old, and continued to preach with undiminished power until within a few weeks of his decease. During the last two or three years of his life, he very frequently repeated the following stanza :

"And when I'm to die,
Receive me, I'll cry,
For Jesus hath loved me, I cannot tell why;
But this I can find,
We two are so joined,
That he'll not be in glory, and leave me behind."

'The last time he occupied my pulpit,' writes Rev. George Clayton to his biographer, 'when he preached eloquently for an hour, in behalf of a charitable institution, he retired to the vestry after service, under feelings of great and manifest exhaustion. Here he remained until every individual except the pew-openers, his servant, and myself, had left the place. At length he seemed, with some reluctance, to have summoned energy enough to take his departure, intimating that it was in all probability the last time he should preach in Walworth. His servant preceded him, to open the carriage door, the pew-openers remained in the vestry. I offered my arm, which he declined, and I then followed him as he passed down the aisle of the chapel. The lights were nearly extinguished, the silence was profound, nothing indeed was heard but the slow majestic tread of his own footsteps, when, in an under tone, he thus soliloquized :

"And when I'm to die," &c.

'To my heart this was a scene of unequaled solemnity, nor can I ever recur to it without a revival of that hallowed, sacred, shuddering sympathy, which it originally awakened within me.'

When Rowland Hill was dying, when he was apparently unconscious, a friend put his mouth close to his ear, and repeated slowly his favorite stanza :

"And when I'm to die," &c.

The light returned to his fast fading eye, and his lips moved in the ineffectual attempt to repeat the stanza. And that was the last sign of sensibility which he gave.

We could wish that every disciple of Christ would commit these words to memory, and weave them into the web of his experience. Confidence in Christ, and the abiding assurance that our confidence is not in vain, is all a man needs, to secure peace here, and glory hereafter. If you have this, reader, keep fast hold of it, for it is your life. If you have it not, seek it instantly, nor abandon the pursuit until it has been found. [Genesee Evangelist.

LUTHER'S PREACHING.

"O, how I trembled when I had to ascend the pulpit for the first time! But I was forced to preach, and to the brothers first of all. Under this very pear-tree where we are now standing, I adduced fifteen arguments to Dr. Staupitz, against my vocation for the pulpit; at last I said, 'Dr. Staupitz, you wish to kill me; I shall not live three months.' He answered me, 'Well, our Lord has great business on hand above, and wants able men.'" "I set about collecting my works into volumes with but little zeal and ardor; I feel Saturn's hunger, and wish to devour all, for there are none of my books which please me, if I except the Treatise on the Bondage of the Will, and the Catechism." "I do not like Philip to be present at my lectures or sermons; but I place the cross before me, and say, 'Philip, Jonas, Pomer, and the rest, have nothing to do with the matter;' and then I endeavor to fancy that no one has sat in the pulpit abler than myself." Dr. Jonas said to him, "Sir doctor, I cannot follow you at all in your preaching." Luther replied, "I cannot myself; for my subject is often suggested either by something personal, or some private matter, according to times, circumstances, and hearers. Were I young, I should like to retrench many things in my sermons, for I have been too wordy." "I wish the people to be taught the Catechism well. I found myself upon it in all my sermons, and I preach as simply as possible. I want the common people, and children, and servants, to understand me. I do not enter the pulpit for the sake of the learned; they have my books."

Dr. Erasmus Alberns, being about to leave for the March, asked Luther how he should preach before the prince. "Your sermons," said he, "ought to be addressed, not to the princes, but to the rude and simple people. If, in mine, I was thinking of Melancthon and the other doctors, I should do no good; but I preach solely to the ignorant, and that pleases all. Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, I spare until we learned ones come together; and then, we make it so curled and fanciful that God himself wondereth at us."

"Albert Durer, the famous painter of Nuremburg, used to say that he took no pleasure in paintings charged with colors, but in those of a less ambitious kind. I say the same of sermons." "O, how happy should I have been when I was in the monastery of Erfuth, if I could once, but once, have heard but one little word preached on the gospel, or on the least of the Psalms." Nothing is more acceptable or more useful to the general run of hearers, than to preach the law and examples. Sermons on grace and justification are cold to their ears."

Amongst the qualities which Luther desiderates in a preacher, is a fine person, and that he be such as to make himself loved by good women and maidens. In his Treatise on Monastic Vows, Luther asks pardon of the reader for saying many things which are usually passed over in silence. "Why not dare to say what the Holy Ghost, for the instruction of men, has dictated to Moses? But we wish our ears to be purer than the mouth of the Holy Ghost."

To J. Brentius.—"I seek not to flatter or to deceive thee, and I do not deceive myself when I say, that I prefer thy writing to my own. It is not Brentius whom I praise, but the Holy Ghost, who is gentler and easier in thee. * * I feel, however, comfort from the consideration that our common Father hath need, in this his immense family, of each servant; of the hard against the hard, the rough against the rough, to be used as a sharp wedge against sharp knots. To clear the air and fertilize the soil, the rain which falls and sinks as the dew is not enough—the thunder-storm is still required." "I am far from believing myself without fault, but I can at least glorify myself with St. Paul, that I cannot be accused of hypocrisy, and that I have always spoken the truth, perhaps, it is true, a little too harshly. But I would rather sin in disseminating the truth with hard words, than shamefully retain it captive. If great lords are hurt by them, they can go about their business, without thinking of mine or of my doctrines. Have I done them any wrong or injustice? If I sin, it will be for God to pardon me."

To Spalatin.—"I cannot deny that I was more violent than I need to have been; but they knew it, and should not have provoked the dog. You can judge by yourself how difficult it is to moderate one's fire, and restrain one's pen. And hence I have always hated appearing in public, but the more I hate, the more I am forced to it in my own despite."

He often said, "I keep three savage dogs, Ingratitude, Pride, and Envy; he whom they bite is well bitten." "When I die, the Papists will discover the kind of adversary they have had in me." [Michilet.

SIBERIAN CIVILIZATION.

The large annual exportation of exiles, the conscriptions, and the advantages offered to officers, volunteering for Siberia service, are the most important and efficacious measures by which Russia proceeds gradually but steadily with the colonization and civilization of her Asiatic dominions. The conscripts are sometimes drawn, not only from Tobolsk, but from the remotest parts of Siberia, and the term of military service being twenty-eight years, it is probable that but few ever return to their native villages. Those who do are regarded as oracles by their countrymen. They are objects of pride to their families, and of respect to all; the place of honor is theirs by right, and they are addressed by the title of Master Soldier. The Ferry of the Irtish, by Tobolsk, whose passage is considered the symbol of political death to the numerous exiles who annually cross it, bestows a step of rank on all public servants offering themselves for service in Siberia Proper. The love of rank, stronger in Russia than in any other country, drives hosts of officers across this important boundary; but as they are only obliged to remain three years, most of them return home at the end of that time. Far nearer to St. Petersburgh than the Asiatic frontier, civilization is still at a very low ebb among the aboriginal tribes. Close to Nijni Novgoroo, and within a very short distance from Moscow, the prevailing population consists of Cheremissess and Chuvashes—tribes, many of whose customs are nearly as barbarous as their names. These people are shy and timid, very slow in acquiring industrious habits, and addicted to sundry practices rendering them semi-savages. In some places they adhere to Paganism, and offer up horned beasts, fruit, and vegetables, to their various deities. The Chuvash ladies wear a sort of bustle of sheet copper, hanging from the girdle backward over the hips, and having appended to it all manner of metal ornaments, which make a perpetual clatter in walking. But these tribes are the pink of refinement, in comparison with those in the northern portion of the Muscovite Empire—with the Ostyaks, who eat from the same trough with their dogs, or with the Samoyedes, who tear with their teeth, and swallow with infinite relish huge lumps of raw and reeking flesh. The women of the latter people wear, as their favorite decoration, certainly no inappropriate one, a glutton tail, hanging down the back of their pelisse. The hair is platted in tails, to which all manner of lumber, brass and iron rings, rusty musket-locks, are appended. [Blackwood.

HONORABLE TRIBUTE TO THE ENGLISH BAPTISTS.—Let it never be forgotten of the Particular Baptists of England, that they form the denomination of Fuller, and Cary, and Ryland, and Hall, and Foster; that they have originated among the greatest of all missionary enterprises; that they have enriched the literature of our country with authorship of the most exalted piety, as well as the first talent, and the first eloquence; that they have waged a very noble and successful war with the hydra of Antinomianism; that perhaps there is not a more intellectual community of ministers in our island, or who have put forth, to their number, a greater amount of mental power, or mental activity, in the defense and illustration of our common faith; and, what is better than all the triumphs of genius and understanding, who, by their zeal and fidelity, and pastoral labor, among the congregations which they have reared, have done more to swell the lists of genuine discipleship in the walks of private society, and thus both to uphold and extend the living Christianity of the nation. [Dr. Chalmers.

THE ENGLISH AND IRISH REGIUM DONUM.

The following account of the 'Regium Donum' distributed in England and Ireland, is given by Rev. Dr. Belcher, in the New York Recorder. If, as a leading tory in the House of Commons is said to have suggested, the acceptance of this gift 'proves the voluntary principle to be a failure,' pray what is proved by the custom in this country of accepting—not to say soliciting—aid from the civil authorities to enforce the observance of Sunday? Does it prove the principle of the Church's independence of the State to be a failure? It would be well for those who cry out against the Regium Donum to think of this question :

In the year 1723, George I. being on the throne, and Sir Robert Walpole, Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Dissenting ministers appealed to the Government, requesting that the cruel laws which they found on the statute-book against them might be repealed. The wily Chancellor well knew the passions which govern human nature, and was exceedingly ingenious in the use of his gold. He had already converted enemies into friends in this way; and represented to a few of the leading Dissenting ministers, that he was indeed their friend—that he rejoiced in their great abilities—that he was the cordial supporter of their persons and interests—and that he deeply regretted that persecuting laws should hang over their heads. Moreover, he assured them that he was their greatest and best parliamentary friend, but that it would be exceedingly unwise to urge their claims that session—that it would indeed ruin their cause, but that another year he would assuredly accomplish their wishes. In the meantime, 'His Majesty, out of his royal compassion for the distressed condition of many of the Dissenting clergy and their families,' begged their acceptance of five hundred pounds, to be distributed among them. This was continued annually, and was from time to time increased in amount, until it reached one thousand six hundred and ninety-five pounds per annum, beyond which it has never advanced. This sum for many years past has been distributed in equal proportions, by some ministers, among their poor brethren of the Congregational, Baptist, and Presbyterian denominations; the far larger portion of the latter body being Unitarians, who have assumed the name of English Presbyterians. All this time, up to the year 1804, this was considered strictly 'a charitable grant from the personal bounty of the King.' In that year, however, on the settlement of the civil list by a compact entered into between the King and the Parliament, in reference to the hereditary revenues of the Crown, the grant was directed to be made in future by an annual vote of the House of Commons. To this hour the vote has been continued; during the last sixteen years, the vast majority of the Congregationalists and Baptists have been opposed to it; but the distributors continue to take it, first, because in their view, it is essentially the gift of the sovereign, the Parliament voting it in consideration of hereditary revenues being given up to them; and secondly, because as yet no provision has been secured to the poor ministers, who would thus lose what to them is of great value.

The Irish Regium Donum, so called, is quite a different affair. This is given to Presbyterian ministers of Ireland, some of whom are Unitarians, yet still Presbyterians. It was granted by William III., in an order dated at Hillsborough, June 19, 1690, and amounted in the first instance to £1,200. In the reign of George I., £800 per annum were added to it; in 1784, it was increased to £2,200; in 1792, by the authority of the King's patent, (George III.,) £5,000 was charged on the civil list, to be annually paid to the Irish Presbyterian ministers. In 1804 commenced the system of Parliamentary grants. The first grant amounted to £4,160, and was gradually augmented till 1836, when £25,579 was voted, which, is the present amount. In 1803, the Presbyterian congregations in Ireland were divided into three classes, and their ministers, as they stood in the first, second, or third class, received respectively, £100, £75, or £50 per annum. This arrangement is, I believe, still continued, though in 1834 there was some coquetting with the Government to raise the whole to £100; in which, however, they did not succeed.

This whole subject teaches us the insidious character of public grants to religious purposes. We see their commencement, but who shall predict their end? In both these cases these grants acted as hush-money, to keep the parties quiet under their grievances. So have I seen in one of the British Provinces, on this side of the Atlantic, a religious denomination receive a paltry sum of one thousand dollars annually for the support of a denominational college, and were so subdued by it, that when the men who obtained it, brought into the Assembly a measure compelling a whole district to pay for the support of Episcopacy, if they did not previously sustain some other form of religion, the party was compelled to keep silent.

Even this is not all. When a few years ago it was proposed in the British House of Commons to withhold the accustomed grant to the English Dissenters, a leading tory said he would support the grant on the ground that it proved the voluntary principle to be a total failure. And that it tends to cherish abuses among those who receive it, is evident from the fact that in 1834, though in the flourishing town of Belfast there were several splendid Presbyterian meeting-houses, with large and opulent congregations, fully equal to the support of their pastors and professors of theology, the nation was taxed one thousand dollars per annum for their maintenance. Let us thank God that we cannot have any of these evils in our glorious country.

THE SABBATH IN CHINA.

The facts which have recently come to light relative to the mode of presenting the sabbatic institution to the Chinese, cannot fail to arrest attention, and suggest serious reflections. It seems that a custom prevails among the missionaries, of designating the first day of the week as "the rest-day," or "the ceremony-worship day." From this, as a starting point, all the other days of the week are numbered; so that Monday, or the second day of the week, becomes "the first day after the ceremony-worship day;" Tuesday becomes "the second day after the ceremony-worship day;" and so on to the seventh day of the week, or the Sabbath, which becomes "the sixth day after the ceremony-worship day;" thus leaving the Sunday, or "ceremony-worship day," to occupy that place in the week which properly belongs to the Sabbath. This mode of designating the days of the week is almost universal among the missionaries, and to it all their instructions, both public and private, are studiously conformed. Now when they come to translate the Scriptures, the Chinese character for one of these terms—"the ceremony-worship day," or "the rest-day"—is used wherever we have, in our English translation, the word Sabbath. The consequence is, that all those who become acquainted with the sabbatic institution through the Chinese Scriptures and the practices of the missionaries, are left to suppose that the day on which they are taught to rest is the same with that sanctified and blessed in Paradise, and enjoined in the fourth commandment. The doctrine of a change of the Sabbath, in order to commemorate the resurrection of Christ, is not taught in China. The Sabbath in commemoration of the work of creation—the Jewish Sabbath, as it is sometimes sneeringly called—is the only Sabbath made known to the Chinese; and that is transferred from the day originally commanded, in order to make its celebration conform to the customs of Christendom. This is a strange mixing up of matters, surely, to receive the sanction of pious and learned missionaries, who aspire to be the renovaters of China.

The facts in the case suggest to us one painful thought, which we cannot forbear to mention. The missionaries who have gone to China from England and America, have been taught to regard the change of the Sabbath as an important doctrine. It had a prominent place in their catechisms, and was earnestly insisted upon in their theological training. In some instances, they have advocated it with great zeal before entering upon the missionary work; and, in one way or another, they have all identified themselves with it. But now that they are settled in China, the doctrine loses its importance in their estimation, and ceases to form a part of their instructions. Can it be, that they vindicated it while at home, simply because it was a part of their creed, and not because they esteemed it important? Can it be, that they deem it unnecessary to teach the heathen what they deemed it important to teach Christians? Or, are they really somewhat doubtful of the soundness of the doctrine, and therefore ready to abandon it when they can do so without observation? We cannot resist the conclusion, in view of the facts in the case, that many of those who are regarded as believing in the change of the Sabbath, are not satisfied with the evidences of it, and would gladly avail themselves of any opportunity to dismiss the subject.

Another thought is naturally suggested by these facts, which confirms an opinion often expressed by the advocates of the Sabbath. In China, it seems, the Scriptures are so translated, that the idea of a change of the Sabbath would not be likely to occur to the common reader. Is it because such a change is not taught in the Scriptures? No doubt that is the true reason. And we question whether a person unacquainted with the popular theory in relation to the change, would gather any idea of it from reading the Scriptures in English, without note or comment. Indeed, it is not uncommon, even in these days when so much is said upon the subject, to meet with persons to whom the doctrine is entirely new—persons who always supposed they were keeping the seventh day, and whose Bible reading had never suggested to them that the day of the Sabbath was changed in commemoration of the resurrection of Christ. These facts about the Chinese translation show how much easier it is to cover up the doctrine of a change than to establish it from the Scriptures.

New California Expedition.—It is said that a lady, of New York State, well known for her philanthropic labors, is about starting a benevolent expedition to California. Aided by several wealthy men, she proposes to buy a vessel, and freight it with every article necessary for the sick, including a frame for a hospital. She is now engaged in raising a company of intelligent and respectable females to accompany her in this mission of charity; each shall contribute something towards the purchase of the of the vessel and cargo, and assist in the benevolent objects of the enterprise. None will be admitted who have not attained the age of 25 years, and can also produce sufficient testimonials of character. A portion of the freight taken will consist of articles to furnish a store, in which some of the women may be employed, and in material for clothing, to be made up according to orders on the spot. This is the most rational California expedition we have heard of.

OUR CHINA MISSION.

"Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, nay; but rather division," were the words of Him who "needed not that any should testify of man." The reflective reader of the communications we are now giving to the public, will be solemnly reminded of these words; and he who has been an attentive observer of the history of the world, needs not to be informed that truth never found a home amongst men without first fighting for it. Such is the determined enmity of the human heart, such its obstinate preference of darkness to light, that every inch of ground is disputed. The advocates of the Bible Sabbath have long had to lament the difficulties attendant upon their efforts to give this item of truth to the world. The developments of our missionaries will show that these difficulties are yet to be grappled with in a more decided manner, and probably in more of a self-denying, martyr spirit, than they have ever been. Weak as the argument for Sunday-keeping is when tested by the Scriptures of truth, and thoroughly Popish as the practice can be proved to be, it is nevertheless too widely diffused, and too thoroughly inwrought into all the schemes, and plans, and institutions of the so-called Christian world, to be easily broken up. There must be no child's play in the business. God grant that we, who have committed ourselves to the work, may be like our Master, and "not fail nor be discouraged, until judgment is set in the earth." The subjoined extracts, in connection with what we gave last week from Bro. Wardner, will give a glimpse of the troubles with which our mission is likely to be encompassed. Our only regret is, that the heathen must be made to witness the wide and irreconcilable difference between us and our brethren of other persuasions. It is lamentable indeed. But we are not the troublers of Israel, but those who have forsaken the commandments of the Lord. Duty to the God of truth compels us to protest against all perversions of his law, by whomsoever made, and wherever inculcated. But to the extracts,

Extracts from Bro. Carpenter's Journal.

God is still gracious to us, infinitely beyond our deservings. While other missionaries are falling in quick succession, we are mercifully preserved. We have just passed through one trying season of the year, and have entered upon another. For the last two months, immense quantities of rain have fallen. It has required care to prevent books, and many other things, from moulding badly. There has been more rain this season than usual. It is now becoming pretty warm. But the health of all our little band is quite as good as usual. If God shall spare our lives, I hope they may be devoted to his service in earnest. As we are gaining gradually in our ability to talk, the field of our labor is becoming more inviting. I daily spend a little time in reading and explaining the Scriptures to Foo Quay. We do not often, in our walks, hold lengthy interviews with the natives on religious topics, lest our mistakes in the use of the language should disparage the infinitely important theme. But our daily struggle is to learn to talk and read the Scriptures in this dialect. We are expecting to have means to fit up our chapel by the first of January next. In making extracts from my journal, I shall omit, for the most part, the particular topics that Bro. Wardner will dwell upon, and thus save some of your precious time as well as mine.

May 31.—The two Episcopalian missionaries who have recently located theselves at Ningpo, while in this city, called on the other missionaries, and passed us by. The reason of this partiality we thought but little of at the time, but afterwards it came to us without our seeking it. The reason they assigned was, that they were not previously informed of the existence of such a sect; and not knowing whether we were not Jews, they entertained consciencious scruples about the propriety of honoring us with a call, lest they should thereby bid us God speed. We have survived this shock, and hope we may others equally terrible, should we be called to endure them. Last first-day evening, the Baptist missionaries of this place held a funeral service, at which the greater part of the missionaries were present. The occasion was the sudden death of Dr. and Mrs. James, near Hong-Kong. We have not inquired why we alone were not notified. It is different from their general treatment towards us.

June 5.—The Monthly Concert has been held at our house. The usual number, about thirty, were present. We shall doubtless have it our share of the time hereafter.

June 9.—My new teacher commenced to-day. He promises well. He has a much better tact at conversation than our former teacher, and this is a matter of great importance to us while our main object is to learn to talk.

14th.—This evening, as usual, the poor beggars are singing out as they pass through the streets, with a shrill voice. From the cheerful tones of their voices, so unlike their begging tone in the day time, and from their passing directly on, instead of calling at each shop for money, I judge that their song is a sort of thanksgiving for the benefactions of the day. They take up this song, not as a task, but as a thing which affords them pleasure. They do it in return, as I suppose, for a few copper cash, or a few morsels of the cheapest kind of food. May we not suppose that, in the Judgment, these poor creatures will rise up and condemn those who, in Christian lands, have received greater blessings than they, even the knowledge of the true God, and of Jesus Christ whom He hath sent, and have not, once in all their lives, returned genuine and hearty thanks to the Giver.

18th.—My teacher to-day confirmed my previous impression that the Chinese, at present at least, know nothing of the computation of time by weeks, except so far as it is introduced by foreigners. Some of the missionaries teach that Sunday is the seventh day of the week. I see no possibility of avoiding a collision sooner or later. From the little collision we have already witnessed, I see not the least signs of repentance on the part of those who so flagrantly abuse the majesty of the divine law.

24th.—This evening, after showing Foo Quay some of the proofs of divine skill and benevolence, which every man carries about with him, I asked him why it was that the Chinese were so ignorant of the true God. His reply affords a pretty fair index of his theoretical knowledge of the fundamental truths of the Gospel. He said it was because their hearts were blind. This reply serves also to illustrate one item of Chinese philosophy. They think the heart is the organ of thought, as well as of feeling. So far as I know, this opinion is universal. And it derives confirmation from an anecdote related to us, a few days since, by our teacher. He said that formerly there lived in China a very skillful physician. Being called to visit a patient who had a disease in the bone of his arm, he took out the whole of the as-humeras, cleansed it, and replaced it, and the arm became as sound as ever. This same physician was called to see a patient who had a severe pain in the head. He proposed to his patient to open his head, take out the contents, and replace them. But the patient's alarm showed that he possessed some brains, if he did not know where they were located. He refused to submit to the experiment, and afterwards killed the doctor. But the doctor's proposition to cut open the skull and take out its contents, shows that he had no idea of what the skull contains. The sequel of the story is, that some one burnt up the physician's books, and since that time none have arisen so skillful.

July 7th.—The thermometer stood for several hours at 90 degrees. To-day I have completed a piece of work that has occupied me and my teacher several days. We have copied 4,000 Chinese characters, such as are in common use, and constitute, it is said, nineteen-twentieths, except proper names, of all the student will find in common books. The list is one published in Williams' Vocabulary. The difference in pronunciation between Canton and Shanghai has constituted our main difficulty, it being important that the words pronounced alike should be arranged together. I have used three quires of foolscap, putting a column of eighteen large-sized characters on each page, writing the sound, and indicating the tone of each word, and leaving a space for definitions to be hereafter written. The list now stands ready for a long pull. To look at it in the aggregate is almost disheartening. Time will show what can be done with it. I will not hazard a prediction.

The language of China may be classed under three heads:—1. The written language, intelligible alike to all who can read, in all parts of the Empire. 2. The Mandarin, or language spoken by the officers of government. This prevails most in the province of Chihle, where great numbers of officers of government are collected. This language cannot be spoken by all the Mandarins who reside at a distance from the capital. 3d. The local dialects, which are very numerous, amounting, it is supposed, to several hundreds.

July 16.—To-day, with the aid of my teacher, I have made a translation of Mr. Shuck's version of the ten commandments. The fourth is as follows:—

"The fourth command says, You must keep the ceremony-worship-day. On this day, neither yourself, nor your son, nor daughter, nor man servant, nor stranger, nor any workman, may do any work. Because in six days the true God made heaven and earth, the hills and the sea, and all things; on the seventh day, his work being finished, he rested. This day is reckoned a holy day.

"In six days do man's business; on the seventh day, all day, do God's business. This day it is good to explain the holy book, to assemble together to worship Jesus, and instruct men in his doctrine."

I hope our people will make this mission strong, by invoking the aid of the strong arm of the Lord; and farther, as his stewards, by furnishing us the means of making the most of our time and strength while in the field, and by sending, in due time, others whom the Holy Ghost may designate to this work. We think we should neglect one very important means of instruction, if we should confine ourselves to preaching, although we look upon this prospectively as our main employment. Our situation, as you are aware, is somewhat peculiar. We are not only in a heathen land, surrounded by thousands and millions who are waiting for the law to be given them, but other missionaries are giving them this law in a distorted form. And they are so numerous and zealous, that it will require, on the part of those who would lift up the standard of the Almighty in defense of his violated law, not only zeal, but zeal that shall be according to knowledge. In such a field, and at such a post, as the one which God has called us to occupy, a great deal must depend upon the wisdom of the measures adopted. In such a work as defending the Lord's Sabbath, and freeing it from the obloquy which indiscreet men heap upon it, it seems to me the press would be indispensable. And not only so, but if we could have small portions of Scripture, as a single paragraph or parable, which should be made the subject of discourse on the Sabbath, printed, so as to present a copy to each one, it might be the means of much good. At the London Mission Chapel they present a printed chapter to each one. We could get any thing printed at the Mission press here, or at Ningpo, or by the natives. Mr. McClatchin has had a tract printed by the natives.

BIBLES FOR CHINA.

Shiloh, N. J., Feb. 3, 1849.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Can you give me any information concerning the Shanghai translation of the Bible? Our people here have been in the habit of giving something to the American and Foreign Bible Society, under the impression that they were thereby forwarding the China Mission. But understanding, that the proposed translation, which would be used at Shanghai, is partial in relation to the Sabbath, (favoring the Sunday,) some of them have withheld their contribution this year on that account. I have an impression, that our missionaries have written something about that matter, but what, or when, I do not remember; and what has been the final result of the matter, I am unadvised. If you can inform me, either by letter, or through the Recorder, you will very much oblige.

G. M. Langworthy.

☞ In reply to the foregoing, we can only say, that the existing translations of the Scriptures into the Chinese language are defective in many respects, and will not probably be circulated much longer. Some five years ago, measures were adopted to secure a new version, in the publication of which all denominations might unite. But after proceeding for a while with the work, the Baptists, or a part of them, withdrew, under an impression that it would be necessary for them to get up a version of their own. The Pedobaptists are still engaged in translating, and will undoubtedly bring out a version far superior to any now in existence. Our missionaries have communicated with them relative to those points in which their translation would be likely to prove objectionable to us, and it remains to be seen what course they will pursue. As to the Baptists, we are not definitely informed what progress they are making. Meanwhile our brethren in China are desirous of printing portions of Scripture for distribution, and will need funds for that purpose. In such circumstances, we should recommend those who desire to invest money in Bibles for the benefit of the China mission, to forward it to the Treasurer of the Missionary Association, and he will see that it is applied in a way which they can approve.

MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION—ITS TREASURY.

The members of our denomination are hereby informed, that the funds of the Treasury are nearly exhausted, and that there is not enough on hand to meet urgent demands. It will be recollected, that at our last Annual Meeting, a Mission to the West was resolved upon, and that the Board immediately adopted measures to carry the Mission into effect. It is now necessary to make a remittance to our brother whom we have sent into the field; but we are not able to do so, to the amount called for, owing to the low state of the funds. We are confident that this fact needs only to be stated, to call forth the necessary contributions. A commendable promptness in meeting all the necessities of our Foreign Mission, has been manifested by our churches; it is hoped there will be equal promptness in sustaining the Home Mission. The friends of the cause are requested to forward their contributions to the Treasurer, A. D. Titsworth, Metuchin, N. J., with as little delay as possible.

By order of the Board,
Thos. B. Brown, Cor. Sec.

Evangelical Books in Mexico.—One of the Colporteurs of the American Tract Society, in Mexico, has been threatened with fine and imprisonment, for bringing prohibited books to Matamoras. Upon his investigation, it was found that the law applied only to works of a licentious character, and he escaped the penalty. One of the priests recently denounced the books of the colporteur, and threatened excommunication to all who bought them, or allowed their children to read these books. The ensuing day, a gentleman called upon him with the 'Miracles of Christ,' and a Testament, saying that he wished another copy of each. The priest, said he, thinks they are bad books, but we think they are good. The Testament had evidently been much used. 'Yesterday,' the colporteur writes, 'a man, to whom I have frequently sold a dozen books, wanted more, to sell to the country people, adding, The city people do not want them, because the priests say they are bad books.' The principal in the Mexican school at Matamoras, in which the colporteur gives instruction in English, is quite disposed to contend with the priest, in behalf of the books of the Tract Society. The colporteur thinks the priests are less potent in their influence now than they formerly were in Mexico.

No Liquor on Sunday.—The Maryland Court of Appeals has decided a case involving the constitutionality of the law prohibiting the sale of liquor on Sunday. It was an appeal from a decision of one of the County Courts, in which the judgment of the Court below was reversed on the ground of an informality in the bill of exceptions, there being no proof that the defendant was a retailer of liquor. The Court, however, decided that the State had the right, under the Constitution, to pass the law in question.

☞ The Student's Mirror is the title of a sixteen-page paper just started by an association of students of DeRuyter Institute. It is designed as a medium of communication between the present members of the school and those who have left it, to whom it will no doubt be a source of amusement and profit. To be published semi-monthly, during term time, (if subscriptions will warrant,) at $1 a year.

Sunday Doings in Philadelphia.—The authorities of Philadelphia have taken in hand the barbers and newsboys, and determined to make them keep the Sunday right. But the firemen have things their own way, as heretofore. Witness the following account of what took place on Sunday evening, the 11th inst. Similar scenes have been common there on Sundays for the last five years:—

"Northern Liberties was disgraced on Sunday last by a fireman's riot. The Lafayette and United States hose companies came into collision, and a regular pitched battle ensued. The police at last succeeded in separating the combatants. But while the United States was returning home, the company was attacked at the corner of Fourth and Coates streets, and the carriage taken from them. They run off her hose, demolished her frontispiece, smashed the wheels, and would have totally destroyed it, if some members of the Independence had not prevented them. This is one of the many disgraceful scenes which are enacted in the upper part or this city."

Massachusetts on Slavery.—The present position of deliberations in Congress on the subject of Slavery, has induced Massachusetts to express her sentiments. The following resolutions were recently introduced in the House of Representatives of that State, and referred to the proper Committee:—

Resolved, That Congress has full power to legislate on the subject of Slavery, in the Territories of the Union; that it has freely exercised such power from the adoption of the Constitution to the present time; and, that it is its duty to exercise the power for the perpetual exclusion of the institution of Slavery from those Territories that are free, and for its extinction in Territories where it exists.

Resolved, That when Congress furnishes Governments for the Territories of California and New Mexico, it will be its duty to establish therein the fundamental principle of the Ordinance of 1787 upon the subject of Slavery, to the end that the institution may be perpetually excluded therefrom, beyond any chance and uncertainty.

Resolved, That neither Slavery nor the Slave Trade ought to exist in the District of Columbia, and, that it is the duty of Congress to provide the most just, practicable, and expeditious plan for abolishing the same.

Congressional Laziness.—Hon. Horace Greeley, of the House of Representatives, is lecturing that body for its notorious wastefulness of time. The text of his last lecture is furnished by the adjournment of the House on Wednesday, February 14, after a session of two hours, occupied in counting the electoral votes. He says:—

"This adjournment was hardly less than a crime. With but fifteen days of the session remaining, and one of these probably to be thrown out as Washington's Birth-day, to say nothing of the arrival and reception of General Taylor—with not even one important Apropriation bill finally disposed of, and little besides Appropriation bills considered at all—with the Postage Reforms in abeyance, Land Reform not looked at, Retrenchment of any sort under the table, and the new territories imploring legitimate government, and likely to plead in vain, though their wants are imperative and urgent, it is downright dereliction and wrong to throw away a day after this fashion. There was not a Northern man in the House who would not discharge his hireling, nor a Southern man who would not larrup his nigger, did he quit work in the middle of a day on similar pretexts, and in like emergencies."

Prices in California.—The Home Journal publishes a letter dated at San Francisco, Dec. 25, which gives the following account of prices obtained for various articles in California:—

"Brandy, $12 to $14 per gallon; champagne, $75 per dozen; other wines in proportion; flour, at the fort, $25 per barrel; salt pork, $50 per barrel; blankets, $45 to $75 a pair; common boots, $16 to $25 a pair; shoes, $9 to $12 a pair; woolen socks, $3 to $4 a pair; butter, $2 a pound; overcoats, $45 to $80 a piece; common summer sacks, such as I paid $5 for in New York, sold here for $26 each, at auction, by the case, but at Sutter's they are worth much more. Every thing, except prints and domestics, are high in proportion. Leggings sell at any price. The prices I have quoted above are the true prices at Sutter's; but at the mill, or what is called the Mormon Diggings, only forty miles from the fort, the prices are 1,200 per cent higher. The price for hauling anything from the fort to the mill, is $25 per 100 pounds."

LAST WEEK'S CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

February 12.

In the SENATE, after the transaction of some unimportant business, Mr. Benton presented a petition, signed by numerous citizens, praying Congress to authorize the employment of adequate military forces to accompany and protect expeditions to California. The petition was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The bill making certain regulations respecting Courts in Iowa, was taken up and passed. The Senate then took up the Civil and Diplomatic Appropriation Bill, which was under discussion till the hour of adjournment. The principal point in dispute was whether to strike out a clause forbidding flogging in the Navy. The motion to strike out prevailed.

In the HOUSE, a bill was introduced for the establishment of a Department for the Interior Administration. It takes from the State Department, the Superintendence of the Patent Office and the Census; from the Treasury Department, the Land Office and the Coast Survey; from the War Department, the Indian Bureau and the Pension Office; from the Navy Department, the Marine Pension Desk; and from the Executive, the Penitentiary and Commissioner of Public Buildings; the salary of the Secretary of the Interior to be six thousand dollars, with a Chief Clerk at a salary of two thousand dollars, and no other office. After considerable discussion, the bill was ordered printed, together with a substitution proposed. A bill was passed making provision for the families of those who have died since the war of wounds received and diseases contracted in Mexican service.

February 13.

The SENATE passed the bill granting relief to the widows and orphans of officers and soldiers who have died of diseases contracted during the late war with Mexico; also the bill granting the right of way, and a portion of the proceeds of certain public lands, for the benefit of railroads and canals, when they pass through lands belonging to the United States. The Civil and Diplomatic Appropriation Bill was then taken up and considered till adjournment.

In the HOUSE, after some time spent in correcting the journal, a large number of bills were presented, among which was a batch of invalid and other pension bills, which took the usual course. The Senate bill, granting the right of way and lands to railroad companies, gave rise to a long discussion, but was not acted upon.

February 14.

Nothing of importance was done by either House, except to count the Presidential Votes. The result was, that Zachary Taylor and Millard Fillmore had 163 votes each for President and Vice President, while Lewis Cass and William O. Butler had 127 votes each for the same offices.

February 15.

In the SENATE, the Committee on Military Affairs reported a joint resolution to furnish emigrants to California with arms and ammunition from the public stores. A resolution was passed, appropriating six thousand dollars to defray the traveling expenses of a delegation of the Chippewa Indians now at Washington, on business with the Government. A resolution was also passed, directing the Committee on Pensions to inquire into the expediency of making a grant of land to each of the surviving officers and soldiers who served in the last war with England; also to the widows and orphans of such as have died since the war.

The HOUSE spent considerable time in discussing certain amendments to its rules, but took no action thereupon. A bill was passed, chartering the Washington and Alexandria Steamboat Company. A resolution was passed, in favor of distributing Winder's Book among Naval Officers. The bill for the establishment of a Commission to investigate and settle private claims against the United States, was rejected by a vote of 84 to 98. The bill for the creation of a Department of the Interior was taken up and passed.

February 16.

The SENATE agreed to a resolution directing an inquiry to be made into the expediency of increasing the annual appropriation of Congress, for the civilization of the Indian Tribes. A resolution was offered, which lies over, appropriating ten thousand dollars to purchase and improve a burial-ground in Mexico, for the remains of our soldiers who were killed during the late operations in that country. The Diplomatic Appropriation Bill was farther considered, and an amendment agreed to, appropriating twenty thousand dollars for the purpose of cleaning and repairing the Canal in Washington City.

In the HOUSE, the bill making appropriations for carrying into effect the late Treaty with Mexico, was taken up, and several speeches were made in relation to Slavery in the Territories, the disadvantages of the South, &c., after which the House adjourned.

February 17.

In the SENATE, the bill from the House, providing for the establishment of a Department of the Interior, was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance. The Senate then took up the resolution offered by Mr. Webster, directing an inquiry to be made into the expediency of requiring security from emigrant paupers, in order to prevent them from becoming a public charge, and after slight modifications, it was adopted. A bill was reported, and ordered printed, for the establishment of a mail route from the Mississippi river to San Francisco, California. The resolution in relation to purchasing a burial-ground in Mexico, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The Civil and Diplomatic Bill was farther discussed, but not acted upon.

In the HOUSE, nearly the whole day was spent in considering a bill making an appropriation to carry out the twelfth article of the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. The question of Slavery, and the Mexican War in general, was pretty thoroughly discussed.

THE INAUGURATION BALL.—This ball is designed to be the most magnificent entertainment ever given in the United States. Ample accommodations are provided for four thousand persons, with comfortable accommodations for both ladies and gentlemen. The walls of the Assembly and Supper Rooms are to be richly decorated for the occasion. The anticipated cost of the entertainment is estimated at over seven thousand dollars, and the Committee calculate upon the sale of one thousand tickets, at ten dollars each, having resolved to give whatever surplus may be left to the two Orphan Asylums. Gungl's band is to attend, in consideration of the subsequent use of the Pavilion, and other expenses, which will be five hundred and fifty dollars. The Philadelphia Germania Band is also engaged. The dancing pavilion measures 150 feet by 50, and the promenade saloon 100 by 50. The following items have been ordered for the tables: A pyramid of crystalized fruits, six feet high; nine pyramids of cream; fifty gallons of cream; fifty gallons of Roman punch; fifty gallons of lemonade; fifty molds of jelly; fifty molds of blanc-mange; three thousand small tea cakes; one hundred and twenty pounds of pound-cake; sixty pounds of fruit-cake; thirty boned turkeys; twenty jelly hams; forty Charlotte Russe; twelve rounds alamode; sixty chicken salads; one hundred and fifty terrapins, fricassee, fricandise, and in soup, and oysters without end, raw, and in every variety of dressing. This contract for the supper, is exclusive of all wines and liquors, except the Roman punch. The wines and other liquors will, it is estimated, amount to one thousand five hundred dollars—one item of the list being seventy-five baskets of champagne.

CHANGING NAMES.—The following bill, prescribing the manner in which individuals may change their names, has passed both Houses of the Wisconsin Legislature, and will save the necessity of much special legislation by the State law-makers:—

SEC. 1. Any inhabitant of any town in this State, may apply to the Board of Supervisors of the town, for a change of name; such application shall be made in writing, and shall be examined and decided upon by said Board, or a majority of them, and, if approved by them, shall be legal and valid: Provided the said change, with a certificate of the Board, shall be recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county in which such town may be situated.

SEC. 2. The names of minors may be changed as specified in section first of this bill, by application of parties or guardians.

THE MISSOURI TWINS.—These wonderful children are now being exhibited in St. Louis. They are the children of Mr. Benjamin Ross, of Texas county, Missouri, and were born on the 16th of November, 1847. They are connected from the breast bone and abdomen, measure twenty inches in height, and weigh twenty pounds. Their connection is such that they stand face to face, heads coated over with fine black hair, and in all other respects perfect in form and feature. It was considered due to science, that a production so wonderful in its nature, and one, too, so intimately concerning the human family, in the practice of obstetrical surgery, should be exhibited to the world. Their connection is easily inspected.

POSTAGE TO CALIFORNIA.—The United States Mail is now sent monthly to California, via Panama, leaving New York per steamship Falcon, on the 1st of each month, Charleston on the third, Savannah on the 4th, and New Orleans on the 9th. Letters for California, from all parts of the United States, reaching any of the above points, on or before those dates, will be duly forwarded. The postage is as follows: To Santa Barbara, San Diego, Monterey, San Francisco, and Astoria, 40 cents per half ounce. The postage is not required in advance, nor is there any inland postage to be paid. Those, therefore, who desire to send, no matter in what portion of the country they reside, have only to drop their letters into the nearest post-office, simply marked 'Via New York,' or either of the other ports at which the Falcon touches. The sea postage of newspapers is three cents; inland postage is to be added.

AFFAIRS IN CENTRAL AMERICA.—Recent arrivals from Honduras bring intelligence that the whole of Central America was in an unsettled state, and traveling was every where unsafe. Robberies and murders were of frequent occurrence, and the road from Ysabal to Guatemala, in particular, was filled with bandits. Yucatan is in a very deplorable condition. A gentleman lately from Bacalar says that a large number of the corpses of murdered Spaniards lined the roads near Bacalar, no one daring to bury them. A number of Yucatecos residing in the British dominions united at Punta Consejos and attacked their country-people and the Indians of Payo Obispo. They proceeded to erect a fortification on the River Hondo; but a body of 150 Indians from Bacalar came down upon them and killed 30 of their number, beside capturing their boats, provisions, furs, &c.

A MYSTERIOUS RETURN.—Mr. Richard D. Doran, a merchant of Harper's Ferry, Va., whose mysterious disappearance, several years ago, has been a matter of newspaper comment, recently returned to his former home. He has been residing most of the time in Glasgow, Scotland. It is a singular case, and will produce some strange judicial proceedings. Supposing that he had either died, or been murdered, in Philadelphia, his estate, a very considerable one, had passed into the hands of administrators, and was entirely settled, so far as the agents of the Court were concerned, leaving a large surplus just in process of distribution among his legal representatives.

NEGROES IN CANADA.—According to a census taken one year since, the entire black population of Canada is five thousand five hundred and seventy-one, being four thousand one hundred and sixty-seven more than in 1842. The majority of males is six hundred and forty-five—accounted for, on the reasonable supposition, that the slaves who escape are mostly males. This disproportion is found chiefly in the districts of Gore, London, and Western, nearest to and most convenient of access from the United States.

MEXICAN ITEMS.—The New Orleans Delta has Mexican papers to January 19, from which the following items are made up:—

The most appalling accounts reach the Capital daily of Indian outrages, perpetrated in all directions, and the Government, it seems, is utterly incapable of affording protection to the inhabitants.

The road from Vera Cruz to the Capital is so infested with banditti, that scarcely a diligence can pass without being robbed. A short time ago the Puebla diligence was plundered within the precincts of that city, and within a few hundred yards of the palace, by three robbers. There were six passengers in the diligence at the time, all Mexicans, and who were all armed, but they as usual made no resistance, permitting the desperados to carry off three hundred dollars.

The California Gold fever is rife in the City of Mexico. Almost all the foreigners, not engaged in commerce, are leaving for the El Dorado. A party of gold-hunters from N. York, numbering twenty, and headed by Dr. S. C. Grosvenor, left Vera Cruz, on the 25th ultimo, for California, via Mazatlan. They were well armed and equipped, and fully prepared to fight their way, should they be attacked by robbers.

PRESENT FROM THE POPE.—The Assembly of the State of New York was recently notified by Gov. Fish of the receipt of a splendid donation to the State Library, from the late Pope Gregory XVI., in return for a copy of the Natural History of the State. The papal gift was received through M. Vattemare and Bishop Hughes. It includes a large number of the magnificent line-engravings of works of the old masters executed at Rome under the patronage of the Government, several pictures, works in marble, with medals, in gold, silver, and bronze, comprising all those stamped during the Pontificate of the donor. This is the most valuable donation the State has ever received from abroad.

CROSSING BEHRING'S STRAITS.—The New Bedford Mercury publishes an account of the whaling operations of the barque Superior, Capt. Boyce, of Sag Harbor, in the Arctic seas, in which it is stated that when Capt. B. passed through the Straits, "seven canoes, containing forty men each, were seen crossing from the American to the Asiatic coast." The captain found excellent whaling ground in those seas, where the ship could anchor almost any where in 14 to 25 fathoms, and where it was light enough to read in the cabin or catch whales at midnight. Both coasts were inhabited by Indians, the Asiatic by "numerous tribes."

SUMMARY.

Tom Hyer, the prize-fighter, who won ten thousand dollars a few days since by brutally beating James Sullivan, is now at large. The fight took place in Maryland, from which State Hyer escaped to Pennsylvania, where he was arrested, carried back to Maryland, and admitted to bail. Sullivan cannot be found, or he would be arrested for violating the conditions on which he was pardoned by the Governor of New York a few years ago.

A letter from the United States Consul at Valparaiso, dated October 20, 1848, says that many of the citizens have already exchanged the comforts and refinements of a residence here, to seek a home among the gold placers of California; and others have been, and still are, actively engaged in purchasing and forwarding cargoes of merchandize and produce, to supply the demand which the immense influx of population must create.

A telegraphic dispatch, dated Portland, Me., February 14, says that Major Van Ness, for some time the Commandant of Port Preble, died very suddenly that afternoon. While enjoying a walk, he complained of feeling ill when a carriage was called, and he was taken to his lodgings, at the United States Hotel. On reaching the hotel, and opening the door of the carriage, he was found dead.

The last specimen of 'brotherly love' which we have seen in the Philadelphia papers, is to the effect that trouble is brewing among the white bands of music which have been engaged for the firemen's procession on the 27th of March next. Six of the bands have held a meeting, and resolved not to parade unless the colored bands are excluded.

The Cincinnati Atlas, of the 8th instant, says that a telegraphic dispatch was sent from Washington to that city. It was put on the wires at six minutes after 8 o'clock, and reached here at six minutes before eight, coming through, literally, in less than no time—and reaching the city, as an Irishman would say, twelve minutes before it started.

George Copway, the well-known Chippewa chief, proposes to deliver several lectures in this city, on Indian life, customs, character, and traditions. The first will be upon the Romance of Indian Life, illustrating the Poetry, Eloquence, Religious Belief and Worship of the Indian tribes.

The Springfield Republican states that Geo. S. Duell, tax collector of West Brookfield, and deputy sheriff of Worcester county, Mass., has suddenly departed for California, taking about one thousand two hundred dollars belonging to the town, and a large amount collected on executions.

Horace Greeley, Esq., has sent to the Mayor and Common Council of New York City, the books voted him as a member of Congress, suggesting that they be placed in some library accessible to the public.

American machinists have taken the contract for constructing an immense iron bridge across the river at St. Petersburgh, Russia. Mr. A. Eastwich, of Philadelphia, is one of the most prominent men in the affair.

The Select Committee of the Michigan Senate, have made an able Report in favor of calling a State Convention, to reform the Constitution of that State.

William Bennet, who was seriously injured by a collision of trains on the Utica and Schenectady Railroad, in April last, has recovered the sum of ten thousand dollars damages, at the Herkimer County Circuit Court.

Aaron Stone, and others, have recently recovered seven thousand six hundred and seventy-eight dollars in a suit against the City of Boston, for land taken to widen a street in 1839. This includes ten years' interest.

Anti-Slavery resolutions have passed the lower House of the Wisconsin Legislature, by a vote of fifty-seven to one. The resolutions take strong ground against Slavery and the Slave Trade. Southern conventions and cabals do not cause alarm in Free Wisconsin.

The Galveston Civilian, of the 24th ult., says that the cholera still lingers at Houston. Several deaths occurred on Saturday and Sunday—report says eight. Among the victims are Col. John H. Walton, who was once Mayor of Galveston.

The Montreal Transcript says that a horse named Fly, was recently trotted from Cornwall to Montreal, a distance of ninety miles, in six hours and fifteen minutes, excluding stops. This is at the extraordinary rate of fourteen miles an hour.

A Calais, Me., paper, of the 29th ult., speaks of very cold weather and very good sleighing, and says that the business doing by the teams in the woods never promised so fair a prospect of remuneration as it does now to those engaged in the lumbering business.

A bill has been introduced into the Delaware Legislature to prevent the return of free negroes into that State after they have been absent from it thirty days. The law at present in force gives six months.

Hon. John W. Allen, a member of Congress from Cleveland District, Ohio, has presented the seven hundred dollars worth of books, received while a member, to the Cleveland Library Association, with the condition, that the people of the District shall have free access to the books.

Mr. William Cranch Bond, the Director of the Observatory of Harvard University, Cambridge, has been elected Fellow of the British Royal Astronomical Society, of which John Herschell, the distinguished son of a distinguished father, is President. Mr. Bond is the first American thus honored.

Col. John W. Thompson, of Botetourt, died suddenly, on Thursday, Feb. 8, in his place as a member of the Virginia House of Delegates. He was speaking, when he fell back, asked for water, and expired. Col. T. was aged 54, and had been several years a member of the House, and was generally popular.

The New York Commercial says that a letter recently received from Rome states that the New Testament is now freely circulated in Rome, and, indeed, in debates, it is often quoted.

The Mayor of N. Orleans recently received a note, with a valuable enclosure, and the intimation that the money was justly his. No name was given.

The Legislature of Massachusetts has directed the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire into the expediency of providing by law, that homesteads of the value of three hundred dollars, be exempted from execution for debt.

The Presbyterian church in Ridley, Delaware county, Penn., under the pastoral charge of Rev. Mr. Dale, was entirely destroyed by fire on Sunday morning It was insured for $500.

The salt found in the great salt lake in California, is superior to any now in use, for preserving butter, beef, &c. It is the strongest salt ever yet discovered. One barrel of salt was taken from three barrels of water.

The councils of Louisville have resolved to petition the Legislature for amendments in the city charter, so as to permit licensing of ten-pin alleys, billiard-tables, and to restore the old coffee-house law.

In the State of North Carolina, the Legislature has passed a bill for the establishment of an Insane Hospital, to be located within ten three miles of Raleigh.

General Taylor has served forty years in the army of the United States, having received his first commission, as Lieutenant, from President Jefferson.

The late pastor of the German Catholic Church of Pottsville, N. Y., Rev. Joseph Burg, has left by his will four thousand dollars to the poor members of his congregation, with other liberal bequests.

The iron on the Syracuse and Utica Railroad, was recently taken up, and it was found that in nine years it had lost in weight three hundred tons out of two thousand, by wear.

Six vessels, out of eight which have undertaken to navigate the Chagres river, are said to have been lost.

The steamship California, which sailed from New York, October 27, to carry the Mail on the Pacific coast, arrived at Panama, January 18th.

The British Mint does not coin enough to pay the interest of the national debt.

The average British coinage for thirty years is about equal to fifteen million dollars per annum.

The interest on the public debt of England is twenty million dollars.

FARM FOR SALE.

THE subscriber offers for sale his farm, situated in the town of Genesee, county of Allegany, N. Y. Said farm consists of 280 acres of first-rate land, 175 of which is level, and the remainder gradually rising side-hill; all of which is susceptible of cultivation, mostly adapted to grazing purposes. About 75 acres, however, is a gravely quick soil, as productive of wheat and corn, as any in the southern part of said county. Upon said farm is about 100 acres improvement, two framed barns, and a large two-story framed house, well inclosed, lately built, and conveniently calculated. There are two good wells of water upon said farm, and it is also abundantly supplied with numerous brooks and springs. Said farm is situated in a good neighborhood, and convenient to school, and the central place of business for the western part of said town; and on the main traveled road from Angelica to Smithport. For pleasantness and locality it is not surpassed by any in the township or vicinity. To those wishing to purchase a good farm, the present opportunity offers rare inducements. The farm will be sold low for cash; or, if desired, by paying one-half of the purchase money down, the balance will be arranged to accommodate purchasers for any reasonable length of credit. A careful view of the premises by a discerning individual, is only requisite to a thorough conviction that an investment made under such favorable terms as the subscriber offers, is but safe and a fair speculation. For farther information, address the subscriber, P. M. at West Genesee, Allegany Co., N. Y., or inquire at his house. JARED MAXSON.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS, &C.

From the President of the United States.

"To Mr. E. Walker—Dear Sir:—I have found your Statesman's Manual a valuable work, and exceedingly useful and convenient. Yours, J. K. POLK."

From the Hon. Henry Clay.

"My Dear Sir:—Your Statesman's Manual is a very valuable work for reference."

State of New York:
Secretary's Office,
Department of Common Schools, } Albany, Sept. 18, 1846.

I have examined the "Statesman's Manual," in two volumes octavo, compiled by Edwin Williams, and am of opinion that it is a proper work for school district libraries, and deserving of a place in these institutions, designed for the diffusion of useful knowledge.

Signed, J. S. RANDALL,
Dep. State Sup't Com. Schools.

From the Journal of Commerce.

"This is one of the most important books published in the United States for a long time."

From the N. Y. Courier and Enquirer.

"This is the most important contribution to American political history ever published."

From the Democratic Review.

"The whole forms a most complete library in itself, of all that concerns the politics of the country. No individual should be without these two volumes at hand for prompt reference. How many hours of idle discussion and senseless debates might be spared to heated partizans, were these books at hand for appeal. We shall have frequent occasion to refer to them."

From the N. Y. Express of August 21, 1848.

"This is emphatically a national work, and as such eminently deserving of a national support."

From the Commercial Advertiser.

"Such a work is invaluable, and is offered at a comparatively low price, in expectation of a large sale."

From the Luzern Democrat.

"The Statesman's Manual is a very valuable work, comprising a complete condensed political history of our country from the formation of our government until the present time."

From the Washingtonian, Ohio.

"It is but scanty praise to say, that no work of equal value to the American Statesman, Politician, Journalist, Historian, &c., &c., has ever before appeared."

From the Harrisburg (Pa.) Argus, August [illegible]

"No politician, no man who desires to understand the history of the several administrations of the General Government, should be without a copy of it. As a book of reference, it is invaluable."

THE TWO LITTLE GRAVES.

BY CAROLINE E. ROBERTS.

Side by side they're sweetly sleeping,
Little loved ones early blest;
Free from care and pain and sorrow,
Oh, rejoice! They are at rest.

One whose timid little foot-fall
Now we listen for in vain,
And whose voice, like bird-notes ringing,
Never will be heard again!
Her blue eyes, like angels beaming,
Never more will meet our own;
Oh, her absence makes most dreary
Our once cheerful, happy home.

And the other little sleeper,
For a shorter season given,
Like a sunbeam sent to cheer us,
Quickly taken back to heaven;
Vainly will the mother seek her,
Vacant is the cradle-bed—
Lovely infant! in the graveyard,
Low is laid thy little head!

But the graveyard!—oh, the graveyard!
Let us turn our thoughts away;
Looking upward—looking upward
Into realms of cloudless day.
Side by side, in heaven's bright regions,
Two sweet angels sing and soar.
Welcomed by the host of heaven,
There to dwell for evermore.

Side by side, these little loved ones
Hover round you night and day;
List your weeping and your sighing,
And methinks these words they say:
"Did you know how blest and happy
Angels were, you would not mourn
That to join that band in heaven
Your beloved ones had gone.

"Side by side, in garments spotless,
Angels twain—how blest are we;
Kindly Jesus Christ did call us,
'Little children, come to me!'
Soon the Lord will call you heavenward,
Side by side we then will come—
Stand to greet you at the portals
Of our everlasting home!"

HINDOO EXPERTNESS.

The natives of India have for ages been noted for their extraordinary personal activity and ingenuity—qualities which render them the most expert thieves and jugglers in the world. The performances of London and Paris freebooters are nothing, in comparison with the feats of the Dacoits of Hindostan, from whom, in all probability, the Gypsies of Europe drew their origin. The stories related of Dacoits are almost too marvelous to be credited. When sleeping in your tent, the experienced Dacoit will not hesitate to burrow in the earth, in order to obtain an entrance, unseen by the sentinel on guard; or, swimming down the river in the night, his head covered with an earthen vessel, he will glide unperceived beneath the windows of your budgerow, and noiselessly creeping through the window, rob you of everything you possess, while you are indulging in a pleasant nap; and finally, when caught and doomed to death, he will march straight up to a piece of artillery, and pressing his chest against its muzzle, allow himself, without a struggle, or look of regret, to be blown into atoms—a mode of death inflicted on the Dacoits and other marauders.

One would think that a Hindoo must have a constitutional aptitude for theft, his body is so slim, yet so muscular, his motion so snakelike, his agility so astonishing. In fact, after a short practice, he is like a man formed of India-rubber, and seems to proceed without reference to the fragility of any part of his frame. Mr. Fane tells us that, at Delhi, he saw several fellows jumping sheer down into a well ninety feet deep, in pursuit of a rupee thrown in to tempt them. There was a slanting passage on the other side, by which they got out again; but the perpendicular plunge was the thing expected, and this they performed with the utmost readiness, men and boys emulating each other, each struggling to be first to dash in for the prize.

Mr. Tennant presumes that the superiority of the Hindoos in feats of agility and legerdemain, arises from their pursuing these arts as a distinct and constant profession. However this may be, he informs us that their acts exceed all credibility. In balancing, for instance, it being an effort of skill, without the possibility of deception, a man frequently places five of their earthenware water-pots, one over the other, on his head, and a girl climbing to the uppermost, he dances with this extraordinary coiffure round the field.

On another occasion, the same person balances a pole sixteen feet in length, the bottom of which is fixed into a thick sash, or girdle; another man gets upon his back, and from there runs up the pole, his hands aiding with his feet, with the nimbleness of a squirrel. He then proceeds first to extend himself upon the pole on his belly, and then on his back, his arms and legs both times spread out. He next throws himself horizontally from the pole, which is all the time balanced on the girdle, holding only by his arms. This attitude among the tumblers is termed the flag. Thirdly, he stands upon his head upon the top of the pole, holding below the summit with his hands. Finally, he throws himself from this last position backward down the pole, holding by his feet; and this is repeated over and over till he reaches the ground. These, and a thousand other feats, constitute the amusements of the idle, and subsistence of a numerous class of strollers.

The most beautiful of all the feats performed by the Hindoo jugglers, is the well-known tossing of six balls, which are sustained in the air, or made to revolve round the head, by a dexterous and gentle touch of the hand. This is anything but an intellectual exhibition. There is in it no pretension to legerdemain, no deception of the eye. It is a feat of honest skill, and to the thoughtful is philosopically curious. It demonstrates an extraordinary calculation as to the keeping of time, and shows, perhaps, more than anything else, the power of concentrating the mind on a single subject of thought. We feel assured that the mountebank, who can perform the clever manœuvre of making half a dozen balls spin round his person, possesses a capacity, which, well-directed, might lead to the accomplishment of much higher ends.

It is unfortunate, from the state of society in India, that personal expertness should so generally take such a furtive direction. Dacoitism may be said to be carried to the length of a science, for, in its higher professors, it disdains theft on a mean or limited scale of operation. A case is mentioned of a Dacoit, who had stolen a man's garment from under his head, severing with his knife a portion of the article, which was either purposely fastened, or accidentally entangled with the pillow. This, it was said, was a mere bungler, and an apprentice, without experience or talent. The scientific mode is well known: when it is necessary to make a sleeping man turn on his other side, his opposite ear is tickled with a straw till he obeys, and then a dexterous pull secures the booty. It is in this way that many excellent English gentlemen awake in the morning without mattress, blanket, or sheet, either above or below them; having at the same time a favorite terrier asleep under their beds, and a pair of detonating pistols under their pillows.

STATE OF THINGS IN CALIFORNIA.

The Washington Union publishes a letter of J. L. Folsom, U. S. Quartermaster at San Francisco, to Gen. Jessup, dated Dec. 25, 1848, from which we make the following extract:—

Since I last wrote to you, the affairs of this country have been constantly getting worse. We have no government here, either civil or military, and the country is full of lawless men, who are committing the most shocking outrages. Murders and robberies are of daily, and I might almost say of hourly occurrence. Not an arrival occurs from the north, south, or the interior, but notifies the community of new acts of villainy which go unpunished. Within six weeks, more than twenty murders have occurred in a white population of less than 15,000 souls. The people are now acting in self-defense; and four or five days since three men were hung by Lynch Law, sixty miles from this place. It is of the last importance that the distressing condition of California should be impressed upon those at Washington who have the power to apply a remedy. The people are now preparing to organize a provisional government, * * but should Congress give us a territorial organization at the present session, it will supersede the popular local organization now taking place, but which cannot go into effect before the ensuing summer. The United States revenue laws are now in force here, and will yield an income of say $350,000 the ensuing year, and perhaps more, and four-fifths of this amount will be collected at this port. Much dissatisfaction exists at the payment of such a tax on the part of the inhabitants, without either a government or a representation. This feeling is gaining ground from day to day. * * The gold mines continue to be as rich as before, although the rainy season has caused many to suspend their work. There can be no doubt but that at least $4,000,000 of gold, at $16 per ounce troy, has been taken from the mines. The most accurate estimates I am able to make show that $1,500,000 have been sent from the country, and $1,000,000 of it has gone from this port. One vessel took $400,000. Two-thirds of all that has been exported has gone to foreign countries, and, consequently, to foreign mints.

The following paragraph, on the same subject, is from a letter of Thomas Ap. C. Jones, Commander in Chief of the U. S. Naval Forces in the Pacific Ocean, to the Secretary of the Navy. Under date of San Francisco, Dec. 22, he says:—

The worst forebodings of evil consequent upon the want of certain and energetic administration of justice in this Territory, are almost daily realized. Within the last three weeks we have certain accounts of fifteen murders. In one instance, an entire household of ten persons—a respectable ranchero, his wife, two children, and six servants. The man, whose name was Reed, had been very successful in the diggings during the summer, and had returned to his home, near Santa Barbara, with a large amount of gold. His house was surprised by an armed party, and the whole family, as above stated, were barbarously murdered, and the house rifled of its golden treasure. The perpetrators of this horrid deed are still at large; of the other five cases, four are highway robberies, committed on persons returning with gold from the mines. In a word, I may say with truth, that both persons and property are insecure in Upper California at this time; and I am sorry to add, that in all cases of outrage and violence, as yet discovered, emigrants from the United States, disbanded volunteers, runaway sailors, and deserters from the army and navy, are believed to be the perpetrators.

Valuable Invention.—Mr. David W. Sheeley, of Carlisle, Schoharie county, New York, has recently received a patent for one of the most valuable improvements of the age. It is for connecting the fore axle of the bolster or body of a wagon, in a firm and substantial manner, and dispensing with the use of the old-fashioned hounds, block-tongue, sand-board, sway-bars, avoiding the necessity of baring the bolster and axle for the king-bolt; making at least five dollars less expense for ironing the vehicle to which it is applied, and the saving of the same amount in the wood-work.

The coupling is effected by the use of two cast-iron circular plates, bolted, one to the bolster and perch, and the other to the axle, which are connected together by a peculiar-shaped cast-iron bolt, in such a manner, that the fore-axle cannot be separated from the body of the carriage without first removing one of the fore-wheels, and turning the axle in a position at right angles with one arm of the axle directly under the perch.

Ruins of Ancient Nineveh.—That wicked city, which Jonah preached to so unwillingly, is now being explored by an English antiquarian named Layard. The city, once 'three days' journey' in extent, was located on the east bank of the Tigris, twenty miles below Mosul; and Mr. Layard finds that the buildings were provided with a complete system of sewerage, each room having had a drain connected with the main sewer. The buildings are found to have been made of sun-dried bricks, the rooms lined with slabs of marble, covered with bas-reliefs. The earliest buildings, constructed perhaps twelve hundred years before Christ, were buried, and the earth which had accumulated on them, was used as a cemetery seven hundred years before Christ.

WOMEN UNDER PAGANISM.

In many pagan countries, the birth of a daughter is regarded as a calamity, and an occasion of sorrow. In some tribes, female infants are immediately exposed to certain death, that their parents may not have the trouble of rearing them. When the daughter is allowed to live, she is regarded as an inferior being; is frowned upon by her parents and relations; sold to the highest bidder in marriage; and then becomes the slave of her husband. As respects matrimony, she can hardly be said to have any choice; she is given or sold to those who are willing to take her. Such is the disgrace of celibacy in Hindostan, that many women have been known to marry decrepid and dying old men, and then drown themselves in the Ganges. Many women are buried alive with their deceased husbands, or consumed on their funeral piles. In China, females have been seen yoked with an ox or an ass, while the husband held the plough and sowed the seed. In Hindostan, it is said, that until recently, not one female in twenty millions was acquainted with the simplest elements of Hindoo learning. The American Missionaries affirm, that in Ceylon, when they first visited that island, not a single woman in a population of two hundred thousand could read; and that it was considered pernicious, if not impossible, to educate a woman; and heavy calamities were expected to befall the female who dared to aspire to the distinction of being able to read or write. Among the Indian tribes of our own country, the women do the drudgery, and the men spend their time in war, hunting, and idleness. In many pagan countries, the life of the woman is at the mercy of her husband, who, if she offend him, may kill her with perfect impunity, or, at most, with the expense of a trifling fine.

As the natural consequence of such degrading oppression and wrong, the women of Pagan and Mohammedan nations, are generally low, sensual, vicious, and unworthy of confidence.

LOST SILVER MINES.

About one hundred miles southeast of Santa Fe, are some extensive salt lakes, or salinas, from which all the salt used in New Mexico is procured. Not far from these salinas are the ruins of an old city, which, as it is reported, was once large and wealthy, with rich mines, the produce of which was sent annually to Spain.

At one season, when they were making extraordinary preparations for transporting the precious metals, the Indians attacked them; whereupon the miners buried their treasures, worth fifty million dollars, and left the city altogether; but they were all killed except two, who went to Mexico, giving the particulars of the affair, aad soliciting aid. But the distance being great, and the Indians numerous, nobody would advance, and the thing was dropped. One of the two went to New Orleans, then under the dominion of Spain, raised five hundred men, and started by way of the Sabine, but they were never heard of after. So far the report. Within the last few years, several Americans and Frenchmen have visited the locality, and although they have not discovered the treasure, they certify to the existence of an acqueduct, about ten miles in length, to the still standing walls of several churches, the sculptures of the Spanish Coat of Arms, and to many spacious pits, supposed to be silver mines. It was, no doubt, a Spanish mining town, and it is not improbable, that it was destroyed in a successful insurrection of the Indians in 1680.

Remarkable Cows.—The most remarkable cow of which we have account, for the production of butter, is the "Cramp cow," so called, owned by a man of the name of Cramp, in Lewes, England; she was of the Sussex breed, and was calved in 1799. For five years, from 1805 to 1810, she produced of butter from 450 to 675 pounds per year; the latter quantity was afforded in fifty-one weeks and four days, from April 6th, 1807, to April 4th, 1808. The greatest quantity of butter she afforded in one week, was eighteen pounds; and the greatest quantity of milk she afforded in any one day, was twenty quarts.

Another remarkable cow in this respect was the "Oaks cow," of Massachusetts; nothing was known of her blood—she was bought out of a drove when she was young. Caleb Oaks, of Danvers, owned her while the greatest quantity of butter was made from her. In 1813, she made 180 lbs., in 1814, 300, in 1815, 400, and in 1816, 484 1-4 lbs. The greatest quantity of butter made in any one week, was 19 1-4 pounds, and the greatest quantity of milk she gave in any one day, was 18 quarts. Mr. Josiah Quincy, Sen., bought her after this trial by Mr. Oaks, but she never afforded so large a yield of butter after she passed into Mr. Q.'s hands, though she gave 16 pounds per week, and her milk was of such extraordinary richness, that five quarts of it frequently afforded a pound of butter. [Boston Transcript.

George Washington.—George Washington, when quite young, was about to go to sea as a midshipman: everything was arranged, the vessel lay opposite his father's house, the little boat had come on shore to take him off, and his whole heart was bent on going. After his baggage had been carried down to the shore, he went to bid his mother farewell, and saw the tears bursting from her eyes. However, he said nothing to her, but he saw that his mother would be distressed if he went, and perhaps she might never be happy again. He turned to the servant and said, 'Go and tell them to bring my trunk back.' His mother, struck with his decision, said to him, 'George, God has promised to bless the children who honor their parents, and I believe He will bless you, my son.'

Anthracite Coal Trade.—The Pottsville (Pa.) Emporium, gives a table showing the increase of the Coal Trade since 1828—in which year 365 tons were brought to market from Mauch Chunk, valued at $1,500. The return for the last two years gives a total of 2,975,593 tons in 1847; and 3,083,473 for the year just passed, 1848—worth about $15,000,000 at market; and this without including the large quantity of Bituminous which reached the Susquehanna region east of the Alleghany Mountains, and the prodigous masses seeking a market at Pittsburg, &c.,—amounting in value to about $10,000,000 more.

VARIETY.

According to statistics furnished recently by an eminent English author, we find that a single gambling-house in the city of London, cost, not long since, with its furniture, one hundred thousand dollars; and that the receipts of the proprietor, in one year, amounted to about a similar sum. The money lost annually, in all the gambling houses of that city, exceeds thirty-five million dollars. In one house alone, it is said, five million dollars changed hands in one night.

The London Morning Chronicle mentions a unique locomotive carriage, which has recently been placed on the Bristol and Exeter Railroad. It is thought that it will very generally supersede the usual heavy locomotive. The carriage, with fifty passengers, including the motive power, fuel, and water, weighed only 14 tons, and consumed about eight pounds of coke an hour; and yet ran at the rate of 25 miles an hour.

The true wealth of a community is labor—its productive labor. A man is not richer for the houses which he cannot occupy; lands which he cannot use; money, that he cannot spend. He might own a continent in the moon, but what would that avail him? He might die of starvation in the vaults of the Bank of England, or in the undisturbed possession of the richest mines of Peru. Labor is the great source and instrument of wealth. [Henry Coleman.

The Pittsburg and Boston Mining Company have published a statement of their mining operations in the Copper District. It seems that with a total expenditure of $289,456 87, they have sold copper ore to the value of $209,623 87, and have on hand refined and rough mineral estimated to be worth $106,944 46, making a total of $316,568 45.

Mr. John Soule, of Errol, Coos county, N. H., was killed a few days ago by two catamounts, while visiting his traps near Umbagog Lake. His body was found torn to pieces. He had not discharged his rifle at them, but retreated backward several rods, when he fell over a log, and the animals immediately dispatched him.

It is seriously proposed to lay down electro-telegraph wires between Folkstone and Port Grimes, on the coast of France, a distance of twenty miles. The depth of water is about seventeen fathoms, and the bottom smooth. Mr. Foster, the contractor, is to make the trial for £5,000. The wires are coated with gutta percha.

A steam plough has been tried on a farm in Stratford, England, by stationary engines at the extremities of the field, and the experiment is said to have proved satisfactory. The engine is ten feet by six in bulk, portable with a pair of horses, and may be used for ploughing and threshing, or other purpose where power of the kind is required.

A noble triumph of philanthropy has been recently exemplified by a city missionary of London, who succeeded in assembling upward of two hundred thieves, from time to time, who have given him their confidence, and through him have conveyed to Government a desire for honest occupation.

The Minister of the Interior has recently issued a statistical report on the number of horses used in the Russian Cavalry. From this document it appears that there are now more than fifteen million horses in Russia. The provinces where they are in greatest proportion, are those of Oremburg and Wonoresch, which contain, the first, four hundred and seven thousand, and the second, two hundred and thirty-one thousand.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

W. C. KENYON, A. M., } Principals.
IRA SAYLES, A. M., }

Assisted by nine able and experienced Teachers, five in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

The Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past ten years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to also continue to merit a share of public patronage

Extensive buildings are now erected for the accommodation of students, and for Recitation and Lecture Rooms, &c. They occupy an eligible position, and are finished in the best style of modern architecture; and the different apartments are heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical

Ladies and Gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board and rooms can also be had in private families, if particularly desired.

Each room for those who board in the Hall is furnished with a bed and bedding, a table, two chairs, and a pail.

The plan of instruction adopted in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the student, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The Health, the Manners, and the Morals of our Students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

REGULAR ACADEMIC EXERCISES.

The regular exercises, at which all the students will be required to attend, unless specially excused, are, Chapel exercises each morning during the term; Recitations, from two to four, five days each week, from Monday morning till Friday evening. Compositions and Declamations, one-half day, once in two weeks, Literary, Scientific, and Moral Lectures by the Principals. Public Worship, once in each week, either on Saturday or Sunday, according as the students may be in the habit of keeping the Sabbath, either on the seventh or first day of the week.

ADMISSION.

Candidates for admission as students, must present testimonials of good moral character, or be known to possess such a character, and must be willing to comply unreservedly with the foregoing regulations; and no one will be permitted to receive instructions in any class, until all academic bills, for the term in prospect, be paid or satisfactorily arranged.

ACADEMIC TERMS.

The Academic Year for 1848–9 consists of three terms as follows:

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 15, 1848, and ending Thursday, November 23, 1848.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, December 5, 1848, and ending Thursday, March 15, 1849.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, April 3, 1849, and ending July 12, 1849.

As the plan of instruction in this Institution, laid out for each class, will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue through the term, and accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the terms.

N. B. Students who are expecting to teach during the winter or summer, will specify such intention on entering in the beginning of the fall or spring term; and, for the special accommodation of such, a day will be set apart at first, on which they can leave, if they wish; and they will not be permitted to leave on any other day, nor will any other than teachers be permitted to leave on the day specified.

Farther, it is of the utmost importance that the student be present at the day of the opening of the term, as on that and the succeeding day, the students entering are examined and classified.

EXPENSES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Board, per term, | from $14 50 to | $18 00 |
| Room-rent, | | 1 50 |
| Washing, | | 2 50 |
| Fuel, | spring and fall, 75 cents, winter, | 1 50 |
| Tuition, | from $3 50 to | 5 00 |
| Lights, | | 1 50 |
| Incidental Expenses, | | 25 |
| Extras—Music on the Piano Forte, | | 10 00 |
| Oil Painting, | | 7 00 |
| Drawing, | | 2 00 |

The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, except the extras above mentioned, need not exceed eighty-five dollars.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment, or satisfactory arrangement.

Every student wishing to have washing done in the Hall, should have each article marked, so as to avoid exchange and losses.

THE GOSPEL EARLY PREACHED IN THE EAST.

In my last communication on the early introduction of Christianity in the East, I confined myself principally to such testimony as related to China; but in Hindostan, and other parts of India, I find testimony, not only circumstantial, but next to positive, that the Apostles themselves planted churches in that extensive field, which remain in existence to this day—a good testimony of their fidelity to their mission, and of the truth and value of the Christian religion in heathen countries.

Dr. Buchanan, while pursuing his Researches in India, visited the ancient Syrian churches, and has left a very interesting account of his interview with those churches and their bishops, from which I have made the following extracts, not doubting that they will be acceptable to most of your readers, though somewhat lengthy. The Syrian Christians inhabit the interior of Travancove and Malabar, in the South of India, and have been settled there from the early ages of Christianity. The first notices of this ancient people, in recent times, are to be found in the Portuguese histories.

"When the Portuguese arrived in this country, in the year 1503, they were agreeably surprised to find upwards of a hundred Christian churches; but when they became acquainted with the purity and simplicity of their worship, they were offended. 'These churches,' said the Portuguese, 'belong to the Pope.' 'Who is the Pope?' said the natives; 'we never heard of him.' The European priests were yet more alarmed, when they found that the Hindoo Christians maintained the order and discipline of a regular church under Episcopal jurisdiction; and that for 1300 years past they had enjoyed a succession of bishops, appointed by the Patriarch of Antioch. We, said they, are of the true faith, whatever you from the West may be; for we came from the place where the followers of Christ were first called Christians.

"The first view of the Christian churches in this sequestered region of Hindostan, connected with the idea of their tranquil duration for so many ages, cannot fail to excite pleasing emotions in the mind of the beholder. The form of the oldest buildings is not unlike that of some of the oldest parish churches in England; the style of building of both being of Saracenic origin.

"The doctrines of the Syrian Christians are few in number, but pure, and agree in essential points with those of the Church of England; so that, although the body of the church appears to be ignorant and formal, there are individuals who are alive to righteousness, who are distinguished from the rest by their purity of life, though sometimes censured for too rigid a piety."

Dr. Buchanan visited many of their churches, and was well received. His second visit is thus described:—

"When we were approaching the church of Chinganoor, we were met by one of the Syrian clergy. He was dressed in a white loose vestment, with a cap of red silk hanging down behind. Being informed who he was, I said to him, in the Syrian language, Peace be unto you. He was surprised at this salutation, and immediately answered, The God of peace be with you. He accosted the Rajah's servants in the language of one wishing to know who I was, and immediately returned to the village to announce our approach. When we arrived, I was received at the door of the Church. I was received by three presbyters or priests, who were habited in like manner, in white vestments. After some ceremony, and conversation with my attendants, they received me with confidence and affection; and the people of the neighboring villages came round, women as well as men. The sight of WOMEN assured me that I was once more (after a long absence from England) in a Christian country. For the Hindoo and the Mohammedan women, and in short all women who are not Christians, are accounted by the men an inferior race; and in general are confined to the house for life, like irrational creatures."

Of their next meeting he says, "I was much pleased, for I had now ascertained that there were upwards of 200,000 Christians in the South of India, beside the Syrians, who speak the Malabar language." After an absence of some weeks he thus writes:—

"I have penetrated once more inland to visit the Syrian churches. At the town of Conotta, I was surprised to meet witn Jews and Christians in the same street. The Jews led me first to their synagogue, and allowed me to take away some manuscripts for money. The Syrian Christians then conducted me to their ancient church. I afterwards sat down on an eminence above the town, to contemplate this interesting spectacle; a Jewish synagogue and a Christian church, standing over against each other; exhibiting, as it were, during many revolving ages, the Law and Gospel to the view of the heathen people."

Speaking of the manuscripts offered to his notice, he says:—

"There is a volume which was deposited in one of the remote churches, near the mountains, which merits a particular description. It contains the Old and New Testaments, engrossed on strong vellum, in large folio, having three columns in a page, and is written with beautiful accuracy—the character Estrangilo Syriac, and the words in every book are numbered. But the volume has suffered from time or neglect. In certain places, the ink has been totally obliterated from the page, and left the parchment in its state of natural whiteness; but the letters can, in general, be distinctly traced from the impress of the pen, or from the partial corrosion of the ink. I scarcely expected that the Syrian church would have parted with this manuscript. But the Bishop was pleased to present it to me, saying, It will be safer in your hands than our own, (alluding to the revolutions in Hindostan.) And yet, said he, we have kept it, as some think, for near a thousand years. I wish, said I, that England may be able to keep it a thousand years more. The view of these copies of the Scriptures, and the churches which contain them, still continues to excite a pleasing astonishment in my mind. How wonderful it is, that, during the dark ages of Europe, whilst ignorance and superstition in a manner denied the Scriptures to the rest of the world, the Bible should have found an asylum in the mountains of Malay-ala, where it was freely read by upwards of one hundred churches."

Another evidence of the introduction of Christianity in the early ages in the East, is furnished by the Armenian Christians:—

"They are to be found in every principal city in Asia. Their general character is that of a wealthy, industrious, and enterprising people. They are settled in all the principal places of India, where they arrived many centuries before the English. Wherever they colonize, they build churches, and observe the solemnities of the Christian religion in a decorous manner. They have preserved the Bible in its purity; and their doctrines are, so far as the author knows, the doctrines of the Bible. Besides, they maintain the solemn observance of Christian worship throughout the Empire on the seventh day.

"The Bible was translated into the Armenian language under very auspicious circumstances, the history of which has come down to us. This Bible has ever remained in the possession of the Armenian people; and many illustrious instances of genuine and enlightened piety occur in their history."

Agreeable to my promise, I send you a copy of another of those remarkable Chinese prayers, which I think bears the impress of something beyond what is to be found in heathen worship or pagan temples.

One of the most remarkable of these prayers is for rain, issued by Taukwang, Emperor of China, in 1832, on occasion of a severe drought at the Capital. Before issuing this paper, he had endeavored to modify the anger of Heaven by ordering all suspected and accused persons in the prisons of the metropolis to be tried, and their guilt or innocence established, in order that the course of justice might not be delayed, and witnesses be released from confinement. But these vicarious corrections did not avail; and the drought continuing, he was obliged, as high-priest of the Empire, to show the people that he was mindful of their sufferings, and would relieve them, if possible, by presenting the following memorial:—

"Oh, alas! imperial Heaven, were not the world afflicted by extraordinary changes, I would not dare to present extraordinary services. But this year the drought is most unusual. Summer is past, and no rain has fallen. Not only do agriculture and human beings feel the dire calamity, but also beasts and insects, herbs and trees, almost cease to live. I, the minister of Heaven, am placed over mankind, and am responsible for keeping the world in order, and tranquilizing the people. Although it is impossible for me to sleep or eat with composure; although I am scorched with grief, and tremble with anxiety; still, after all, no genial showers have been obtained.

"Some days ago I fasted, and offered rich sacrifices on the altars of the gods of the land and the grain; and had to be thankful for gathering clouds and slight showers, but not enough to cause gladness. Looking up, I consider that Heaven's heart is benevolence and love. The sole cause is the daily deeper atrocity of my sins; but little sincerity and little devotion. Hence I have been unable to move Heaven's heart, and bring down abundant blessings.

"Having searched the records, I find, that, in the 24th year of Kienlung, my imperial grandfather, the high, honorable, and pure Emperor, reverently performed a great snow service. I feel impelled, by ten thousand considerations, to look up and imitate the usage, and with trembling anxiety rashly assail Heaven, examine myself, and consider my errors, looking up and hoping that I may obtain pardon. I ask myself, whether of sacrificial services I have been disrespectful? Whether or not pride and prodigality have had a place in my heart, springing up there unobserved? Whether, from the length of time, I have become remiss in attending to the affairs of government, and have been unable to attend to them with that serious diligence and strenuous effort which I ought? Whether I have uttered irreverent words, and have deserved reprehension? Whether perfect equity has been attained in conferring rewards or inflicting punishments? Whether, in raising mausolea, and laying out gardens, I have distressed the people and wasted property? Whether, in the appointment of officers, I have failed to obtain proper persons, and thereby the acts of government have been petty and vexatious to the people? Whether punishments have been unjustly inflicted or not?—have found no means of appeal? Whether, in persecuting heterodox sects, the innocent have not been involved? Whether or not the magistrates have insulted the people, and refused to listen to their affairs? Whether, in the successive military operations on the western frontiers, there may not have been the horrors of human slaughter, for the sake of imperial rewards? Whether the largesses bestowed on the afflicted southern provinces were properly applied, or the people were left to die in the ditches? Whether the efforts to exterminate or pacify the rebellious mountaineers of Hanan and Kwangtaung, were properly conducted; or whether they led to the inhabitants being trampled on as mire and ashes? To all these topics, to which my anxieties have been directed, I ought to lay the plumb-line, and strenuously endeavor to correct what is wrong, still recollecting that there may be faults which have not occurred to me during my meditations.

"Prostrate, I beg imperial Heaven to pardon my ignorance and stupidity, and to grant me self-renovation; for myriads of innocent people are involved by a single man. My sins are so numerous, that it is difficult to escape from them. Summer is past, and autumn is arrived; to wait longer will really be impossible. I pray, imperial Heaven, to hasten and confer gracious deliverance,—a speedy and divinely beneficial rain; to save the people's lives; and in some degree redeem my iniquities. Oh, alas! imperial Heaven, observe these things. Oh, alas! imperial Heaven, be gracious to them. I am inexpressibly grieved, alarmed, and frightened.

"Reverently this memorial is presented."

THE STREAM OF DEATH.

BY E. W. CANNING.

THERE is a stream, whose narrow tide
The krown and unknown worlds divide—
Where all must go;
Its waveless waters, dark and deep,
'Mid sullen silence downward sweep,
With moanless flow.

I saw, where at that dreary flood,
A smiling infant, prattling stood,
Whose hour had come:
Untaught of ill, it neared the tide,
Sunk, as to cradled rest, and died
Like going home.

Followed, with languid eye, anon,
A youth, diseased, and pale, and wan;
And there alone
He gazed upon the leaden stream,
And feared to plunge—I heard a scream,
And he was gone.

And then a form, in manhood's strength,
Came bustling on, till there, at length,
He saw life's bound.
He shrunk, and raised the bitter prayer—
Too late!—his shriek of wild despair,
The waters drowned.

Next stood upon that surgeless shore
A being bowed with many a score
Of toilsome years.
Earth-bound and sad he left the bank,
Back turned his dimming eye, and sank—
Ah, full of fears!

How bitter must thy waters be,
O Death! How hard a thing, ah me!
It is to die!—
I mused—when to that stream again
Another child of mortal men
With smiles drew nigh.

"'T is the last pang," he calmly said;
"To me, O Death, thou hast no dread;
Saviour, I come!
Spread but thine arms on yonder shore—
I see!—ye waters, bear me o'er!
There is my home!"

THE DEATH SCENE OF RICHTER.

The following description of the dying scene of Jean Paul Frederick Richter, a German poet, from a notice given of his life, is related by his nephew, Otto Spazier, and published in Blackwood's Magazine:—

"Such a call from the immortal old man, as it entered my solitary apartment," says his relative, "filled me with delight. The reverend image of his beautiful old age, the just reward of a holy life, rose before me, and with joyful haste I traveled through the wet days of October, and entered his study on the 24th of that month. The same joyful tremor affected me as formerly, when, at the twilight hour, I had listened here, with his family, to the voice of wisdom. The windows of his room looked towards the rising sun, and far over the garden, and over scattered trees and houses, towards the Fitchtelgebirge, that bounded the horizon. A mingled perfume of flowers and grapes led the fancy to southern climes, to beautiful blue June days, or to the vintage on the Rhine. A sofa, on which he usually read, in a reclining posture, was opposite the window, and before it his writing-table, upon which appeared a profusion of books, pens, paper, of all colors, glasses and flowers. At the other window was a small piano, and near that a smaller table. Depending from the cage of his birds was a small ladder, that led to his own work table, where the birds were permitted to roam among the confusion, sprinkling with water from the flower-glasses the sheet upon which the poet was writing. Often was Paul seen to stop in his most excited passages, to let his little canary, with her young, travel, undisturbed, over the page, where the water she scattered from her feathers, mingled with the ink from his pen. In the corner of the room was a door, by which, unobserved, Richter could descend the steps into the garden, and on a cushion near it rested his white, silky-haired poodle. A hunting bag, and a rosewood staff, hung near. All three had often been the companions of his wanderings, when, on beautiful days, he was wont to pass through the chesnut avenue, to the little Rolwenzel cottage.

All in the room retained its usual position, but the ruling hand appeared to have been absent. The light was shaded, and the windows hung with green curtains; the robust form that in former years, even before the snow-drop had loosened the icy crust of winter, had worked long hours, with uncovered breast, in the open air, lay supported with cushions, and shrouded in furs, upon the sofa; his body contracted, and his eyes forever closed. 'Heaven,' said he, 'chastens me with a double rod, and one is a very stout cudgel (meaning his blindness): but I shall soon be well again. Ah, we have so much to say and to do. But we shall have a thousand hours—at least minutes.' His voice was weaker, his words slower, and it wounded me to the heart to hear him speak of himself. It was late, and soon his wife, ever watchful, called me away, to return to him in the morning."

Early in the morning he began a complete revision of his works. The nephew read aloud, and Paul inserted the alterations. When Spazier thought one necessary, he indicated it by stopping, to draw his attention. With great patience and mildness, Paul listened to every objection, and himself related, explained, praised, and blamed. He thus reconsidered and overlived his whole spiritual life in his works. In the comparisons scattered throughout his sixty-four volumes, with which, indeed, every page abounds, he found that only two or three were repeated.

On the 14th of November, the same year, the curtain was drawn. How calmly, how beautifully!

Noon had by this time arrived. Richter, supposing it was night, said it was time to go to rest, and wished to retire. He was wheeled into his sleeping aparment, and all was arranged as if for repose; a small table near his bed, with a glass of water, and his watches; a common one, and a repeater. His wife now brought him a wreath of flowers that a lady had sent to him, for every one wished to add some charm to his last days. As he touched them carefully, for he could neither see nor smell them, he appeared to rejoice in the images of flowers in his mind, for he said repeatedly to Caroline, 'My beautiful flowers, my lovely flowers.'

Although his friends sat around the bed, as he imagined it was night, they conversed no longer; he arranged his arms as if for repose, which was to prove the repose of death, and soon sank into a tranquil slumber.

Deep silence pervaded the apartment. Caroline sat at the head of the bed, with her eyes immovably fixed upon the face of her beloved husband. Otto had retired, and the nephew sat with Plato's Pheadon in his hand, open at the death of Socrates. At that moment a tall and beautiful form entered the chamber; and, at the foot of the bed, with hands raised to heaven, and, deeply moved, he repeated aloud the prayer of his Mosaic faith. It was Emanuel, and, next to Otto, the most beloved of Richter's friends.

About six o'clock the physician entered. Richter still appeared to sleep; his features became every moment holier, his brow more heavenly, but it was cold as marble to the touch; and as the tears of his wife fell upon it, it remained immovable. At length his respiration became less regular, but his features always calmer, more heavenly. A slight convulsion passed over his face; the physician cried out, 'That is death!' and all was quiet. The spirit had departed. All sank upon their knees in prayer.

"NOW I LAY ME DOWN TO SLEEP."

There are probably no four lines in the English language, that are repeated so many times daily, as the following:—

"Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep;
If I should die before I wake,
I pray the Lord my soul to take."

And it is not only children and youth that repeat them. Many whose heads are "silvered over with age," have been accustomed to repeat them as their last prayer before closing their eyes in sleep, every night since they were taught them in infancy. The late ex-President of the United States, John Quincy Adams, was among that number. A bishop of the Methodist Church, in addressing a Sabbath School, told the children that he had been accustomed to say that little prayer every night since his mother taught it to him when he was a little boy.

In conversing recently with a ship-master, over seventy years of age, who has been for many years a deacon in the Church, he said that when he followed the seas, and even before he indulged a hope that he was a Christian, he never lay down in his berth at night without saying with great seriousness, and he thought with sincerity,

"Now I lay me down to sleep."

TOUCHING STORY.

Hon. A. H. Stephens, of Georgia, in a recent address at a meeting in Alexandria, for the benefit of the Orphan Asylum and Free School of that city, related the following interesting anecdote:—

"A poor little orphan boy, on a cold night in January, with no home or roof to shelter his head, no paternal or maternal guardian to protect and guide him on his way, reached at nightfall the house of a rich planter, who took him in, fed, lodged, and sent him on his way, with his blessing. These kind attentions cheered his heart, and inspired him with fresh energy, to battle with the obstacles of life. Years passed; Providence was his guide; he had entered the legal profession; his kind benefactor had died; the cormorants that prey upon the substance of man, had formed a conspiracy to despoil the widow of her estates. She committed her cause to the nearest counsel, who proved to be the orphan boy, years before welcomed and entertained by her and her deceased husband. The stimulus of a warm and tenacious gratitude was now added to the ordinary incentives of the profession. He undertook her cause with a zeal not easy to be resisted; he succeeded; the estates of the widow were secured to her in perpetuity; and, Mr. Stephen's added, with an emphasis of emotion that sent an electric thrill to the hearts of the audience, 'that orphan boy stands before you!'"

RICHARD BAXTER'S ZEAL.

My soul, says Mr. Baxter, is much more affected with thoughts for the miserable world, and more drawn out in desire of their conversion, than heretofore. I was wont to look a little further in my prayers, as not considering the state of the rest of the world; only I prayed for the Jews—that was almost all. But now, as I better understand the case of the world, and the method of the Lord's prayer, so there is nothing that lies so heavy upon my heart as the thought of the miserable nations of the earth. It being the most astonishing part of God's providence to me, that he so far forsakes almost all the world, and confines his special favor to so few, that so small a portion of the world has the profession of Christianity in comparison of heathens, Mohammedans, and infidels! and, that among professed Christians, there are so few that are saved from gross delusions, and have any competent knowledge; and, that among these there are so few that are seriously religious, and truly set their hearts on heaven—I cannot be affected so much with the calamities of my own relations, or the land of my nativity, as with the case of the heathen, Mohammedan, and ignorant nations of the earth. No part of my prayers is so deeply serious as for the conversion of the infidel and ungodly world—that God's name may be sanctified, and his kingdom come, and his will be done in earth as it is done in heaven. Nor was I ever before so sensible what a plague a division of languages was, which hinders our speaking to them, for their conversion; nor what a great sin tyranny is, which excludes the gospel from most of the nations. Could we but go among the Tartars, Turks, and other heathens, and speak their language, I should be but little troubled for the silencing of eighteen hundred ministers at once in England, nor for all the rest that were cast out here, and in Scotland, and Ireland, there being no employment in the world so desirable, in my eyes, as to labor for the winning of such miserable souls; which makes me greatly honor Mr. John Elliott, the Apostle of the Indians in New England, and all who have so labored.

THE TRIAL OF BAXTER.

When the trial came on, a crowd of those who loved and honored Baxter, filled the court. Two Whig barristers of great note, Pollexfen and Wallop, appeared for the defendant. Pollexfen had scarce begun his address to the Jury, when the Chief Justice broke forth: "Pollexfen, I know you well. I will set a mark upon you. You are the patron of the faction. This is an old rogue, a schismatical knave, a hypocritical villain. He hates the Liturgy. He would have nothing but long-winded cant without book;" and then his lordship turned up his eyes, clasping his hands, and began to sing through his nose, in imitation of what he supposed to be Baxter's style of praying—"Lord, we are thy people, thy peculiar people, thy dear people." Pollexfen gently reminded the Court that his late Majesty had thought Baxter deserving of a bishopric. "And what ailed the old blockhead then," cried Jeffries, "that he did not take it?" His fury now rose to madness. He called Baxter a dog, and swore that it would be no more than justice to whip such a villain through the whole city. * * * Baxter himself attempted to put in a word, but the Chief Justice drowned all expostulation in a torrent of ribaldry and invective, mingled with scraps of Hudibras. "My lord," said the old man, "I have been much blamed by Dissenters for speaking respectfully of bishops." "Baxter for bishops!" cried the Judge, "that's a merry conceit, indeed. I know what you mean by bishops—rascals like yourself, Kidderminster bishops, factious, sniveling Presbyterians." Again Baxter essayed to speak, and again Jeffries bellowed, "Richard, Richard, dost thou think we will let thee poison the Court? Richard, thou art an old knave. Thou hast written books enough to load a cart, and every book as full of sedition as an egg is full of meat. By the grace of God, I'll look after thee. I see a great many of your brotherhood waiting to know what will befall their mighty don. But, by the grace of God Almighty, I will crush you all." * * * The noise of weeping was heard from some of those who surrounded Baxter. "Sniveling calves!" said the Judge. ### A PREMATURE MINISTRY.

Facts are full of instruction on this subject. Not a few young men of bright promise, who might have become champions of the truth, have become so impatient to enter into the ministry, that they have fatally blighted their own prospects; and instead of attaining to distinguished success, have scarcely reached the point of mediocrity. The minister now, whose maxim is to expect little things, and attempt little things, mistakes the day in which he lives. What was knowledge, in the thirteenth century, is ignorance now. What was energy then, is imbecility and stupidity now. As was said in another case, it becomes not our sacred profession, in this period of intellectual progress, to remain like the ship that is moored to its station, only to remark the rapidity of the current that is sweeping by. Let the intelligence of the age outstrip us, and leave us behind, and religion would sink, with its teachers, into insignificance. Ignorance cannot wield this intelligence. Give to the Church a feeble ministry, and the world breaks from your hold, and your main-spring of moral influence is gone.

COLLEGE IN CALCUTTA.—A college for the education of Christian youth, is about to be established in Calcutta, under the auspices of the Congregationalist churches in England. The missionaries of the London Missionary Society have nearly eight hundred pupils. The principal object is the education of a native ministry.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, March 1, 1849.

GENERAL TAYLOR AND "THE SABBATH."

Several of the religious papers are out upon General Taylor for what they call a "gross violation of the Sabbath." It seems that on his way to Washington, he reached Louisville on Sunday morning, Feb. 11, accompanied by two boats crowded with people. He went first to New Albany, where he stopped a few hours, then crossed over, and was received by the Mayor, who heartily welcomed him to the hospitalities of the city. The streets were one mass of human beings throughout the whole length and breadth, and the greatest enthusiasm prevailed. The windows and roofs were also crammed with spectators, who cheered, waved handkerchiefs, flags, &c. "For this gross violation of the Sabbath," says one of the papers, "the President elect must be held mainly responsible. With a steamboat chartered for his accommodation, and subject to his control, there was no necessity for his reaching Louisville on the Lord's day, much less for his landing there. But this arrival was a part of the programme of his journey; arrangements were made for it beforehand, and the Sabbath was openly and deliberately violated by him who is soon to sit in the chair of the nation. Will he suffer himself to be inaugurated on the Sabbath the fourth day of March next? Let it be remembered, to the honor of President Polk, that he has never been guilty of a public breach of the Fourth Commandment."

If this were the first instance of the "violation of the Sabbath" by the President elect, we should not be surprised at the indignation which it excites. But when we consider that this act is in perfect keeping with his former acts, we confess that such violent expressions of indignation do somewhat surprise us. The fact is notorious, that Sunday has always been a lucky day with General Taylor. Several of his most successful battles—the battles which have given him popularity, and raised him to the Presidential Chair—were fought on Sunday. It need not surprise any body, therefore, that when, on the strength of the popularity these battles have secured, the people call him to take the helm of Government, he should start from home on a Sunday, and so arrange matters as to be publicly received at Louisville on a Sunday. Nor need they be astonished if he should even go so far as to take the oath of office on a Sunday; for, with the experience he has had, it would not be surprising if he should regard such a circumstance as indicative of the same success in his civil career which has attended him in his military career.

The facts in this case suggest at least one interesting inquiry. For a few years past, this country has been flooded with publications designed to show how much better it is to rest than to work on Sunday—that those who desecrate the Sunday are peculiarly exposed to calamities, and almost always come to some bad end, while those who keep the Sunday almost always succeed in their plans. But here is General Taylor, a man who has whipped the Mexicans over and again on Sunday, just ready to take the Presidential Chair; while Mr. Polk, the man who set the General on, and who "has never been guilty of a public breach of the Fourth Commandment," is compelled reluctantly to retire. How this state of things can be explained, consistently with the theory of the publications alluded to, is more than we can tell. A theory occurs to us, however, which is consistent with the facts of the case, and quite likely to be true. Our theory would be, that Mr. Polk and General Taylor are both "guilty of violating the Fourth Commandment" every week; but Mr. Polk has been guilty of the inconsistency of making great pretensions to piety even in breaking the Fourth Commandment, while Gen. Taylor has made no such pretensions, and has only acted as he has talked; therefore the General is prospered, while the President is confounded. Without staking our reputation upon the correctness of this theory, we commend it to the attention of those accustomed to investigate such subjects.

REVIVAL IN PISCATAWAY, N. J.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

From a business letter I wrote you in January, you published an extract, giving to your readers an intimation that a revival of religion was in progress in this place. Believing that there may be an anxiety among the readers of your paper to hear more from us, I embrace the present favorable opportunity to sketch a few particulars for publication.

For nearly three years, our additions have been but few, although, as a church, we have enjoyed uninterrupted peace and Christian fellowship. Those who have been reported as excluded, have gone from us, and left the church and country; a number have been removed by death, and some have moved to other parts; so that the number of communicants was decreasing, while our congregation was filling up with a class of young people, the children that God had given us, who were the stated hearers of the word, but yet unconverted. The condition of the rising generation became a subject of thought and conversation among our brethren. Deep anxiety was felt for them; and often, at our prayer meetings, they were made subjects of special prayer. The first week in September, we commenced our evening prayer meetings. At that meeting our low estate in spiritual things was deeply impressed upon the mind, when it was unanimously agreed, that each one should make it a subject of prayer, and each one resolved to do what he could to make the meetings interesting. To do this, it was deemed necessary that we should not only attend the meetings with our families, but that family and closet prayer should be closely attended to, and that all, when they came to the meeting, be careful to possess the fullness of the Spirit's influence in their own souls. About this time I had preached four sermons on the subject of prayer—first, on family prayer; second, on secret prayer; third, on social or congregational prayer; and fourth, on the subjects of prayer. We were happily encouraged to find an increase in our meetings every week, both in numbers and interest, as they were attended in the different neighborhoods. About the first of November, it was apparent that God was about to visit us in mercy. Some began to inquire what they must do to be saved; the impenitent were often seen weeping; and an interest, more than usual, was felt in attending the preached word. The last Sabbath in December we commenced holding a series of evening meetings, and continued them the most of the time for five weeks. They were attended from the beginning with signal displays of God's favor. The most of the members of the Church were in a good state of religious enjoyment from the commencement, and were ready to engage with becoming ardor and zeal in the vineyard of the LORD. Brother Crandall, of Plainfield, was with us, except when he was obliged to be with his own people; and his faithful labors among us were blessed of the Lord. May he be rewarded an hundred fold. On the sixth day of the week before the third Sabbath in January, it being our preparatory season, I baptized nine; and on the first Sabbath in February, I baptized seven; and on the third Sabbath four; making in all twenty, that have been baptized. Some have united by letter, and others, who have obtained a hope in Christ, we trust will yet follow their Lord and Master in his holy ordinance. Those who have united with the Church, are all young people, and the largest proportion of them young men. Surely we have been abundantly blessed, and we are often led to inquire, Why hath the Lord thus distinguished us? We are like Gideon's fleece; while the fleece was wet, it was dry all around; while the showers of God's grace have thus descended upon us, it is dearth and barrenness all around us. "This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes." "Not unto us, not unto us, but unto thy name be all the praise."

LETTERS FROM ILLINOIS—NO. 8.

PLEASANT HILL, near Farmington, Ill.,
24th of 1st mo., 1849.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

From several letters that have come to hand from the East, it appears that there is some incredulity among our friends respecting what is said of Illinois. To some, it is a strange land, and they can scarcely believe that a land so far off, and so lately the abode of savages, can now abound with cultivated and fruitful fields! Whatever may be the incredulity of some, this part of the country enjoys a prosperity beyond the most sanguine expectations of those who have not seen it. What I have written respecting it, is rather under than over the truth, as can be made to appear by real facts in the history of the people. It is possible that slight topographical errors may have occurred in my remarks upon places where I have had so short an acquaintance; but respecting the general features of the country, I am confident that I have made no mistake. As it respects the statistics of commerce which I have given, I had them from the most reliable sources; I made no guess upon them. I have given them as they were given to me, by persons concerned in the establishments referred to. As it respects the fertility of the soil, I have no hesitation in affirming, that as a whole it is without exception the richest tract of land I have seen in any part of the world. Potatoes, turnips, beets, onions, cabbages, and all other horticultural productions common to this latitude, grow as large, as abundant, and as richly flavored, as they can be found in any part of the world. The fruit season was over when I arrived, but I am informed that it was very abundant; and so I should judge by the quantities which housekeepers still have by them, the very thrifty appearance of the orchards, and the prices at which fruit is now sold. Apples are yet for sale at 50c. per bushel; dried apples $1 25; dried peaches $2 per bushel.

Persons who immigrate to these parts must calculate to rely chiefly on their own industry for prosperity; for labor is scarce, and generally commands high prices. The reason for this is obvious; labor, judiciously laid out, produces profitable returns, and is generally so well rewarded, that every one who can, conducts business on his own account; so that, although many persons immigrate here empty handed, they so soon acquire the means of buying themselves farms, or of setting up some other business on their own account, that the number of persons who hire out is as constantly diminished by this means, as it is increased by annual immigrations. I have become acquainted with several Irishmen, and others, who had nothing but their own industry when they arrived a few years ago, but who are now considerable land owners. The opportunities for doing this are doubtless now somewhat diminished, but there are still far greater opportunities for industry and economy to acquire independence than in any of the States east of the mountains. At least this is so with respect to acquiring landed estates.

A very little reasoning upon the statements I have made respecting the natural advantages of this tract of country, may lead any one to see adequate cause for the agricultural and commercial prosperity which I have represented as attending and awaiting this part of the country. A fertile soil, and a congenial climate, are the natural basis for making agricultural wealth. To develop this, we have as industrious and enterprising a population as can be found in any part of our country. According to a series of statistics of immigrants kept by a gentleman in Peoria city, the population that have come in through that port, are reckoned from their several States and countries in the following proportions, viz: New York 158, Pennsylvania 144, Germany 106, Ohio 89, Massachusetts 66, Virginia 42, Ireland 61, England 57, Maryland 30, Kentucky 26, Connecticut 26, New Hampshire 19, Indiana 13, New Jersey 11, and so on in a descending ratio from other parts. Any person acquainted with the characteristics of our people, as a nation, may easily conjecture from these statistics what kind of people we have in this part of Illinois. We are not behind any part of the Union in intelligence and enterprise.

Many persons at the East think that so far to the West we can have no market; but a single glance at the pocket map I have before recommended, is sufficient to show the fallacy of this idea. Fulton and Peoria counties have eleven townships lying on the Illinois River, stretching a distance of nearly seventy miles upon a stream as well adapted to steamboat navigation as the Hudson River. Last year the Illinois and Michigan Canal was opened, which connects the waters of the great northern lakes with the Mississippi River; and as these counties lie at about an equal distance between Chicago and St. Louis, those channels give us a ready outlet to the greatest commercial routes in the world. Thousands of bushels of wheat were carried from these two counties to the Oswego mills last summer, and floured and put into the New York market before that which grew in western New York was ready. Whoever looks at these facts, may easily see the cause of our commercial prosperity, without allowing any thing for exaggeration. And the Christian philanthropist may easily see the importance of laboring to plant the holy institutions of Jehovah and of Jesus in the midst of such a rapidly growing population as this now is, and must be for years to come.

Since I wrote the most of my foregoing letters, the annual Message of the Governor of Illinois has been published, from which it appears that the whole State is in a condition of financial prosperity, as the following items will show:—"Over $3,000,000 in original indebtedness has been taken up and canceled." "The Illinois and Michigan Canal, which for so long a time remained in an unfinished condition, and was the cause of so many fruitless struggles, is at length completed; and from the success attending its operations thus far, seems destined to realize the hopes of its warmest friends. The amount derived from tolls the past season approaches very nearly the sum of $88,000, while its capacity for business, comparatively, has scarcely been taxed at all." "The total amount of the State debt is $16,612,795 37," and it is believed, that ample provision is made by law to liquidate the same in a reasonable amount of time. The taxes upon the inhabitants of the State are no more burdensome here than in many of the older States of the Union, as the following tax bill, paid by one of our brethren, for the year 1848 will show: "Number of acres 80; value $280; State $1 04; county $1 12; total land tax $2 58. Value of personal property $70; tax 70c.; total $3 28." It will easily be seen by this bill, that the assessor's estimate of the property of the citizens is considerably below real value; and that then the tax is in no particular rated very high.

Most kinds of farming stock may generally be purchased in these counties 25 per cent. lower than on the eastern side of the mountains; but in the southern and eastern parts of the State it may often be purchased 50 per cent. lower. Merchants' goods, and mechanics' wares, are not generally more than 25 per cent. higher, and in some cases they can be bought at nearly the same prices as in the eastern towns.

Other circumstances, respecting which some have made inquiry, are equally obvious from the above statements. Our mechanics and tradesmen are like our farmers, chiefly from our own States east of the mountains, mostly north of Mason and Dixon's line; and for the most part the same modes of doing business, the same manners in society, and the same domestic habits, obtain here as in those States. In some districts families from almost all the above-named localities are intermingled in one neighborhood, so that it will take a whole generation to melt them down into one perfectly homogeneous mass. Still there is a general harmony and good feeling, arising from their good sense, and general sympathy with each other's loss of early associations, and newly acquired circumstances. In some localities, the greater part of the settlers are from one particular State, so that they have their own original habits and manners, with but little foreign admixture. As a general thing, the morals of the people are here what they are in the States from which they came; frequently with a relaxation of religious feeling proportioned to their removal from local restraints, and the religious associations to which they have been accustomed. Agricultural and commercial wealth, especially among a people of cultivated domestic habits, must always open a profitable market for artisans and manufacturers; hence any one may judge, with the prices above noted, and our exceedingly cheap living, what the prospects would be in coming here as a settler, in any useful occupation of life.

FIRST RELIGIOUS PAPER.—The Exeter News Letter says that the first religious paper was commenced at Portsmouth, N. H., and was dated Sept. 1, 1808. It was a small folio, each page being 9 1-4 inches by 8 3-4. It was published once in two weeks, at $1 a year. Elias Smith was the editor and proprietor. The next religious paper was the Boston Recorder, and was commenced in 1816.

MAKING A VIRTUE OF NECESSITY.—A clergyman in Easthampton, having ineffectually sought to prevent a ball, obtained leave to open it with prayer. The festivities proceeded with spirit after this devotional preface. The Springfield Republican, in noticing the fact, observes that a similar occurrence took place in Longmeadow some years since.

PENNSYLVANIA SUNDAY LAW.

BORDENTOWN, N. J., Feb. 22, 1849.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Yesterday I received the gratifying intelligence, that the Senate of Pennsylvania, by a vote of 13 to 11, had passed the Bill exempting the Seventh-day Baptists from the penalties of the Act of 1794, under which they have suffered so much persecution of late; and, I am happy to add, that there is a good prospect of its final passage through the House of Representatives. So mote it be.

This morning the "Spirit of the Times," a spirited penny daily, published in Philadelphia, contains a letter from its facetious correspondent at Harrisburg, abounding with good, random hits, and some miserable misses; still, his mess is entertaining, and may serve to turn the attention of those who have never looked into this matter, or who have always treated those who differ from them, as in error, and not to be tolerated, into a proper channel, and to a more liberal estimate of the subject. I shall take care that he, "John of York," be better posted up in reference to the history of the seventh-day Sabbath, and the seventh-day people.

W. M. F.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Harrisburg, 20th of Feb.

I AM SITTING HERE, in the House, listening to the second and third reading of local bills, that our excellent Speaker is putting through at the rate of forty per hour. I am almost at a loss to find something on which to write a letter. It can't be done out of private bills; you might as well attempt to squeeze blood out of a brick.

Stop! here's something. The Senate, instigated by Mr. King, of Bedford, and not having the fear of Sabbath Associations before its legislative eyes, passed a bill exempting the Seventh-day Baptists from the operation of the act of 1794, relative to the observance of the first day of the week. The matter is about this shape:

About eighteen hundred and forty-nine years ago last twenty-fifth December, there was a great reformer born, none less than the Son of God, who established upon earth a new era in religion; preaching the most noble, liberal, and holy doctrines; forgiving injuries and persecutions; and baptizing with his own blood all who were willing to follow his righteous example. From the day of his coming to the present time, there have been a good many lateral congregations of worshipers in the Christian faith, some of them retaining something of the original principles proclaimed by the Saviour, and many chalking out, by the light of religious progress, new paths, and rather narrower paths, too, than that trodden by the Son of the Virgin. Well, among these latter-day saints were a Pennsylvania Legislature—the descendants of men and women who left the old world for conscience sake—who passed a law in 1794, as aforesaid, making it a misdemeanor, or something worse, for people to work on the first day of the week.

Time passed on, and among the branches continually starting out from the decaying stump of the simple original religion of Christ, came a sect, who, after a figuring that would puzzle the immense Deshong, discovered that the seventh and not the first day of the week was the bona fide Sabbath. In all else they worshiped, and still worship, the same God, with all the devotion and bigotry necessary to establish themselves as a worthy worldly sect; and it may be that they are as good as any of the associations called churches. I can't tell, nor can you, reader, whether they are right or wrong in regard to the day. They think they are right, and have a right to their opinions and their worship. I cannot confine myself to their views, but I don't care to quarrel with them about it. The only being who has a right to judge them is the God they worship, and it strikes me that all of us have enough to do if we settle our individual balances on the Great Book without interfering with the conscientious ideas of others. But the framers of the law in question thought differently, and, it seems, their successors have thought with them to this day.

The consequences of this law have been, that fanatical people, who appear to think that they have been selected for the purpose of relieving the Almighty of the care of watching over his numerous flock, have persecuted this little sect of Seventh-day Baptists; fining them for alledged transgressions, and often imprisoning them in default of payment of such fines. Many a stern, roundheaded old seventh-day disciple, has paid the penalty in prison, and, doubtless, considered himself a martyr almost equal to St. Peter. I am liberal enough to believe, that if the seventh-day people had as large a majority as the first-day folks have, they would be just as unreasonable. But is the thing right now, or would it be then?—that is the question. Whose business is it whether a man worships on Sunday or Saturday, or not at all? The Hebrews observe Saturday, and out of respect to the first-day worshipers, in Philadelphia, at least, do not work on Sunday. That, too, is because they are few in number. The Seventh-day Baptists might do the same thing, but they are a free people, and don't choose to do it. Who shall compel them to violate their religious faith—these descendants of the Pilgrims, these children of freedom and this free land? They hold you up the example of Christ, and tell you that he and his companions plucked corn on the first day of the week. "Ah!" say you, "but that was for food, it was an act of necessity." "Indeed," responds the seventh-day man, "was it? Christ fed a multitude upon five loaves and two fishes, and they were all content and had twelve baskets full left. He could have satisfied his own hunger and the cravings of the stomachs of those who were with him by his will, alone, but he plucked the corn that his followers might see that while he was rigid in the enforcement of his laws, he was liberal and generous. You and we worship on different days; one of us is wrong, though each believe he is right. Let us meet on mutual ground, treat each other as brothers traveling for the same goal, and leave the matter of day to God."

That would be Christian-like.

There is a place somewhere upon the globe, that readers of geography and travels have doubtless heard of, called Smyrna, where there are five different days observed as the Sabbath by the English, French, Spanish, and American Christians, the Greek Christians, the Hebrews, the Armenians, and the Turks. Now how would it do for the Protestant or Roman Catholic Christians there, or any other, or every other sect, to compel all other sects to observe their particular day? There would be but two working days in the week, and a man who happened to have a family of a dozen persons would not be able to feed them. They get along very well there, however, each worshiping as he thinks right, and leaving the others to do the same. In our own country, in the Crescent City, the same liberty of conscience is allowed, and, bad as we call her, New Orleans is, under the circumstances, as moral and law-respecting as Philadelphia. In truth, as far as riots and hidden crime go, Philadelphia is the worst city of the two.

I am glad this bill has passed the Senate. It will pass the House also, and should be amended so as to include the Hebrews and all other sects who worship on other than the first day of the week. We do not suspend business on THEIR Sabbath; why should THEY be compelled to do it on ours? Religiously thine,

JOHN OF YORK.

FEMALE TEACHERS WANTED.—Ex-Governor Slade, Corresponding Secretary of the Board of National Popular Education, has published a Circular, inviting applications from ladies who desire to go to the West as teachers under the patronage of the Board. Four classes of teachers have already been collected and sent out, who are located principally in Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Wisconsin, and Michigan. It is proposed to collect a fifth class at Hartford, Ct., on the 23d of March, give them six weeks' instruction on subjects calculated to fit them for teaching, and send them out on the 3d of May. Those selected from the applicants will be expected to pay their expenses to Hartford, and their board there at $1 50 per week. Their instruction will be gratuitous, and the Board will defray their traveling expenses from Hartford to their places of destination, with the understanding that these traveling expenses are to be refunded if the teachers should hereafter be able to refund. Those sent out are expected to continue teaching two years, if health should permit. Applications should be addressed to "The Committee for Selecting Teachers," Hartford, Ct. Each application should state the age, residence, and religious denomination of the applicant, and the branches in which she feels qualified to instruct; and should be accompanied by testimonials, from some reliable source, in regard to her education, natural peculiarities, and moral and religious character.

FINANCES OF THE BAPTIST MISSIONARY UNION.—The "Macedonian" represents the financial condition of the Baptist Missionary Union as rather unpromising. The expenditures this year are necessarily larger than those of the preceding year, yet the amount of donations and legacies received in the first nine months, was less by nearly four thousand dollars than in the corresponding months of last year. Forty thousand dollars must be received from churches and individuals in the months of January, February, and March, to meet the expenses of the year which ends then, to say nothing of reducing the debt of the Union. The Macedonian says that if this amount is not received, the debt must be increased or the missions curtailed.

A GOOD "HABIT."—The Dayspring gives some instructive statistics of the benevolent contributions of a small parish in the State of Massachusetts. It says that the town contains a population of 976 souls, and a valuation of property of $263,420. The church numbers 217 members, and pays its minister $700. In 1845, this town gave to the American Board $625 00, and in 1847, $650 00—in addition to $1,449 35 given to other benevolent objects. This was done without the visit of an agent, or any extraordinary means. It is the religious habit of the people.

REFORMATION IN LAPLAND.—An English paper says that there are accounts from Norway of an extensive religious movement among the supine and vice-sunken Laplanders. The revival commenced on the Swedish frontier, with the labors of Swedish missionaries, and had already extended far into the interior of Norway, working wondrous changes. The writer says:—

"Not only has more than one Laplander been roused to become a preacher of righteousness and salvation by the Cross of Chrst, but the reality of the divine work is evidenced by the fruits of a moral reformation—the proverbially drunken Laplander becoming sober and temperate wherever the gospel zeal has spread."

SURGICAL OPERATION.—Some three weeks ago, Mr. Albert Rogers, of Brooklyn, fell from the Fulton Market, and received a wound in the arm. After various unsuccessful attempts to heal it, the physicians decided that an artery had been injured, and that it would be necessary to cut into the neck and tie the artery. This severe and dangerous operation was performed on Friday last, by Dr. Parker of N. Y., assisted by Drs. Mason, Marvin, and others of Brooklyn. It occupied nearly half an hour, and caused a great effusion of blood; but it is thought the patient will recover.

ACCIDENT AT WESTERLY, R. I.—On the 19th of February, while Mr. Thomas Hall, of Westerly, R. I., was preparing to blast a rock in a well which he was digging, the charge unexpectedly exploded, blowing out one of his eyes, breaking his skull, and otherwise injuring him, so that he is not expected to live.

General Intelligence.

LAST WEEK'S CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

February 19.

In the SENATE, the joint resolution from the House in favor of supplying the Russian Government with a copy of Commodore Wilkes' Narrative of the late Exploring Expedition, was twice read, and referred to the Committee on Finance. A memorial was presented from certain citizens proposing to carry the Mails and Military Stores of the United States across the Isthmus of Panama for a sum not exceeding $12,000 per annum. Mr. Yulee, of Florida, presented a resolution passed by the Legislature of his State on the subject of Slavery and Southern wrongs. The General Appropriation Bill was taken up, and its consideration continued till the hour of adjournment.

In the HOUSE, a resolution was passed, making the California Territorial Bill the first business in order in Committee of the Whole, after disposing of the Mexican Indemnity Bill. The Report of the Smithsonian Institute was received and ordered printed. The Senate Bill providing for the payment of the expenses of the delegation from the Chippewa Indians, was passed. The bill to indemnify Mexico for her claims against the United States was taken up and passed.

February 20.

The SENATE passed the bill from the House designed to carry into effect the 12th Article of the late Treaty with Mexico. A Committee of seven was appointed to inquire into the merits of an invention for applying Electro Magnetism to the purposes of navigation and locomotion. Mr. Hale submitted a large number of abolition petitions, which were laid on the table. The Naval Appropriation Bill was reported with amendments. The General Appropriation Bill was then taken up, and a long discussion arose upon an amendment proposing to extend the Revenue Laws of the United States over California and New Mexico; also to extend the Constitution of the United States, and all general laws which are applicable over the same; likewise that the President appoint the officers, and make the necessary regulations to carry these provisions into effect—the object being to preserve order, and administer justice in those territories.

In the HOUSE, the bill authorizing the coinage of gold dollars and double eagles was passed. The bill making certain alterations in the Mileage Law was then taken up, but not acted upon. In the course of the discussion, it was stated that the sum annually paid to members and officers of Government for mileage, was nearly five hundred thousand dollars. The bill to increase the efficiency of the Army was considered for a while, and then laid on the table.

February 21.

The SENATE passed the House Bill making provision for a new land district in Missouri; also to change the location of the land office in the Chippewa Land District. The General Appropriation Bill was then taken up, and the question of extending the Revenue Laws over California, &c., was considered till adjournment.

The HOUSE took up the bill regulating the mileage of members, and providing that the distance for which mileage shall be allowed be computed by the shortest continuous route, and likewise restricting the amount to be appropriated to the purchase of books for members. After some debate, the bill was passed by a vote of 157 to 16. A bill was passed relative to school lands in Alabama. The bill to abolish the Franking Privilege, and Reduce Postage, was taken up and debated till the hour of adjournment.

February 22.

The SENATE passed the joint resolution in favor of furnishing emigrants to California with arms and ammunition from the Public Stores, on certain terms. The General Appropriation Bill was then taken up, when Mr. Webster submitted a few remarks, principally with reference to the Territorial question. He concluded by exhibiting a paper, which he proposed to offer hereafter, as an amendment to the General Appropriation Bill, authorizing the President to maintain possession of New Mexico and California, and, for the purpose of preserving authority and order in those territories, directing him to employ such force as may be necessary of the Army and Navy. The existing laws to remain in force there, and officers appointed to see that they are properly executed—(martial law not to be proclaimed at any time)—and an appropriation to be made for this object. The Secretary having read the paper, it was ordered printed. Mr. Dayton then offered a paper of a similar purport, which was also read and ordered printed.

In the HOUSE, the Minesota Territory Bill was taken up. An amendment was adopted, making the bill take effect on the 10th of March, but the bill was not finally acted upon. The bill to extend the Revenue Laws of the United States over the territories acquired from Mexico, was passed.

February 23.

In the Senate, the House bill, in relation to Revenue Laws for New Mexico and California, was referred to the Committee on Commerce. A joint resolution for the establishment of a Branch Mint at San Francisco, California, was referred to the Committee on Finance. A joint resolution was passed in favor of giving a certain portion of bounty land to those persons who served as substitutes during the late war with Mexico. A bill was passed allowing payment for certain horses lost during the late war. The General Appropriation Bill was then taken up, and the expediency of providing a temporary Government for New Mexico and California was considered. Speeches were made by Mr. Dayton and Mr. Webster, but no action was taken on the bill.

In the HOUSE, the bill for the support of the Post Office Department furnished the principal subject of discussion, but no action was taken upon it.

February 24.

In the SENATE, Mr. Dickinson, of New York, presented the credentials of Wm. H. Seward, elected Senator for six years from the 4th of March, in place of John A. Dix. A joint resolution was presented, but not acted upon, proposing to confer upon Major General Scott the title of "Brevet Lieutenant General" in consideration of his services during the late campaign in Mexico. The General Appropriation Bill was taken up, and gave rise to a long discussion relative to the temporary government of the new territories.

The HOUSE took up and passed the bill for draining certain swamp lands in Louisiana. The Post Office Bill was then taken up, and its consideration continued through the session.

FOURTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Europa, from Liverpool, arrived at New York, Feb. 24th, with fourteen days later intelligence from Europe.

The Parliament of England was opened by the Queen in person. Her speech, and subsequent remarks made by Lord John Russell, indicate that a liberal policy is to be pursued by the present administration. The free trade policy will doubtless be carried out.

Every department of trade and commerce is said to be active.

The cholera continues, but is of a very mild type.

Charles Gavan Duffy, one of the Irish State Prisoners, is about to have a new trial.

There is considerable said in the papers about another Revolution threatened in France. But the prompt measures of Government seem to have checked all movements of the kind, if any were contemplated.

The Pope is still at Gaeta, and there is a great deal of speculation as to the course he will pursue, or the course which the different governments will pursue in relation to him.

Several small engagements have taken place between the Austrians and Hungarians, in which the former were generally victorious; it is thought the latter will not again endeavor to make head against their opponents.

A skirmish took place on the 25th of Jan., on the frontiers of Schleswig, between a body of Danish volunteers, who had crossed the border from Jutland, and some of the troops of the Holstein Provisional Government. The Danes, who are said to have been 500 or 600 strong, were defeated at Brons, with the loss of three or four men killed, and a few wounded and prisoners. The Holsteiners lost one or two men in the skirmish.

The excitement created in Europe by the report of the boundless riches found in California had somewhat subsided, when the news by the last packet once more aroused the spirit of enterprise, and the newspapers again teemed with notices of all kinds of shipping adventures in connection with this auriferous region. The confirmed statements of mineral wealth in the California hills now leave no doubt but that an immense tide of emigration will float toward that quarter.

ACCIDENT TO SCHOOL-CHILDREN.—A serious accident occurred on the 20th of February, at a Public School in Philadelphia. It appears that some mischievous boys amused themselves by putting burning paper in the flue, and the blaze ascending with a waving wind, the girls in the room above, supposing that the building was on fire, became frightened, and some two or three hundred of them ran screaming toward the staircase. As they were pressing down the stairs, the bannisters gave way, and precipitated the mass of humanity into the entry below, a distance of several feet. Those behind still continued to press frantically on, and of course pushed those in front off the stairs, until they were literally piled upon each other to the depth of several feet. Citizens who heard the noise rushed to the rescue, and the poor children were released as soon as human exertions could do it. It was then found that at least a dozen were injured, and half a dozen seriously.

MURDER AND FIRE AT HEMPSTEAD, L. I.—On the morning of the 15th of February, the dwelling house of Jonathan Miller, in the town of Hempstead, L. I., was set on fire, and Mrs. Miller, her daughter, and two sons, who slept in the upper part of the house, were smothered, as was at first supposed. But on examining their remains, after the fire, the coroner's jury decided that they had all been murdered, and the house fired to conceal the deed. Mr. Miller started for N. York, tnat morning at an early hour, with a load of articles for the market. Suspicion has since fixed upon him as the murderer, and he has been arrested, but the case is not yet decided. Meanwhile the Governor of New York has offered a reward of five hundred dollars for the detection and conviction of the perpetrators of the bloody deed.

FREE SOIL IN WISCONSIN.—On the 25th of January, the Wisconsin Assembly passed the Wilmot Proviso Instructions, by a vote of 57 to 1. On the 29th, additional resolutions were passed in the Assembly, by a vote of 45 to 15, against the Slave Trade in the District, in the very language of Mr. Gott's resolution. In the Senate, the resolutions, as amended, were adopted by a vote of 14 ayes to 2 noes. A resolution was also carried, in one of the Houses, recommending that Mexican territory be set apart for a Colony of Free Blacks, and a portion of the public domain be appropriated to furnish a fund of indemnity to all who liberate their slaves and send them to the Colony.

On Monday last the ship Levant sailed from Philadelphia for San Francisco. She takes 49 passengers. On board the ship will be the frames of ten houses, all ready for being put together, two steamboats and eight sail boats, intended to ply on the Sacramento river. Her manifest is upwards of seventeen feet long, and the cargo is estimated at two hundred thousand dollars.

On the evening of February 21st, the wires between New York and St. Johns, New Brunswick, were connected, and Mr. Foss, the skillful operator at this end of the line, held a conversation with the operator in the office at St. Johns. The distance is upwards of 750 miles. On the following day the news of the arrival of the Europa at St. Johns was sent on the wires.

A lynx measuring five and a half feet was recently killed in Waterford, Vt.

SUMMARY.

The Boston Transcript says that one of the passengers by the Duxbury, which sailed last week for California, finding that an officer was on the wharf, on the watch for him, got a friend to put him in a sugar box, which was nailed up and marked—"Medicine, this side up with care," and was in this way conveyed on board, in the face and eyes of the half-frozen officer.

A man by the name of Peter Miller recently died at Easton, Pa., leaving property, it is said, to the amount of about $300,000, to be loaned to farmers and mechanics forever. If there should ever be a surplus, it was to be employed in building a hospital. The Court of Northampton, however, has decided against the validity of the will, in favor of a nephew of the deceased.

Thirty or forty policemen were on duty at Boston on a recent Sunday, to stop racing with sleighs on Washington street. They were provided with ropes for this purpose. Their presence prevented the racing, yet there was some very fast driving, and occasionally a noisy party were seen to pass.

An officer of the army writes to St. Louis, from Los Angelos, California, that the number of regulars in the service in that country is not more than seventy-five. The remainder of the force have deserted and gone to the mines, carrying with them their horses. He says that by spring there will not be twenty regular soldiers in the country.

The steamship United States was sold last week by C. H. Marshall & Co., of New York, to Mr. Augustus Belmont, Austrian Consul, for the German Empire, and is to form a part of the new German Navy. The price received for her, according to the best information, is $250,000. This is a considerable sacrifice to the owners, as she has run herself in debt upwards of $50,000, and cost originally about $300,000.

The Knoxville (Tenn.) Tribune has been publishing able papers in favor of gradual emancipation and colonization, and it urges a Convention for that purpose. With this, says that journal, as our principle of action, we may, with the blessing of God, open the way for the full and final redemption of the State.

The Lafayette Live Oak of the 4th says that the sheriff of Jefferson, La., was recently directed to attach the steamer McKim, bound for California, and went on board for the purpose of serving the writ on the Captain; the boat left the wharf with the officer on board.

Mr. Asa Bacon, one of the proprietors of the Marble Buildings in New Haven, lately destroyed by fire, has presented one thousand dollars to the widow of Mr. Hall, one of his tenants, who was killed by the falling of one of the walls.

The Senate of Indiana, on the 19th ult., passed a resolution instructing the Judiciary Committee to inquire into the expediency of so altering the civil and ecclesiastical laws of the State as to render the marriage covenant void at the option of the parties.

The British ship Cambria, 13 weeks from Londonderry, for New York, put into the Delaware breakwater, February 21, in distress, being almost entirely destitute of provisions and water. Fifty-five passengers had died on the voyage, and seven more were buried on her arrival.

The General Assembly of Rhode Island has passed a law changing the publication of the bans of matrimony to one time, instead of three, and that one notice may be given at the time of the ceremony.

Movements are making throughout the West, at Chicago, Milwaukie, and in northern Indiana, to induce our Government to send the Eastern Mail through Canada. By such an arrangement, from four to six days would be gained over the ordinary mail route around the lakes.

The Memphis Eagle tells of an amateur returned Volunteer, who has recently been doing a prosperous business in that region by selling forged land-warrants.

Three boys were tried at the late term of the Court in Dover, N. H., for maltreating their teacher, who attempted to correct a lad for misbehavior. Two of them interfered, and dragged the master into the street. The jury awarded the teacher a verdict of damages to the amount of $60 and costs.

The Bible on which the first inauguration oath was taken by Washington, is still preserved in New York, and will be taken to Washington City, to be used at the inauguration of General Taylor.

DIED,

In Hopkinton, R. I., Feb. 13th, JOHN G., son of Moses B. and Mary Lewis, in the 7th year of his age.

In Hopkinton, R. I., Feb. 19, MARY E. DAVIS, wife of Stephen S. Davis, and daughter of Moses B. and Mary Lewis, aged 21 years and 1 month. Sister Davis was a member of the 3d Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton. In the early stages of her decline, there were at times some dark mists that intercepted her spiritual vision, and prevented that exhibition of heavenly-mindedness and holy joy that characterized her last days. Although in youth, and having before her the fairest prospects of a happy life, yet, when the hollow cough and decaying strength proclaimed to her the will of God in respect to her recovery, she manifested most convincingly the strength of the Christian hope.

FARM FOR SALE.

THE subscriber offers for sale his farm, situated in the town of Genesee, county of Allegany, N. Y. Said farm codsists of 280 acres of first-rate land, 175 of which is level, ann the remainder gradually rising side-hill; all of which is susceptible of cultivation, mostly adapted to grazing purposes. About 75 acres, however, is a gravely quick soil, as productive of wheat and corn, as any in the southern part of said county. Upon said farm is about 100 acres improvement, two framed barns, and a large two-story framed house, well inclosed; lately built, and conveniently calculated. There are two good wells of water upon said farm, and it is also abundantly supplied with numerous brooks and springs. Said farm is situated in a good neighborhood, and convenient to school, and the central place of business for the western part of said town; and on the main traveled road from Angelica to Smithport. For pleasantness and locality it is not surpassed by any in the township or vicinity. To those wishing to purchase a good farm, the present opportunity offers rare inducements. The farm will be sold low for cash; or, if desired, by paying one-half of the purchase money down, the balance will be arranged to accommodate purchasers for any reasonable length of credit. A careful view of the premises by a discerning individual, is only requisite to a thorough conviction that an investment made under such favorable terms as the subscriber offers, is but safe and a fair speculation. For farther information, address the subscriber, P. M. at West Genesee, Allegany Co., N. Y., or inquire at his house. JARED MAXSON.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS, &C.

From the President of the United States.

"To Mr. E. Walker—Dear Sir:—I have found your Statesman's Manual a valuable work, and exceedingly useful and convenient. Yours, J. K. POLK."

From the Hon. Henry Clay.

"My Dear Sir:—Your Statesman's Manual is a very valuable work for reference."

State of New York:
Secretary's Office,
Department of Common Schools, } Albany, Sept. 18, 1846.

I have examined the "Statesman's Manual," in two volumes octavo, compiled by Edwin Williams, and am of opinion that it is a proper work for school district libraries, and deserving of a place in these institutions, designed for the diffusion of useful knowledge.

Signed, J. S. RANDALL,
Dep. State Sup't Com. Schools.

From the Journal of Commerce.

"This is one of the most important books published in the United States for a long time."

From the N. Y. Courier and Enquirer.

"This is the most important contribution to American political history ever published."

From the Democratic Review.

"The whole forms a most complete library in itself, of all that concerns the politics of the country. No individual should be without these two volumes at hand for prompt reference. How many hours of idle discussion and senseless debates might be spared to heated partizans, were these books at hand for appeal. We shall have frequent occasion to refer to them."

From the N. Y. Express of August 21, 1846.

"This is emphatically a national work, and as such eminently deserving of a national support."

From the Commercial Advertiser.

"Such a work is invaluable, and is offered at a comparatively low price, in expectation of a large sale."

From the Luzern Democrat.

"The Statesman's Manual is a very valuable work, comprising a complete condensed political history of our country from the formation of our government until the present time."

From the Washingtonian, Ohio.

"It is but scanty praise to say, that no work of equal value to the American Statesman, Politician, Journalist, Historian, &c., &c., has ever before appeared."

From the Harrisburg (Pa.) Argus, August 26, 1846.

"No politician, no man who desires to understand the history of the several administrations of the General Government, should be without a copy of it. As a book of reference, it is invaluable."

Miscellaneous.

THE SEAMSTRESS.

The following lines are from the pen of James R. Lowell, and possess as much undeniable truth as eloquent poetry:—

Hark, the rustle of the dress,
Stiff with lavish costliness;
Here comes one whose cheeks would flush
But to have her garments brush
'Gainst the girl whose fingers thin
Wove the weary broidery in;
And in midnights chill and murk,
Stitched her life into the work—
Bending backward from her toil,
Lest the tears her silk might soil;
Shaping from her bitter thought
Heart's-ease and forget-me-not;
Satirizing her despair
With the emblems woven there!

◆

The night is mother of the day,
The winter of the spring;
And ever upon old decay
The greenest mosses cling.
Behind the cloud the starlight lurks,
Through showerrs the sunbeams fall;
For God, who loveth all his works,
Has left his hope with all.

A STRANGE CASE.

A singular case has occurred in Bangor, Me., which shows absolute and entire deception of a whole family, neighbors, and schoolmates, respecting the identity of a person after a few year's absence. A young man named Luther Hause, twenty years of age, imposed himself upon the family of James Hause, Esq., of Corinna, by claiming to be their long-lost son, and in that character obtained money and goods to the amount of about one hundred dollars. The case is reported at length in the Bangor Whig, but the main facts of interest we have abridged in the following notice: The son of James Hause was named Rowland, and he had been absent on a whaling voyage, when some neighbors of Mr. Hause saw Luther Hause in Bangor, and accosted him for Rowland. But the young man informed them of their mistake, and avowed his real name. They did not believe him, and informed Mr. Hause that they had seen his son.

Mr. Hause went immediately to Bangor to find him, was unsuccessful in his search, and left a neighbor authorized to bring him home. The latter found Luther, and on inviting him to go home, Luther accepted the invitation. When he reached the house, he addressed Mr. and Mrs. Hause as father and mother. Mr. Hause had some doubts at first, as the eyes and hair of Luther were entirely different from that of his son. He referred to several scars his son had. Luther showed a scar on his knee, one on his breast, one on his neck, and an overlapping toe, all of which Rowland had.

He remained at their house some five months, and the longer he remained, the more they were satisfied that he was their son. Mr. H. stated that he believed him to be his son just as certain as he believed in the identity of his wife. Many domestic circumstances were related by the young man, which they supposed could only have been known to their son, but which the imposter had probably derived from themselves in the relation of family matters, and afterward brought forward in confirmation of his identity. Several of the neighbors of Mr. Hause believed this young man to be Rowland Hause. Young men, who had been schoolmates with Rowland, conversed with Luther about past times, and became convinced that he was Rowland Hause.

At length, a Mr. Dow came to Corinna, saw Luther, and said that he knew the young man; that his name was Luther Hause, and no mistake, and that he belonged in Troy. Another person recognized him as Luther Hause, and said that he resided with him seventeen years. James Hause then began to doubt the fact that Luther Hause was his son; and, in order to settle the dispute existing in his family and the community, respecting his identity, a warrant was issued against the young man, for obtaining goods under false pretences, as he had got a watch and several other articles, while remaining at the house of Mr. Hause. He was arrested and examined. Mr. Seth Hause, of Troy, was summoned, and appeared at the trial, and there declared the prisoner at the bar to be his son.

During the trial there was great excitement, and about four hundred persons were present, apparently, the mass of them, in favor of Luther, believing him to be Rowland. The Justice sustained the warrant. Upon the trial, the counsel for the prisoner contended that Hause and his family had deceived the young man, instead of his having deceived them—that when he was first seen in Bangor, he stated distinctly that his name was Luther Hause—that they dragged him to Corinna, and forced him to say that his name was Rowland Hause—there was no pretence that he was any one else than Luther Hause—and that James Hause, if he had opened his eyes to the light around him, might have known that he was Luther Hause. The Judge charged very strongly against the prisoner. The Jury, after an absence of several minutes, returned a verdict of guilty.

This is probably the most singular case of the kind on record. Mr. James Hause is represented to be an intelligent man, a Justice of the Peace, and a man of property. It appears strange that such a glaring imposition could be practiced upon a family of the intelligence they are said to possess.

American Linen.—A very liberal charter was recently granted by the Kentucky Legislature, for the manufacture of linen at Maysville, with a capital of two hundred thousand dollars, in shares of one hundred dollars each, payable in calls of ten dollars, not oftener than once in thirty days. The intention is to manufacture linen of hemp, though flax may be used. Mason county, in which Maysville is situated, is the first hemp-growing county in the State, having produced in some seasons three thousand tons. The soil near Maysville, both in Ohio and Kentucky, is admirably adapted to the culture of flax, and if a demand for it existed, any quantity could be produced. The farmers in that section often grow flax for the seed only, cutting the straw with a scythe, and throwing it away after it has been threshed. One provision in the charter of the Maysville Linen Manufacturing Company is new, and we think will work well. It is that one quarter of the capital stock is reserved for such of the hands as choose to purchase, making them, so far as their purchase extends, partners in the concern.

MR. CALHOUN'S ADDRESS TO THE SOUTH.

The following synopsis of John C. Calhoun's Address to the people of the Southern States, on the subject of Slavery, gives a good idea of the spirit and tenor of that extraordinary document. It might alarm somebody, if the same threats had not been made thousands of times in the last ten years.

The Address opens with a history of the wrongs the South has sustained in the obstacles thrown in the way of reclaiming fugitive slaves, by State legislation, in defiance of the explicit guaranty of the Constitution.

Then follows a history of the so-called aggressions attempted upon the Southern institutions at the time of the Missouri Compromise.

The address proceeds to describe the alledged inequality and injury effected by the Wilmot Proviso, and calls the attention of the people to other unwarrantable measures which have been agitated during the present session of Congress.

The address also sets forth another danger—that the North, after accomplishing the emancipation of the blacks, will then elevate them to a political equality with the slaveholder himself—that the blacks, thus favored by the North, will become the political allies of that section of the country—that to reward their devotion to the North, that portion of the Union will assist the blacks in domineering over the whites of the South!

Mr. Calhoun says the exclusion of slavery from the territories and other points over which the general government has control, together with the increasing difficulty of recapturing slaves, will be followed by the overthrow of Slavery. If not, the North, united in sentiment against it, will not regard any constitutional barrier, but proceeding to abolish the internal Slave Trade, would open the way for the abolition of Slavery in the States.

What Mr. Calhoun calls "monopolizing all the Territories" by the North, he says will give us three-fourths of the States, and thus put us in a position to amend the Constitution so as to abolish the guaranty for slave property as it now exists. Hence the necessity of prompt and decided action on the part of the South, and the vital importance of the territorial question. The following is the conclusion of the address:

"With such a prospect before us, the gravest and most solemn that ever claimed the attention of a people, the question for us to consider is, what is to be done to prevent it? It is a question belonging to you to decide. All we propose is to give you our opinion. We, then, are of opinion that the first and indispensable step, without which nothing can be done, and with which everything can be done, is union among ourselves, on this great and most vital question. The want of union and concert in reference to that has brought the South, the Union, and our system of government, to their present perilous condition.

"If you become united, and prove yourselves in earnest, the North will be brought to a pause, and that may lead to a change of measures, and the adoption of a course of policy that may quietly and peaceably terminate this land conflict between the two sections; if it should not, nothing would remain but for you to stand up immoveably in defense of rights which involve our property, prosperity, equality, liberty, and safety. As the assailed, you would stand justified by all laws, human and divine, in repelling a dangerous blow without looking to consequences, and to resort to all means necessary for that purpose. Your assailants, and not you, would be responsible for consequences.

"Entertaining these opinions, we earnestly entreat you to be united, and for that purpose to adopt all necessary measures. Beyond this we think it would not be proper to go at present. We hope, if you should unite with anything like unanimity, it may of itself apply a remedy to this deep-seated and dangerous disease. But if such should not be the case, the time will then have come for you to decide what course to adopt."

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE.

Napoleon Bonaparte was born at Ajacco, in Corsica, on the 15th of August, 1769; he received his education in France, in the Royal Military College; he was appointed lieutenant, 1792; major, the 19th of October, 1795; commandant of artillery, Toullon, in December of the same year; brigadier, the 9th of February, 1794; lieutenant-general of the army of the interior, on the 16th of October, 1795; field marshal, the 27th of the same October; commander-in-chief of the army of Italy, the 23d of February, 1796; and was married in the same year to Josephine de a Pragerie, widow of Beauharnois; sailed with the expedition to Egypt, the 19th of May, 1798; arrived at Alexandria, the 1st of July; embarked to return to France, the 22d of August; arrived at Raphan, near Fregus, the 9th of October; was named first consul, the 10th of January, 1802; consul for life, the 10th of August, of the same year; and emperor, the 18th of May, 1804; he was consecrated and crowned in Paris, by Pope Pius VII., the December following; proclaimed king of Italy, the 17th of March, 1805; and crowned at Milan, the 26th of May; he was proclaimed and acknowledged as protector of the confederation of the Rhine, the 12th of July, 1806; mediator of the Swiss confederation, the 19th of September, 1807; his marriage with Josephine was declared null, the 16th of December, 1809; on the 2d of April, 1810, he was married to Maria Louisa, archduchess of Austria, who was born the 10th of December, 1791; of this marriage there was born, on the 20th of March, 1811, Napoleon Francisco Carlos Jose, king of Rome; he made his entry into Moscow, the 14th of September, 1812; this was the apogee of his glory, from which his adverse fortune and decadence began. All those nations which had already declared war against him, made the greatest efforts to precipitate his ruin, and consummate his end. The allies entered the city of Paris on the 30th of March, 1814; abdicated, April 11; embarked for Elba, 20th of the same month, and arrived on the 14th of the following; there he remained until February, 1815, which month he sailed for France, where he arrived the 1st of March, and landed at Canes, in the Gulf of St. John; he entered Paris the 20th day after his disembarkment; lost the battle of Waterloo, the 18th of June, 1815; abdicated a second time in favor of his son, the 22d of the same month; he submitted himself to the protection of the English, and embarked in the Bellerophon, the 15th of July ensuing, and was subsequently carried to the island of St. Helena, where he disembarked the 13th of October, and died, without it being known of what particular malady, the 5th of May, 1821, at seven o'clock in the morning.

INTERNATIONAL TELEGRAPH.

Dr. Alexander Jones, the telegraphic agent and reporter of the New York Press, and originator of the project for a line of telegraph from some practical point on the north-western coast of North America to the Asiatic coast opposite, by means of a sub-marine wire, published another long exhibit of his plan in the Journal of Commerce. Dr. Jones mentions various routes to put America in telegraphic communication with the principal cities of the Old World, either by a sub-marine communication across Behring's Strait, or the establishment of telegraph stations at each side, carried across on the ice in the winter, and in the summer by steamers, with as little delay as possible. He estimates the distance between New York and London, via Behring's Strait and St. Petersburgh, at fifteen thousand miles, and the average cost of the proposed line at seven million five hundred thousand dollars, exclusive of expenditures for stations, instruments, interest on money, &c.

As to the utility and profit of the undertaking, he remarks:

In the face of this heavy expenditure, we yet believe that such a line would yield a large amount of revenue, and pay all its expenses. For,

I. It would have the patronage of the entire commercial world.

II. It would have the official patronage of all Governments.

III. It would have the patronage of the press of both hemispheres.

IV. It would derive a large income from private messages other than commercial, passing between the citizens of populous States on either side.

If we set down the probable annual number of messages transmitted at 400,000, (they would more likely amount to a million per annum,) or about 1,100 daily, or 550 sent each way per day—and estimate the average cost of dispatches at five dollars each, the total amount of receipts would be $2,000,000, leaving $550,000 for profit, exclusive of interest and expenses.

Messages of ten words from New York to New Orleans now cost $2 50 each. The average receipt of messages both ways between New York and Boston, probably do not amount to less than two hundred, exclusive of way messages.

Another Plan.—Messrs. Hubbard & Co., of New York, propose to connect the two continents by telegraph.

They ask that Government will appropriate the sum of fifty thousand dollars, to be expended in the survey of the proposed route, and also place at their disposal a vessel for the same purpose. They say, that, from explorations, they are satisfied that a series of shoals, produced from sub-marine volcanic action, extend from the banks of Newfoundland to the mouth of the English Channel, and, that these shoals, in many instances, do not lie more than one hundred and twenty feet below the surface of the ocean. They propose to traverse the Atlantic by means of buoys, submerged to the depth of twenty feet, and confined by anchors resting upon these ledges or shoals, the wires to be enclosed in some substance impervious to water, as India-rubber or gutta-percha.

A Horse at Sea.—A singular instance of embarking upon the deep occurred on Friday evening. A horse went to the lake to drink, some distance north of the north pier, and, stepping upon a cake of ice, the wind, which blew strongly from the shore at the time, drove the brittle bark and the poor beast into the lake. The captain of the schooner Oneida witnessed the occurrence, and says that when last seen, the horse was vanishing from sight in the distance. Nothing has been heard of him since. We hope he will bring up at some friendly port on the other side of the lake.

The above horse has arrived safely at Buffalo. The poor brute was discovered by the pilot of the lake steamers, when nearly seventy-five miles from his port of departure, and was, with much difficulty, hoisted on board. The ice upon which he stood, was, by the action of the steamer's paddles, so broken, that the quadruped navigator was plunged into the water; but, by getting slings under him, he was finally rescued. [N. Y. Globe.

Congress Assessed for a Runaway Husband.—The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Patriot says: 'Mr. Giddings is in high feather just now, on account of a petition to Congress from a Mrs. Mary Johnson, somewhere in the State of New York. She represents that her husband was in our army in Mexico—that he deserted to the enemy—that he was captured and brought back—that General Taylor would not allow him to remain, but sent him off—that he is lost to her, in consequence, if not to the world—and, that as Congress is paying for negoes in a similar way, as in the Pacheco Case, and she considers one white man worth two negroes, she prays to be paid two thousand dollars, (double the sum paid for Pacheco's Lewis,) for her lost husband."

Prohibition of Slaves as Merchandize.—An immediate and extra session of the Legislature of Mississippi is demanded by the citizens of Hancock county, in that State, for the purpose of enacting laws, prohibiting further ingress of slaves from the border States of the South. In their petition to the Governor, they represent that the States of Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky, and Missouri, where slavery has become unprofitable, from the uncertain tenure by which slaves are held, are now throwing an immense black population on the extreme Southern States, which is destined to increase with great rapidity. To avoid this result, they propose to compel the more Northern of the slaveholding States to retain their slaves within their own borders.

The other day some persons broke into the store of Mr. Steward, of Gardner, Me., and let out of his casks, by boring holes in them, liquors to the amount of from one thousand dollars upwards.

VARIETY.

The Louisville Courier says that great quantities of counterfeit half dollars, of the American coin, are in circulation in that quarter, of which it says:—

"Those we saw were dated 1843 and 45, and the entire imprint and stamp were exact copies of the original. The outer surface of the coin is undoubtedly silver, but the body of the piece is composed of some other substance, of a gravity less than silver, and thus by the weight it is readily detected. The counterfeits are also somewhat thicker than the genuine, and do not possess the clear ringing sound of silver."

There is on exhibition in this city a curious invention in the way of a churn. The milk is churned by a process of suction exercised by revolving buckets, which are turned by a handle to which they are attached. By this operation, the frothy substance of the milk is forced by the chemical action of the air into a mass—thus forming the butter. The great advantages which this method possesses over the ordinary churn, are said to be in the time and labor saved, and an increase in the quantity of butter. The time occupied is not more than three or four minutes, and milk can be churned at any degree of temperature, from forty to sixty-five degrees.

Within four years from the 1st of January, 1849, the charters of nineteen banks in the State of New York will expire, having, in the aggregate, about nine million six hundred and seventy thousand dollars capital; and within two years thereafter, the charter of sixteen more will expire, making five million seven hundred thousand dollars capital; in all, fifteen million four hundred thousand dollars. The question is becoming a very serious one to the banks and the community, whether they shall close up their business, or organize under the general banking law.

A clergyman was asked to drink wine at a wedding, but, very properly, refused. 'What, Mr. M——,' said one of the guests, 'don't you drink wine at a wedding?' 'No, sir,' was the reply, 'I will take a glass of water.' 'But, sir,' said the officious guest, 'you recollect the advice of Paul to Timothy, to take a little wine for his infirmity.' 'I have no infirmity,' was the reverend gentleman's reply.

A gentleman reading a paper in an Albany Hotel, on Wednesday morning, was accosted by a little half-naked girl, who asked him for a penny. He handed her a half-dollar piece by mistake. The girl went out, was absent a few moments, and returned with forty-nine cents, which she handed to the astonished gentleman. He immediately took measures to have the little innocent provided for.

The Watertown (Wis.) Chronicle says that the fishing at Beaver Dam continues as good as ever. Tons of the finest pickerel have this Winter been taken there. At an air-hole in the ice, about two miles above the village, fish are taken in large quantities with a common pitchfork. Incredible as this may appear, it is nevertheless true. One man caught a cord of fish in this way, in the course of several hours.

The Pecan Crop, once in three years, is a great affair in Texas. It is considered equal to the cotton crop, for one hand can gather from one to three bushels a day, and the picking season lasts from three to eight weeks. It is estimated that this year, fifty thousand bushels of Pecans would be exported from Guadalupe alone, which bring more than one dollar a bushel on the spot.

Francis Jackson, of Boston, has withdrawn from the Charitable Mechanic Association, with which he has been connected for a third of a century, because liquors are sold at a house which that Society owns, but has leased for ten years without any prohibition or restriction.

The Senate of Ohio has passed an act, by a very large majority, in favor of taking the sense of the people on the propriety of calling a Convention to amend the Constitution of that State.

The Onondaga (N. Y.) Salt Spring, on the State Reservation, yielded during the last year, 4,737,526 bushels of salt, being an increase of 785,774 bushels upon the quantity produced the previous year.

A. C. Dodge, of Ohio, is the son of Henry Dodge, of Wisconsin. They are both members of the United States Senate, or will be at the next session. Father and Son in the Senate at the same time, seems strange enough, and is believed not to have happened before.

A meeting has been held, and resolutions adopted, by the people of Texas, claiming all the territory to the Rio Grande; and repudiating the Wilmot Proviso, declaring that Congress has no right to pass such a law bearing upon territories.

Mr. Thompson, a member of the lower branch of the Pennsylvania Legislature, died while delivering a speech on Thursday.

Philip Duffy has been sentenced to 14 years imprisonment in the State Prison for the murder of his sister, in August last, at La Fayette, La.

There are no less than eleven applications before the Pennsylvania Legislature for the erection of new counties in that State.

The Judiciary Committee of the State of Michigan have reported a bill to restore Capital Punishment for murder in that State.

The cholera prevailed to a considerable extent at Caddo, in the State of Louisiana, at the last accounts.

A dog supposed to be rabid bit six persons and eight or nine dogs in Roxbury, Mass., the other day. He was killed, with several of the dogs he had bitten.

The Arkansas Democrat learns that discoveries of lead have been made ten miles west of Little Rock.

The Judiciary Committee of the Senate of Pennsylvania has reported a bill abolishing capital punishment, and substituting imprisonment for life.

Iowa is estimated to have a population of 160,000.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

W. C. KENYON, A. M., } Principals.
IRA SAYLES, A. M., }

Assisted by nine able and experienced Teachers, five in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

The Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past ten years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to also continue to merit a share of public patronage.

Extensive buildings are now erected for the accommodation of students, and for Recitation and Lecture Rooms, &c. They occupy an eligible position, and are finished in the best style of modern architecture; and the different apartments are heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and Gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board and rooms can also be had in private families, if particularly desired.

Each room for those who board in the Hall is furnished with a bed and bedding, a table, two chairs, and a pail.

The plan of instruction adopted in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the student, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The Health, the Manners, and the Morals of our Students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

REGULAR ACADEMIC EXERCISES.

The regular exercises, at which all the students will be required to attend, unless specially excused, are, Chapel exercises each morning during the term; Recitations, from two to four, five days each week, from Monday morning till Friday evening. Compositions and Declamations, one-half day, once in two weeks, Literary, Scientific, and Moral Lectures by the Principals. Public Worship, once in each week, either on Saturday or Sunday, according as the students may be in the habit of keeping the Sabbath, either on the seventh or first day of the week.

ADMISSION.

Candidates for admission as students, must present testimonials of good moral character, or be known to possess such a character, and must be willing to comply unreservedly with the foregoing regulations; and no one will be permitted to receive instructions in any class, until all academic bills, for the term in prospect, be paid or satisfactorily arranged.

ACADEMIC TERMS.

The Academic Year for 1848-9 consists of three terms as follows:

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 15, 1848, and ending Thursday, November 23, 1848.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, December 5, 1848, and ending Thursday, March 15, 1849.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, April 3, 1849, and ending July 12, 1849.

As the plan of instruction in this Institution, laid out for each class, will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue through the term, and accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the terms.

N. B. Students who are expecting to teach during the winter or summer, will specify such intention on entering in the beginning of the fall or spring term; and, for the special accommodation of such, a day will be set apart at first, on which they can leave, if they wish; and they will not be permitted to leave on any other day, nor will any other than teachers be permitted to leave on the day specified.

Farther, it is of the utmost importance that the student be present at the day of the opening of the term, as on that and the succeeding day, the students entering are examined and classified.

EXPENSES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Board, per term, | from $14 50 to | $18 00 |
| Room-rent, | | 1 50 |
| Washing, | | 2 50 |
| Fuel, | spring and fall, 75 cents, winter, | 1 50 |
| Tuition, | from $3 50 to | 5 00 |
| Lights, | | 1 50 |
| Incidental Expenses, | | 25 |
| Extras—Music on the Piano Forte, | | 10 00 |
| Oil Painting, | | 7 00 |
| Drawing, | | 2 00 |

The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, except the extras above mentioned, need not exceed eighty-five dollars.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment, or satisfactory arrangement.

Every student wishing to have washing done in the Hall, should have each article marked, so as to avoid exchange and losses.

CHINESE VERSION OF THE SCRIPTURES.

The following communication has been in possession of the Board since last summer. It was not thought prudent to lay it before the public at that time, lest subsequent information might show that our missionaries had fallen into some mistake as to the subject upon which it treats. The time has now come, when we think it best to give it to the readers of the Recorder. Our readers need only bear in mind, that some time in 1843 a convention of Protestant missionaries was held at Hong-Kong, to take measures to revise the Chinese version of the Scriptures. The committee of revisal subsequently met in Shanghai, when the communication of our missionaries was addressed to them, and elicited the subjoined reply from Dr. Bridgeman.

Letter of Br'n Carpenter and Wardner.

Messrs. Medhurst, Bridgeman, Boone, Stronach, and Milne, constituting the committee for revising the Chinese version of the sacred Scriptures:—

DEAR BRETHREN,—Our desire to second every effort for extending through this Empire the pure word of life, and the consequent interest we feel in the result of your present labors, we beg you to accept as our only apology for addressing you at this time.

At a meeting of missionaries of various Protestant denominations, held at Hong-Kong, August 23d, 1843, it appears that the following resolution was adopted :—

"Resolved, That any translation of the sacred Scriptures into Chinese, issued with the approbation of the body of Protestant Missionaries, be in exact conformity to the Hebrew and Greek originals in sense; and, so far as the idiom of the Chinese language will allow, in style and manner also."

Allow us to express our entire and hearty concurrence in the above resolution, and our high regard for the principle it contains. The simple fact that "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God," is a commanding reason why all translations of it should be made in strict accordance with the original. The only object of this address, is to entreat you to carry out the import of the above resolution to its full and legitimate extent.

But lest our solicitude on this subject should appear to be gratuitous, it becomes us to specify. Allow us, then, in Christian faithfulness, to express the deep sorrow we feel, on finding in use among missionaries themselves, certain terms which, in the way they are applied, we judge not to be in conformity to the original; and the fact that they are so used, we deem a sufficient reason for inviting your special attention to them in this early stage of your progress.

The first we will mention, are the terms le-pai-nyi, (ceremony-worship-day,) and ur-se-nyi, (rest-day.) The former of these terms seems to have obtained some variety of usage. Generally, we believe, it is used to designate the first day of the week. But it has recently been printed, and widely circulated, as a translation of the Greek term Sabbaton, which, by general consent, refers to the seventh day of the week. Without knowing the intention of the Committee in reference to this term, we beg leave respectfully to object to its use altogether as constituting part of the Chinese Scriptures; and for the following reasons :—

First, because we fail to find evidence in the Scriptures that the first day of the week, to which it is generally applied, was regarded as the worship day. A very limited number of meetings for worship are recorded in the New Testament as having been held on that day. We suppose it was lawful then, as now, to hold religious meetings on any day. But if the holding of a number of religious meetings on any particular day entitles that day to the high designation of the worship day, then, in order to understand this rule, we must know how many such meetings would be required to endow it with that title. And if the day which is honored with the greatest number of such meetings be entitled to this appellation, then certainly it belongs to the seventh, and not to the first day. In the Acts of the Apostles, there is barely one instance mentioned of a religious meeting having been held on the first day of the week, and that was a night meeting. But at Antioch, in Pisidia, the Apostle Paul preached on two successive Sabbaths, not only to the Jews, but also to the Gentiles. At Philippi, on the same day of the week, he preached by the river side. At Thessalonica he preached on three Sabbath days; and at Corinth, it is said of him, that he preached every Sabbath, and that he continued there a year and six months. Here, then, are about eighty meetings for worship held on the seventh day of the week. Moreover, it is said that this was in accordance with the Apostle's custom.

But even upon the supposition that the majority of religious meetings were held on the first day of the week, then, before we could consistently give it the above-named title, in a translation of the Scriptures, the question would need to be raised, whether God has given it such a title. Our second objection, therefore, to the use of this term, as applied to the first day of the week, is, that there is no term in the original to which it conforms in sense.

Our third objection to this term, thus applied, is that both the law of God, and apostolic example, are continually pointing out another day, the day which God blessed in the beginning, and which had been held as sacred from the creation of the world—the enduring monument which God himself has reared, to keep in remembrance the great truth which all are prone to forget, and which the heathen especially need to be taught, namely, that He alone is the Creator of the world, thus furnishing mankind with an incontrovertible witness against all Atheism and all Idolatry. Did the Apostles assist to remove from the earth a monument so much needed? Let their example testify. We have already seen what that was. Did they do it by their instruction? Let their teachings, in which they distinctly enforced the whole Decalogue, testify. Again, let the silence of the envious and unbelieving Jews testify. They never failed to criminate the disciples for even the slightest departure from the ceremonial law, and even resorted to bribery that they might condemn them. And had they given any instruction, either by precept or example, that would tend in any way to impair the sacred character of the ancient Sabbath, a thousand voices would have been raised against them, and in its defense; but, instead thereof, there is perfect silence.

We have just referred you to the Decalogue, which we believe you all hold to be binding. We wish here to remark, that the law enjoins not only a seventh day, but the seventh day—the same that was sanctified in the beginning. To prove that the seventh day is essential to the institution, nothing more is necessary, than to remark, that God's blessing and sanctifying the seventh or last day of the week, and that for a specified reason, applicable to no other day, is the very thing which constituted the institution in question. In strict accordance with this view, we find the inspired writers of the New Testament, invariably employing the term Sabbath to designate the seventh day of the week. We hope the Committee will imitate their example.

The term le-pai-nyi has also been applied by missionaries to the seventh day of the week. The Committee will see at once, that this is not in accordance with the original. If the original had been translated, instead of being transferred, our English term to designate the Sabbath would have been the rest-day, as you must be aware. We object, therefore, to the term le-pai-nyi, as applied to the seventh day of the week—first, because it is not in exact accordance with the original in sense; and, secondly, because, so long as the same term is used to designate another day, its tendency is to confound things that ought to be kept distinct. The seventh day is not the first day, neither is the first day the seventh. And the law of God which enjoins the one cannot be made to enjoin the other.

The next term to which we would invite your attention is ur-se-nyi, or rest-day. This, we believe, is the true title by which to designate the seventh day of the week, it being in exact accordance with the Hebrew and Greek terms for Sabbath. We are always grieved, when we hear this term applied to the first day of the week, because we believe it to be a misapplication of Scripture names. We are unwilling to believe that the Committee, in the translation of the Scriptures, will be guilty of so grave an offense against the majesty of the divine law. The consequences of giving things their right names, we hope you will not fear. God will take care of them. When Jehovah put His name upon the institution of the weekly Sabbath, it was in these words, "The seventh day is the rest-day of the Lord thy God." We believe that to this hour, this same seventh day possesses all the sacredness which the name of the Lord our God can confer upon it. And in the name and on the behalf of the Lord our God, we beseech you to do justice to this institution, in the work that is now growing under your hands.

With reference to the term ———, (washing-ceremony,) which is used by some of the missionaries to represent the ordinance of baptism it appears to us to be quite too indefinite to express the exact meaning of the Greek term baptidzo. We hope you will be able to find some term that will more definitely express the sense of the original.

In conclusion, permit us to say, Give us a faithful translation of the inspired word, and we shall be most happy to unite with you in extending it to those who are perishing for lack of vision. Yours respectfully,

S. CARPENTER,
2d month, 16th, 1848. N. WARDNER.

THE REPLY.

SHANGHAI, Feb. 16th, 1848.

DEAR BRETHREN,—Your note of this date has been received by the Committee to which it was addressed, and I have been directed to acknowledge its receipt, and to assure you that the Committee will endeavor to keep in mind the points to which you have drawn attention, and especially the rule requiring exact conformity to the Hebrew and Greek originals.

The Committee feel that they are engaged in a very difficult work, and they trust all who love the truth as it is revealed, will unceasingly pray that it may be faithfully translated into the language of the Chinese.

In behalf of the Committee, yours sincerely,
E. C. BRIDGEMAN, Rec. Sec.

To Messrs. S. Carpenter and N. Wardner.

THE FATHERLESS.

BY MRS. HENRY LYNCH.

Speak softly to the fatherless,
And check the harsh reply
That sends the crimson to the cheek,
The tear-drop to the eye.
They have a weight of loneliness
In this rude world to bear;
Then gently raise the fallen bud,
The drooping floweret spare.

Speak kindly to the fatherless!
The lowliest of their band,
God keepeth as the waters,
In the hollow of his hand;
Tis sad to see life's evening sun,
Go down in sorrow's shroud,
But sadder still when morning's dawn
Is darkened by the cloud.

Look mildly on the fatherless!
Ye may have power to wile
Their hearts from saddened memory
By the magic of a smile.
Deal gently with those little ones;
Be pitiful, and He,
The friend and father of us all,
Shall gently deal with thee!

A THRILLING ADVENTURE AND NARROW ESCAPE.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Below you have an abstract from the Journal of the Exploring Expedition by Capt. Charles Wilkes, relating to his visit, in June, 1841, to the celebrated volcano of Mauna Loa or Kilauca, Sandwich Islands, one of the most remarkable specimens of volcanic eruption in the known world. It has an elevation of near 16,000 feet, with an immense crater, nearly two miles in length, one mile in breadth, and several hundred feet deep. In a constant state of terrific ebullition, it may in truth be called a "burning mountain." "The oldest native traditions record it to have been in a state of operation from the earliest periods of time, and that it never overflowed its banks." J. S.

After having spent several days on the summit, making a survey, obtaining specimens, and examining the exterior, they made preparations for descending to survey the crater, and procure some of the gases, etc., and likewise some of the liquid lava by dipping it up from the boiling caldron; and having nothing suitable for this purpose, they were necessitated to make use of a frying-pan, with a pole lashed to the handle.

In the morning, Dr. Judd, with a party, commenced his descent down the ravine into the crater, and thence along the black ledge to its western part, where he descended, and after reaching the bottom he found a convenient steam hole, whence a strong sulphurous gas issued, and there he arranged the apparatus for collecting it. This was found to answer the purpose, and was readily and completely absorbed by water. The gas was then collected in a vial, containing red cabbage water, turned blue by lime, when it became intensely red.

Dr. Judd then sought for a place where he might dip up some of the recent and yet fluid lava, but found none sufficiently liquid for the purpose. Failing here, he proceeded towards the great fiery lake at the southern extremity of the crater. He found that the ascent towards this was rapid, because the successive flowings of the lava had formed crusts which lapped over each other. This rock was so dark in color as to be almost black, and so hot as to act upon spittle just as iron heated near to redness would have done. On breaking through the outer crust, which was two or three inches thick, the mass beneath, although solid, was of a cherry red. The pole with which the crust was pierced, took fire as it was withdrawn. It was evidently impossible to approach any nearer in this direction; for although the heat might not be so intense as to prevent walking on the crust, yet the crust itself might be too weak to bear the weight, and to break through would have been to meet death in its most appalling form. Dr. Judd, therefore, turned towards the west bank, on which he mounted to a higher level, over stones too hot to be touched, but from which his feet were defended by stout woolen stockings, and sandals of hide, worn over his shoes. When he had proceeded as far as he could in this direction, he saw at the distance of some thirty feet from him, a stream of lava running down the declivity over which he and his companions had ascended. Even this distance was too great to be reached over, and the intervening rocks had become so heated by the continued stream, that they could not be traversed.

At this time they were very near the great lake, but could not see its surface, which was about twenty feet higher than the spot where they stood. Jets of lava were, however, observed rising about twenty-five feet and falling back again into the lake. Dr. Judd despaired of gratifying his wishes by obtaining lava in the liquid state, and ordered a retreat.

On his return, the party passed the small crater which has been spoken of, and which, by comparison with the larger one, appeared cool. Smoke, and a little ignious matter, were issuing from a small cone in its center; but with this exception, a crust of solid lava covered the bottom. On the sides of this crater, Dr. Judd saw some fine specimens of capillary glass, which he was anxious to obtain for our collection. He, therefore, by the aid of the hand of one of the natives, descended, and began to collect specimens. When fairly down, he was in danger of falling, in consequence of the narrowness of the footing; but, in spite of this difficulty, his anxiety to collect the best specimens enticed him onwards. While thus advancing, he saw and heard a slight movement in the lava about fifty feet from him, which was twice repeated, and curiosity led him to turn to approach the place where the motion occurred. In an instant, the crust was broken assunder by a terrific heave, and a jet of molten lava, full fifteen feet in diameter, rose to the height of about forty-five feet, with a most appalling noise. He instantly turned, for the purpose of escaping; but found that he was now under a projecting ledge, which opposed his ascent, and the place where he had descended was some feet distant. The heat was already too great to permit him to turn his face towards it, and was every moment increasing; while the violence of the throes, which shook the rock beneath his feet, augmented. Although he considered his life as lost, he did not omit the means of preserving it; but offering a mental prayer for the divine aid, he strove, although in vain, to scale the projecting rock. While thus engaged, he called in English upon his native attendants for aid; and looking upwards, saw the friendly hand of Kalumo, who on this fearful occasion had not abandoned his spiritual guide and friend, extended towards him. Ere he could grasp it, the fiery jet again rose above their heads, and Kalumo shrunk back, scorched and terrified, until, excited by a second appeal, he again stretched forth his hand, and seizing Dr. Judd, with a giant's grasp, their joint efforts placed him on the ledge. Another moment, and all aid would have been unavailing to save Dr. Judd from perishing in the fiery deluge.

In looking for the natives, they were seen some hundreds of yards distant, running as fast as their legs could carry them. On his calling to them, however, they returned with the frying-pan and pole. By this time, about ten or fifteen minutes had elapsed, the crater was full of lava, running over at the lower or northern side, when Dr. Judd was enabled to dip up a pan of it. It was, however, too cold to take an impression, and had a crust on its top. On a second trial, he was successful; and, while it was red hot, he endeavored to stamp it with a navy button, but the whole sunk by its own weight, being composed of a frothy lava, and became suddenly cold, leaving only the mark of the general shape of the button, without any distinct impression. The cake he thus obtained (for it resembled precisely a charred pound cake) was added to our collection, and is now in the hall where they are deposited. Dr. Judd now found that he had no time to lose, for the lava was flowing so rapidly to the north, that their retreat might be cut off, and the whole party be destroyed. They therefore at once took leave of the spot, and only effected their escape by running. When the danger was past, Dr. Judd began to feel some smarting at his wrists and elbows, and perceived that his shirt was a little scorched. By the time he reached the tents, and we had examined him, he was found to be severely burned on each wrist, in spots of the size of a dollar, and also on his elbows, and wherever his shirt had touched his skin. Kalumo's face was one blister, particularly that side which had been most exposed to the fire.

The crater had been previously measured by Dr. Judd, and was found to be thirty-eight feet deep, by two hundred feet in diameter. The rapidity of its filling (in twelve minutes) will give some idea of the quantity of the fluid mass. The discharge from the large lake, during the night of the 17th, must have been equal to fifteen million cubic feet of melted rock. This, undoubtedly, found cavities to relieve it on the line of the eruption. It is impossible to calculate the discharge from the smaller lake; but supposing it had continued as rapid as it was at the first filling, it would have thrown out by the next day upwards of two hundred millions of cubic feet of lava.

After being at this volcano four days, says Capt. Wilkes, I was as little disposed to leave it as at first. It is one of those places that grow in interest, and excite all the energies, both of body and mind; the one to undergo the necessary fatigue, and the other to comprehend the various phenomena.

PRAYER AND CARE.

It is a beautiful observation of Olshausen, in his commentary on the closing verses of the 6th chapter of Matthew, that 'prayer is the opposite of care, because in prayer man commits the care to God.' The Christian has a Father in heaven who knows all his wants, and who is able and willing to supply them; and He who clothes the lilly, and feeds the ravens, who watches over the falling sparrow, and notes its resting-place, who bestows upon the frail and perishable flowers of the field beauties which no human handiwork can imitate, and which no royal wealth can buy,—He who formed the body and endowed it with life, has promised to provide for his own children. The natural man cares, but does not pray. The heathen, having no idea of a superintending providence, believing only in a blind and inexorable fate, are filled with anxiety for the future. The men of the world are troubled about their plans, and are burdened even with their riches. But the Christian is exhorted to 'Be careful for nothing; but in everything, by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, to let his requests be made known to God.' When he has prayed, then he should cease to care, to fret, to worry about results. Thenceforth the care belongs to God. God's children should look to their Father in heaven for present temporal good, even for the ordinary comforts and necessaries of life. Will any child of God, who truly prays, 'Father in heaven, give me this day my daily bread,' ever be left to perish with hunger? Christians, troubled and perplexed, in poverty and want, cease to be anxious about temporal things, and look in faith to God, 'Casting all care upon Him, for He careth for you.' Let prayer be your antidote for care. [Independent.

THE QUAKER AND THE LITTLE THIEF.

Children, have you ever heard of Isaac T. Hopper, or 'Friend Isaac,' as he is familiarly called? He belongs to the Society of Friends, and should you ever happen to meet him, you would not need to be told that he was a very good-natured man, not particularly averse to an occasional joke. Well, a few days ago, the old gentleman called at our office; and among the stories he told was the following :—

While residing in Philadelphia, I had in my yard a pear tree, which bore most excellent fruit. Between my yard and that of one of my neighbors, was a very high fence, with sharp iron pickets upon it. Now I did not put these pickets there. I don't approve of such things. It was the work of the landlord. Well, one year, when the pear tree bore very abundantly, there happened to be a girl belonging to my neighbor's family, who was as fond of pears as I was myself, and I saw her several times climb the high fence, and walk carefully along between the pickets, until she came opposite the pear tree. Then she would reach over, fill her basket with fruit, and carry it away.

One day I called upon my young friend with a basket of the nicest pears I could find.

'Rebecca,' said I, 'here are some nice pears for thee.'

She did not know what I meant. I explained: 'Rebecca, I brought these pears on purpose for thee. I wish to make thee a present of them, as I perceive thou art over fond of them.'

'I don't want them, sir.'

'Ah, but thou dost, Rebecca; or thou would not take so much pains almost every day to get them.'

Still she would not take the pears, and I became more eloquent.

'Rebecca,' I said, 'thou must go and get a basket for these pears, or I shall leave them on the carpet. I am sure thou must like them, or thou wouldst not climb such a high and dangerous fence to get them. Those pickets are very sharp, Rebecca; and if thy feet should slip, as thou art walking on the fence, and I am much afraid they will, thou wouldst get hurt a great deal more than the pears are worth. Thou art welcome to the fruit; but I hope I shall not see thee expose thyself so foolishly again. But perhaps thou hast taken the pears so long, that they seem to belong to thee, as much as they do to me. So I do not wish to blame thee, any more than thy conscience does. But, pray look out for those pickets. They are dangerous. I would have them removed, but I am afraid the landlord would not like it. Thou art welcome to the pears, though, and I will bring a basket full every day.'

The little girl did not steal any more pears; and I may venture to say that she was sufficiently rebuked before the end of the pear season, for I remembered my promise, and carried her a basket full of the pears every morning.

FEAR OF BAPTISTS.

We miss now from our public meetings Elds. Williams and Peak; also the venerable form, and the suppressed and earnest tones, of the late Secretary of the Foreign Mission. These men were fond of their anecdotes, Father Peak especially. I shall never forget the account he used to give of Rev. Hezekiah Smith's first visit to Haverhill.

There were no Baptists there then, or none that dared show themselves. Smith made his first appearance in a convention of Congregational ministers, and was taken for one of their number. He was appointed to preach, and produced a great impression. He preached again next day, and crowds assembled to hear the new and popular 'Presbyterian minister.' Many were anxious to retain him in Haverhill; they had never heard preaching on this wise.

It was whispered, at length, that he belonged to the Baptist persuasion, and the thermometer of public favor fell at once to the freezing point. He must be got rid of at all hazards. The sheriff was sent to warn him out of the town. Smith was a tall and noble-looking man, of a portly and commanding attitude, and the poor officer was frightened—his hand shook so that he was unable to read what was on the paper. 'I warn you,' said the man of the law, with a tremulous and hesitating voice, 'off of God's earth.' Mr. Smith, who was agitated with neither fear nor anger, nor a consciousness of being in the wrong, very pleasantly replied, 'My dear sir, where shall I go to?' 'Go to! any where—to the Isle of Shoals, if you please.' [Neal's Address.

A REVIVAL INCIDENT.—In a town in Massachusetts, while a revival was in progress, an individual who had been twenty years a drunkard, came to his pastor, inquiring, 'Can you tell me what such a sinner as I am must do to be saved?' His pastor, filled with astonishment, asked, 'What is the matter?' He replied, 'Matter enough, I have not slept much for these three weeks.' 'But, how came you to feel so?' 'Why, I have been watching my son, and a young woman, a member of my family, (both of whom had been converted,) to see if there was any change in them, and, after a most careful examination, I am compelled to believe that there is a real change in them. If these young people, who are moral, must be born again, what will become of me, what will become of me?' The gospel directions were given to him, and he soon brought forth fruit worthy of repentance. Some twenty years have now elapsed, and he continues to this day, to walk in newness of life. Is not this a brand plucked from the burning?

LETTERS FROM ILLINOIS—NO. 9.

PLEASANT HILL, near Farmington, Ill.,
12th of 2d mo., 1849.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

In coming to this field of labor, and in writing this series of letters, I disclaim all intention of cherishing on my own part, or of fostering in others, a mere worldly speculation, in the common acceptation of that term. The end designed by the whole movement is the promotion of the cause of truth and righteousness. For some reasons, I might have preferred a situation among the established churches at the East. But when I contemplated the interests of the cause with which I am conscientiously identified, and the great and expanding prospects of the Western States, I feel fully satisfied that I could find no more important or promising field for Christian labor in the whole world. Then the beauty and luxuriance of nature, and the unfettered freedom of society "AT the WEST," are to me ample compensation for foregoing the refinements, luxuries, and cultivation of the East. I never indulge a wish nor a thought of ever returning to the East for a residence. Every thing in the resources and prospects of the western country gives vigor and buoyancy to the public mind. Their broad expanse, their boundless agricultural and mineral resources, and the great commercial thoroughfares that present an ample market for all their vast amount of productions, solemnly and certainly portend that they are destined soon to be the residence of such a population as must sway the hand of empire, and determine the destinies of a great nation. I believe, however, the word of Jehovah, which promises the empire to our Lord and his Christ, and that he will perform the word that he has spoken—"Every plant that my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up,"—and am, therefore, never discouraged at the thought that we are a few people among the swelling multitudes of our fellow men. No! If I could, I would plant a Sabbath-keeping and gospel-witnessing church on every highway, close by every great mart, and in the midst of every valuable agricultural district, in the nation. I would have them stand as conspicuous to the North American Union as the Alleghany Mountains, and spread the influence of the institutions of Jehovah and of Jesus over the broad surface of society, like the wide-spreading prairies of the West.

In the present state of society, and the present apparent course of divine Providence, the most effective means of promoting the end proposed, is to plant church colonies in the most promising parts of the rising States of the western country. To do this, we need concert of action. Locations must be sought out, homes procured, and information diffused, that such as are able, and have a heart for the work, may join in the enterprise. Much praise is due to those brethren who, in other settlements, have led the way; and who, by their private correspondence, have drawn others after them, until they have raised up efficient societies and churches, bearing their testimony for the truth to the rising population around them. But much more may yet be done, and in many other places, by united denominational effort. All the western States offer great opportunities for such church colonies. I have written this series of letters respecting this beginning in Illinois—not because I think there could be no other field of promise found in other parts, and in other States—but to show that here we have a new and inviting field; here we have a beginning, and a prospect as promising as any can be in a new country; and, as I propose to show in my next, facilities for reaching it equal to any part of the Union. We want, however, good men and true to come—men not easily discouraged—men not easily offended—men who, in godly simplicity and sincerity, will manifest their love of the truth in their daily walk and conversation—men whose examples will speak aright. It is not the help of the worldly-minded and covetous man we seek; there are enough such men here already. It is not to build up a mere sect that we labor, but "a peculiar people, zealous of good works." Most men bring their religion with them as it is; "and every one will serve his own god." Nearly all denominations in this country have their representatives here; but society is as yet unformed; it is very much in a moulding state, and the morals and discipline of churches and societies quite lax, at least so it appears to me. Private property and personal rights are as much respected and as safe here as at the East; but unoccupied lands, surveyed and mapped by the officers of the United States Government, that are not occupied by actual settlers, and such patented lots as are not protected by near residents, are openly robbed of their wood and coal by all classes, the rich and the poor; and, in this respect, it is "like priest, like deacon, and like people!" There are honorable exceptions to this, and I devoutly hope, that if ever we form a church here, it will be on such principles, that it shall be said of them, They all eschew these things, and walk in the commandments and ordinances of the Lord BLAMELESS. My prayer is, that we may have a God-honoring people, and not be of those who do "every man that which is right in his own eyes." I know we have belonging to us men of these principles; and to all such as find it their duty and interest to emigrate, I would say, Come on, brother, here is a field for you to labor in; your example and influence are wanted as really as the public labors of the missionary; and here are as promising opportunities and resources for the comfort and prosperity of yourself and family, as can be found in any part of the world. We have formed no church organization at present, not because we have not the materials, but because we are expecting a number more to come in during the ensuing season, and we not only covet the best gifts, but we want as much concert and unity in our movements as we can reasonably obtain. Our meetings on the Sabbath day are regular and comforting; and our intercourse with other Christian societies is free and pleasant. Every devoted servant of the Lord Jesus Christ, male or female, who wishes to do good in the world, may find ample field for Christian effort in the Great West. Well qualified school-teachers, of established Christian principles, are greatly needed here, and may benefit themselves and essentially aid the cause by coming into the neighborhood of any one of our settlements. Only be here a little before the season for a summer or winter school to commence, and they can readily find employment. Thousands of acres of land can be obtained at very moderate prices in the neighborhood of every one of our settlements—woods, prairies, or glades; and in many of the neighboring towns, the opportunities for other settlements are equally as good; and the opportunities for mechanics, artisans, and manufacturers of all wares common to an agricultural and commercial population, are equally numerous and promising. I had always understood, while at the East, that there was but little money in circulation in the western country; and I have no doubt but that there have been times when it was literally and sadly true; but it is not so here at present. The miserable system of paying in store pay, is rapidly going out of use. If any body wants work done, he expects he must pay money for it. A boss brick-layer told me a few days ago, that last year he did work to the amount of $1,600, and took more than $1,200 in cash for it; and the rest in articles and trade that he wanted for his immediate supplies in his family; and that he has engagements for jobs to the amount of $1,800 for the ensuing year, and in every case he expects his employers have the money by them to pay for it as soon as each job is done. One of our brethren went to a shoemaker last week to ask him to mend or make a pair of boots, and although he had the money with him, he was answered, "I have six weeks' work by me now, that I have already promised, and it would not be prudent for me to take in any more yet." I have given the facts as they occurred under my own observation, and then our friends can judge for themselves of the state of society, and the prospects they would have in immigrating to these parts.

Our plans and our prospects are now before the friends of home missions, and we ask of them such countenance and support as their sense of duty and their circumstances dictate.

ERRATA.—Two mistakes occurred in my letter upon the soil and surface formation of this part of Illinois, published in the 32d number of the Recorder, which should be corrected. In Letter No. 5, 43d line, instead of "the weak growth," read great growth; and in the next column, instead of "oak lumber at two dollars per thousand feet," read ten dollars.

☞ The publication of the following article is due to "Omicron," in view of the implication under which he has rested. But we think that if more is to be said upon this subject, (except in the way of explanation,) it should have reference to Religious Fairs in general, rather than to the Fair at Westerly in particular.

RELIGIOUS FAIRS.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

"A Rhode Island Congregationalist," in your paper of Feb. 1st, has attempted to make out, that in my communication of January 11th, concerning Religious Fairs, I made false statements, that I had been duped by the prejudice of others, or misled by my own imagination, or was excited by jealousy on account of the inferiority of my own church. In order to relieve your readers of any impression that I have "duped" them, or "made false statements," I will give the matters of fact in the case—such matters of fact as can be substantiated by eye-witnesses, and Rhode Island Baptists, if not by Rhode Island Congregationalists—men "not to be daunted."

At these fairs, (for there have now been two,) there were loaves of cake, in which were concealed gold rings. These loaves were cut into small pieces, and sold, with the understanding that some of the purchasers would come in possession of one or more of the gold rings.

There were also two dolls, set up at ten dollars each, tickets for which were sold at 25 cents each, to the number of eighty. The lottery was then drawn or decided, in order to ascertain to whom the dolls belonged; which done, the dolls were delivered to their lawful owners.

A bedstead, measuring from one to two feet, more or less, was disposed of in a similar way, at the moderate price of six or eight dollars.

A box, containing numerous articles, of little value, was exhibited. By paying six pence, more or less, the person could thrust in his hand, and take out one article, and only one. This box was called the "grab-box."

A Post-Office (so called) was opened, where letters, previously written, were offered for sale. The whole postage amounted, I understand, in one night, to about sixteen dollars. The following is a verbatim et literatim copy of a letter sold at said post-office:—

"BLUE BOSTON.

"Missy, my Missy wants to borrow your Wimica Womaca No be Jelica beater Tom Thumica; and if she breaks your Wimica Womaca No be Jelica beater Tom Thumica, when she gets a new one, she will return it. ANGELINA NEEDFUL."

Relative to the mock marriage, the fact was this, as near as I can ascertain. Two dolls, dressed so as to represent a young gentleman and a young lady, were to have been exhibited, attended by a young miss, which exhibition was named a mock or mimic marriage. Who first christened it by such a name, may be uncertain; but, that such it was called by those who knew, need not be denied, as proof is abundant. And the reason why said exhibition did not take place, was on account of a death in the community; so say my informers.

The above are the facts in the case, if reliance can be placed upon Rhode Island testimony. I now request the reader to compare this with my communication of the 11th of January, and then judge who has made "false statements," or been "misled or duped."

Neither in this, nor my former article, was there any design to "cast reflections," but simply to expose what the writer believed to be a growing evil in the church, viz. an approximating to a sinful conformity to the world. But in the case alluded to, Congregationalist says, he "did believe the end justified the means." The end was the affording "aid to the new meeting-house now in progress." That this was the object of the fair, I offer as proof an article published in the Independent, a Congregational paper published in New York, the fifth number, on the third page, fifth column, top of the column, headed, "Melancholy Accident at Westerly." Congregationalist denies this to have been the object of the fair. I affirmed that it was, and still affirm the same, if the correspondent of the Independent told the truth. But to return; the end, viz. the finishing or furnishing of the house, justified the means used to raise the funds. This doctrine in religious ethics, I affirm to be unscriptural and pernicious. The end can never justify the means, in religion, unless the means are according to Christian morality. The rule of Christian action is the Bible. Papacy practiced her "pious frauds" under the plea that "the end sanctified the means." This doctrine crucified Jesus Christ. See John 11: 49, 50; also 18: 14. If religious fairs are in accordance with Christian principles, they ought to be encouraged, and a plain statement of how they are managed should be made public, pro bono publico. If they are not, exposure is necessary to reform.

Congregationalist wishes me to "examine more minutely" the case of the buyers and sellers in the temple. I have done so, and am still of the opinion, that their custom had its origin in the offering for sale of animals for sacrifice. That it might have proceeded beyond this, I will not deny. But I have no doubt, that the sellers and buyers claimed that the "end justified the means." Congregationalist maintains that the selling and buying in the temple was to "promote worldly interest," while that of the fair was "truly spiritual and benevolent." Suppose I admit it; does Congregationalist maintain that we have a right to promote objects "truly spiritual and benevolent," by hook or by crook? I trust not; and yet such is the inference one would naturally draw, I think, from his remarks.

Congregationalist says that the fair was for the "sale of such articles as had been made by them (the ladies) in their social assemblies." I would fain believe that Congregationalist has been "misled or duped" in that statement. I cannot think the ladies of that church or society have spent their time, at those "social assemblies," in preparing such letters as the one I have inserted. And yet, if sixteen dollars in postage was received, there must have been a great number or a very high postage. Reckoning the postage at ten cents, there must have been 160—at five cents, 320. I would hope, for the credit of the ladies concerned, that Congregationalist has made a "false statement" unwittingly. Neither can I think that at those "social assemblies" the ladies for the past year have employed their time in manufacturing dolls, or cake with gold rings in it, or grab-boxes. If they have been thus employed, even a part of their time, I shall go in for reform, especially in the doll business, and the post-office department. I therefore think myself entitled to the thanks of the ladies, in thus removing the obloquy which Congregationalist did undesignedly throw upon them. That other and more valuable articles were made and sold, I have no doubt. But he says that it was of such articles as had been made by the ladies, with such "additions as they had otherwise obtained." Query—Which were the additions?

My apology for the length of this article is the importance of the subject. If Congregationalist be a clergyman, (which I doubt,) he may rest easy at my supposed "jealousy" on account of the superiority of the new house over mine, for I have never yet seen it, except at the distance of more than one mile, I believe, nor did I ever hear any description of it. His remarks, therefore, hit no body. OMICRON.

HOPKINTON, R. I., Feb. 21, 1849.

THE JEWS AT JERUSALEM.—There is a division among the Jews at Jerusalem, which excites a great deal of ill feeling, and operates against both parties. A letter from Mr. Ewald, of the London Jews' Society, written in August last, describes a controversy between the "Sephardim," or ancient Jews, who have been planted in Jerusalem ever since it came under Mohammedan rule, and the "Ashkenasim," or German Jews, who have settled there in modern times. These latter established a separate synagogue, but those in the old synagogue refused to acknowledge them. Of late, both sections have been reduced to great distress, by the falling off in the usual contributions from Europe for the poor Jews at Jerusalem. The "Ashkenasim" made a proposition that they would send a deputation to collect funds in America, where large numbers of German Jews have settled, and they had no doubt this would bring them relief. But they would only lend their name under condition of being recognized. The proposal was accepted, but the condition was refused; and after weeks of dispute, the affair ended in each party sending their own messengers. The new German congregation at Jerusalem claim to be the Reformers; and they beg their brethren in America to assist them in establishing proper schools, hospitals, manufactories, and trades.

BAPTIST MISSIONS IN CHINA.—Rev. Mr. Dean, of the Baptist mission at Hong-Kong, is appealing to the Board for a reinforcement of the Chinese missions. To show the need of more laborers, he says:—

"I am unequal to any considerable mental or physical effort. Mr. Goddard's health is enfeebled, and his lungs forbid much effort in preaching. The brethren at Ningpo are laboring zealously and encouragingly, but they are but two; and when we come to add together the various items of available strength for missionary work, the sum total is exceedingly small. We dare not compare it with the work to be done, lest it should be lost in the comparison."

REVIVALS.—Notices of revivals are becoming more plenty in our exchanges than they have been for a while past. The Morning Star, a Free-Will Baptist paper, mentions several among that people—one at East Liberty, O., where ten persons were baptized the first week in January; another at Manchester, N. H.; and a third at Williamstown, Mass., where eleven have been baptized, and twice that number are thought to have passed from death unto life. The Western Christian Journal mentions a revival at Pales Creek, O., in which "some thirty have found peace in believing." The Baptist Church at Woodstown, N. J., has enjoyed a refreshing from the presence of the Lord, and about twenty persons profess to have passed from death unto life. The Western Christian speaks of a work of grace at Rockford, in connection with which about sixty have been baptized. The Baptist Banner says that at Mayslick a revival was in progress, and fifty-two persons had recently been received into the Church. The N. Y. Baptist Register publishes a letter from North Hebren, giving an account of a revival, and sixty-two additions to the Baptist Church. The same paper has notices of revivals at Ogdensburg, and Solon, N. Y.

AN OLD BOOK.—It is doubtless remembered by some of the readers of the Recorder, that in the short biography of Eld. Jonathan Dunham, formerly Pastor of the Piscataway Seventh-day Baptist Church, who died in 1782, (printed in the fourth volume,) it was stated that he published a Seventh-day Baptist Catechism, but that we supposed it to be out of print, as none of them could be found. I have since succeeded in finding a copy, in the possession of one of his descendants in New Brunswick, N. J. I would be happy to place it in the Library of the Sabbath Tract Society, but the owners are unwilling to part with it. The following is its title page:— W. B. G.

A Brief Instruction in the Principles of the Christian Religion, by way of Questions and Answers, for the general use of all persons, both young and old. By JONATHAN DUNHAM. "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." Prov. 22: 6. Printed by James Parker, 1761.

UNITARIAN COLPORTAGE.—The Christian Register publishes the Report of a volunteer colporteur, for the sale of the cheap edition of Channing's Works. The Unitarian Association appropriated two hundred dollars, and individuals in the Rev. Dr. Peabody's Society contributed fifty-five dollars more, with which the colporteur subscribed for three hundred sets, and thus aided to secure the publication of the cheap edition. He has sold four hundred and thirty-six sets of the works, one hundred and twenty of the Memoirs, and seventy-two miscellaneous volumes. His aim was to give them the widest circulation, by visiting Saratoga Springs, State Legislatures, &c., and he thinks that at least one-half of the books went into the hands of professional men, in all parts of the country, and also into Canada and the West Indies.

COLLEGES IN THE UNITED STATES.—There are now in the United States one hundred and nineteen colleges; thirteen of which are under the direction of the Baptists; nine under the direction of the Episcopalians; thirteen under the direction of the Methodists; fourteen under the direction of the Roman Catholics; nine under the direction of the Congregationalists; and sixty-one mostly under the direction of the Presbyterians.

HONOR TO MINISTERIAL FAITHFULNESS.—Rev. Gordon Winslow, rector of St. Paul's (Episcopal) Church, Staten Island, has received from several friends a present of a horse and carriage, as expressive of their admiration of his conduct, in remaining at his post and giving his daily attention to the sick and dying during the entire continuance of the yellow fever at Quarantine.

THE OLDEST PASTOR.—The Rev. Dr. Nott, of Franklin, Conn., reached his ninety-sixth birth-day on the 23d ult., when his church and congregation paid him an annual visit. Dr. N. has exercised the pastoral office during a period of nearly sixty-seven years, and is still able to walk to the church, a distance of a quarter of a mile, and take part in the services. He is probably the oldest officiating clergyman in the world.

A "PHENOMENON."—The following story comes to us in a Catholic paper, the editor of which evidently endorses the spirit of the thing. Perhaps his Bible is minus that passage which says, 'By their fruits ye shall know them:'—

"John Gregory a Jesu Maria was a Missionary Priest, and preached both to heretics and Catholics. He was greatly struck at the sight he observed; he found the heretics frequently at their prayers, living modestly, never blaspheming, nor reviling their neighbors; while Catholics cursed and abused each other, misbehaved in church, and in many ways scandalized the simple-hearted Priest: in short, he found the heretics outwardly Catholics, and the Catholics outwardly heretics. After much consideration of these phenomena, he says, that he found out from St. Bernard and St. Anselm the true cause, which was this: The Devil did not tempt the heretics to sin, because he was sure of them, through their abandonment of the Faith; but Catholics, retaining the Faith, must be tempted, lest they, by living as they ought, should escape him and be saved."

INDIAN REVOLUTION.

On the 5th of last December, the Seneca Indians met in convention at the Cattaraugus Reservation in Erie County, and abolished their former government, that of Chiefs, and established a chartered republic. The following statement of the reasons which induced this revolution, is worthy any people, however refined:—

We, the people of the Seneca Nation of Indians, by virtue of the right inherent in every people, trusting in the justice and necessity of our undertaking, and humbly invoking the blessing of the God of Nations upon our efforts to improve our civil condition, and to secure to our nation the administration of equitable and wholesome laws, do hereby abolish, abrogate, and annul our form of government by chiefs, because it has failed to answer the purposes for which all governments should be created.

It affords no security in the enjoyment of property.

It provides no laws regulating the institution of marriage, but tolerates polygamy.

It makes no provision for the poor, but leaves the destitute to perish.

It leaves the people dependent on foreign aid for the means of education.

It has no Judiciary, nor Executive Departments; it is an irresponsible, self-constituted aristocracy.

Its powers are absolute and unlimited in assigning away the people's rights, but indefinite and not exercised, in making municipal regulations for their benefit or protection.

The Constitution is elaborate. The Judiciary is composed of three "Peace-Makers;" the council is chosen at large, and possesses the treaty-making power; but every treaty must be ratified by three-fourths of the voters, and by three-fourths of all the mothers of the nation. Suffrage is universal. This Government has been officially recognized by the War Department, as regularly established by a majority of the people; and we do not doubt that it will contribute efficiently to rekindle the ambition of the disheartened Senecas, as well as to protect them from the many wrongs and evils of which they have so often and justly complained FINANCES OF THE AMERICAN BOARD.—Rev. Wm. Clarke, one of the agents of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, has published a circular to the churches, dated Jan. 15, on the financial condition of the Board.

The Board has under its care 29 missions, 99 stations, 154 ordained missionaries, 9 of whom are also physicians, and 244 assistants, making 398 laborers who have been sent from this country—besides 28 native preachers, and 145 other native helpers, being in total 9572 persons. There are 76 churches, which have reported during the last year the reception of more than 1800 converts—making the present number of communicants upwards of 26,000. There are 12 seminaries for training native preachers and teachers, having 586 scholars; 18 other boarding schools, with 541 pupils; 302 free schools, having 10,718 children. The common schools at the Sandwich Islands, having more than 16,000 children, are not included, as they are supported by the Hawaiian Government. There are 11 printing establishments, 7 which have type foundries, and cast fonts of type for printing in nearly 30 languages.

To sustain these operations, the Prudential Committee have appropriated $262,000 for the current year, for which the average monthly receipts must be $22,000. But from August 1st to November 30th—four months—the whole amount of receipts (deducting $19,604 02, which were contributed for the express purpose of liquidating the debt of the Board, amounting, at the late annual meeting, to nearly $60,000) were only $72,642 88, making the average monthly receipts but a fraction over $18,000, and causing an average monthly deficiency of nearly $4,000; or $16,000 deficiency in the four months of the year gone by. At this rate there will be a deficit, at the close of the year, in the amount of receipts necessary to meet the appropriations for the year, of nearly $48,000.

MISSIONARY SOCIETY TO AID AFRICA.—A letter from the Rev. Dr. Hamilton, of Mobile, published in the New Orleans Presbyterian, says that there is a colored missionary Society in Mobile, the object of which is to spread the Gospel, particularly in Africa. The members of it pay fifty cents on admission, and afterward ten cents monthly. In the course of the year they have raised fifty-nine dollars. At the last meeting they voted ten dollars each to the Presbyterian mission in Africa, the Methodist mission in Liberia, and the American Colonization Society. Dr. Hamilton states that this Society is formed from 'the more serious and reflecting portion of our slave population here,' and that the influence of it on its members has been perceptibly good.

INCOME OF THE LITERATURE FUND.—The apportionment of the Literature Fund among the several Academies of the State of New York was made by the Regents of the University on the 28th ult. The Albany Academy gets the largest slice, $912 04; the Alfred Academy comes next, receiving $908 34; the Geneva Wesleyan Seminary next, receiving $872 16; the Brooklyn Female Academy receives $800 36; the Grammar School of Columbia College has $529 15; the Oneida Conference Seminary $646 14; the Rutgers Female Institute $638 16; the Cortland Academy $534 46; the Deaf and Dumb Institution in New York $584 98; the Fredonia Academy $531 80; the Grammar School of the University of New York $252 61; the Astoria Institute $143 59.

The Regents, on the same day, distributed to 17 different Schools the sum of $1,374 60 from the revenue of the Literature and United States Deposit Funds, for the purchase of books and apparatus, those Academies having raised an equal amount for the same purpose from sources independent of their corporate funds.

LAST WEEK'S CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

February 26.

In the SENATE, Mr. Webster was appointed a member of the Standing Committee on Finance, in place of Mr. Clayton, resigned. A bill was submitted, and laid over, for taking the Seventh Census. A bill making certain regulations respecting the Pay Department of the Army, was passed; also a bill allowing compensation to the Registers and Receivers employed in locating Bounty Land Warrants. The General Appropriation Bill then came up, and occupied the remainder of the session, afternoon and evening. The principal discussion was upon Mr. Walker's amendment, proposing to extend the Constitution and Revenue Laws over the Territory acquired from Mexico; it was adopted.

In the HOUSE, the bill allowing subsistence pay to certain Volunteers enrolled for the Mexican War, was passed. A resolution was submitted allowing the customary sum of two hundred dollars extra pay to each of the officers of the House, including the pages. On motion, it was laid on the table. A series of resolutions, passed by the Legislature of Virginia, respecting the rights of the South, were submitted, and laid on the table. The California Bill was taken up, and discussed till adjournment.

February 27.

The SENATE, after hearing a report from the Committee appointed to notify Messrs. Taylor and Fillmore of their election, appointed a Committee to make arrangements for their reception in the Senate Chamber, on the 5th of March. The bill to regulate the allowance of Pensions to officers, soldiers, and seamen, who have been disabled in the public service, was passed. The General Appropriation Bill was then taken up. Several amendments were adopted, among which was one appropriating $20,000 for the purchase of George Washington's papers, and a like sum for those of James Monroe. A proposition to increase the salaries of Ministers to England, France, and Russia, was laid over till next session, when the whole system will be considered.

In the HOUSE, sundry bills were reported by Committees, among which was one giving a small portion of land to each actual settler. The California Government Bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, and the debate on it continued till 12 o'clock, at which hour it closed, agreeably to a previous resolution. Several amendments were then proposed, and five-minute speeches made upon them; but no essential amendment was agreed to. The bill was reported to the House, and finally passed by a vote of 126 to 86. The bill making provision for the Government of New Mexico, was taken up and considered till adjournment.

February 28.

In the SENATE, the bill from the House for the Territorial Government of California, was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Territories. A bill making an appropriation for light-houses, was passed. A Select Committee reported in favor of appropriating $20,000 to test Professor Page's recent Electro Magnetic Invention. The consideration of the General Appropriation Bill was resumed, and after some discussion, all the amendments to which no special objection was made, were concurred in. The amendment for the establishment of a temporary Government in California, led to a long discussion. The bill was passed at a late hour in the evening, by a vote of 25 to 18.

In the HOUSE, Mr. Goggin, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported a resolution declaring that it is inexpedient to take any action, at the present session, relative to the stopping of Sunday Mails—which was considered and agreed to. A resolution was passed, to pay the delegate from Wisconsin the customary rates of mileage, and per diem allowances. The Committee on Ways and Means reported the draft of a Tariff, which was ordered to lie on the table. Sundry bills from the Senate were taken up and passed, among them one providing a Territorial Government for Minesota. The bill to abolish the Franking Privilege was taken up, and after some discussion it was laid on the table.

March 1.

The SENATE agreed to the amendment of the House to the bill for the increase of the Medical Staff of the Army. Several private bills were considered and passed. Resolutions from the Legislature of South Carolina, on the subject of Slavery, also resolutions from the Legislature of Rhode Island, on the same subject, were read and ordered printed. A resolution in favor of distributing copies of certain American Archives among the various Literary Institutions of the country, was passed. The bill for the settlement of the claims of the State of New Hampshire against the United States, was passed. Mr. Benton, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill for the construction of a great Central National Road from St. Louis to the Pacific. The Fortification and Naval Pension Bills were passed. The Army Appropriation Bill was under consideration at the hour of adjournment.

In the HOUSE, the principal subject under discussion was the Indian Appropriation Bill, in connection with which several rambling political speeches were made.

March 2.

In the SENATE, the Vice President, George M. Dallas, after an impressive valedictory, retired from the Chair as President of the Senate; Mr. Atchison, of Missouri, was chosen his successor; and the thanks of the House were tendered to Mr. Dallas for the impartial manner in which he had discharged his official duties. A bill was passed, making Port Covington, in the State of New York, a port of delivery. The Naval Appropriation Bill was passed, after several amendments. The bill making Appropriations for the support of the Post-Office Department was passed, after several ineffectual attempts to engraft upon it an amendment for the reduction of the rates of postage. A Committee of Conference on the General Appropriation Bill was agreed to.

In the HOUSE, a lengthy discussion grew out of a bill providing for the liquidation of the claims of American citizens against Mexico; after some amendment, the bill was passed. The General Appropriation Bill, from the Senate, was taken up, and several amendments proposed, a part of which were adopted. An unsuccessful attempt was made to engraft upon it the substance of the Wilmot Proviso. Amendments were adopted limiting the continuance of the new government in the Territories to six months after the sitting of the next Congress, and requiring that the law of Mexico, abolishing Slavery in said Territories, shall remain in full force till repealed by an Act of Congress. The bill, as amended, was sent back to the Senate. The House then proceeded to other business, and before adjournment received notice that the Senate did not agree to the amendments of the Appropriation Bill, whereupon the House appointed a Committee of Conference.

March 3.

The proceedings in Congress during the last day and night of the session, come to us quite confused, but the following summary will be found to contain every thing important:—

In the SENATE, the bill passed for the Coinage of Gold Dollars and Double Eagles; the defeat of the House amendment to confine the appointment of Surveyors of the Line between the United States and Mexico to the Topographical Corps; the passage of a bill providing for the translation and publication of the Spanish and Mexican Laws of California in effect at the time of the Treaty; passing the House bill providing for taking next Census; the passage of the Home Department bill, after a very animated opposition, by 31 to 25; the killing of the Branch Mint in New York; the passage of the General Appropriation bill, after a long contest with the House to fix and finally taking back Mr. Walker's amendment; and last of all, the scandalous exhibition of a personal rencontre between Mr. Cameron, of Penn., and Foote, of Miss.,—a family quarrel, indeed, but one which must inflict deep humiliation upon the whole people.

In the HOUSE, the New York Mint bill was passed, to no purpose, however; the Naval Appropriation bill went through slightly amended; the amendment to fix the 10th of March for the day of effect of the Minesota bill was receded from, and the appointment of all officers under the bill placed at Mr. Polk's discretion by a vote of 105 to 70; the District Slave Trade was shoved by with scarce a recognition; the Walker amendment to the General Appropriation bill was disagreed to, 110 to 104; concurring with Senate to establish a Board for Mexican Claims; Extra Compensation to Clerks, &c., went through with a rush; a hundred conflicting motions were made, a sort of fight was got up between Messrs. Root, Giddings, Meade, and others, and finally, at 6 3-4 Sunday morning, the XXXth Congress came to a stormy end.

INAUGURATION OF THE PRESIDENT.

General Zachary Taylor, the twelfth President of the United States, was inaugurated on Monday, March 5th. The following is his address, delivered in front of the Capitol, at 12 o'clock, to the Senate and Members of the House of Representatives, and thousands of assembled citizens:—

Elected by the American people to the highest office known to our laws, I appear here to take the oath prescribed by the Constitution, and, in compliance with a time-honored custom, to address those who are now assembled.

The confidence and respect shown by my countrymen, in calling me to be the Chief Magistrate of a Republic, holding a high rank among the nations of the earth, have inspired me with feelings of the most profound gratitude; but when I reflect that the acceptance of the office which their partiality has bestowed, imposes the discharge of the most arduous duties, involves the most weighty obligations, I am conscious that the position which I have been called to fill, though sufficient to satisfy the loftiest ambition, is surrounded by fearful responsibilities.

Happily, however, in the performance of my new duties, I shall not be without able co-operation. The Legislative and Judicial branches of the Government present prominent examples of distinguished civil attainments, and matured experience; and it shall be my endeavor to call to my assistance, in the Executive Departments, individuals, whose talents, integrity, and purity of character, will furnish ample guarantees for the faithful and honorable performance of the trusts about to be committed to their charge.

With such aids, and an honest purpose to do whatever is right, I hope to execute diligently, impartially, and for the best interests of the country, the manifold duties devolved upon me. In the discharge of these duties, my guide shall be the Constitution I this day swear to preserve, protect, and defend.

For the interpretation of that Instrument, I shall look to the decisions of the Judicial tribunals established by its authority, and to the practice of Government under the earliest President, who had so large a share in its formation. To the example of those illustrious patriots I shall always refer with reverence, and especially to his example who was by so many titles the father of his country.

To command the army and navy of the United States—with the advice and consent of the Senate to make treaties and to appoint embassadors and other officers—to give to Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend such measures as he shall judge to be necessary, and to take care that the laws shall be faithfully executed—these are the most important functions entrusted to the President by the Constitution; and it may be expected that I shall briefly indicate the principles which will control me in their execution.

Chosen by the body of the people, under the assurance that my administration would be devoted to the welfare of the whole country, and not to the support of any particular section or merely local interests, I this day renew the declaration I have heretofore made, and proclaim my fixed determination to maintain to the extent of my ability the Government in its original purity, and to adopt, as the basis of my public policy, those great republican doctrines which constitute the strength of our national existence.

In reference to the army and navy, lately employed with so much distinction on active service, care shall be taken to ensure the highest condition of efficiency, and in furtherance of that object the military and naval schools, sustained by the liberality of Congress, shall receive the speceal attention of the Executive.

As American freemen, we can not but sympathise with all efforts to extend the blessings of civil and political liberty; but at the same time we are warned by the admonitions of history and the voice of our own beloved Washington, to abstain from entangling alliances with foreign nations. In all disputes between conflicting Goverments, it is our interest not less than our duty to remain strictly neutral, while our geographical position, the genius of our institutions and our people, the advancing spirit of civilization, and, above all, the dictates of religion, direct us to the cultivation of peaceful and friendly relations with all other powers.

It is to be hoped that no international question can now arise which a Government confident in its own strength, and resolved to protect its own just rights, may not settle by wise negotiation, and it eminently becomes a Government like our own, founded on the morality and intelligence of its citizens, and upheld by their affections, to exhaust every resort of honorable diplomacy before appealing to arms.

In the conduct of our Foreign relations, I shall conform to these views, as I believe them essential to the best interests and the true honor of the country.

The appointing power vested in the President imposes delicate and onerous duties. So far as it is possible to be informed, I shall make honesty, capacity, any fidelity indispensable requisites to the disposal of office, and absence of either of these qualities shall be deemed sufficient cause for removal.

It shall be my study to recommend such constitutional measures to Congress as may be necessary and proper to secure encouragement and protection to the great interests of Agriculture, Commerce, and Manufactures, to improve our rivers and harbors, to provide for the speedy extinguishing of the public debt, to enforce a strict accountability on the part of all officers of the Government, and the utmost economy in all public expenditures. But it is for the wisdom of Congress itself, in which all legislative powers are vested by the Constitution, to regulate these and other matters of domestic policy. I shall look with confidence to the enlightened patriotism of that body to adopt such measures of conciliation as may harmonize conflicting interests and tend to perpetuate that Union, which should be the paramount object of our hopes and affections.

In any action calculated to promote an object so near the heart of one who truly loves his country, I will zealously unite with the coördinate branches of the Government.

In conclusion, I congratulate you, fellow-citizens, upon the high state of prosperity to which the goodness of Divine Providence has conducted our common country.

Let us invoke a continuance of the same protecting care which has led us from small beginnings to the eminence we this day occupy; and let us seek to deserve that, by prudence and moderation in our councils, by well-directed attempts to assuage the bitterness which too often marks differences in opinion; by the promulgation and pactice of just and liberal principles, and by enlarged patriotism which shall acknowledge no limits but those of our own wide Republic.

On the conclusion of the address, which was received with prolonged cheering by the assembled multitude, the following oath was administered to President Taylor by Chief Justice Taney of the Supreme Court:

Oath of Office.

"I do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States."

The President returned into the Capitol amid prolonged and vociferous cheering.

THE NEW CABINET.

The new Cabinet has not been positively announced, but it will probably stand as follows:

JOHN M. CLAYTON, of Delaware, Secretary of State.
JOHN DAVIS, of Massachusetts, Secretary of the Treasury.
WM. M. MEREDITH, of Penn., Home Department.
W. BAILARD PRESTON, of Va., Secretary of the Navy.
GEO. W. CRAWFORD, of Georgia, Secretary of War.
THOMAS EWING, of Ohio, Postmaster General.
REVERDY JOHNSTON, of Maryland, Attorney General.

A WOMAN SHOT BY HER HUSBAND.—A fatal tragedy was enacted at No. 46 Lexington Avenue, N. Y., one day last week, in which Mr. Thomas A. Walker shot his wife, Martha Eliza Walker, with a six-barrel revolving pistol. The ball entered at her right shoulder, descended in an oblique direction, and passed out at the left side of her waist. It appears that the lady in question is the Mrs. Miller, whose abduction from Stamford, Conn., by her husband, some years since, created such a great sensation in the public mind. Her maiden name was Blackwell, and she inherited a considerable amount of property from an uncle of the same name. Subsequent to the uncle's death a paper made its appearance, purporting to have been given by Mrs. Miller, which she pronounced to be a forgery. Some time after her marriage, failing to obtain a bill of divorce from her husband, she left him, and went to Stamford, Conn. Mr. Miller, on discovering her whereabouts, went to Stamford, forcibly conveyed her from that place in a carriage, and took her to Norfolk, Va., with an intention of embarking for France. From some circumstances that occurred at the time, they were prevented from doing so, and Mr. Miller came to this city with his wife, where they continued to live together for some time, but finally separated and were divorced. Mrs. Miller subsequently became acquainted with Mr. Walker, and was married to him. She has resided in Lexington Avenue since September last, in fashionable style, where he has occasionally visited her. On the day of the tragedy he was at the house, and the servant girl residing in the family, hearing the report of a pistol, immediately suspecting something wrong, called down Mrs. Wells, the aunt of Mrs. Walker, who was residing with her, and ran to the front door to see if she could make any discovery. Mrs. Wells coming down stairs at the same moment, entered the front room, and there discovered her niece lying prostrate upon the floor, bleeding profusely from the wound which had been inflicted. She refused to say who shot her, declaring simply that she did not shoot herself, and that she would not criminate any one. She died about 28 hours after receiving the wound, and Walker is now in prison.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—The schooner Conway or Conrad, Capt. Baker, sailed in a gale from New London Ct., for New York, on Monday, Feb. 26, with a cargo of oil. When just out of the harbor, in jibbing, the boom struck Capt. Baker and one of the men, and knocked them overboard. The boat was immediately lowered with two men to rescue them, but before they could reach them they had sunk. The weather being so rough, the men in the boat were obliged to return to New London instead of to the vessel. In the meantime the mate, who was alone on board the schooner, had thrown over an anchor, which dragging, he slipped the cable, and the vessel went up the Sound before the gale. As soon as possible, the owner, Mr. Joseph Lawrence, of New London, dispatched a pilot-boat in pursuit of the schooner.

WOMEN OF CHARACTER FOR CALIFORNIA.—The name of the lady who has issued proposals for the embarkation of some one hundred and thirty females, not under 25 years of age, for California, noticed in a recent number, is a Mrs. Eliza W. Farnham, whose husband died in California in September last. Satisfactory testimonials of character, education, and capacity, must be furnished by all those who apply, and $250 will also be required to defray the expenses of the voyage. The party is also to include six or eight respectable married men and their families. Doing good is said to be the object.

SUMMARY.

The steamship Crescent City from Chagres arrived at N. Y. on the 3d. She took out a large number of passengers for California, three of whom returned in her on account of ill health. About 800 adventurers had left Panama for the Gold Region within a few days—350 by steamer California, over 200 by ship Philadelphia, 120 by bark John Riston, and the remainder by such craft as they could find.

An intelligent officer of the Navy, writing from the Isthmus of Panama, says, "All the extravagant stories of the mines seem to be confirmed here; but the expense of living must cause dreadful suffering to multitudes." An ordinary dinner at San Francisco costs $10, and everything else in the same proportion!

The Silver Creek Mail notices the sudden and violent death of Mr. J. Rose, of Irving, Chautauque county, N. Y., on the 14th ultimo, He was drawing logs, and while loading a large log, his foot slipped and he fell, the log rolling back upon him, striking him about the middle, and passing over his chest and head. He lived but a few moments.

The N. O. Picayune says the weather there has been unusually cold. Orange and other fruit trees have been injured by the frost. On the 20th of February, a fire occurred which destroyed seventy thousand dollars worth of property.

Mr. Jonathan Miller, of Hempstead, L. I., who was taken up on suspicion of having murdered his family, and set fire to his house, has been discharged by the Court, there being no positive testimony against him.

The Hagarstown (Md.) Herald of Freedom says that several of the most respectable and staunch farmers in that neighborhood, have disposed of their property, and are about to emigrate to Southern Virginia.

The Legislature of Delaware has passed an act directing the magistrates to arrest all free negroes who are of idle and dissolute habits, and hire them out to service for a term not exceeding one year.

Dr. Robbins, Librarian of the Hartford Atheneum, (Conn.,) now over 80 years of age, has kept a record of the weather from his youth up, and acknowledges that the present winter beats all former ones within his recollection, for the extent of its coldness, as measured by the thermometer.

It is said that our Minister at England, Mr. Bancroft, on a recent visit to Paris, succeeded in negotiating a postal treaty with the French Government.

A colored woman, named Antionette Mexen, died in Louisiana recently, at the extraordinary age of 131 years. She was a native of Louisiana.

Recently some gold was found in the Valley of Chaudiere, Canada. A ton of gravel produced, when washed, $4 of gold.

There was a shock of an earthquake at Potsdam, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., on the 13th ult.

Charles W. Seeley shot at his wife, in Sharptown, Cumberland county, N. J., on the 17th of February, but missed her. and hit their son, two years of age, wounding him severely in the throat. He was arrested. Cause of the crime unknown.

Last year three hundred and sixty-three persons were committed to the Albany Penitentiary, and one thousand nine hundred and sixty-one to the jail of the same city. Of the latter, five hundred and eighteen were for assault and battery, and four hundred and eighty for breach of the peace.

The Miramichi (N. B.) Gleaner, of February 13, says that the small-pox has broken out in a large encampment of Indians at the mouth of the Napan River. Twelve had already died of the disorder.

Cornelius Stilwell, of Aurora, Erie county, N. Y., was killed on the 22d of February, by being entangled in the machinery of a saw-mill. He was 38 years old, and had a small family.

On Monday morning the Scotch Presbyterian meeting-house in Barnet, Vt., was destroyed by fire. The cause is unknown. There was no insurance.

The Senate of New Jersey have passed a resolution to present a sword to Major General Scott.

Among the list of interments in the cemeteries of New Orleans, for the week ending February 24th, were reported sixty-two cases of Cholera.

Speaking of a recent snow-storm in that region, a Halifax paper of February 21 says:—'Some of our old friends, long residents in Nova Scotia, and who are now fast verging on three score and ten, have informed us, that we have not since 1798 had such a snow-storm as that of the past week. Fifty-one years ago the drifts were so high that a tunnel was cut through a snow-bank at Fort Needham, sufficiently large to admit the passage of sleighs and wagons.'

According to official notice, the Miami Canal will be ready for navigation from Cincinnati to the Wabash Valley, and to the Maumee Bay, by the 25th of March. The Wabash and Erie Canal, in Indiana, will also be opened before the 10th of March at farthest, down to Lafayette.

Mr. John C. Green, Jr., and two others, while water-bound near White River, Arkansas, recently, found a den of rattlesnakes, and forthwith amused themselves by dispatching seventy-seven of them, each measuring over four feet.

Ship Franklin, from London, bound to Boston, was totally lost, off Wellfleet, Cape Cod. She went ashore at 9 A. M., March 1st. Captain Smith, mate, and eight others perished. Twenty of the passengers and crew were rescued.

Teams cross over from the city of Detroit to the Canada shore, on the ice, with safety. It has not been done before for a number of years.

Governor Bissel, of Connecticut, has appointed Friday, the 6th day of April, as a day of fasting and prayer.

The Pennsylvania Canals are to be opened on the 10th of March.

MARRIED,

In Westerly, R. I., Feb. 11th, by Eld. I. Moore, JOHN A. PECKHAM, of Preston, Ct., to EMELINE E. CRANDALL, of Westerly, R. I.

DIED,

In Westerly, R. I., Feb. 28, ELIZABETH HALL, aged 15 years. She had been a worthy member of the Pawcatuck Church for three or four years, and left a good testimony.

In Alfred, N. Y., Feb. 10, STILLMAN ROSE, in the 18th year of his age. He was a member of the 1st Seventh-day Baptist Church of Alfred, and died in the triumphs of Christian hope.

In Alfred, Allegany Co., N. Y., of dropsy, Mrs. HANNAH SMITH, wife of Deacon Stephen R. Smith, in the 49th year of her age. The subject of this notice embraced religion in her youth, and was a member of the first-day Baptist Church in New Lebanon; after she moved into this place, she united with the first Seventh-day Baptist Church; and when the second Church was organized here, she was one of the number who were dismissed for that purpose. Her life was a practical demonstration of the power of the gospel to save from sin, and to sustain its subjects under all the trials and afflictions to which they are exposed whilst passing onward to the haven of rest. Her death was calm and peaceful; and no one who knew her doubts but that an abundant entrance was administered unto her into the kingdom of God her Saviour. She sleeps in Jesus. J. H. C.

In Plainfield, N. J., March 1st, EMMA BRISTOL, daughter of Rudolph M. and Ann Eliza Titsworth, aged one year and sixteen days.

As vernal flowers that scent the morn,
But wither in the rising day,
Thus lovely was this infant's dawn,
Thus swiftly fled her life away.

She died before her infant soul
Had ever burnt with wrong desires—
Had ever spurned at Heaven's control,
Or ever quenched its sacred fires.

FARM FOR SALE.

THE subscriber offers for sale his farm, situated in the town of Genesee, county of Allegany, N. Y. Said farm codsists of 280 acres of first-rate land, 175 of which is level, ann the remainder gradually rising side-hill; all of which is susceptible of cultivation, mostly adapted to grazing purposes. About 75 acres, however, is a gravely quick soil, as productive of wheat and corn, as any in the southern part of said county. Upon said farm is about 100 acres improvement, two framed barns, and a large two-story framed house, well inclosed, lately built, and conveniently calculated. There are two good wells of water upon said farm, and it is also abundantly supplied with numerous brooks and springs. Said farm is situated in a good neighborhood, and convenient to school, and the central place of business for the western part of said town; and on the main traveled road from Angelica to Smithport. For pleasantness and locality it is not surpassed by any in the township or vicinity. To those wishing to purchase a good farm, the present opportunity offers rare inducements. The farm will be sold low for cash; or, if desired, by paying one-half of the purchase money down, the balance will be arranged to accommodate purchasers for any reasonable length of credit. A careful view of the premises by a discerning individual, is only requisite to a thorough conviction that an investment made under such favorable terms as the subscriber offers, is but safe and a fair speculation. For farther information, address the subscriber, P. M. at West Genesee, Allegany Co., N. Y., or inquire at his house. JARED MAXSON.
GENESEE, December 20th, 1848. 29m3.

TO CLERGYMEN AND THEIR PEOPLE.

ALL CLERGYMEN who will send their address to Messrs. Comstock & Co., 21 Courtland-st., New York, shall be furnished gratuitously, for their family use, with a Salve of most extraordinary merit for external sores or inflammations of long or short standing. In burns, or pains and swellings of nearly all descriptions, its effects are charming, and almost beyond belief. This Salve has already been used by quite a number of the clergy, for themselves or sufferers to whom they have given it; and they have called on or written to the proprietors to express their delight at its action, and a desire to have their names used in making known its virtues. The proprietors having realized a handsome sum by its sale, feel called upon by a sense of duty to their fellow-men to disseminate the knowledge of the existence of such a thing far and near, and to give it without charge to the reverend clergy without limitation. It is called CONNEL'S PAIN EXTRACTOR, and is owned solely by Messrs. C. & Co. All religious papers that will publish this a few times will be furnished with the Salve free, and they may also thereby relieve many suffering poor brethren from agonizing pain, and save them much expense. The names of nearly fifty clergymen recommending it, are to be seen at the office of C. & Co.

You will please observe, it is no "sovereign remedy for all complaints," but only intended for external applications in the following:—Burns, Scalds, Frosted parts, Chilblains, Chafe or Galls, Chaps, Tetter, Pimple, Blotch, Felon, Ulcers, Sprains, Erysipelas, Cuts, Bruises, Ear and Toothache, Mumps, Sore Throat, Whitlows, Piles, Ringworm, Salt Rheum, Barber's Itch, Carbuncle, Eruption, Sore Eyes and Lids, Weak Sight, Sore Lips, Punctures, Biles and Warts, Fever Pains, Tender Feet, Inflammatory Rheumatism, Tic Doloureux, Ague in Face and Breast, Fever Sores, Old Burn Scars, Prickly Heat, Inflamed Skin, Broken Breasts, Sore Nipples, Rough Hands, Blistered Surfaces, Dressing for Blisters, White Swellings, Cold in Wounds, Sore Corns, General Sores, Smallpox Marks, &c.

Though we have named numerous affections, experience has taught us that they are not too many. It will be necessary to know that this article is the only one we can recommend; but must caution against some imitation by like name. We will present it to the poor who have actual need of [illegible]

Miscellaneous.

WRITTEN AT MY MOTHER'S GRAVE.

BY G. D. PRENTICE.

The trembling dew-drops fall
Upon the shutting flowers—like souls at rest;
The stars shine gloriously—and all,
Save me, is blest.

Mother—I love thy grave!
The violet, with its blossoms blue and mild,
Waves o'er thy head—when shall it wave
Above thy child?

'Tis a sweet flower—yet must
Its bright leaves to the coming tempest bow—
Dear mother—'tis thine emblem—dust
Is on thy brow!

And I could love to die—
To leave untasted life's dark, bitter streams—
By thee, as erst in childhood, lie,
And share thy dreams.

And must I linger here,
To stain the plumage of my sinless years,
And mourn the hopes to childhood dear
With bitter tears!

Ay—must I linger here,
A lonely branch upon a blasted tree,
Whose last frail leaf, untimely sere,
Went down with thee!

Oft from life's withered shore,
In still communion with the past, I turn,
And muse on thee, the only flower
In memory's urn.

And when the evening pale
Bows like a mourner on the dim, blue wave,
I stay to hear the night-winds wail
Around thy grave.

Where is thy spirit flown?—
I gaze above—thy look is imaged there—
I listen—and thy gentle tone
Is on the air.

Oh come—whilst here I press
My brow upon thy grave—and in those mild
And thrilling tones of tenderness,
Bless, bless thy child!

Yes, bless thy weeping child,
And o'er thine urn—religion's holiest shrine—
Oh give his spirit undefiled
To blend with thine.

From the Independent.

POSTAGE FACTS.

The cost of the British Post-office in 1839, the last year of the old postage, was £686,768. The number of letters was 86,000,000, making the cost per letter within a very small fraction of two pence. In 1840, the first year of the new postage, the letters were increased to 170,000,000, or double, while the cost was only £702,301, an increase of but 10 per cent., reducing the average cost per letter to a small fraction less than one penny (3. 96 qrs.) In 1846, when the letters were 322,000,000, or almost four-fold their original number, the cost was but £1,138,745, an increase of but 65 per cent.; and nearly the whole of this increased expenditure was incurred for increased facilities; while the average cost per letter is still less, being but 3. 39 qrs. Had the cost kept pace with the increase of business, it would have been, in 1847, nearly three millions sterling. Every additional letter now mailed, paying one penny, adds less than one farthing to the cost, and hence yields a net revenue of three farthings.

The average weight of passengers with baggage is about 230 pounds, which is equal to the weight of 7,360 letters at half an ounce each. The postage on those letters, at two cents, would be $147,20. Now, the cost of a journey from Boston to New Orleans is about $50, including feed, hack-hire, porterage, and boot-black. As letters do not eat dinners, nor ride in coaches, it would seem that 230 lbs. of letters might be carried as cheaply as a passenger of the same weight. If so, the cost of transportation would be but two-thirds of a cent.

But Harnden's Express would take the same weight, in the shape of parcels, from Boston to New Orleans, for $15, and send a man along all the way to take care of them. At this rate the cost per letter would be precisely two mills—leaving one cent and eight mills for contingencies and net profits.

A passenger goes to Liverpool in the steamer for $120, living as sumptuously as a Lord-Mayor on the way. The cost of carrying letters at that rate would be one cent and two-thirds per half ounce. But if sent in parcels through Harnden's Express, the cost per letter would be one mill.

The number of letters mailed in the United States, in the year previous to July 1st, 1847, was 52,000,000. Allowing nearly ten per cent. for increase, the number in the last financial year should be 57,000,000. The average weight of letters in this country is a little less than one third of an ounce. The average number mailed each day (Sundays excepted) in the whole United States, is 170,000, the weight of which would be 3,541 pounds, a fair load for a single mail-coach. Spread this load over all the mail-routes in the United States. The average transportation of the mail is 131,450 miles, which would make 2,630 routes of fifty miles each, and the average weight of the letter-mail to each would be one pound five and a half ounces. This shows that it is the running of the mails, not the weight of the letters, which causes expense.

The average weight of all the newspapers mailed in a day is not above 20,000 pounds, which could be carried by railroad from Albany to Boston, at the rate of passenger's fare, for $113. If packed, and carried as barrels of flour, it would cost $40. If sent by Express, $175. The daily cost of railroad service in the United States is $1637, which shows that it is the distance over which the mail is carried, not the weight of the contents, which causes expense.

The cost of transportation of the mail by railroad in this country averages about 12 cents per mile; in England, mostly by special trains, in the night, and traveling twice as fast as ours, it is five and one-fourth pence per mile. The average price of passenger-fares in first-class cars, in this country, is but three cents per mile—in England it is ten. The mails are carried by railroads in New Hampshire at four cents per mile. The weight of mails sent daily from London is 27,384 pounds, which is more than the daily weight of all the mails in this country. This shows that there ought to be a great reduction in the price of carrying mails by our railroads.

In Scotland, with but 2,628,957 inhabitants, and no great commercial centre, no political metropolis, and but little foreign commerce, such is the effect of cheap postage, that 28,669,169 letters are sent in a year. Even in poor Ireland, where the people die of hunger by the thousand, where there are millions of people who never taste bread, and where the majority of the people are said to be unable to read or write, with a population of 8,175,124, about one-third of the population of the United States, there are 28,587,996 letters mailed under the influence of penny postage. The population of Scotland and Ireland together is 10,804,081, not half the present population of the United States; the number of letters in a year is 57,257,165, being more than all that are sent in the United States, franks included.

The number of letters passing through our mails during the current year, ending June 30, 1849, will be about sixty million, yielding $3,750,000. It took Great Britain four years with cheap postage to increase the number of letters three-fold; but the go-ahead Yankees would almost infallibly do it in two years. Let us have cheap postage on the 1st of July, 1849, and the number of letters mailed in the year beginning July 1st, 1852, will be at least 180,000,000, which, at two cents, will yield $3,600,000. A reform in newspaper postage and in franking will easily make up the income to the present estimate.

THE VENDER INNOCENT.

On a cold morning, in the month of January, 1841, two men entered the village of C——, York county, Maine, sober. The village then contained four grog-shops. During the day, they drank freely, and at night purchased a quart of the essence of death, and started for their homes, some two miles distant. Within half a mile of their homes they separated, their routes being different. Before parting they exhausted the supply which they had obtained at the village. The road leading to Mr. B.'s residence lay through a rocky woodland, through which meandered a small stream. He passed on with great difficulty, as his traces on the snow indicated, until he reached the brook, over which was a small bridge; upon the bridge he lost his balance and fell into the current, from which, however, after a long struggle, he succeeded in extricating himself; but so fatigued and stiffened that he was not able to walk. He commenced creeping on his hands and knees towards his dwelling, which was but a few rods distant; but nature, palsied with liquor, and overcome with the intense cold, gave up the struggle, and he was locked in the icy arms of Death! His wife, poor woman, sat up till a late hour; but as he had frequently remained from home all night, she retired with her infant to rest, and thought during the night that she heard strange sounds, but concluded it was only the moaning winds piercing through the crevices of the drunkard's neglected habitation. In the morning she arose and proceeded to the habitation of a neighbor, to learn, if possible, the whereabouts of her husband. She had passed but a few steps from the door, when she came directly upon the lifeless remains of her companion. She uttered a fearful shriek, and fainted, but was heard by a man at some distance, who came to her aid. A man was there murdered in the prime of life—and who was responsible? A committee of respectable men waited upon the rumsellers. Mr. C. was first asked if he sold B. the poison which produced his death. His answer was, 'He only had a glass or two here, and that would not get a person drunk.' And so with all the rest. 'He might have drank a glass in my store, but that could not hurt him.' And so, in their own estimation, they were all innocent.

AMERICAN ANTIQUITIES.

Several specimens of American antiquities recently arrived at New Orleans. They were discovered by an American traveler, while exploring the country of the Sierra Madre, near San Luis Potosi, Mexico, and excavated from the ruins of an ancient city, the existence of which is entirely unknown to the present inhabitants, either by tradition or history. They consist of two idols and a sacrificial basin, hewn from solid blocks of concrete sandstone, and are now in the most perfect state of preservation. The removal of these heavy pieces of statuary from the mountains, was accomplished by means of wooden sleds, transported by boats to the mouth of the Panuco, and thence shipped to this port. The largest of the idols was undoubtedly the God of Sacrifice, and one of the most important. It is of the life size, and the only complete specimen of the kind that has ever been discovered and brought away from the country—several attempts having been made by former explorers, who were either thwarted by the natives, or encountered difficulties deemed insurmountable. The anatomical proportions and beauty of this statue, are not admired at the present day, but the elaborate work up on its entire surface, attracts at once the admiration and scrutiny of the observer. It is principally ornamental, interspersed with symbols of mythology, and occasional hieroglyphics. It has two faces, representing Youth and Age; signifying that none are exempt from offering life as a sacrifice. The right hand forms an aperture, in which a light was burned during a sacrifice. The smaller idol is the God of Sorrow, to whom worshipers came to offer up their devotions for the tears it had shed, and the relief afforded them in their griefs. The statue is diminutive, the carving plain, and the whole simply devised. The Sacrificial Basin measures two feet in diameter, and displays much ingenuity and truth in the workmanship. It is held by two serpents entwined, with their heads reversed—the symbol of eternity, which enters largely into the mythology of the ancient Egyptians. The Egyptian Gallery of the British Museum contains several specimens of the work described. [Picayune.

THE SUREST MEANS OF SUCCESS.

One thing is certain, says Dugald Stewart, that the greatest of all obstacles to the improvement of the world, is that prevailing belief of its improbability, which damps the exertions of so many individuals, and that in proportion as the contrary opinion becomes general, it realizes the event which it leads us to anticipate. Surely, if any thing can have a tendency to call forth into public service the exertions of individuals, it must be an idea of the magnitude of that work in which they are conspiring, and a belief of the permanency of those benefits they are rendering mankind, by their attempts to reform and enlighten them.

OLD SLAVE LAWS.

Among the curiosities in the Library of Congress may be found some of the old statutes of Maryland and Virginia in relation to Slavery, of which the following are specimens:—

Persons harboring runaway slaves, are subject to a fine of one hundred pounds of tobacco, per hour, for the time that they harbor them; and should they be unable to pay such a fine, then the offender is to receive stripes upon the back, not exceeding the number mentioned in scripture.

Slaves guilty of rambling in the night, or running away without permission, are subject to whipping, ear cropping, or branding in the cheek the letter R, or otherwise, not extending to life.

The issue of a white man and black woman, or white woman and black man, is a slave for thirty years; and the progenitor, if free, is compelled to endure servitude for seven years.

Duties on the importation of negroes ranged from 10s. to £5. Any negro striking a white man is subject to the loss of one of his ears. Owners suffering their slaves to raise any kind of cattle, as their exclusive right, are compelled to pay a penalty of five hundred pounds of tobacco for all and every offense. Runaway or outlying slaves refusing to surrender themselves on the instant, are allowed to be shot, killed, or destroyed, as any other species of animal property. Chapter IV., section 1., of the act of 1729, declares 'That any negroes, or other slaves, convicted of petit treason, murder, or burning of buildings, shall have judgment to have the right hand cut off, to be hanged, quartered, and the head and quarters to be set up in the most public places of the county wherein he is convicted.' The theft of a slave is death; the rape of a black man upon a white woman, death; a slave accessory to the burning of a building containing grain, is liable to death; and the same penalty for sundry minor offenses. One slave giving false testimony against a fellow slave, is subject to the loss of an ear, and thirty-nine lashes; and the same punishment, including the loss of the second ear, to be inflicted the ensuing day.

Slaves caught away from their homes without a pass or permit, are subject to thirty-nine lashes, to be inflicted by any constable in the county.

FACTS FOR BOYS.

Not a great many years ago, there lived in our land, three little boys, about whom much has been said. They appeared very much like other boys, had no better ancestors, nor did they enjoy greater advantages than many of you. Indeed, their advantages may not have been so great as yours. For then, excellent schools were not so common as they are now. One of these lads became the post-boy between Quincy and Boston. Another was a mill-boy in a distant part of the country. And the third was a lawyer's errand-boy. Their names were John Quincy, Henry, and Andrew. They were all good scholars—faithful and obedient to their parents. They prized their privileges, and improved them accordingly, so that they made rapid improvement. They were always the first of their classes. Year after year they continued to improve, and at a very early age became quite distinguished. Soon, the first became so wise and learned, that he was appointed to fill public offices, and finally became the great John Quincy Adams, President of the United States. The other two were also great men with him, and have been long known as Henry Clay and Andrew Jackson. You have all heard and read of these distinguished men. And yet they were once boys like yourselves. The first was known among his companions as the little John Quincy,—and he worked, and studied, and played, and coasted, just like the boys of these days. But how did he and the other two become so famed? It was by improving privileges, as all good boys improve them. And, do you inquire, 'Can I make such distinguished progress?' Doubtless you may, by diligence and perseverance. It is certain, that all who will be the honored men of our country, fifty years from the present time, are now but little boys. They are playing in the streets, and studying in the schools. Some of them must take the places of John Quincy Adams, Henry Clay, and Andrew Jackson. Who shall it be? Try, and see. [Bos. Reporter.

Wonderful Sagacity of a Dog.—An officer of the army, accompanied by his dog, started from West Point on a visit to the city of Burlington, New Jersey, and while there, becoming sick, wrote to his wife and family at West Point, in relation to his indisposition. Shortly after the reception of the letter, the family were aroused by a whining, barking, and scratching at the door of the house, and when opened to ascertain the cause, in rushed the faithful dog. After being caressed, and every attempt made to quiet him, the dog, in despair at not being understood, seized a shawl in his teeth, and placing his paws on the lady's shoulders, deposited there the shawl. He then placed himself before her, and fixed his gaze intently upon her, to attract her attention, and began to drag her toward the door. The lady then became alarmed, and sent for a relative, who endeavored to allay her fears, but she prevailed upon him to accompany her at once to her husband, and on arriving found him dangerously ill in Burlington. He is yet indisposed. The distance traveled by the faithful animal, and the difficulties encountered, render this account almost incredible.

Hydrophobia.—A correspondent of the Bristol County Democrat says that the madness of dogs is caused by a whitish nerve-gland on the under side of the tongue of every dog, of an oblong form, commencing at the tip of the tongue, where it is the largest, running down towards the roots about two inches, which may be easily removed by a lancet or pen-knife. This contains virus or poison—and sometimes becomes swollen to that extent which causes it to burst, which fills the mouth, and the bite at such times acts in the same way as inoculation. The poison is communicated to the flesh where the teeth of the dog come in contact.

A razor has been invented in England which carries a guard with it, and makes it quite impossible to cut the skin when shaving. It is called the Plantagenet guard razor.

A Cure for Drunkards.—Dr. Schreiber, of Stockholm, has succeeded in curing drunkards of their bad habits. He isolates the patient, gives him brandy and water to drink, prepares all his food with brandy and water, and mixes these with his tea and coffee. At the end of a few weeks, the regimen produces an uncontrollable disgust and repugnance. A physician should, however, watch the operation for fear of apoplexy and cerebral congestion. One hundred and thirty-nine soldiers were so treated, with perfect success.

Schools in Illinois.—Returns from sixty counties of Illinois show a result, in educational affairs, as follows: School Districts, 2,002; Schools, 2,317—1,565 of which are taught by males; total number of School-houses, 1,937. The wages of male teachers range from twelve dollars to twenty dollars per month; females from six dollars to twenty dollars. The number of persons in the State under twenty years of age is stated at 209,639.

VARIETY.

A western freshet on some of the rivers of the great valley, presents a strange aspect. For instance, the Mississippi at Memphis was said to be forty-nine miles broad. This seems incredible, but it is perfectly true—meaning nothing more but that the father of waters, swelling beyond his banks, has submerged the broad and low bottom lands on the Arkansas side of the river.

Mr. Henry M. Paine, of Worcester, communicates to the Scientific American a plan for generating light—not from cucumbers,—but, by mechanical action, from water and lime. He says, that from an apparatus occupying four feet square of room, he is able to produce as much light as is given by four thousand gas-burners of the largest pattern.

A woman living with her third husband at Hartford, Conn., has recently had a call from her first spouse, who left her twenty-one years ago for South America, and whom she supposed to be dead. During his absence she has been twice married, her second husband being dead.

Within a few months, New York, Maine, N. Hampshire, and Massachusetts, have each lost their wealthiest men. To the names of Astor, Clapp, and Upham, has been added that of P. C. Brooks, of Boston. They all sprung from humble life—were the architects of their own fortunes, and lived to that old age which those who are born to fortunes very rarely attain.

An officer who has recently returned from California, relates a story of one of the Yankee gold-diggers who was the fortunate possessor of three jack-knives, and, as a matter of course, could not use but one himself; so he hired out the other two at the rate of a dollar and fifty cents an hour each.

The assessed cash value of real estate and personal property in the State of Ohio, for the year 1848, was four hundred and twenty-one million sixty-seven thousand nine hundred and ninety-one dollars. This valuation gives two hundred dollars to each living soul, and one thousand dollars to each family.

The New York Sun says that eight stages are building in this city, to run between Vera Cruz and Mazatlan. Steamers on both oceans are to connect with the line, so that passengers can go from New Orleans to San Francisco in eighteen days! or from New York in twenty-seven days.

New York has a population of about 400,000. The deaths during 1848 were 14,618, more than one to thirty; a great increase in the per centage of mortality since 1810, when the proportion was one in forty-six: 794 more males died than females during 1848.

The number of missionaries laboring under the direction of evangelical societies, in different parts of the world, is estimated at 1,452; assistant missionaries, 151; native assistants, 2,028. Number of church-members, 190,623. Scholars in missionary schools, 146,706.

A gold and silver mine has been discovered near Wyatt's Mills, in Benton county, Tenn. The ore is unusually rich, and yields some seventy-five or eighty per cent. A second California excitement prevails in the neighborhood, and the owner of the land has it guarded continually.

Hon. Timothy Farrar, who was the oldest surviving graduate of Harvard, died at his residence in Hollis, N. H., February 14. He was born on the 11th of July, 1747, and graduated in the year 1767. He was consequently one hundred and one years and seven months old.

The Controller of New York city estimates the expenses of the police the coming year at $479,000. The alms-house expenses are named at $400,000. Education has only $250,000 assigned it, as necessary for 400,000 people.

The Philadelphia Ledger says that the Rev. Dr. Francis Weber has been sent to the work-house in Washington city, for twenty days, in default of security for good behavior.

It is estimated in some quarters that the population of the United states, in 1850, will be twenty-two million and a half, and some even carry their estimate as high as twenty-five million.

There are forty-one savings-banks in Massachusetts. During the last year there were upwards of seventy thousand depositors. Over twelve million dollars were deposited, and four hundred and sixty thousand dollars interest paid.

A young Roman Catholic priest, who was clandestinely married in Buenos Ayres, last summer, to a lady of his own church, was arrested in August, and both shot, by order of the popish government.

An old toper, on being questioned as to his knowledge of a cotton gin, replied that it was very good, but not equal, in his estimation, to the pure Holland gin.

It is said that fifty thousand barrels of bread have left New York for California since December 1st.

The amount in the Treasury of Virginia, applicable to the erection of a monument to Washington, is $40,000.

THE BOOK

For every Clergyman—For every School District—For every Educated Man.

WEBSTER'S QUARTO DICTIONARY, Unabridged. Price $6.—Published by G. and C. MERRIAM, Springfield, Mass., and for sale by Booksellers generally.

"Will not the enlightened and liberal furnish their clergymen with a copy, as an indispensable volume in their libraries?"—Rev. T. H. Gallaudet.

Extract from a Lecture addressed to a Teacher's Institute, by William Russel, Principal of the Merrimack [N. H.] School for Teachers, and formerly Editor of the American Journal of Education:

"The edition of Dr. Webster's Dictionary, revised by Professor Goodrich, I would earnestly recommend to the attention of all teachers who are desirous of becoming fully cualified to give instruction in the English Language. The opious information which that work embodies, on all topics connected with Etymology—the extreme exactness, as well as the number, extent, and fullness of the definitions which it furnishes to every important word, render it a mine of philological wealth to instructors. The volume is, in fact, the teacher's encyclopedia, as well as lexicon, for daily reference. Could a copy of it be provided, as the permanent property of every district school, the effect, as regards the improvement of instruction, would be deeply and extensively felt, in the increased skill of the teacher, and the higher attainments of his pupils, in the most important part of education—the acquisition of an adequate knowledge and proper use of our own language."

"It has come to be a necessity to every educated man."—Lord Brougham

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS, &C.

From the President of the United States.

"To Mr. E. Walker—Dear Sir:—I have found your Statesman's Manual a valuable work, and exceedingly useful and convenient. Yours, J. K. Polk."

From the Hon. Henry Clay.

"My Dear Sir:—Your Statesman's Manual is a very valuable work for reference."

State of New York:
Secretary's Office,
Department of Common Schools, } Albany, Sept. 18, 1846.

I have examined the "Statesman's Manual," in two volumes octavo, compiled by Edwin Williams, and am of opinion that it is a proper work for school district libraries, and deserving of a place in these institutions, designed for the diffusion of useful knowledge.

Signed, J. S. Randall,
Dep. State Sup't Com. Schools.

From the Journal of Commerce.

"This is one of the most important books published in the United States for a long time."

From the N. Y. Courier and Enquirer.

"This is the most important contribution to American political history ever published."

From the Democratic Review.

"The whole forms a most complete library in itself, of all that concerns the politics of the country. No individual should be without these two volumes at hand for prompt reference. How many hours of idle discussion and senseless debates might be spared to heated partizans, were these books at hand for appeal. We shall have frequent occasion to refer to them."

From the N. Y. Express of August 21, 1846.

"This is emphatically a national work, and as such eminently deserving of a national support."

From the Commercial Advertiser.

"Such a work is invaluable, and is offered at a comparatively low price, in expectation of a large sale."

From the Luzern Democrat.

"The Statesman's Manual is a very valuable work, comprising a complete condensed political history of our country from the formation of our government until the present time."

From the Washingtonian, Ohio.

"It is but scanty praise to say, that no work of equal value to the American Statesman, Politician, Journalist, Historian, &c., &c., has ever before appeared."

From the Harrisburg (Pa.) Argus, August 26, 1846.

"No politician, no man who desires to understand the history of the several administrations of the General Government, should be without a copy of it. As a book of reference, it is invaluable."

LETTERS FROM ILLINOIS—NO. 10.

Pleasant Hill, near Farmington, Ill.,
16th of 2d mo., 1849.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

To some of your readers, I doubt not, every thing respecting the routes to this part of Illinois is as well known as to myself; but, by letters received from different parts, I learn that information on that subject is desired by numbers of others. I therefore propose, in this letter, to finish the series with a little of the information I have gathered on that subject.

From the Atlantic States there are two great public routes, with several branches, and different modes of conveyance—the Southern, through Pennsylvania and Maryland, and by the way of the Ohio, Mississippi, and Illinois Rivers; and the Northern, through New York, and by way of the great Lakes to Chicago, then by the Michigan and Illinois Canal, and the Illinois River. The southern route is from Philadelphia to Pittsburg, or from Baltimore to Pittsburg. From each of these cities, there is a railroad conveyance, both for passengers and freight. From Philadelphia it is through Lancaster, Harrisburg, and Hollidaysburg, 318 miles. It is to be understood, however, that the railroad on this route terminates at Harrisburg, on one line, and at Chambersburg on the other; and the passenger has to travel the remainder of the distance by stage, 212 miles; or, by stage 114 miles, and the remainder by canal. The first-class fare is usually $10—sometimes $12. By Baltimore, the railroad runs to Cumberland; from thence to Brownsville, over the Laurel Ridge of the Cumberland mountain, 3,900 feet high; it is 70 miles to Brownsville, and has to be traveled either in a stage or a wagon; thence down the Monongehala River by steamboat, 36 miles, to Pittsburg. The expense is about the same; but I think the Baltimore route is the quickest and easiest. On each of these routes there is a freight train, which carries emigrants for half price, and freight at from forty-five to seventy-five cents for every 100 lbs. But when as many as fourteen or more emigrants club together, they can usually hire a passage for about $3 per head. By the passenger trains, it should be observed, that at the railroad terminus every passenger's luggage is all weighed, and three cents per pound charged on all over 50 lbs. There is no possibility of evading this. The Pennsylvania Canal route commences at Columbia, or Wrightsville. Columbia is on one side of the Susquehanna, and Wrightsville on the opposite. From Philadelphia to Columbia, is usually traveled by railroad. From the lower part of the Delaware River, by the Chesapeak and Delaware Canal, to the Chesapeak Bay, thence by the Susquehanna River to Wrightsville. The chief difference between a first-class passage and an emigrant, is that the first ride on a velvet-cushioned seat, and the others on plain painted benches, and are a day or two longer on the road. No passenger from Philadelphia or Baltimore should ever pay his passage from those points farther than to Pittsburg, until he has arrived at the latter place. If he does, he will be at the mercy of agents for his accommodations the remainder of the journey.

At Pittsburg, the traveler will find a number of steamboats, with large show-boards hung up, on which he will read, "To St. Louis and the Illinois River, to-morrow." If he consults the runners or the agents, they will tell him the fairest tale possible; but his only safety will be, never to believe them, farther than he can see the evidence of their statements with his own eyes; and every device is resorted to, to deceive. He may be sure of this, it is of no use to engage his passage at Pittsburg for any place beyond St. Louis. There is not one boat in fifty, that takes its freight at Pittsburg, that ever comes up the Illinois River with it. As to the time of starting, I never could tell when that would be, until the boat was loaded down with freight and passengers; the last and surest sign of all was to see the butcher and the green-grocer carrying on the "boat-stores." When you see that done, you may be sure the boat will soon be off. The different stages of water in the river makes such a wide difference in the cost of a boat's tri[illegible]y considerable distance on the west[illegible] rivers, that no regular bill of fares can be e[illegible]blished; it is all left to the press of business, [illegible]d the adventitious state of the weather and the seasons. I could only determine what I must pay, by inquiring of several boats, and comparing their accommodations, before I made any bargain. A cabin passage from Pittsburg to St. Louis, on an average between high water and low water, ranges from $10 to $20; and a deck passage from $2 50 to $5. In the cabin, the passengers are boarded at regular tables, and as well furnished as at any city hotel. The deck passengers find their own bed and board; the deck room, however, is furnished with berths for sleeping, and a large stove, with fire, for cooking. All the steamboats on the western rivers, have their engines on the low-pressure principle; their shafts, beams, and cranks, work horizontally instead of perpendicularly, the same as a stationary engine in a factory. Of course they lie lengthwise on the lower deck of the boat. The cabin is built over the engine, the whole length of the boat, and has a long saloon, a lady's room at the stern end, and state-rooms for two persons to sleep in each, ranged on each side of the saloon, and a ladies' cabin. Over these is the promenade deck. The room for the deck passengers is astern of the engine, on the first deck; and in the first-class of boats, is well enclosed from the weather, with enclosed berths, and other necessary appurtenances. In the smaller class of boats, the room is so small as to crowd the passengers too near the engine for comfort, and the berths are only open racks. So that, were I removing a family, and intending to take a deck passage, I would rather wait a day or two for a good boat, than to hurry off in one of inferior accommodations; and, indeed, that class of boats will often arrive at St. Louis sooner than one of the other, which has started two or three days before. As the boats often stop to put off and take on freight at places along the river, there are usually ample opportunities for passengers to replenish their supplies.

At St. Louis, there are always persons to be found who make a business of trading and freighting to all parts of the Illinois River. Their charge last fall, for a cabin passage to Peoria, was $4; deck passage $1 50; with the same accommodations as on the Ohio River. From Pittsburg to St. Louis is 1,180 miles, and at high water the distance is sometimes run in a single week's time. From St. Louis to Peoria is 170 miles; and usually takes from 24 to 36 hours, according to the amount of way business the boat has to do. To go to Lewiston, passengers land at Liverpool Landing; to Canton, at Copperas Creek; to Farmington, at Reed's or Lancaster Landing. Reed's and Lancaster is the same landing under two names.

The northern route, from Albany to Buffalo, and from Buffalo to Chicago, is so well known, that I need not particularize, farther than to say, that from Chicago to Peoria is 175 miles. I will only add, that last fall a family of three adult persons, and two children, with 30 cwt. of household goods, came from Troy to Chilicothe, 20 miles above Peoria, for a cost of $65.

As health is a matter of much importance, especially on a journey, I think it may be of some use to others to say, that all the boats use the river water, which is considered very healthy by those who are accustomed to it; but I found, by experience, observation, and inquiry, that on almost all persons, men, women, and children, who cross the mountains and take a passage on the river, it acts as a very violent cathartic. The first symptom after a free draught of cold water, on board the boat, is increased thirst, which is aggravated by every fresh draught that is taken; in five or six hours, pains in the abdomen; then diarrhea. In persons who persist in the use of the water, no potations of distilled liquor will prevent its running on for days, and frequently producing great prostration and debility. As soon as I discovered what was the matter, I resolutely set myself against tasting any water until it had been boiled, and a sediment deposited by an infusion of sugar and milk, which will take place in two minutes after the mixture is made and set down. Never drink the dregs of your cup. With a little astringent medicine, I was well in twelve hours, while others, who obstinately rejected all advice, were sick for days.

I may add, that on the rivers the steamboats will usually take any reasonable amount of luggage with passengers, without additional charge. The average charge for freight from Pittsburg to St. Louis, may be put down at 40 cents for every 100 lbs. As we are none of us more than 16 miles from the Illinois River, no settlement in the west can be more easily reached than those in Illinois.

PERSECUTION OF DR. THOLUCK.

A correspondent of the Edinburg Witness, writing from Halle, Germany, says:—

The sufferings which this honored and devoted servant of God, has, through a long course of years, been called on to endure, for the sake of that Gospel which he has so learnedly and unsparingly defended against the assaults of Rationalism, are deepening in their tragic character. It is not long since the zeal and devotedness of his students, by whom he is much beloved, saved his house and invaluable library from the fury and ignorance of a mob which systematically attacked it. About a fortnight ago, a shot was fired into the sitting-room of Madame Tholuck; providentially, she had a few moments before quitted the room. And the ensuing evening, the first of this month, a sort of box, containing combustibles, was placed at the house door, and so fastened to the handle that it should explode on the door being opened. One of his servants, however, having occasion to go out, had actually turned the handle, and was about to open the door, when she was hastily summoned back to receive further directions. She had scarcely retraced a step or two, when the explosion took place. On examination, fragments of the deadly contents were discovered in the shattered door, and in the walls and windows of the houses opposite. There is not a doubt that evil was intended to the amiable Tholuck himself, by some one who hates him for his Master's sake, and who must have been aware that he came home at that hour from the University; for the alarm had not subsided in his household when he arrived. A great revival has commenced among the students of Halle, mainly under the influence of Tholuck, and is spreading to other of the Universities of Germany. It is very possible that the faithfulness and overpowering eloquence of the preacher, in his 'Sermons for the Times,' which he has for some time been delivering in the academical divine service, as well as his Wednesday evening prayer-meeting among the burghers and the poor, have been the inciting causes to those diabolical schemes to which we have adverted.

THE DYING GIRL.

I'm fading in my youth, mother,
Death's dew is on my brow;
His wings are hovering o'er me—
I hear them rustling now!
For me the sun will rise no more,
The stars no more will shine;
My pleasant voyage of life is o'er,
The mouldering grave is mine.

I'm gazing on the woods, mother,
Where once I loved to stray,
When health sat blushing on my cheek
In joyous childhood's day.
Yon setting sun, my resting place,
The lonely church-yard, sees,
As he looks through, with yellow face,
The autumn's painted trees.

Farewell, farewell, my mother, dear!
When I have gone to dwell
In spirit-land, my voice you'll hear
Upon the night-breeze swell.
When summer's flowery hours shall come,
With all their joyous train,
I'll hover from my starry home,
To visit thee again.

The dead are ever with thee, mother,
Their forms thou canst not see;
The dying have a prophet eye—
They are revealed to me.
They hover round, on pinions fair,
And fan the aching brow,
While thou sitt'st weeping in thy chair,
I see them round thee now!

So grieve not, mother—I shall oft
Revisit thee again,
When summer airs come sweet and soft,
Across the laughing main.
I've chosen, mother, dear, the star
In which my soul shall dwell—
Look! look!—thou seest that gleam afar—
Farewell—farewell—farewell!

THE PRIEST AND THE ROBBER.

A TRUE STORY.

Forty years ago, the scenes here related occurred in the heart of France. A Roman Catholic priest was called on to prepare for his last change a highway robber, about to perish on the scaffold. The good father used all his eloquence, and made every effort, to induce the prisoner to repent of his many aggravated offences, in vain. He observed that the mind of the latter was absorbed—that he appeared not to heed him. What could engage his thoughts at such an awful hour?

'Do you reflect,' said the priest, 'that in two short hours you are to appear before your Maker?'

'I do,' said the prisoner, 'but I wish to live and repent, not to repent and die; and the thought has entered my brain—and I cannot for the soul of me drive it out—that you are the very man to save me from death, not to prepare me for it.'

'But,' said the priest, 'even if I had the power—which I have not—should I not be doing a wrong to mankind by setting you free, and thereby subjecting you to a further load of guilt?'

'If that is the only obstacle in the way, holy father, be entirely easy on that score. I have had too close a view of the scaffold, ever to expose myself to its terrors again. Never will I rob or defraud more. I will become a changed man.'

With imploring eyes, and bathed in tears, he knelt before the good father, and begged his life. He appealed to a kind heart, and saw the impression he had made. The chapel they were in was lighted only by a window near the ceiling, and was more than fifteen feet from the floor.

'You have but,' said the prisoner, 'to set the chair upon the altar, which we can place near the wall; you will then ascend on the chair, and I will mount upon your shoulders, from which I can gain the window.'

In an instant the criminal was beyond the reach of the law. The priest remained tranquilly seated in the chair, having restored the altar to its place. Some hours after the flight, the hangman, impatient at the long prayers of the priest, who, he thought, had been long enough to have put a dozen souls on the road to heaven, knocked at the door. Not seeing the prisoner, he demanded what had become of him.

'He must be an angel of light,' said the father, 'for, on the faith of a priest, he went out by that window. I saw him do it with my own eyes.'

The hangman was amazed. Having closely questioned the priest, he demanded if he was in earnest. On his replying in the affirmative, the executioner ran to warn the judges. They hastened to the chapel, examined the chair, the window, the height from the floor, and saw no other means of escape than that stated by the priest. Their brains were sadly perplexed. But they could not preserve their gravity at the perfect sang froid of the good father, while describing the flight of the angel, as he styled him, through the window, and the prayer he was tempted to make to him, as he disappeared, to take him along with him to the skies. Be this as it may, the Church was too powerful in those days to admit the doubting of a priest's word, even though he assumed to himself the merit of converting a highwayman into an angel.

Twenty years afterward, the holy father was lost in the woods of Ardennes. The shades of night had overtaken him; he was without food or shelter. Wild beasts were prowling around. Step by step, weary and desponding, he still wandered deeper in the mazes of the woods. At length his exhausted frame sunk with terror and fatigue. He commended his soul to the care of Heaven, and laid him down to die. He had lain there several hours, when the light of a lantern shone upon his face. It was held by a peasant, who examined his features attentively. He aided him to rise. With his sinewy arm he bore the exhausted form of the priest to a neat farm-house, delightfully situated in a fertile plain on the skirts of the woods. The priest was nursed with care, and on his restoration, warmly thanked his benefactor. On his recovering sufficiently to eat, the table was prepared for the new guest. A fine capon was cooked and nicely dressed, and every delicacy the farm afforded set before him. A female, neatly attired, with eight little ones, surrounded the table.

'Father,' exclaimed the peasant apart to him, after they had finished their repast, 'to you I am indebted for all the blessings which now surround me—wife, children, and plenty. You saved my life when I was condemned to die on the scaffold; I have, in turn, saved yours. I have redeemed the pledge which I made to you. A wandering mendicant, chance directed me to this house, where, by industry and honest dealing, I won the confidence of the father of my wife, who, on his death, left us this farm. I have prospered ever since in my affairs. My wife has proved a real blessing to me, and my children, with their ruddy faces and sweet smiles, remind me each day, as I return from my honest toil, what I owe to Heaven and to you.'

The good father, whose conscience had often upbraided him for the fraud he had practiced on the magistrate, and the danger of letting a robber loose upon society, was set at ease. He embraced the peasant, and thanked God that he had been the means of saving a guilty soul from perdition, and raising a condemned felon to the dignity of an honest man.

JEWS IN EUROPE.

Amidst the convulsions of the old world, the changing spirit of the age is nowhere more distinctly perceptible than in the changing relations of the Jews. In some countries, they are protected by governments, from which the experience of centuries had taught them to expect persecution. On the 4th of December an attempt to burn the quarter where they reside in Rome, was prevented by the interference of the military, whose skill and strength, in former times, would have directed and aided the blind rage of the populace, instead of hindering it.

The present position of the Jews was thus adverted to in extracts given by the Jewish Chronicle, from a speech delivered at Exeter Hall, on the 5th of last June, by the Hon. Wm. Cowper, Member of Parliament:—

"In Germany we already see Jews occupying high public places. The prejudices that have hitherto ground down the Jews into the dust, are fast dissipating. In France, we see every career opening to the Jews. We see them occupying the most distinguished stations. Even in Rome itself, the prejudices against the Jews, and the persecution of them, is passing away. Even in that stronghold of persecution, where alone the Inquisition still raises its gloomy head, and by the instrumentality of the Pope himself, there has been indulgence extended to the Jews. In our own land, there passed last night, in the House of Commons, a bill, to which I will not allude in detail, but I quote it for the purpose of showing what a great, strong, and marked sign of the times it is, that the Representatives of the United Kingdom should, by a large majority, have broken through what has been held to be a sacred principle of the Constitution, that of not admitting any one into Parliament who does not profess the Christian Religion." The speaker alluded, in this instance, to the debate occasioned by the election of Baron Rothschild, the great Jewish banker, of London.

The Emperor of Russia has lately issued a ukase, creating a Council of Rabbins, the members of which will be chosen by the Government from a list of candidates elected by the Grand Jewish Communes of the Empire. It will be the duty of this Council to decide all questions relative to the laws and customs of the Jewish worship, the functions of the Rabbins, and the appeals which may be made from sentences of divorce pronounced by the Synagogue Councils. It will sit at St. Petersburgh, and will hold a yearly session of two months.

Intolerance is still triumphant in Norway. The Storthing has rejected a proposal by its own commission to grant liberty of worship to all Christians, and permission to Jews to settle themselves in the kingdom.

The Jews, unchanged, have survived the changes of centuries. A striking instance of the fulfilment of prophecy, that they shall possess the gate of their enemies, is seen in the present erection of a new synagogue, in Canterbury, England, on the ancient house of the redoubted Knights Templars, once the unrelenting persecutors of the Jews, but now themselves swept from the face of the earth.

THE RICH MAN'S HAPPINESS.

I have a rich neighbor, that is always so busy that he has no leisure to laugh; the whole business of his life is to get money, and more money, that he may still get more and more money; he is still drudging on, and says that Solomon says, "The diligent hand maketh rich;" and it is true indeed; but he considers not that it is not in the power of riches to make a man happy; for it is wisely said, by a man of great observation, "that there be as many miseries beyond riches as on this side of them;" and yet God deliver us from pinching poverty, and grant that, having a competency, we may be content and thankful. Let us not repine, or so much as think the gifts of God unequally dealt, if we see another abound with riches; when, as God knows, the cares that are the keys that keep those riches, hang often so heavily at the rich man's girdle, that they clog him with weary days and restless nights, even when others sleep quietly. We see but the outside of the rich man's happiness; few consider him to be like the silk-worm, that, when she seems to play, is at the very same time spinning her own bowels, and consuming herself. And this many rich men do; loading themselves with corroding cares to keep what they have already got. Let us, therefore, be thankful for healthened competence, and above all for a quiet conscience.

THE CONVERSION OF D'AUBIGNE.

In Scotland were two brethren, James and Robert Haldane, the sons of a wealthy country gentleman, who lived, as too many are apt to live, without any distinct recognition of his relations to the unseen world, and wholly engrossed with the engagements and pleasures of time. Both had received a liberal education, and gave indication of high talent, and great energy of character. The youngest was captain of an East Indiaman, but, on one occasion, while making preparations for a voyage to India, was delayed longer than usual, and, as he had little to do, was induced to study the Scriptures. The consequence was, that he found his heart engaged, before he was aware, in the great and thrilling truths of the Gospel. Other circumstances conspiring, he was induced to abandon his commission, and, instead of going to sea, gave himself to study and the preaching of the Gospel in the suburbs of Edinburg. He subsequently became the pastor of a large Baptist church in that city, and has been the means of accomplishing an untold amount of good.

His conversion, of course, greatly affected the mind of his brother, who, it is said, was not altogether pleased with the change. But, skating one day upon a deep pond in his pleasure-grounds, the ice gave way, and he sank without the power of extricating himself. He continued in this way for some time, and would have been drowned, had not one of his servants rescued him. This circumstance concurring with the impression received from his brother's conversion, gave a new current to his thoughts. He was induced to investigate the claims of Christianity, and at length yielded his heart. He sold a large portion of his property, and devoted it to benevolent purposes; and, what was better, he devoted his fine talents to the cause of Christ. He became the author of several religious works, which evince great talent and piety, and among others, one on the Evidences of Christianity, which is among the best ever written on that subject.

Subsequently Mr. Haldane made a journey to the continent of Europe, and resided for a short time at Geneva. He was much affected with the low spiritual condition of the Protestant churches there, which had become infected with the rationalistic and neological views prevalent in Germany. Indeed, the clergy themselves had so far departed from the faith of the Reformation as to reject nearly all the fundamental doctrines of the Gospel, particularly the divinity of Christ, and the doctrine of atonement. Mr. Haldane made himself acquainted with the students attending the Theological School in Geneva, invited a number of them to his house, and, by free conversation, endeavored to teach them the principles of evangelical truth, and the nature of vital religion. At the same time he formed them into an association for prayer, in which exercise they spent much time at his residence. This course was continued for some time, till a number of young men abandoned their skepticism, and yielded their hearts to the claims of a pure and elevated faith. Among these was Felix Neff, subsequently pastor in the high Alps, and one of the purest and most devoted men that ever lived; Henry Pyt, another well known and truly pious man; and Henry Merle D'Aubigne, the author of the History of the Reformation, and President of the new Evangelical School of Theology in Geneva. ### A TRUE-HEARTED SUBSCRIBER.

A short time since, a subscriber called at our office, who was indebted for the Journal from the beginning. The bill had run so long as to be considerable. We might have expected, according to frequent experience in similar cases, that his face would be clothed with frowns, that his countenance would have been anything but agreeable, that he would insist upon a large discount from our published terms, and when he had begged and insisted upon the utmost deduction, would pay the balance with many a groan, and discontinue the paper. How unlike our experience and anticipations! His face was covered with smiles, and his words were uttered in a manly tone, as if he had a soul left, while the sentiments they communicated were in full harmony with the manly voice. He had been unfortunate, having lost much of his property by knavery; he had struggled hard and long to recover himself, having a young family to support in the meanwhile, out of the earnings of his daily toil. We offered to make him a discount, in consideration of his misfortunes. This he refused, insisting that the bill should be made out in full accordance with the printed terms, and would pay it, and, moreover, not only pay for the past, but continue for the future; for he well knew, hard as his own struggles were, those of publishers of religious papers in New Hampshire could not be less. Such men deserve a monument, and here we erect it, leaving the name to be inscribed in future time. [Cong. Jour.

Politeness.—The Rev. Mr. ——— had traveled far to preach to a congregation at ———. After the sermon, he waited very patiently, expecting that some one of the brethren would invite him to dinner. In this he was disappointed. One after another departed, until the house was nearly as empty as the minister's stomach. Summoning resolution, however, he walked up to an elderly-looking gentleman, and said gravely:

'Will you go home with me to dinner, brother?'

'Where do you live?'

'About twenty miles from this, sir.'

'No,' said the man, coloring, 'but you must go with me.'

'Thank you; I will, cheerfully.'

After that the minister was no more troubled about his dinner.

THE SABBATH IN CHINA.

Why was it that our denomination was guided to make choice of China, rather than any other country, as the most suitable place to begin its missionary operations among the heathen?—is a question not unfrequently asked by others, and one about which the doubts of some of our own people are not yet fully resolved. It were easy to give the reasons which governed the Missionary Board, when they decided to give up Abyssinia, to which their minds had all along been directed, and to send their missionaries to the Celestial Empire; but it is not so easy to say what were the meaning and intent of Divine Providence in the matter. But

> "God is his own interpreter,
> And he will make it plain."

Had our missionaries gone to Abyssinia, they would have been isolated, and shut out from all opportunity of collision with the missionaries of other denominations—a thing which, in the minds of many first-day people whom we consulted, was very desirable; and even with many, if not with the most, of our own people, it was thought expedient to occupy some spot of earth, where we might propagate our peculiar tenets without disturbance. We will not say but what the Board itself was prepossessed in favor of this view. For we were not blind to the fact, that if we should undertake to cultivate a field partly occupied by other sects, there would unavoidably arise such a clashing of interests as would be very uncomfortable both to ourselves and to our missionaries. But God seeth not as man seeth; and, in his providence, often makes it necessary that there should be division rather than peace. Luke 12: 51. Abyssinia was closed against us; and it had been a want of wisdom little short of madness, with our feeble resources, to attempt the planting of a mission there. But China was open; and to her three hundred millions of population, the few missionaries already there were but as "a drop in the bucket."

Two years have not passed since our missionaries first saw the shores of that benighted land, and yet "they bring certain strange things to our ears;" not that other missionaries have been teaching the heathen to observe the first day of the week, rather than the Sabbath of the Bible—of that we were well enough aware—but that they have so "darkened counsel" as to make the Chinese converts to Christianity believe that they are actually observing the very day of the week enjoined in the fourth commandment! The doctrine of a change of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week, as taught in this country and in Great Britain, is carefully concealed. It would seem that their translations of the Scriptures are so managed, that when taken in connection with all the preparatory instruction given to the Chinese relative to the hebdomadal cycle, it does not appear but what "the ceremony-worship-day" is identically the same which God sanctified at the close of creation. In short, it seems that both their translations, and their teachings, have been so adjusted to one another as to make the Chinese think, that the day commonly called Monday is the first day of the week, yea, the very day upon which God began his creative work; and that the day commonly called Sunday by other nations, is the seventh day of the week! As the Chinese are said to know nothing of the computation of time by weeks, except as introduced among them by foreigners, it was easy to practice this imposition upon them.

When this information was first sent us, we felt rather inclined to say nothing about it. We suspected there must be some mistake about the matter. Our brethren had been there but a short season; and it might be that, owing to their knowing almost nothing of that most difficult of languages, they had received a wrong impression. Surely, we thought, men professing to have the fear of God before their eyes would not be guilty of such a flagrant outrage upon the truth. But after waiting a good while, and receiving more full details, we begin to suspect that the first impressions of our missionaries were more than half correct. At all events, we know that they have taken every method in their power to arrive at certainty in the matter; we know that they have held correspondence respecting it with the other missionaries; and we know that when they urged the consideration of the matter upon the attention of those missionaries, it was tacitly admitted that the thing was true of which our missionaries complained. Had it not been true, doubtless some attempt would have been made to undeceive them.

We wish our readers to have perfect understanding of this matter; we will, therefore, explain more fully. It seems that when the missionaries of other orders went to China, they did as they had always done at home; that is, they set apart the Sunday as a day of rest and worship. They gave to this day, in the language of the Chinese, the name of le-pai-nyi, (ceremony-worship-day.) Sometimes they called it ur-se-nyi, (rest-day.) These two terms were used interchangeably to designate the Sunday. Next, they set about naming the other days of the week, as follows: Monday, which is every where else known as the second day of the week, they called "the first day after ceremony-worship-day;" Tuesday was called "second day after ceremony-worship-day;" Wednesday, "third day after ceremony-worship-day." And thus Saturday became "the sixth day after ceremony-worship-day." By this means, the Sunday became the seventh day! All this being done, the next business was to translate the Scriptures. Accordingly, the fourth commandment is made to read somewhat after this manner: "You must remember the ceremony-worship-day, to keep it holy; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, &c., and rested on the seventh day," which the Chinaman, of course, understands to be the Sunday, according to what the missionaries have already taught him concerning the days of the week and their names. Thus the fourth commandment is made to enjoin, positively and specifically, the Sunday, in contradistinction from any and every other day! A beautiful specimen of faithfulness, this! Would such men dare to preach from the text, "We can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth?" But the thing could not stop here. When they came to translate the history of our Lord's resurrection, they seem to have found themselves in rather an awkward dilemma. They must, to be consistent with what they had already done, make the visit of the disciples to the tomb, and the consequently supposed time of Christ's resurrection, to have taken place, not on Sunday, as Christians generally hold, but on Monday! The Evangelist must be made to say, "In the end of the ceremony-worship-day," or, "in the end of the rest-day"—(it matters not which, for in the mind of the Chinaman the two terms are convertible,)—"as it began to dawn toward the first day after ceremony-worship-day, came Mary Magdalene to see the sepulchre." What! give up the dogma of a Christian Sabbath, for which they always contended so strenuously when at home! Renounce the idea of a transfer of the institution from the seventh to the first day of the week! Throw out of the question all consideration of the resurrection of Christ, as having no bearing upon the subject at all! Throw to the winds the stereotyped sentiment of Christendom, that the work of redemption is so much greater than that of creation, that it needs to be commemorated by a new Sabbath! Yes, all these are given up entirely; there is no help for it. In the Old Testament the commandment was made to enjoin the keeping of the Sunday, and, of course, there could be no change brought about under the New Testament without making the "ceremony-worship-day" to come on Monday.

We are not advised whether the same trick has been practiced by missionaries elsewhere. We wish we had certain information. How is it in Burmah? In Hindostan? In Africa? In the islands of the sea? Can any one tell us? But upon the presumption that this deceit has obtained nowhere but in China, we begin to see the reason why God directed us to that field rather than to any other. It was that we might, at least, bear such a testimony against this perversion of His law by the missionaries of other denominations, as would leave them without excuse. It may be, ("charity hopeth all things,") that they did not consider the pernicious consequences of the course they were pursuing. It may be that the idea of its being a matter of indifference what particular day is observed as the Sabbath, had taken such hold of their minds, that they never so much as suspected there was any thing wrong in making Monday the first day of the week. It may be, that overlooking the great design of the sabbatic institution, as a testimony against Atheism and Idolatry, and regarding it only as a season for devotional exercises and for bodily rest, they did not suppose that the least evil could ensue from changing the order of reckoning. But if such were their views, it is high time they were undeceived; and God, in his wise providence, appears to have called us, the Seventh-day Baptists of America, to the work of undeceiving them.

In view of this state of things, it becomes a solemn question, Are we prepared for the work which Providence has thrown into our hands? We very much fear that we are not. We very much fear that Seventh-day Baptists are not half awake to the responsibilities which lie upon them. We entered upon the work of foreign missions without even suspecting that we should be called to grapple with such a form of corruption as that which now develops itself. We never dreamed of any controversial collision with the missions of other persuasions, except in such form as we were brought into collision with them at home. It is true, we supposed that this collision, being witnessed by the heathen, would, to a certain extent, operate upon them somewhat unfavorably; and, on that account, we rather lamented the necessity under which we were laid. But never did it enter our minds, that the instruction of the Chinese in regard to the method of computing time by weeks was such, that the word of God, even though faithfully translated, could not convey truth to the mind. Of this we were quite ignorant. And it now seems, that our missionaries, and those of other orders, stand before the heathen, not as controversialists, drawing different conclusions and opinions from given premises, but as conflicting witnesses in regard to a matter of fact. In short, the controversy becomes a mere question of veracity, the most painful, distressing, and pernicious form which it could possibly assume. Who does not see that we, as a people, and our missionaries in particular, have a work to do, which is attended with most unpleasant difficulties? And again we ask, Are we prepared for it?

But suppose it should appear, that the same deceit has been palmed off upon the heathen at other mission stations. Suppose it should be found, that not only the Chinese, but the Hindoos, the Persians, the Hottentots, the Ceylonese, have all been taught that Monday is the first day of the week, and Sunday the seventh,—what then? Ah! then we ought to take to ourselves shame and confusion of face, that we were so supine as never to get about the work of missions, until so great an error was fastened upon all nations. Yes, shame upon us! Let us up, and do what in us lies to recover lost ground. Heaven grant that we may be prepared for our work, and do it "in meekness of wisdom." *

HENRY CLAY ON EMANCIPATION.

The Lexington Observer publishes a letter from Hon. Henry Clay upon the question "whether African slavery, as it now exists in Kentucky, shall be left to a perpetual continuance, or some provision shall be made in the new Constitution for its gradual and ultimate extinction?" The letter commences with some general observations upon the subject of slavery. In relation to the opinion entertained by a few, that the institution of slavery is a blessing, and ought to exist in every well organized society, Mr. Clay remarks, that, "if slavery be fraught with these alledged benefits, the principle on which it is maintained would require that one portion of the white race should be reduced to bondage to serve another portion of the same race, when black subjects of slavery could not be obtained; and that in Africa, where they may entertain as great a preference for their color as we do for ours, they would be justified in reducing the whites to slavery, in order to secure the blessings which that state is said to diffuse." The argument in favor of reducing the African race to slavery, sometimes derived from their supposed intellectual inferiority to the white races, Mr. Clay thinks, proves entirely too much; for, "it would prove that every white nation, which had made greater advances in civilization, knowledge and wisdom, than another white nation, would have a right to reduce the latter to a state of bondage; nay, farther, if the principle of subjugation founded upon intellectual superiority be true, and be applicable to races and to nations, what is to prevent its being applied to individuals?—and then the wisest man in the world would have a right to make slaves of all the rest of mankind!" Having thus disposed of the usual arguments for the perpetual continuance of slavery, Mr. Clay sets forth his system of gradual emancipation. Three principles, he thinks, should regulate the establishment of such a system. "The first is, that it should be slow in its operation, cautious, and gradual, so as to occasion no convulsion, nor any rash or sudden disturbance in the existing habits of society. Second, that, as an indispensable condition, the emancipated slaves should be removed from the State to some Colony. And, thirdly, that the expenses of their transportation to such colony, including an outfit for six months after their arrival, should be defrayed by a fund to be raised from the labor of each freed slave." In accordance with these principles, he recommends that a period should be fixed, say 1855 or 1860, and that all born before that period should remain slaves for life, while all born after it should be free at the age of twenty-five years, but be liable afterward to be hired out, under the authority of the State, for a term not exceeding three years, in order to raise a sum sufficient to pay the expenses of their transportation to the colony, and to provide them an outfit for six months after their arrival there. The offspring of those who are to be free at twenty-five, he would make free from their birth, but upon the condition that they should be apprenticed until they were twenty-one, and be also afterward liable to be hired out, for a period not exceeding three years, for the purpose of raising money to transport them to the colony, and support them there the first six months. The colonization of the blacks, as they successively arrive at the age entitling them to freedom, Mr. Clay regards as an indispensable condition, without which he would be "utterly opposed to any scheme of emancipation," and he looks to the Western Coast of Africa as the best location for the colony. In conclusion, Mr. Clay enumerates several considerations which unite in recommending to the State of Kentucky a system for the gradual abolition of slavery. One is the exposed condition of the State, as affording great facilities to the escape of slaves into the Free States and Canada—a difficulty which is likely to grow each year with the increase of anti-slavery feeling. Another consideration is, that in the event of a civil war, or "in the more direful event of the dissolution of the Union in consequence of the existence of slavery, Kentucky would become the theater, and bear the brunt of the war," involving expenses and injuries for which she could obtain no indemnity.

Such is the substance of Mr. Clay's long letter—an outline of his plan for the gradual emancipation of the slaves of Kentucky. Very serious objections to the scheme will of course suggest themselves to the mind of every reader. In the first place, the delay of six or eleven years before any change can take place, gives the slaveholder an opportunity, and presents him with strong inducements, to remove his slaves into States where there is no prospect of emancipation, and where they will be worse off than they now are in Kentucky. Then, if the slaves have not all been removed, the length of time before emancipation can actually begin, is enough to condemn the system; for, upon the supposition that 1855 is the period fixed for it to commence, thirty-four years must elapse before the first annual transportation of freed slaves. But supposing that these thirty-four long years of servitude have rolled round, and the time has come for the first company to start, how many fathers and mothers, twenty-eight years old, will consider it a blessing to be transported across the Atlantic into the wilds of Africa, leaving their children behind them to serve until they are twenty-four years old, with very little prospect of ever again seeing them? Not many, we think. Indeed, in our estimation, the appending to an act of emancipation the condition of expatriation, renders the whole act cruel in the extreme, and unworthy of the sanction of a civilized, not to say Christianized, community.

"Reverend Doctors."—We learn from the Cleveland (O.) Herald, that at the recent Annual Commencement of the Cleveland Medical College, the honorary degree of M. D. was conferred upon Eld. Wm. B. Maxson, pastor of the First Seventh-day Baptist Church in Brookfield, N. Y. Hereafter, therefore, it will be proper (if such a thing is ever proper) to address him as the Rev. Dr. Maxson. Eld. Eli S. Bailey, pastor of the Second Seventh-day Baptist Church in Brookfield, is also an M. D., and of course equally entitled to the appellation of Rev. Dr. With two "Reverend Doctors" among them, our churches in the town of Brookfield ought to prosper, if there is any virtue in titles.

Mr. Polk and the Sabbath.—It is not many weeks since one of the religious papers, in speaking of General Taylor's Sunday doings, and contrasting him with Mr. Polk, said that the latter had "never been guilty of a public breach of the Fourth Commandment," by which we suppose was meant, that he had never done any public business on Sunday. But alas! how has the mighty fallen! The political papers now say that all of the night following Saturday, the third of March, Mr. Polk was in the Capitol, engaged in signing bills and transacting other public business; and that even at six o'clock on Sunday morning he appointed Senator Hannegan as Minister to Prussia! What will the trumpeters of Mr. Polk's sabbatic conscientiousness say to this?

A Negro in Cambridge University.—Several years ago, a colored man named Alexander Crummell, was refused admission to the Episcopal Theological Seminary of this city, except on conditions which he considered degrading, and would not accept. We are happy to learn, from an Episcopal paper, that he is now capped and gowned in the University of Cambridge. He went to England to get funds in aid of his church, and some benevolent person or persons have put him in his present position, to enable him to better qualify himself for the work of the ministry.

Revival.—A letter from Rev. C. Wardner, pastor of the Baptist Church at Covert, Seneca county, N. Y., says: "We are enjoying a deeply interesting revival, which has been in progress for four weeks. I have preached continually during that time. We have witnessed the most solemn exhibitions of the power of God, that have ever characterized revivals in this place. It still continues. I have baptized ten, and expect to baptize ten or fifteen more very soon. Not only is the stream of salvation flowing here, but the stream of death, carrying many to the grave and eternity, some prepared and some unprepared."

Revival.—A letter from North Brookfield, Madison county, New York, informs us that the Baptist Church in that place has enjoyed a revival of religion in the course of the past winter. The members generally have been awakened, backsliders reclaimed, and about thirty persons hopefully converted.

Alfred Academy.—We have received a Catalogue of Alfred Academy and Teachers' Seminary for the year ending March 15, 1849, from which we learn that the whole number of students in the institution during the year has been 450, of whom 187 were ladies, and 263 gentlemen.

Elements of English Grammar, Analytical and Synthetical; arranged in Progressive Exercises. By Wm. C. Kenyon, Principal of Alfred Academy and Teachers' Seminary. New York—1849.

Here is an attempt to combine practice with theory in teaching English Grammar. The author, instead of puzzling the student's brain at the outset with pages of incomprehensible definitions, commences with the first principles of Grammar, illustrates them till they are understood, and then proceeds step by step to unfold the deeper mysteries of the science. The plan of the work will commend itself to every one, and the manner in which it has been executed we think deserving of great praise.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I have recently met with a middle-aged man, named Joseph Morehouse, who says that he is from Repton, in Derbyshire, England, which is four miles from Burton-upon-Trent, and nine miles from Derby. At Repton, he says, there is a Seventh-day Baptist church. At the time he left there, in 1831, their pastor's name was Witt, who was also a shop-keeper. Another of their officers was William Patterson, whom he describes as a man venerable for years and character. Part of the church were farmers, and others of different employments. They own a good brick meeting-house, and are quite a respectable body of people; strictly observe, and meet for worship on, the seventh day; and pursue their usual occupations on the first day of every week. As we have never known this body of people, I think it would be well for some of your English correspondents to seek them out, and open a correspondence with them.

The Jews.—The steamer brings intelligence that the Senate of Hamburg is about to convene an Assembly of the citizens, for the sole purpose of introducing a bill for the emancipation of the Jews, in compliance with Section 16 of the fundamental law of the German people. In the English House of Commons, on the night of February 23d, the oath bill, by which the Jews will be enabled to sit in that assembly, was agreed to. The following is the oath to be taken by Jews:—

I, A. B. do swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, and that I will maintain the succession of the crown as established by an act, entitled 'An act for the farther limitation of the crown, and better securing the rights and liberties of the people;' and that I do not believe that the Pope of Rome, or any other foreign prince, prelate, person, state, or potentate, hath or ought to have any temporal or civil jurisdiction, authority, or power, within this realm; and that I will defend to the utmost of my power the settlement of property within this realm, as established by the laws. And I do make this recognition, declaration, and promise, heartily, willingly, and truly, so help me God.

Matters at Washington.—The Senate held several short sessions last week, principally to consider nominations made by the Executive. The members of the Cabinet have entered upon their duties, and are thronged with applicants for office. General Taylor and his family are comfortably quartered in the White House. The Ex-President has left Washington for his own residence. There have been several changes in the Cabinet, from what were announced last week, and we therefore re-print the names of its members, as follows:—

JOHN M. CLAYTON of Delaware, Secretary of State.
WILLIAM M. MEREDITH of Penn., Sec. of the Treas.
THOMAS EWING of Ohio, Sec. of the Home Departm't.
GEO. W. CRAWFORD of Georgia, Secretary of War.
WM. B. PRESTON of Virginia, Secretary of the Navy.
JACOB COLLAMER of Vermont, Postmaster General.
REVERDY JOHNSON of Maryland, Attorney General.

A Catholic Miracle.—The following paragraph of a letter from Rome, published in the Catholic journal of this city, shows that the day of miracles is not yet past, at least in the opinion of Romanists:—

"Public prayers were made in all the churches, according to the order of the Holy Father, to supplicate the divine mercy for the Pontificial States. On this occasion they exposed at St. Peter's the wood of the true cross, and the suarium of St. Veronica. On this suarium it is well known that the features of Our Blessed Lord are scarcely distinguishable. But on the third day of the exposure, the suarium became deeply colored, and the face of Our Lord shone vividly in the midst of a soft light. The canons who were in keeping of the sacred relic called immediately the clergy of the basilica, they sounded the bells, the people came together, saw the prodigy, wept, and were astonished. A Notary Apostolical was called, and a relation was drawn up from the lips of the canons and others in attendance. A copy of this was sent to the Holy Father at Gaeta. Rome is filled with the reports of this prodigy."

Mormonism in Wales.—It is stated in the London Patriot, that on December 31st and New Year's Day, the 'Latter Day Saints' held their half-yearly association in the hall of the White Lion, Merthyr. It was soon found that the hall, then containing one thousand five hundred persons, was inadequate for many who were outside seeking admittance; officers were, therefore, sent to meet those who were not able to get in, at the Alfred's Arms hall, Georgetown. The platform contained from sixty to one hundred 'officers.' The chair was taken by 'Captain Dan Jones,' when the following particulars relative to the Society in Wales were stated: Ten Conferences; baptized during the last six months, 1,001; total baptized in the year, 1,939; (very few excluded;) 70 branches, 156 elders, 180 priests, 147 teachers, 67 deacons—in all 550 officers. The Swansea Herald, which reports the meeting, adds: 'The thousands of Mormons in Wales appear to have great affection for, and confidence in, Captain Dan Jones, who intends returning in February to the Valley of the Salt Lake in California. About 350 Saints intend emigrating with him. It appears that 300 large ships could scarcely carry the hosts of saints who are now anxiously desiring to emigrate from this island to (as they say) their future homes.'

Transfer of Mission Property.—The Executive Committee of the American Missionary Association have purchased of the Prudential Committee of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, all the property belonging to the Board's mission in Siam, except the library and school apparatus. The transferred property consists of two dwelling-houses, one chapel, a floating-house, dispensary, a small hospital, and a book-bindery and type-foundry, with all their fixtures and appurtenances, presses, type, &c.

General Intelligence.

FOURTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamer America, which left Liverpool February 24, arrived at Halifax on the 8th inst., whence her news was telegraphed to N. York.

In England, cholera seems to be increasing. The returns have now swelled to 12,495, of which 5,546 have died, 3,788 have recovered, and 3,164 continue under treatment, on which the result is not stated.

The National Assembly of France has finally voted its own dissolution, and the new Assembly will meet about the 1st of May. Louis Napoleon seems to be daily acquiring strength and popularity, and politicians who have hitherto from apprehension of instability or other motives withheld their support, now come forward to declare themselves Bonapartists, and accordingly very great progress has been made in re-establishing public confidence.

The course of events in Continental Europe continues to be marked by the flight and fall of Princes. The Grand Duke of Tuscany has fled from Florence with his family, and has taken refuge at Port San Stefano. A Provisional Government has been declared by the excited people, as part of Italy.

In the Roman States, the republican feeling has reached the highest point of excitement, and the Executive Committee has usurped the Papal authority, which is altogether set aside. The Pope is deposed, and a Republic is established. This event took place at 10 o'clock in the morning of the 9th of February. It has been voted that he shall enjoy all the guaranties necessary for the independence of his spiritual power.

In Austria and Hungary affairs have taken an unfavorable turn. The Imperialists have been beaten in several encounters with the Hungarians, and Bem is likely to give them a great deal of trouble. It is impossible to read the accounts of this fratricidal war without being shocked at the frightful vindictiveness and barbarity with which hostilities are being carried on.

In Spain, at the session of Congress held at Madrid, January 31, a call was made for the correspondence said to have passed respecting the annexation of the island of Cuba. The reply was, that no proposition had been made, and that no Ministry composed of Spaniards would ever listen to such a proposal if made, and that they should never cede the island of Cuba. In the Senate, General Narvaez confirmed the above, and added that the rumors of a cession were entirely unfounded, and that the island of Cuba would always remain as now, part of the Monarchy of Spain.

Throughout Europe, reports from California continue to excite the most intense interest. The excitement has now extended to all classes. The French Government has dispatched an engineer to California with the object of surveying the new discoveries.

There has been some hard fighting in India. The City of Moolraj was captured, after having been battered and bombarded for an entire week; but the Citadel held out. The defense appears to have been one of the most obstinate on record. On the 27th, the columns moved to the attack, and established themselves within five hundred yards of the walls. Here batteries were erected, and on the 28th a terrific bombardment commenced. On the 30th, a fort containing eight hundred thousand pounds of powder was blown up by well-directed mortars. The devastation was horrible.

State of Ireland—Famine in Mayo.—Rev. Mr. Calahan, incumbent of Louisburgh, in the county of Mayo, in a letter to the editor of the Evening Packet, states that hundreds of individuals are dying of starvation around him. He gives the particulars of several most heart-rending cases of destitution among Protestants in his parish, and says:

"The famine years of 1846, 1847, and 1848, were halcyon years when contrasted with the dismal year of 1849. The sandbanks about me are studded with the bodies of the dead! Often have I given aid to the poor to buy coffins; with the small sums they received from me they bought some food, and then buried their dead in the sandbanks. The very graves in the churchyard have, in my presence, been assailed by starving dogs. From morning till night I am hourly beset with crawling skeletons begging for food!"

Awful Catastrophe in a Theater.—The Dunlop-street Theater, Glasgow, has been the scene of a most disastrous catastrophe. Shortly after the performance on Saturday, Feb. 17, had commenced, an alarm was given that a fire had broken out in the gallery, and the numerous auditory there became much excited. The fire brigade were soon at the theater, and commenced operations, which increased the fears of the people, and a rush was made to the door, in order to escape. Despite all remonstrance, the people would be out, and the result was the death of 64 individuals, beside four more or less injured. The authorities were soon at the spot, and, while assistance was being procured, the gallery stair was ascended, when at one of the landing-places was discovered a most horrifying spectacle—men, women, and children were huddled together, trodden under foot, dead or dying. All exertions to restore the poor creatures were successful only in a few instances. Sixty-one were dead, and three sent to the Royal Infirmary; two died upon the way, and one shortly after. Eleven persons, slightly bruised, were removed to their homes. On Sunday morning, the relatives of the sufferers, by order of the authorities, were admitted to identify them. And when each relative, father, mother, wife, or other friends were recognized, their shrieks rent the air. One woman claimed three as her own. The sufferers chiefly belong to the laboring classes, and are for the most part lads between 14 and 17 years old; the only female was one girl three years of age. One poor lad in Dunlop-street was the picture of woe. He had taken his sweetheart to the theater. She was carried away from him in the rush; and in his attempt to save her he had only been able to grasp her bonnet and shawl. With these still in his possession, he often exclaimed to the by-standers, "How can I go home to her parents without her, and tell them of this?"

Condition of California.—The Albany Argus publishes a letter from Colonel Stevenson, dated Monterey, October 23, 1848, from which we take the following:—

"This country is in a deplorable condition, without either civil or military law or government. At this moment there is not in this town—the late capital—either Governor, Alcade, Adjutant General, or any other person clothed with authority, except Captain Burton, late Lieutenant Colonel, and some twenty soldiers. All the others have deserted. Of the Company of Dragoons, C of the 1st Regiment, but about twenty remain, and they are divided into two detachments, five hundred miles apart. All the recruits that lately came out have deserted, and I have no doubt that the whole military force of the country will in a short time consist of the officers of the Artillery and Dragoon Company, and even they have strong inducements to desert—if not to dig for gold, at least to find a place where a common round jacket may be purchased for something less than fifty dollars, and where very indifferent board will not cost four dollars per day. In short, I regret to say, that there is neither law, order, or any kind of government, civil or military, in the country. It is simple anarchy, and the power of the strongest. The wild Indians infest even the most public highways, and shoot down with their arrows the unarmed traveler, merely for his garments. They enter the ranches, and compel the inmates to entertain them with the best they have, and then drive off their horses. How long this lawless condition of things is to continue, no one can tell."

Murder in California.—The California Star, of December 2, gives the following account of another inhuman murder in that region:—

A Mr. Pomeroy, late from Oregon, and a person whose name we have not yet learned, left Fort Sacramento on or about the 20th ult., taking the route leading through the country and across the San Joaquin River into Pueblo Valley. They were accompanied by two fellows with whom, it is said, they were partially acquainted—Joseph Lynch and a 'Bill Jones'—the one a recent deserter from the Navy, the other formerly in the Army service, a deserter. A short distance from the Fort the party overtook and passed a wagon, a few miles beyond which they encamped for the night. It is supposed that Lynch and Jones arose upon their companions during the night, plundered them of a large amount of gold, and murdered them upon the spot. The wagon arrived at their camp-ground early next morning, and the bodies of the unfortunate Pomeroy and friend were found at a short distance from a camp-fire weltering in blood. The assassins had fled, taking with them the animals of the two murdered men. Information was conveyed to the Fort, and parties dispatched in different directions to apprehend Lynch and Jones. There can be no doubt but that these are the murderers.

Case of Poisoning.—A correspondent of the Boston Daily Mail, under date of March 5, says that four persons were poisoned in the family of B. F. Blaisdell, Esq., of New Boston, N. H., by morphine, two of whom died—an old lady and a young child. An adopted daughter of the old lady purchased twenty-five cents' worth of morphine from an apothecary in the town of Manchester, part of which she put into a preparation of liquorice which the old lady was in the habit of taking. The dose proved fatal, and in a few hours she was found dead in her chair. Previous to this, however, the girl had tried its effects upon a dog, which were such as to lead the family to suppose that it was running mad, and it was killed. She returned to Manchester, without exciting their suspicion of the act she had committed. In fact, she had always been considered an honest, trusty girl, and had been treated by the family as a child and sister. In three weeks she returned to Boston, gave a dose to the child in tea, which proved fatal in twelve hours—it fell immediately into a comatose state, or profound slumber, from which it never awoke. Just after the funeral of the child, she dissolved a quantity in tea, prepared for the rest of the family, of which Mr. and Mrs. Blaisdell partook sparingly—remarking that it had an odd taste, and requesting her opinion of it, as she sat at the table. She took a mouthful, and immediately spit it out, and other tea was prepared. Mrs. B. was taken with vomiting while at the table—Mr. B. started for the Doctor, who lived but a short distance off, and before returning was seized with dumbness, and other symptoms, peculiar to this poison—both of them recovered, as the character of the poison was suspected, and prompt measures resorted to. Research was then made for the poison—the girl betrayed considerable trepidation, and was, after considerable reflection, charged with the crime, which she stoutly denied, yet giving evidence of her guilt by her manner. She was suffered to return to her employment in Manchester; but came to New Boston voluntarily on Saturday last, and for the sole purpose, as she says, of confessing the act. She denies having had any motive in administering the poison; but it is pretty evident that she expected the property of the family might revert to her after their death.

Counterfeit Bank Bills.—The Bank Note Reporters give the following list of recent counterfeits: Twos on the Connecticut River Banking Co.; fives on the Susquehanna County Bank; tens on the Middletown Bank, Ct.; fives on the Luther Wright Bank—the bill we saw was altered from a one dollar note, by pasting the figure 5 over the 1, and Five over the One—every bank is liable to such frauds; threes on the Centreville Bank R. I.; fives on the Somerset County Bank, N. J.; one hundreds on the North Western Bank of Va.; twenties on the Bank of South Carolina; threes on the Mechanic's Bank of Baltimore; twos on the Stamford Bank, Ct.; fives on the Fairfield Co. Bank, Ct.; ones on the Seneca County Bank, N. Y.—the beak of the eagle touches the o in No., in the genuine it does not—paper light, and bill shorter than genuine; ones on the Commercial Bank, Troy, are said to be in circulation; fives on the Agricultural Bank, Pittsfield, Mass.—vignette, a female sitting on a bale of goods, barrels, &c.—a female on each end—appearance light, and paper flimsy; twos on the Utica City Bank, N. Y., are said to be in circulation.

Mortality at the Tooting Asylum.—At the Tooting Asylum, near London, where different parishes sent their pauper children, from three to sixteen years of age, farming them out for food and clothing, at about a dollar a head per week, a dreadful mortality broke out about the 1st of January, which carried off over one hundred and fifty out of one thousand three hundred and seventy which inhabited the Asylum. It was at first supposed to be the cholera; but, a farther investigation brought to light such testimony as to lead to a Coroner's inquest, which returned a verdict of manslaughter against the manager. It appears that the children were fed with a sort of paste, that brought on dysentery. There was but one medical attendant to the establishment, and he received but £50 a year.

Wholesale Immigration.—A letter dated London, Feb. 8th, received in New York, says: "The average number of daily emigrants arriving in Dublin, from various parts of Ireland, and setting out from the port of Liverpool on their way to the United States, is estimated at from 1,500 to 2,000. They all take out with them feather beds, articles of furniture, and some small capital. It is a fact which will hardly be credited, but which nevertheless is unquestionably true, that such is now the destitution among the upper classes in the west of Ireland, that three magistrates in the county of Mayo, are receiving out-door relief for themselves and their families from three different parish unions."

The Postal Treaty with England.—The President's Proclamation, announcing the ratification of the Postal Treaty by the English Government, is published. It is now the law in both countries. The treaty comprises twenty-three articles. The rate of a single letter from New York to London will, in future, be 24 cents, made up as follows:—

|---|---|
| United States inland postage | 5 cents. |
| Sea postage | 16 cents. |
| British inland postage | 3 cents. |
| Total | 24 cents. |

Newspapers 2 cents each, in advance.

SUMMARY.

The Committee appointed to collect money and retain counsel for the defense of persons charged with carrying away slaves from the District of Columbia, in the schooner Pearl, announce that they have received in all $1,560, and paid out $1,277. The Committee expect that the second trial of the parties will result in their entire acquittal, and the establishment of an important legal principle, favorable to human freedom. For this purpose four hundred dollars additional is wanted, and the Committee appeal to the benevolent to furnish it.

On the last night of the session of Congress, thirty thousand dollars were appropriated to an additional purchase from the inventor of Colt's improved repeating pistols, and a joint resolution was adopted instructing the Secretary of War to furnish these arms to emigrants going to California, at the Government cost prices. They are thus advantageously supplied on a written application to the War Department.

We are gratified to learn, says the Bordentown (N. J.) Reporter, of the 10th ult., that our townsman, Dr. William M. Fahnestock, in addition to the receipt of the most generous cash fees for professional services at the time rendered, has been remembered in the will of an old patient in Philadelphia, who died last week, in the handsome sum of three thousand dollars.

Joseph Hazard Perry, a son of R. T. Perry, of Chili, Monroe Co., left his home on the 4th of July last, since which time nothing has been heard of him by his friends. He is about 16 years of age, dark complexion, light blue eyes, and large of his age. Any information concerning him will be gladly received by mail by his father at Scottsville, Monroe Co., N. Y.

A female slave of Dr. J. James, in Wentworth, N. C., having lately committed some trifling misdemeanor, her master threatened to sell her. Prompted by revenge, she took her master's only daughter and a little slave boy into the woods and murdered them. She escaped, but was taken and imprisoned.

Plank roads are rapidly gaining ground in the West. Nearly $12,000 has been subscribed to the stock of a company in Ohio, for a road of this kind from Milan through Norwalk, and thence southwardly. $10,000 of the amount was subscribed by the citizens of Norwalk.

The Free Negro bill has passed the Legislature of Delaware. It empowers the magistrates of the State to arrest all free negroes who have no apparent occupation or means of living, and hire them out for a term of service not exceeding a year.

The Boston Common Council, at its meeting on Monday evening, March 5th, after an animated discussion, decided that no licenses for the sale of intoxicating drinks shall be issued in that city.

The hurry to sever the matrimonial bonds is so great, that the chancery docket of the Common Pleas of Hamilton County, Ohio, is mainly made up of this business. Twenty couple were unyoked last week, and about a hundred are waiting their turns.

A German woman started from Chicago on the 17th ult., with two children, to visit her husband, who was at work in the vicinity. They were overtaken by a snow-storm, and all frozen to death.

In the distribution of the Literature Fund of the State of New York, on the 28th ult., three hundred and forty-three dollars went to the De Ruyter Institute.

A college has been established at Lexington, Missouri, under the patronage of the Grand Lodge of that State, and called 'Masonic College.' Thirty-two thousand dollars were subscribed to obtain its location at Lexington. Rev. Adiel Sherwood, formerly of Shurtleff College, is President.

Wm. Van Rensselaer's mansion, near Albany, now advertised for sale, is said to be one of the most extensive ever erected in the United States. Its whole cost was one hundred and forty thousand dollars. The walls and ceilings are painted in piece by Bragaldi, and the whole house is heated by Perkins' hot water pipes.

Milo Cass, of Utica, N. Y., has invented a gun that discharges twenty-six times from one loading, which it does in two minutes or less—the charges being attached to an endless chain.

The Colonization Society's bark Liberia Packet, sailed at Baltimore for Liberia recently, with the Rev. Messrs. G. Rambo and C. C. Hoffman, Protestant Episcopal missionaries, and about seventy emigrants.

Rev. Dr. Packard, of Shelburne Falls, Mass., preached his Fiftieth Anniversary sermon on the 20th ult. A hymn was written for the occasion by William C. Bryant, who was brought up within a few rods of the early residence of Dr. Packard.

Platinum having been discovered in the Alps by M. Gueymard, the Consiel-General des Mines of France has authorized researches into that part of the Alps on the frontiers of the Department of the Isère. From the nature of the soil, it is expected that deposits of the precious metal will be found in several localities.

A Washington letter-writer says that it is understood, upon sufficient authority, that the President will not entertain personal appeals for office, having established the rule, after a conference with his Cabinet, that all applications for office must be submitted through the department to which they appropriately belong.

The number of paupers in Great Britain is about 4,000,000, or a seventh of the population of the whole Empire. In Ireland, 2,300,000; England, 1,500,000; Scotland, 200,000. Since 1816, the people of England have paid £200,000,000 for the relief of the poor.

The number of applications for patents received during the last four years exceeds the number received during the next preceding four years, by 2,205; the number of caveats by 670; the number of patents granted by $77,284 45; the balances paid into the treasury to the credit of the patent fund $21,389 95.

A family of seven brothers, named Wood, lately met at Concord, N. H., who had not been together for fifty years; indeed, no one of them could remember that they were ever before all together. Their united ages amount to 453 years.

At the recent term of the Court of Common Pleas at Portsmouth, N. H., the case of Mary Hoit vs. Peter H. Moulton, for breach of promise of marriage, came on for trial. The damages were laid at $2,000. The jury gave the plaintiff a verdict of $1,000.

Mr. Marshall, the first man who discovered gold in California, while constructing Capt. Sutter's mill-dam, is a New Bedford man, having formerly been a whaleman from that port.

The editor of the Alliance and Visitor says that one of the principal objections made against the coinage of gold dollars is, that on account of their small size they might be dropped by mistake into the contribution box!

The total number of Baptist churches in the United States is 10,264; ordained and licensed ministers, 7,241; members, 737,078; the grand total number in the United States is 982,101; the grand total number in the world is 1,201,228.

In England, not a member of Parliament, nor the Lord Chancellor, nor even her ladyship the Queen, is allowed the franking privilege; and it is owing to this single fact, in a great degree, that the cheap postage laws of England yield an annual revenue.

The Judiciary Committee of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives have reported a bill abolishing all penalty for Usury, except 10 per cent. of the excess above 6 per cent. taken by the lender. This 10 per cent. goes into the State Treasury. If no particular rate is agreed on, the law establishes 6 per cent. as the rate.

The Saturday Evening Post says that newspapers are carried free by the mails in Great Britain, and also in Brazil, South America. He thinks it discreditable to this country, that those monarchial countries should be in advance of us in this matter.

A horse and cart broke the ice on the Hudson River, at Greenbush Ferry, Albany, on Wednesday, March 7, and the horse was drowned. The driver escaped. This augurs a breaking up of the ice, and the opening of navigation soon.

Four barrels of green-corn and peas were received in N. Y. last week, from Chagres. They sold for eighty dollars, and were sent direct to Washington.

As the railroad train from Dedham, Mass., to Boston, was passing down Jamaica Plain on Tuesday evening, a musket-ball was fired into a window in one car, breaking the glass, but doing no farther injury.

The famous fat cow "Rose," belonging to Mr. Robert Fowler, of Batavia, N. Y., was slaughtered on the 3d inst., her gross weight being 2,280 lbs.

James Jordon, of Cranberry Township, Pa., aged 79, was put in prison on the 21st ult., on the charge of having poisoned his wife the day before.

It is asserted that Gen. Taylor shook hands with five thousand ladies after returning to the White House on Inauguration Day.

The celebrated Indian Chief, Macksuba, of the Ottawa tribe, was recently frozen to death at Fisher's Mills, in Allegan Co. Liquor was the cause.

Several persons were fined at Milwaukie the other day, for refusing to assist at a fire. Served right!

A pleasant word is a gleam of sunshine to the saddened heart.

Eld. Joshua Clark, having taken up his residence in De Ruyter, N. Y., requests his correspondents to address him accordingly.

The Chronotype, which was burnt out or drowned out at the recent fire in Boston, comes to us again after a fortnight's intermission.

MARRIED,

In Westerly, R. I., March 4th, by Eld. Daniel Coon, Mr. Wm. E. Maxson and Miss Sarah M. Fenner, all of Westerly.

In Hopkinton, R. I., on the 5th of March, by the same, Mr. Nicholas Grinnel, of South Kingston, and Miss Maria Kinyon, of Charlestown.

DIED,

In Georgetown, N. Y., March 4th, of pulmonary consumption, Mrs. Celina Austin, aged 31 years. The deceased became a subject of converting grace in early life, and united with the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Lincklaen, of which she remained a devoted and worthy member until death. During her suffering, she was submissive and patient; in death, resigned and happy; and she has doubtless gone to join the church triumphant. She has left a husband, two children, and a large circle of relatives and friends, to mourn her loss. Sermon on the occasion by the writer, from Job 14: 14.

J. C.

In Sangerfield, N. Y., on the first inst., of dropsy in the head, Sarah Elizabeth, daughter of Clark T. and Nancy Rogers, aged 5 years, 2 months, and 3 days.

In Westerly, R. I., March 6th, after a short illness, Mr. Geo. W. Noyes, aged 49 years. He was a member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church at Pawcatuck, by whom, in common with the community around, his death will be deeply lamented.

In Westerly, R. I., Feb. 27, of consumption, Mrs. Fanny Saunders, wife of Samuel Saunders, and daughter of the late Daniel Bliven, Esq., in the 67th year of her age.

Our Accounts.—The fifth volume of the Sabbath Recorder will close on the 14th day of June next. As the accounts of the establishment up to that time will have no connection with subsequent accounts, it is important that they should all be settled before the volume closes. Most of those who owe the establishment, know the amount of their indebtedness; and it is hoped that they will forward the same immediately. The accounts remaining unsettled on the 15th day of May will probably be placed in the hands of a traveling agent for collection, and in all such cases $2 50 per volume must be charged, to pay the expenses. An early settlement, therefore, is for the interest of all concerned.

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office. It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

FARM FOR SALE.

THE subscriber offers for sale his farm, situated in the town of Genesee, county of Allegany, N. Y. Said farm codsists of 280 acres of first-rate land, 175 of which is level, ann the remainder gradually rising side-hill; all of which is susceptible of cultivation, mostly adapted to grazing purposes. About 75 acres, however, is a gravely quick soil, as productive of wheat and corn, as any in the southern part of said county. Upon said farm is about 100 acres improvement, two framed barns, and a large two-story framed house, well inclosed, lately built, and conveniently calculated. There are two good wells of water upon said farm, and it is also abundantly supplied with numerous brooks and springs. Said farm is situated in a good neighborhood, and convenient to school, and the central place of business for the western part of said town; and on the main traveled road from Angelica to Smithport. For pleasantness and locality iti s not surpassed by any in the township or vicinity. To those wishing to purchase a good farm, the present opportunity offers rare inducements. The farm will be sold low for cash; or, if desired, by paying one-half of the purchase money down, the balance will be arranged to accommodate purchasers for any reasonable length of credit. A careful view of the premises by a discerning individual, is only requisite to a thorough conviction that an investment made under such favorable terms as the subscriber offers, is but safe and a fair speculation. For farther information, address the subscriber, P. M. at West Genesee, Allegany Co., N. Y., or inquire at his house.

TO CLERGYMEN AND THEIR PEOPLE.

All Clergymen who will send their address to Messrs. Comstock & Co., 21 Courtland-st., New York, shall be furnished gratuitously, for their family use, with a Salve of most extraordinary merit for external sores or inflammations of long or short standing. In burns, or pains and swellings of nearly all descriptions, its effects are charming, and almost beyond belief. This Salve has already been used by quite a number of the clergy, for themselves or sufferers to whom they have given it; and they have called on or written to the proprietors to express their delight at its action, and a desire to have their names used in making known its virtues. The proprietors having realized a handsome sum by its sale, feel called upon by a sense of duty to their fellow-men to disseminate the knowledge of the existence of such a thing far and near, and to give it without charge to the reverend clergy without limitation. It is called CONNEL'S PAIN EXTRACTOR, and is owned solely by Messrs. C. & Co. All religious papers that will publish this a few times will be furnished with the Salve free, and they may also thereby relieve many suffering poor brethren from agonizing pain, and save them much expense. The names of nearly fifty clergymen recommending it, are to be seen at the office of C. & Co.

You will please observe, it is no "sovereign remedy for all complaints," but only intended for external applications in the following:—Burns, Scalds, Frosted parts, Chilblains, Chafe or Galls, Chaps, Tetter, Pimple, Blotch, Felon, Ulcer, Sprains, Erysipelas, Cuts, Bruises, Ear and Toothache, Mumps, Sore Throat, Whitlows, Piles, Ringworm, Salt Rheum, Barber's Itch, Carbuncle, Eruption, Sore Eyes and Lids, Weak Sight, Sore Lips, Punctures, Biles and Warts, Fever Pains, Tender Feet, Inflammatory Rheumatism, Tic Doloureux, Ague in Face and Breast, Fever Sores, Old Burn Scars, Prickly Heat, Inflamed Skin, Broken Breast, Sore Nipples, Rough Hands, Blistered Surfaces, Dressing for Blisters, White Swellings, Cold in Wounds, Sore Corns, General Sores, Smallpox Marks, &c.

Though we have named numerous affections, experience has taught us that they are not too many. It will be necessary to know that this article is the only one we can recommend; but must caution against some imitation by like name. We will present it to the poor who have actual need of it.

Miscellaneous.

AN ADMIRABLE PICTURE.

The farmer sat in his easy chair,
Smoking his pipe of clay,
And his hale old wife, with busy care,
Was clearing the dinner away;
A sweet little girl, with fine blue eyes,
On her grandfather's knee was catching flies.

The old man laid his hand on her head,
With a tear on his wrinkled face;
He thought how often her mother dead
Had sat in the self-same place;
As the tear stole down from his half shut eye,
'Don'tsmoke,' said the child, 'how it makes you cry.'

The house-dog lay stretched out on the floor,
Where the shade afternoon used to steal;
The busy old wife, by the open door,
Was turning the spinning-wheel;
And the old brass clock on the mantel-tree
Had plodded along to almost three.

Still the farmer sat in his easy chair,
While close to his heaving breast
The moistened brow and the cheek so fair
Of his sweet grandchild were pressed;
His head, bent down, on her soft hair lay,
Fast asleep were they both, that summer day.

THE FLIGHT OF THE POPE.

The following account of the Pope's flight from his Palace is given by a person now in Rome, and may no doubt be relied on as strictly true:—

After the assassination of M. Rossi, the Pope remained a close prisoner in the Quirinal; and the Duke d'Harcourt, the French representative, was compelled to reside in the Palace, for the purpose of affording the protection of his person and flag to the Sovereign Pontiff. The business of the Government went on in the Pope's name, but without his sanction—and so far did he carry his resolution not to be dictated to, that he refused even to receive the reports, according to invariable custom, of the officer of the guard. Such a state of things could not long continue; and the members of the Diplomatic Corps, it is said, arranged a plan for the liberation of His Holiness, of which the immediate execution was entrusted to the Count de Spaur, the Minister of Bavaria. At an hour previously agreed on, (24th of November,) the Pope retired into a private room, for the purpose, apparently, of conferring secretly with the gentleman just named; and there he disguised himself in the livery of the Bavarian Legation. In a few minutes the carriage of the Minister was called, and the Count de Spaur, followed by the Pope disguised as his servant, descended the grand staircase, entered his carriage, the Pope mounting on the box alongside the coachman. The artifice succeeded; no suspicion arose, either in the Quirinal or the outward Guards; and the good old man was enabled to breathe the air of liberty. Immediately on arriving at the residence of the Bavarian Minister, another metamorphosis was made. The Pope took off the livery suit, and dressed himself in the usual costume of the Minister's chaplain, or aumonier; and M. de Spaur having already given notice of his intention of going to Naples, and received passports from the Government, post-horses were soon procured; the Count and his supposed chaplain took their places in the carriage, and thus happily cleared the gates of Rome. It was some time before the escape was discovered, as of course due care was used by those in the secret to say that the Pontiff was engaged in his devotions, and could not be disturbed. When the flight became known, the Ministry was thunderstruck; and at once dragoons were dispatched to bring back the fugitive. But either these measures failed, or the new Government hesitated in arresting the person of an ambassador; and the Count de Spaur, with his reverend charge, crossed the frontier in safety, and arrived at Gaeta, a large town, the first in the Neapolitan territory, not far from Terracina.

THE PRECIOUS METALS.

The amount of gold and silver in the world is estimated at ten thousand million dollars, whilst the annual consumption, or demand, is supposed to be one-half of one per cent of this sum—that is, fifty million dollars. There seems to be no accurate data as to the annual production of these metals; the whole is a subject of speculation. From the best sources of information that are open to us, the yearly production of silver may be set down at twenty-five million, and gold at fifteen to twenty million. Starting from this point, which may be considered as approaching accuracy, the expected yield of the California mines, will only keep the stock in the world going. No perceptible change in the value of gold has ever been produced by the large quantities which have been hitherto acquired, amounting to one hundred and twenty-five million dollars from Russia alone, within a quarter of a century. Whatever may be the amount raised from California, the result will be to enlarge the consumption for purposes of art and luxury, whilst its value for commercial purposes will remain unchanged.

There is unquestionably a scarcity of gold among the nations of the world for a currency. The coins of one government are constantly being re-coined at the mints of another. A large amount in new sovereigns, which came out to this country a few years ago, to adjust the ballance in our favor, were recoined at Philadelphia, so that soon after, when the state of trade changed the account in favor of England, and it became necessary to export specie, sovereigns commanded a premium of nearly one per cent, although the number so recently imported greatly exceeded that required for the export, to say nothing of those on hand formerly. United States, as well as foreign coins, are constantly melted down by our manufacturers for the want of bullion.

Gold is the only metal of a yellow color, and affords a resplendent polish; it is the most malleable of all metals, but of great tenacity; its hardness is almost equal to lead and tin, but inferior to iron, copper, platinum, and silver. It may be exposed to the atmosphere for any length of time, without suffering change; it is nearly twenty times heavier than water, and next to platinum, the heaviest known substance; gold is worth sixteen times as much as silver, and nearly three times as much as platinum. It is easily wrought and stamped, or melted, and does not waste by the operation; and when alloyed, its proportions can be readily ascertained.

The degree of alloy in gold and silver in currency is various. A prevalent proportion is one-twelfth; but the decimal proportion of one part of alloy in ten, is gaining favor, and is the present standard of all Spanish coins, and coins of various parts of Germany, France, Belgium, and the United States. Copper and silver are the alloys of gold in the United States—the proportion is 900 parts gold, 25 silver, 75 copper, a fraction over 21 carats fine. The weight of an eagle 258 grains, of which 232 grains must be fine gold.

The heaviest coin of modern times is the golden five Moidore piece of Portugal, which weights 828 grains, and is worth $32 70; the smallest is the Turkish Para, weighing 1 1-2 grains, partly silver, and worth one-third of a cent. Russia is the only nation where platinum is used in the currency. They use three denominations, 12, 6, and 3 roubles. The objections to platinum for coin are, its scarcity, unsteady price, and the inability to melt it by furnace heat. It can only be wrought by welding. Its value is rated at $6 70 the troy ounce. The annual product is $400,000.

ENGLISH RESPECT FOR AMERICAN CHARACTER.

The English, and other European governments, have long been accustomed to enforce their negotiations with foreign powers, by a display of military and naval force. This will do in ordinary cases, but in dealing with a high-spirited people, it will produce the very reverse of the desired effect. Sagacious English Statesmen are aware that it will not do in the case of the Americans. The following anecdote was communicated by a distinguished American, who has long held an important official station abroad:—

"At the time of the Oregon difficulty, when there was serious apprehension felt in England of a war with this country; Admiral Napier, who is a notoriously hot-headed officer, went to Sir Robert Peel, and told him that he could settle the dispute. 'Let me take,' said he, 'ten ships of the line, and go to Halifax or St. John, and the matter will soon be ended. The Yankees won't like to have their cities burned.' At the same time he referred the Prime Minister to another officer in the British Navy, better acquainted than himself with American affairs. The Minister accordingly sent a note to this officer, requesting an interview. The officer came, and Sir Robert proposed the matter. 'Why,' said the officer, 'if you want a war, that is the best thing you can do.' 'No, no,' interrupted the Minister, 'we don't want a war.' 'Then,' said the officer, 'you had better let it alone. For you cannot more surely put a stop to all negotiations with the Americans then by an appearance of threatening them.' At the same time he placed in the hands of the Minister a number of letters which he had received from distinguished Americans, all concurring that a war between England and the United States was monstrous, and not to be thought of for a moment. 'I thought,' rejoined Sir Robert, 'that this was a foolish scheme of Napier's. And I will go and inform the Privy Council to-day what you have said.' There the matter dropped—well, as it has proved, for both countries."

MORMONISM IN MISSOURI.

Zion's Harbinger and Baneemy's Organ is the title of a new Mormon paper published in St. Louis, Mo. The first number contains Baneemy's Proclamation to the Latter Day Saints, in which this new Mormon Prophet predicts many wonderful things—among others, that 'the Lord is about to restore the Kingdom of Israel, and commands a Temple to be built in Independence, Jackson county, Mo., in which he will establish schools for the instruction of the remnant of Joseph, (whose land the Gentiles inhabit,) who are soon again to become the proprietors of the soil.' Baneemy says that if the President elect, the Governors of the several States, and other subordinate rulers, will not compel the State of Missouri to restore the lands wrongfully wrested from the Saints, they shall be cursed, cut off, and cast into outer darkness. He predicts, also, a dissolution of the Union, as a consequence of the rejection of these commandments, and, that the State of South Carolina will first break out in rebellion—afterward the whole South, in a fierce and bloody war with the North. So intent will the South be, he says, to conquer their Northern brethren, that they will marshal their slaves for war, who will, in many instances, turn their arms against their own masters. Then the South, perceiving their weakness, will call on Great Britain for aid; the effect of the response will be a general European war; and finally, if the people shall neglect and disobey, the war will be continued—pestilence, famine, and desolation, will prevail—until few of the refractory Gentiles will be left in the land. The remnant of Jacob will then go into the land, and tear the remainder of the Gentiles in pieces. After a very terrible tirade against the nations of the earth, Baneemy winds up his long pronunciamento by modestly requesting and requiring all political and religious editors to give it an insertion in their columns. Of course, this restoration of the Saints, destruction of the disobedient Gentiles, and the re-construction of the Temple, cannot be accomplished without money and workmen; therefore he inserts a proviso in his proclamation, requesting workmen to come, and the people to contribute gold, silver, precious-stones, brass, iron, copper, and zinc. [Tribune.

The Toils of an Editor.—The toils of an editor are immense, onerous, endless, the stone of Sisyphus—a constant weight upon the mind and spirits, demanding all the exertion of his faculties.

Is one sheet corrected and sent to press?—another is called forthwith. 'More copy! copy is wanting; hand in your editorials—your leading articles; more copy—QUICK!' Is he not inclined to write? Is he sick, diseased in body or mind, oppressed with afflictions, or pecuniary embarrassments? No matter, the day is fixed, the hour, the moment; write he must, hot or cold, sick or well, money or no money, soul or no soul; his paper must be forthcoming, else his ears are made to tingle.

Reader, dear, were you ever tied to a chain-gang, confined in the pillory, even for a little time—were you? Well, then, pity the poor editor; pray for him, console him, comfort his soul—and be sure to send him his weekly and monthly dues. [Golden Rule.

PERSEVERANCE OF AUDUBON.

An accident which happened to two hundred of my original drawings, nearly put a stop to my researches in ornithology. I shall relate it, merely to show how far enthusiasm—for by no other name can I call my perseverance—may enable the observer of nature to surmount the most disheartening difficulties. I left the village of Henderson, in Kentucky, situated on the banks of the Ohio, where I resided for several years, to proceed to Philadelphia on business. I looked to all my drawings before my departure, placed them carefully in a wooden box, and placed them in charge of a relative, with injunctions to see that no injury should happen to them. My absence was of several months; and when I returned, after having enjoyed the pleasures of home for a few days, I inquired after my box, and what I was pleased to call my treasure. The box was produced and opened; but, reader, feel for me—a pair of Norway rats had taken possession of the whole, and had reared a young family among the gnawed bits of paper, which, but a month previous, represented nearly a thousand inhabitants of air! The burning heat which instantly rushed through my brain, was too great to be endured, without affecting my whole nervous system. I slept not for several nights, and the days passed like days of oblivion—until the animal powers being recalled into action, through the strength of my constitution, I took up my gun, my note-book, and my pencils, and went forth to the woods as gaily as if nothing had happened. I felt pleased that I might now make better drawings than before. And, ere a period not exceeding three years had elapsed, my portfolio was again filled.

Splitting Paper.— We mentioned several weeks ago an invention of recent date, by which a sheet of paper could be split. The following account, from the London Globe, shows that this operation has been performed in a manner quite alarming to those whose wealth consists of bank notes:—

The governor and directors of the Bank of England having been informed of the extraordinary ingenuity of Mr. Baldwin, and that he was able to split not only a newspaper, but a bank note, sent for him in order to test his skill. That his task might be as difficult as possible, they gave him one of the old £1 notes, which are composed of paper much thinner than the notes of the present day, and told him to split it if he could. Mr. Baldwin took the note home with him, and returned it the next day in the state he had promised. The paper was not in the slightest degree torn, and looked as if it had but just come from the manufactory, so little was its appearance affected by the operation. The directors remunerated Mr. Baldwin for his trouble, but could not elicit the means he had used. The discovery is considered of much importance in connection with the paper currency of this country.

Manufacturing by Slave Labor.—South Carolina has already several flourishing cotton manufactories in operation. Among those recently completed is the Graniteville Mill, on the South Carolina Railroad, about eleven miles from Augusta, one of the largest interior cotton markets in the United States. This mill contains 9,250 spindles, and 300 looms, and is said to be one of the most perfect mills in the country. The factory buildings are of granite, the dwelling-houses of wood, put up in good taste, the streets and grounds laid out and ornamented, and nothing spared which will add to the beauty of the scene, and inspire a feeling of cheerfulness and pride in the operatives. It is said that there is scacely a town in New England which will compare with it for neatness and beauty; and the old politicians who visit it, admit that it is indeed one of the brightest spots in South Carolina, and that, if it proves to be successful, it will revolutionize public sentiment. Failure is considered out of the question; they have Rhode Island men to manage the concern, and the most efficient that can be procured.

Foreign Gold-Diggers.—General Persifer F. Smith, Commander of the Pacific Division of the United States Army, and now on his way to San Francisco, has addressed a letter to Mr. Nelson, United States Consul at Panama, in which he says: 'The laws of the United States inflict the penalty of fine and imprisonment on trespassers on the public lands, and, as nothing can be more unreasonble and unjust than the conduct pursued by persons not citizens of the United States, who are flocking from all parts to search for, and carry off, gold from the lands belonging to the United States in California; and, as such conduct is in direct violation of the law, it will become my duty, immediately upon my arrival there, to put these laws in force, and to prevent their future infraction, by punishing with the penalties provided by the law, those who offend.'

A New Species of Cotton, called the Prolific Pomegranate, surpassing any of the gossypium family, has been grown in Mississippi, by General Mitchell, of Warren county. The tops and side branches are all thickly studded with bolls. The stalk does not usually attain a height of more than four or five feet, but every portion of the plant is literally covered with bolls, which are sustained in an upright position by the strength and vigor of the stem and branches. The chief peculiarity of this plant is that the stem and branches have no joints, as in other kinds; and although the bolls are very numerous, there can be no inconvenience in picking. The staple is beautiful, and far more silky than the best Petit Gulf. From one-third of an acre he gathered and weighed, the past season, two thousand one hundred and forty-two pounds of superior cotton. One hundred pounds of the seed cotton yielded thirty-two and a half pounds of lint, and by an accurate test he found that sixty-five bolls yielded one pound of lint.

New Theory about the Cholera.—Dr. Dickson, of London, author of the Chrono-Thermal System of Medicine, has written an interesting letter on the subject of Cholera, in which he says that paralysis of the pneumogastric, or eighth pair of nerves, will account for all the urgent symptoms of Cholera. His treatment proposes to wake up the energies of this important branch of the nervous system of the human body, and is based on a multiplicity of facts.

Suspension Bridge on the Ohio River.—It is proposed to bridge the Ohio River, between Cincinnati and Covington. Mr. Charles Ellett, Jr., the distinguished Engineer, has declared the practicability of spanning the whole breadth of the river with a single arch, which will not impair the navigation in the least, at a cost of three hundred thousand dollars. This gigantic arch is to be one hundred and twenty feet above the centre of the river, at low water—the towers for the suspension of the wire cables two hundred and thirty feet high—twenty cables, four inches in diameter, capable of sustaining a weight of seven thousand tons. The bridge at Wheeling is to be 92 feet above low water mark, or fifty feet above the great flood of 1832.

Distillery.—The Pittsburg Commercial Journal, of February 26th, says: 'An order from a wealthy company about to embark in distilling whiskey, was received by one of our steam engine manufacturers, to supply the necessary apparatus. They refused to fill the order for such a purpose, when an application was made to others engaged in the copper and sheet-iron business, but with no better success—all refused to be instrumental in the manufacture of ardent spirits. This speaks well for the temperance of those engaged in this branch of the Pittsburg trade.

Recovery from Insanity.— The Boston Traveler says that a man who has for the last twenty years been confined as a raving maniac in the poor-house at Newton, has been suddenly restored to his reason. He has been regarded as incurable, and the greater part of the time during his confinement he has been so violent as to render it necessary to chain him. He appears like one awakened from a long sleep, and remembering distinctly events which occurred previous to the loss of his reason, but nothing that has transpired during the long years of his confinement.

Steam Canal-Boat.—The Rochester Daily American notices the model of a steam canal-boat, recently invented by Mr. James Palmer, of that city. The boat is designed to be 100 feet long and 12 feet wide, with a 4-foot hull. It will have two cabins, one 35 feet and the other 18 feet long, and of the width of the boat. The boat is to be propelled by an engine of 25 horse power. The paddles, on the propeller principle, extend two-thirds of the length of the boat, along the bottom from the bow, and occupying a space of 3 1-2 feet wide.

VARIETY.

The Fort Smith (Ark.) Herald tells of a German boy, seventeen years old, who arrived at that place on the 17th ult., from New York, en route for California. He walked from N. York to New Orleans, and thence to Fort Smith, intending to find employment there to work his passage with the company about to start from that place for San Francisco. The Herald adds that the young man traveled the whole distance without a dime, working his way as best he could.

The Cincinnati Chronicle—the packing season being closed—gives the aggregate of the hog-slaughtering business in Cincinnati and Covington for the season. The whole number slaughtered and cut in those two places was 410,000—a falling off of 90,000, as compared with last year. In other places in Ohio, the number is stated at 120,000; in Indiana, 300,000; and in Kentucky, about 200,000. Total, 1,600,000.

The Marblehead (Mass.) Mercury states that the Eastern Railroad Corporation have asked from the relatives of those who were killed on that road by the collision last November, to bring in "sealed proposals," setting a price on their lives. The Legislature has passed a law that not over $5,000 shall be recovered by the relatives of any person killed on any railroad in that State.

A very successful effort is making in the city of Charleston, S. C., to obtain good water by boring. At last accounts, the augur had penetrated to the depth of four hundred and twenty-eight feet, and the water in the tube had risen to within a foot and a half of the surface of the rock.

There has long been a serious dispute between Turkey and Persia, in reference to their respective boundaries. To settle it, England and Russia have appointed, by consent of the two belligerents, commissioners, who are now on their way to Mosul, to make an award that is to be binding.

Several members of the First Baptist Church in New London, have purchased the Universalist meeting-house in that city, with a view of forming a third Baptist church. The house is a large, handsome brick edifice, built about five years since, at an expense of $15,000—it was purchased for $12,000.

The Rev. Ira M. Allen, formerly general agent of the American and Foreign Bible Society, in company with a number of young men, principally members of the Oliver Street Church, N. Y., have started for California. Mr. Allen goes out as geologist to the company.

Rev. Frederick Monod, an eloquent and decidedly evangelical preacher, has withdrawn from the National Reform Church of France. It is said that this movement is creating a similar sensation in France to that of the Rev. Baptist Noel in England.

A writer in the Evangelist has been showing that popery can never gain ascendancy in the West, and as a proof he says that a hundred Catholics are converted to God, and become consistent members of Protestant churches, where one goes in the opposite direction.

The ship Franklin, from London for Boston, went ashore near Wellfleet, Cape Cod, on the 1st of March, and eight persons were drowned in an attempt to land.

What the United States began to do fifty years ago, Great Britain has just thought of doing, namely, numbering the people. A census of the whole British Empire is to be taken in 1851.

THE BOOK

For every Clergyman—For every School District—For every Educated Man.

WEBSTER'S QUARTO DICTIONARY, Unabridged. Price $6.—Published by G. and C. MERRIAM, Springfield, Mass., and for sale by Booksellers generally.

"Will not the enlightened and liberal furnish their clergymen with a copy, as an indispensable volume in their libraries?"—Rev. T. H. Gallaudet.

Extract from a Lecture addressed to a Teacher's Institute, by William Russel, Principal of the Merrimack [N. H.] School for Teachers, and formerly Editor of the American Journal of Education:

"The edition of Dr. Webster's Dictionary, revised by Professor Goodrich, I would earnestly recommend to the attention of all teachers who are desirous of becoming fully qualified to give instruction in the English Language. The copious information which that work embodies, on all topics connected with Etymology—the extreme exactness, as well as the number, extent, and fullness of the definitions which it furnishes to every important word, render it a mine of philological wealth to instructors. The volume is, in fact, the teacher's encyclopedia, as well as lexicon, for daily reference. Could a copy of it be provided, as the permanent property of every district school, the effect, as regards the improvement of instruction, would be deeply and extensively felt, in the increased skill of the teacher, and the higher attainments of his pupils, in the most important part of education—the acquisition of an adequate knowledge and proper use of our own language."

"It has come to be a necessity to every educated man."—Lord Brougham

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS, &C.

From the President of the United States.

"To Mr. E. Walker—Dear Sir:—I have found your Statesman's Manual a valuable work, and exceedingly useful and convenient. Yours, J. K. Polk."

From the Hon. Henry Clay.

"My Dear Sir:—Your Statesman's Manual is a very valuable work for reference."

State of New-York:
Secretary's Office,
Department of Common Schools, } Albany, Sept. 18, 1846.

I have examined the "Statesman's Manual," in two volumes octavo, compiled by Edwin Williams, and am of opinion that it is a proper work for school district libraries, and deserving of a place in these institutions, designed for the diffusion of useful knowledge.

Signed, J. S. Randall,
Dep. State Sup't Com. Schools.

From the Journal of Commerce.

"This is one of the most important books published in the United States for a long time."

From the N. Y. Courier and Enquirer.

"This is the most important contribution to American political history ever published."

From the Democratic Review.

"The whole forms a most complete library in itself, of all that concerns the politics of the country. No individual should be without these two volumes at hand for prompt reference. How many hours of idle discussion and senseless debates might be spared to heated partizans, were these books at hand for appeal. We shall have frequent occasion to refer to them."

From the N. Y. Express of August 21, 1846.

"This is emphatically a national work, and as such eminently deserving of a national support."

From the Commercial Advertiser.

"Such a work is invaluable, and is offered at a comparatively low price, in expectation of a large sale."

From the Luzern Democrat.

"The Statesman's Manual is a very valuable work, comprising a complete condensed political history of our country from the formation of our government until the present time."

From the Washingtonian, Ohio.

"It is but scanty praise to say, that no work of equal value to the American Statesman, Politician, Journalist, Historian, &c., &c., has ever before appeared."

From the Harrisburg (Pa.) Argus, August 26, 1846.

"No politician, no man who desires to understand the history of the several administrations of the General Government, should be without a copy of it. As a book of reference, it is invaluable."

MISSIONS AT ST. THOMAS AND HAYTI, W. I.

Several weeks ago, we stated that Rev. Wm. M. Jones, of the American Baptist Free Mission Society, had determined to establish a new missionary station at Port-de-Paix, Hayti. As some of our readers are personally acquainted with Mr. Jones, and all of them are interested in West India missions, we presume the following extracts from his journal, giving an account of his voyage to Hayti, and his subsequent travels, will be acceptable to them. We copy from the Christian Contributor, omitting dates, and such portions of the journal as are of local interest. Mr. Jones was accompanied by his wife and child, Rev. Mr. Cushman and wife, and a young lady intending to teach. They sailed from New York about the 10th of October last, by way of St. Thomas.

"Our vessel is manned by the captain, mate, second mate, cook, and three men before the mast. As passengers, three are bound for St. Thomas, and eight for Hayti. Of the former, two are Scotchmen, who have followed the profession of overseers or slave-drivers in Santa Cruz. Thank God, that business is now at an end in that island. May it soon be so throughout the world. The third man is a jolly old Yankee from New Hampshire, who for the past thirty years has spent most of his time in Porto Rico, where, according to his own confession, he has owned from one thousand to fifteen hundred slaves. All three are quite ready to attempt a defense of the "peculiar institution" from the Bible, or on account of the monied interest involved in the system, yet flee when pursued by an abolitionist. The questions of slavery, temperance, and peace, have been under discussion daily. To men of the world, it is strange doctrine to teach that Christians are not allowed to bear arms and engage in war. Even many professed Christians are quite astonished when they find one bold, sincere, and orthodox enough to preach the Gospel in its freeness and fullness of salvation. Oh, when will men learn to beat their swords into plough shares, and their spears into pruning-hooks? The Lord hasten the day in his own time. * * *

"We are entering the harbor of St. Thomas. The city is built upon three hills, close to the sea, and being surrounded with mountains, and hills, and the sea, it presents a most romantic view. The houses, which appear one above the other, are well built of brick and stone, two and three stories high. . . . Went ashore and attended meeting in the Dutch Reformed meeting-house. Heard Bro. Knox preach from John 3 : 36. Subject, The nature and blessings of faith. Five hundred hearers were present. They have a neat, commodious house of worship, that will seat about 1,000 persons. The building and lot cost $18,000. At three P. M., attended the Sunday-school. Two hundred scholars present, and all under the superintendence of the minister. They appear to be well instructed, answer readily, and are well behaved. I should think this school is as well conducted and as prosperous as any school of the same size that I have seen in the States. One of the elders or deacons, a Scotchman, interested me much by his earnestness and vivacity. Said he to his class, 'For whom was the Gospel designed? The rich and not the poor? The free and not the bond? The learned and not the ignorant?' The ready reply was, 'For all.' They use in this school books chiefly from the American Sunday School Union. The lesson of the day included the history of Simon Magus. Mr. K. inquired of a number of the scholars if they believed in witches? The almost universal answer was, 'No, sir.' Mr. K. then remarked, that he had been in a great many places, and at all times of the day and of night, and yet had never seen a witch. Still, he had heard many grown up people in St. Thomas say they had seen a jumby. They would even teach their children to believe in jumbies (witches,) but after all no one had been able to show him a jumby. One of the boys, a lad aged 13 years, has lately become a teacher. He appears to possess an uncommon intellect, and is piously inclined. Some of his poetry and essays show a depth of thought worthy of a more muture and cultivated mind. We are here just at the close of the hurricane season, and to-day the preacher announced that on the 25th inst., they would celebrate their annual thanksgiving. The 25th of July they consider the commencement of the hurricane season, which the church appoint as the day of their annual fast. The population of the Island is estimated at 13,000, of which 11,000 are inhabitants of the city. Here are Danes, Germans, French, English, and Africans. All can speak English. The Dutch Reformed, the Lutheran, (or Church of State,) the Episcopal, the Moravian, and the Roman Catholic churches, are tolerated here, but no others. The Methodists of England made application some years ago to establish a mission here, but the King of Denmark thought proper, for some reason, not to grant them the liberty the aforesaid churches enjoy. Even Mr. Knox has not the liberty of inviting visiting brethren to preach in his pulpit without a special permit from government. However, we were invited to take part in the exercises of the Sunday-school."

After spending three days at St. Thomas, they sailed for Hayti.

"At day-light, (Oct. 28,) in sight of Mole St. Nicholas, where Columbus landed and made the first settlement in the New World. Emotions of a peculiar kind thrill through me as I gaze on these mountains, which I now pass for the fifth time. Hayti! O Hayti! how much have I cared, toiled, and suffered for thee; but the Son of God more. He died that thy people might be saved. May the time soon come when the songs of Zion shall make vocal thy vallies and mountains with praises to the Most High God. What is before me, thou, O Lord, only knowest." * * * * *

"Arrived in the harbor of Port-au-Prince, after a passage of 21 days from New York, and an absence from the mission station of one year, seven mouths and a half. At noon, we went on shore, accompanied by an officer, and were obliged to walk quite a distance under a scorching sun, to the police office, and report ourselves, the ladies not excepted. The business, as we supposed, being finished, we took our leave, but were soon called back, for what I can not say, and doubt whether the authorities knew, but such are the queer formalities of Haytien law. Being formally dismissed, we went to the mission-house."

At Port au-Prince, a week was occupied in consulting and making arrangements to travel to the north-western part of the Island. At length Mr. Judd started, on board a little sloop of nine tons burthen, and after many vexatious delays arrived at Gonaives, whence the journey to Port-de-Paix is performed on horseback.

"At 4 A. M., (Nov. 14,) we were on our way to Port-de-Paix, twenty leagues distant. Four leagues from Gros Morne, we stopped for refreshment. In this country there are no taverns or public houses. Travelers always find it necessary to carry their own provision, as there are but few of the comforts of life provided by the natives, except plantains, coffee, and lodging. We turned from the road and called at a hut near the left bank of the Three Rivers. An old man of very savage appearance approached us. I saluted him in the dialect of the country; but without seeming to hear me, he came up and grasping my left arm with both hands, he exclaimed, in English, much to my surprise, 'How do you do, sir, will you descend?' Gladly accepting the invitation, we alighted and drank a cup of coffee. The old man said his name was John Baptist Soutie. He is a native of the Island, was brought up in Wilmington, Del., and then followed the seas for many years, making in that time seven voyages to Calcutta, visiting Portugal, Spain, France, England, and Russia. In Wilmington he frequently attended a Baptist meeting, but from appearances I should think he had always been 'a wayside hearer.' 'Here in this country,' said he, 'me known by all the people, especially the more biggest people.' Soutie owns 60 acres of the best land—has scores of cattle and goats, &c., and yet lives in the style of a miserable miser. I am informed that he often shuts himself in his house, when the weary traveler approaches, and refuses to answer any call from without, for fear of a little trouble. Had worship in his house, where I tried to impress upon the minds of four Haytiens the first principles of the Gospel of Christ.

"Traveled three hours, and halted to refresh our horses and ourselves, at the house of a devote, or holy sister, a woman who professes to maintain a life of chastity, and teach the women around her Catholic prayers. In one corner of her hut was a little rude altar, on and around which were beads, crucifixes, and pictures. As soon as I was introduced to her, she turned to light a candle and prepare the boo-ge for worship; but one of the Haytiens present told her that my religion differed from hers—that mine did not consist in forms, but was wholly spiritual. We asked for grass for our horses, when one of the women said to a lad, 'Run, my boy, and get some grass, and don't receive any money for it; for you will be doing a good service to the Father,' as they all call me. But this did not hinder the boy from receiving his pay. After satisfying our appetites upon green plantains, we assembled the people by the aid of our hostess, to the number of twenty-five, and held a service for an hour and more. Enjoyed a peculiarly solemn time. The poor deluded creatures seemed to be somewhat affected.

"Arrived at Port-de-Paix at half-past five, and were kindly received by Mr. Austin, a merchant. The town is situated close by the sea in the neighborhood of mountains, and contains about two thousand inhabitants. No missionary was ever settled here. There is not a Protestant in the place." * * * *

"Four years ago, there were but five missionaries and their families in Hayti. One year after I came here, there was an addition of two from England, making eight. Now there are twelve, viz. 7 Wesleyan, 3 Baptist, 1 Presbyterian, and 1 Congregationalist. Bro. Morton, the Presbyterian missionary, supposes that his colleague is now ready to sail from New York. His Irish brethren expect to send out a missionary soon. In view of soon being able to say we have fourteen missionary preachers in Hayti, can we not say of a truth, 'The set time to favor Zion is come?'"

EXTEMPORANEOUS PREACHING.

Without entering at all into the controversy, never perhaps to be settled, on the comparative advantages of written and unwritten sermons, our belief being that both methods should be practiced, we would call the attention of those who are in danger of falling into the error of preaching written sermons exclusively, to the following remarks on that subject by the Bishop of Montreal. In a late charge he says:—

"For myself, it has been so ordered that I have been called upon, all my life, to address men of very different classes, and in a great variety of situations; I have been called upon to preach to sailors upon the deep; to fishermen upon the sea-shore; to settlers in the backwoods; to bodies of emigrants upon their first landing as strangers in the country; to the poor of cities in places expressly allotted for their instruction; to convalescents assembled in hospitals; to Indians to whom I spoke sentence by sentence, through an interpreter; to prisoners in jail and to prostitutes in the house of correction,—and, in many of these instances, I can truly say that the formality of a written sermon, especially being prepared for a very different kind of occasion, would have been much out of place, and the want of allusion to circumstances offering themselves at the moment for remark, would have been signally unfortunate—in fact, in some examples, it would have produced no small embarrassment to know how to manage the leaves of the manuscript itself. To this I will add that, had I been obliged to write sermons for all the occasions upon which I have preached or publicly expounded the Word of God, I might calculate that it would have been impossible for me to have performed the duty more than one-third or perhaps one-fourth of the same number of times; and thus, if ever it has been at all granted to me to sow any good seed which has been blessed by the shower and the sunshine of Heaven, that benefit may be said to have been trebled or quadrupled by my having early acquired the habit of speaking without book."

SELF-EXAMINATION.

Let not soft slumber close your eyes,
Before you've recollected thrice
The train of action through the day:
Where have my feet chose out their way?
What have I learned? where have I been?
From all I've heard, from all I've seen,
What know I more, that's worth the knowing?
What have I done, that's worth the doing?
What have I sought, that I should shun?
What duty have I left undone?
Or into what new follies run?
These self-inquiries are the road,
That leads to virtue, and to God.

JOHN BUNYAN AND WILLIAM KIFFIN.

BY T. BABINGTON MACAULAY.

To the names of Howe and Baxter must be added the name of a man far below them in station and acquired knowledge, but in virtue their equal, and in genius their superior, John Bunyan. Bunyan had been bred a tinker, and had served as a private soldier in the Parliamentary army. Early in life he had been fearfully tortured by remorse for his youthful sins, the worst of which seem, however, to have been such as the world thinks venial. His keen sensibility and his powerful imagination made his internal conflicts singularly terrible. He fancied that he was under sentence of reprobation, that he had committed blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, that he had sold Christ, and that he was actually possessed of a demon. Sometimes loud voices from heaven cried out to warn him. Sometimes fiends whispered impious suggestions in his ear. He saw visions of distant mountain tops, on which the sun shone brightly, but from which he was separated by a waste of snow. Ha felt the devil behind him pulling his clothes. He thought that the brand of Cain was set upon him. He feared that he was about to burst asunder like Judas. His mental agony disordered his health. One day he shook like a man with the palsy. Another day he felt a fire within his breast. It is difficult to understand how he survived sufferings so intense and so long continued. The clouds at length broke. From the depths of despair, the penitent passed to a state of serene felicity. An irresistible impulse impelled him to impart to others the blessings of which he was himself possessed. He joined the Baptists, and became a preacher and writer. His education had been that of a mechanic. He understood no language but the English, as it was spoken by the common people. He had studied no great model of composition, with the exception, an important exception undoubtedly, of our noble translation of the Bible. His spelling was bad. He frequently transgressed the rules of grammar. Yet the native force of his genius, and his experimental knowledge of all the religious passions, from despair to ecstacy, supplied in him the want of learning. His rude oratory roused and melted hearers who listened without interest to the labored discussions of great logicians and Hebraists. His works were widely distributed among the humbler classes. One of them, the Pilgrim's Progress, was, in his own life-time, translated into several foreign tongues. It was, however, scarcely known to the learned and polite, and had been, during near a century, the delight of pious cottagers and artisans, before it was commended by any man of high literary eminence. At length critics condescended to inquire into the secret of so wide and durable a popularity. They were compelled to own that the ignorant multitude had judged more correctly than the learned, and that the despised little book was really a master-piece. Bunyan is indeed as decidedly the first of allegorists, as Demosthenes is the first of orators, or Shakspeare the first of dramatists. Other allegorists have shown equal ingenuity, but no allegorist has ever been able to touch the heart, and to make abstractions objects of terror, of pity, and of love.

It may be doubted whether any English Dissenter had suffered more severely under the penal laws than John Bunyan. Of the twenty-seven years which had elapsed since the Restoration, he had passed twelve in confinement. He still persisted in preaching; but, that he might preach, he was under the necessity of disguising himself like a carter. He was often introduced into meetings through the back-door, with a smock-frock on his back, and a whip in his hand. If he had considered only his own ease and safety, he would have hailed the indulgence with delight. He was now, at length, free to pray and exhort in open day. His congregations rapidly increased; thousands hung upon his words; and at Bedford, where he originally resided, money was liberally contributed to build a meeting-house for him. His influence among the common people was such that the Government would willingly have bestowed upon him some municipal office; but his vigorous understanding, and his stout English heart, were proof against all delusion and all temptation. He felt assured that the proffered toleration was merely a bait to lure the Puritan party to destruction; nor would he, by accepting a place for which he was not legally qualified, recognize the validity of the dispensing power. One of the last acts of his virtuous life was to decline an interview to which he was invited by an agent of the Government.

Great was the authority of Bunyan with the Baptists; but that of William Kiffin was greater. Kiffin was the first man among them in wealth and station. He was in the habit of exercising his spiritual gifts at their meetings; but he did not live by preaching. He traded largely; his credit on the Exchange of London stood high; and he had accumulated an ample fortune. Perhaps no man could, at that conjuncture, have rendered more valuable services to the court. But between him and the court was interposed the remembrance of one terrible event. He was the grandfather of the two Howlings, those gallant youths, who, of the victims of the Bloody Assizes, had been the most generally lamented. For the sad fate of one of them, James was in a peculiar manner responsible. Jeffreys had respited the younger brother. The poor lad's sister had been ushered by Churchill into the royal presence, and had begged for mercy; but the King's heart had been obdurate. The misery of the whole family had been great; but Kiffin was most to be pitied. He was seventy years old when he was left destitute, the survivor of those who should have survived him. The heartless and venal sycophants of Whitehall, judging by themselves, thought that the old man would be easily propitiated by an Alderman's gown, and by some compensation in money for the property which his grandsons had forfeited. Penn was employed in the work of seduction, but to no purpose. The King determined to try the effect of his own civilities. Kiffin was ordered to attend the palace. He found a brilliant circle of noblemen and gentlemen assembled. James immediately advanced to receive him, spoke to him very graciously, and concluded by saying, 'I have put you down, Mr. Kiffin, for an Alderman in London.' The old man looked fixedly at the King, burst into tears, and replied, 'Sir, I am worn out; I am unfit to serve your majesty or the city. And, sir, the death of my poor boys broke my heart. That wound is as fresh as ever. I shall carry it to the grave.' The King stood silent for a minute in some confusion, and then said, 'Mr. Kiffin, I will find a balsam for that sore.' Assuredly James did not mean to say anything cruel or insolent; on the contrary, he appears to have been in an unusually gentle mood. Yet no speech that is recorded of him gives so unfavorable an impression of his character as these few words. They are the words of a hard-hearted, low-minded man, unable to conceive a laceration of the affections for which a place or a pension would not be full compensation.

"DO TALK TO ME."

At an evening meeting recently held in one of the Baptist churches in Philadelphia, about thirty rose for prayers, and among them was a young man recently from Mexico, who was intensely exercised in mind, and gave the following account of himself. He had left Philadelphia, against the wishes of his mother, among the recruits of the army. In one of the engagements with the Mexicans, one of his fellow-soldiers was shot down at his side. As he fell, he lifted up his eyes in the most imploring manner, and said to him, 'Do talk to me.' He understood his meaning, that he wished him to speak to him some words of instruction or comfort in regard to his soul's interest. He was perfectly confounded with a sense of his own miserable and sinful condition, and felt utterly unable to say a single word. Again he made the same anxious address, 'Do talk to me,' which increased still more his inability to make any reply, and aggravated the awful convictions of his own dreadful state. The address was again repeated, 'Do talk to me,' and the same imploring look, but he still stood petrified and speechless as a statue, and in twenty minutes the soul of his comrade had fled. The awful circumstances of that scene were still before him, and the conviction of his own guilt and wretchedness had followed him ever since. He feared there was no mercy for him, but if Christians could pray for him, he earnestly entreated that they would. As may be readily supposed, a thrilling sensation passed through the whole assembly, and the most fervent prayers were offered up in his behalf.

REV. DR. MALAN, OF GENEVA.

Dr. Malan's conversational powers are very great; and he has been very useful in this way. He takes long journeys in France and Switzerland, preaching and conversing on the things of the kingdom. On one occasion, he was riding in the diligence with a military officer of much scepticism and levity on the subject of religion. Dr. M. addressed him in the spirit of a minister of Christ, urging him to repent and believe the Gospel, and plying him especially with passages from the Word of God. The officer objected to this course as unfair. He claimed that it was of no use to urge the authority of Scripture upon him, because he did not allow its divinity. "Let us first discuss," said he, "the truth of Christianity, and then I may hear you." "No," said Dr. Malan, who perceived that the difficulty in this case pertained more to the heart than to the intellect, "no—that is not the best course. When you fight in battle, you do not discuss the merits of your sword, but draw it from the scabbard, and prove its temper by direct application. So I with the Word of God. It is not necessary to prove its divinity, for it is quick and powerful, sharper than any two-edged sword." So taking this text for his basis, he overwhelmed the cavalier by the plain declarations of Holy Writ, and so wrought upon his mind that, by the blessing of God, he subsequently abandoned his infidelity and became a devout Christian. ### JACOB'S LADDER.

A Welsh clergyman, invited to assist in the ordination of a minister, in some part of England, was appointed to deliver the address to the church and congregation; and having been informed that their previous minister suffered much from pecuniary embarrassment, although the church was fully able to support him comfortably, took the following method of administering reproof. In his address to the church, he remarked: You have been praying, no doubt, that God would send you a man after his own heart to be your pastor. You did well. God, we hope, has heard your prayer, and given you such a minister as he approves, who will go in and out before you, and feed your souls with the bread of life. But now you have prayed for a minister, and God has given you one to your mind. You have something more to do; you must take care of him, and in order to his being happy among you, you need to pray again." "Pray again! pray again! What should we pray for?" "Well, I think you have need to pray again." "Pray for what?" "Why, I'll tell you. Pray that God would put Jacob's ladder down again to the earth." "Jacob's ladder! What has Jacob's ladder to do with our minister?" "Why, I think if God would put Jacob's ladder down, that your minister could go up into heaven every Sabbath evening, after preaching, and remain all the week, then he could come down every Sabbath morning, so spiritually minded, and so full of heaven, that he could preach to you almost like an angel." "Oh yes, that may be very well, and if it were possible, we should like it; but then we need our minister through the week, to attend prayer-meetings, visit the sick, hear experience, give advice, and therefore must have him always with us; we want the whole of his time and attention." "That may be, and I will admit the daily necessity of his attention to your concerns; but then you will remember, that if he remain here, he must have bread and cheese; and I have been told that your former minister was often wanting the common necessaries of life, while many of you can enjoy its luxuries; and therefore I thought if God would put Jacob's ladder down, your present minister might preach to you on the Sabbath, and by going up to heaven after the services of the day, save you the painful necessity of supporting him."

THE ALARM WATCH.

A lady who found it difficult to rise as early as she wished in the morning, purchased an alarm watch. These watches are so contrived as to strike, with a very loud whirling noise, at any hour the owner pleases to set them.

The lady placed her watch at the head of the bed, and at the appointed time, she found herself effectually roused by the loud rattling noise. She immediately obeyed the summons, and felt better all day for her early rising. The alarm watch faithfully performed its office, and was distinctly heard, so long as it was promptly obeyed. But after a time, the lady grew tired of early rising, and when she was awakened by the noisy monitor, she merely turned herself, and slept again. In a few days the watch ceased to arouse her from her slumbers. It spoke just as loudly as ever, but she did not hear it, because she had acquired the habit of disobeying it. Finding that she might just as well be without an alarm watch, she formed the wise resolution, that if she ever heard the sound again, she never would allow herself to disobey the friendly warning.

Just so it is with conscience. If we disobey its dictates, even in the most trifling particular, and allow ourselves to do what we have some fears may not be quite right, we shall become more and more asleep, until the voice of conscience has no longer any power to awaken us. [The Child's Gem.

THE MORAVIANS.

This denomination of Christians has done more in proportion to its numbers, in sending the Gospel to the heathen, than any other section of the church. They engaged in this work at the suggestion of Count Zinzendorf, a pious German nobleman. His attention was drawn to this work by an accident.

A casual interview of the Count with two converted Greenlanders, at the coronation of the King of Denmark, at Copenhagen, in 1731, from whom he learned that the Danish mission in that country was to be abandoned—and the visit of a negro slave from the West Indies to Hernhutt, at about the same time, awakened in the congregation a strong desire to proclaim the Gospel among the heathen. Accordingly several offered themselves for that work; two of their number even offered to go to St. Thomas, and to sell themselves as slaves, in order to have the opportunity of making known the Gospel to the negroes.

They early engaged in this enterprise; and sent forth their first missionaries in 1732. At this period they numbered 600 souls, and were very poor. In eight or nine years from this they sent missionaries to Greenland, to St. Thomas, to St. Croix, to Surinam, to the Rio de Berbice, to the Indians of North America, to the negroes of South Carolina, to Lapland, to Tartary, to Algiers, to Guinea, to the Cape of Good Hope, and to the Island of Ceylon.

Their missions have been very successful. At this time they have 61 stations, 283 missionaries, and upwards of 60,000 converts. The missionaries receive only a partial support from the churches at home. Many labor with their own hands, teaching the Christian religion and the arts of civilized life at the same time. Generally they are men of ardent piety, entirely consecrated to their work. Others might probably learn much respecting the best mode of preaching the Gospel to the heathen, by carefully studying the history of their missions.

PENNSYLVANIA SUNDAY LAW—INCONSISTENCIES.

In one of our exchanges, we find a labored attempt to show that the Legislature of Pennsylvania was inconsistent in passing an act to exempt the Seventh-day Baptists of that State from the penalties of the Sunday Law. The writer maintains, that if the Sunday Law is based on the notion of God's requiring the observance of the first day of the week, then it is inconsistent for the Legislature to make an exception in favor of one class of the citizens. If, on the other hand, the law is designed simply to secure the observance of the first day as a civil institution, he thinks the exception is equally inconsistent and reprehensible. So far we agree with him. But we think he is quite as inconsistent as the Legislature, in dismissing the subject with barely pointing out the inconsistencies, without setting forth what would be consistent in the case. A very little candid thought and observation will suffice to convince any one, that inconsistencies mark this whole business of enacting and applying Sunday Laws. The inconsistency of fining or imprisoning a man for working on the first day of the week, who conscientiously believes it to be his duty to sabbatize on the seventh day and work on the first day, is so glaring that few persons can be found to advocate it. And then the inconsistency of allowing one class of citizens to do on Sunday what another class is by law forbidden to do, is perhaps equally glaring. The only consistent course in the case is to abolish all the Sunday Laws, and leave the sabbatic institution, like all other religious institutions, to stand upon its own merits and the command of God.

The inconsistencies and contradictions developed in connection with this Sunday Law of Pennsylvania, are indeed numerous and noteworthy. In the first place, the enactment of the law involved an inconsistency, inasmuch as the Constitution of the State, which the law-makers had sworn to maintain, guarantied liberty of conscience to every citizen, and forbade all legislation calculated to show a preference for the religious views of one sect over those of another. But of this inconsistency there were few or none to take note at the time, and consequently it passed unrebuked. Years afterward, however, the number of those with whose religious belief the law came in conflict, increased; and then, instead of enforcing the law, as they had sworn to do, the magistrates allowed it to remain a dead letter on the statute book, while hundreds were living in the conscientious and weekly violation of it—an inconsistency, which it would be difficult for those to justify who advocate the Sunday law.

This state of things continued for a long time, until a set of rowdies, who had been informed against and punished for wantonly disturbing a religious meeting, determined to get revenge by turning informers against a peaceable community of Sabbath-keepers for working on Sunday; whereupon a great hue-and-cry was raised, which alarmed the clergy, and induced the magistracy to give judgment against those who were convicted of working on Sunday, even though they had strictly sabbatized on the previous day. In this transaction were involved several inconsistencies; of which we will only mention, first, the inconsistency of prosecuting men under a law which had lain dead until it was nearly forgotten—second, the inconsistency of entertaining a complaint against religious men for neglect of the Sunday, when preferred by men who were notoriously guilty of the same thing—and, thirdly, the inconsistency of religious people and ministers of the Gospel joining with such men to persecute those whom they acknowledge to have been conscientious in their course.

But passing these inconsistencies, together with numerous others which were developed in the course of the early trials, just look at the inconsistencies connected with the final decision of the case before the Supreme Court of the State. On that bench sat judges of widely different religious views, and their opinions upon this question seem to have differed as much as upon religious subjects generally. However, they were all pretty well agreed, that it would not be safe to declare the Sunday law unconstitutional; and accordingly they united in affirming its constitutionality. But upon what different grounds! There were no two that maintained its constitutionality on precisely the same grounds. Two sets of reasons or arguments for the decision we published, which are diametrically opposed to, and necessarily destructive of, each other. The leading "Opinion" maintained that the Sunday Statute is simply a civil regulation, and for that reason, and that only, not inconsistent with the constitutional guaranty of religious liberty. The other "Opinion," which was tacked on as a sort of addendum, maintained that the Sunday Statute is strictly a religious regulation, and that it is constitutional, because the Christian religion is a part of the common law of the land. It is easy to see, that if one of these "opinions" be right, the other must be wrong. Yet the authors of both agreed in affirming the constitutionality of the Sunday law!

Congress of Nations.—The Executive Committees of the American Branch of the League of Universal Brotherhood and of the American Peace Society, have recently united in a course of measures which has resulted in organizing a new committee, to be called, The American Committee for a Congress of Nations. The Committee is to be a permanent body, and when once constituted is to fill its own vacancies, amenable only to the public. The specific objects of this Committee, so far as yet developed, seem to be to hold public meetings, and interest the public mind in the great enterprise—to send a delegation to Washington on this subject, and to coöperate with the kindred efforts of the friends of peace across the Atlantic.

SUNDAY IN NEW JERSEY.

During the recent session of the Legislature of New Jersey, a bill was originated and passed by the House, to prohibit the running of any railroad car or locomotive on Sunday, "except in cases of clear necessity or mercy, or for the purpose of carrying the mails," in which cases no passengers or freight could be taken. The penalty was fixed at five hundred dollars against the Company for each offense, one-half of the amount to go to the person who sues for it, and the other half to the Overseer of the Poor of the township in which he resides, for the benefit of the poor. The same penalty was also extended to steamboats, under similar circumstances, except ferries. The locks of canals also were prohibited from being opened for the passage of boats on Sunday, under the penalty of fifty dollars. When this bill came before the Senate, it was amended by limiting the prohibition to freight. Between the two Houses, it was lost. Some people think, that before New Jersey undertakes to say that travelers shall not pass through her territory on Sunday, she had better repeal the odious laws imposing a tax on travelers sufficient to pay all her expenses. Justice first, then piety.

THE GOVERNMENT'S SACREDNESS OF SUNDAY!

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

It is generally assumed by Sunday coërcionists, that Sunday (the heathen sun-worship-day) is an Institution of our Government—that its sacredness is recognized and established by our Organic Law. The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, in their recent decision on that subject, shrunk from such an assumption, and affirmed the validity of the Sunday Act on the bare ground of being a "civil regulation"—a "political rest-day," to be changed to any day of the week at the pleasure of the Legislature; yet the Sunday sticklers maintain, as doggedly as ever, that it is recognized by the Constitution of the Republic, as a sacred, holy day!

Well, let us test their own principles by putting their own acts together, and see how it comes out. Some time since, I took up my pen to indite some strictures on the doleful homily of a lachrymose editor in reference to General Taylor's Inauguration, who entertained horrible forebodings of the desecration of the "Christian Sabbath," from an apprehension that old "Rough and Ready" would not have the fear of Sunday coërcionists before his eyes, and would be installed on the fourth of March, which this year fell on Sunday; and, assuming that the Constitution required the Inauguration to take place on that day, he called on Congress to enact a special provision, to delay the induction of the Chief Magistrate of the Union until the next day. But, on looking into the subject, I found, that the Constitution contains no such requirement—it simply defines the end of a President's term of office, as it does, also, the term of Congress. I, therefore, laid aside the subject without any other remark than this moral—"Answer not a fool according to his folly." And now I only resume it, to point out a gross mistake that these overweening sticklers sometimes commit, in stretching their favorite subject too far; and to offer a remark or two by way of improvement.

Had the Constitution required the Inauguration to take place on the fourth day of March, there can be no question but that Zachary Taylor would have assumed the reigns of government on that day. Whatever may be his private views on the subject of the sacredness of the first day of the week, he never regarded it in his official duties; having fought his greatest battles—yea, commenced them voluntarily, on that day; and why should he be squeamish about stepping into the Presidential Chair on his lucky day? If willing to stride the battle-field, and hurl havoc and death among enraged hosts, on that day, why not quietly record his fidelity to the Constitution of the Union, in the District Judge's office, and seat himself in the Chair of State, (which he won by disregarding the sacredness of Sunday,) if respect to the feelings of the community precluded a public inauguration—which is not essential, but a mere matter of courtesy, to gratify the populace! No such idle ceremony is prescribed by the Constitution. The Constitution does not even prescribe the day of Inauguration. If it did, no law to transfer it, when falling on Sunday, would be valid. The Constitution would have to be altered to do it.

While, therefore, the Constitution does not require the Inauguration to take place on that day, yet it certainly presumes that the President Elect will assume the Chief Magistracy at the time, without regard to day, and not leave the country without a government; if not, it would provide for such a conjuncture. It does not prohibit the Inauguration on that day; ergo, it is expected to take place. If the Constitution recognized Sunday as a holy day, it would emphatically preclude it, to save it from desecration. On the contrary, the American Congress has frequently stultified the presumption—nay, actually nullified the assumed sacredness of the first day of the week, by sitting in regular session, and transacting regular business, on that day; and that not business of "State necessity," or in times of "imminent danger." The Federal Senate sat on two Sundays during the first session of the recent Congress, and both Houses sat on Sunday, the 4th of March, passing secular bills, and exchanging fisticuffs!

Some of these Sunday folks are as queer philosophers as they are Christians. They first change the day of the Sabbath, from the seventh to the first; then they change the commencement and the ending of the day, at pleasure. The Bible ordains the seventh day as the holy rest-day, and specifies, "from even to even shall ye celebrate your Sabbaths;" but having blotted out the Heaven-appointed Sabbath—having blotted out the light and truth, they, as if ashamed of the act, hide themselves in the darkness of the night—begin their "civil regulation" in the dark, and end it in the dark—a fitting symbol of the daring act of darkness they have consummated. On what principle of philosophy can the division of days be determined by undefined darkness? With all their queer philosophy, they are as queer Christians; for, with all this violence to truth and to propriety, they are not content. They go on the principle, and it may be a correct one, that, if man has the right to make a Sabbath, he likewise has the right to break it. So at least our legislators think, who impose it on others, with fines and penalties, and violate it themselves with barefaced impunity. Civil law makes the weekly, sacred rest, to lie between twelve o'clock on Saturday night and the same hour on Sunday night; yet our law-makers will sometimes stretch it over, a half length longer, to suit their purposes. On Sunday morning, March 4th, when the proceedings of our Congress gentry were questioned by a stout Sunday stickler, Daniel Webster—the immortal Daniel—contended, in the United States Senate, that they might legislate till noon!—twelve hours beyond the prescription. This must appear rather queer to our Puritan friends "down east;" but, nevertheless, it is right on the principle that man, having set aside the Heaven-appointed institution, and made himself Lord of the Sabbath, (in substituting the first day of the week in place of the seventh,) has the like prerogative to change the hour, "from even to even" to "from midnight to midnight," and from midnight to noon—just as if the Sabbath was a nose of wax, that every one might twist it to suit himself. Well, that might do, too, if they would only twist it for themselves, and not twist it for others, and force them to wear whatsoever twist they may choose to give it, and change it as often as their fancy or interest suggests.

But, to hasten to a close, it has frequently been claimed, that the Constitutions of the Union and of the States, recognize Sunday as an institution of the Government, from the circumstance of that day being excepted in the ten days given to the Executive to retain Bills for his signature or his veto. This has commonly been regarded as a mere courtesy extended to the President, and to the Governors of the States, not to curtail the stipulated time, or force their attention to business on a day they, in common with others, may wish to rest. The same has been assumed from the practice of the Courts of Justice, in adjourning over first day. This, as a general rule, obtains in our Courts, as a courtesy to the people, and as often as a matter of convenience to the Judges themselves as from any sense of its sacredness; yet it often occurs, that they do not adjourn, but continue in the investigation of cases under trial without regard to the day. I have witnessed it, in several instances, in Pennsylvania, and those in which life and death were not involved. If, then, Judges on the Bench can hold Courts on Sunday, and the Congress of the Union can enact laws on that day, where is its "sacredness" recognized or established by the Constitution?—and wherein would be the impropriety of having the Executive inaugurated on that day? If the Constitution recognizes Sunday as sacred time, every Congress that has legislated on that day has violated the Constitution, and their acts, so done, are null and void. If it be constitutional to make laws on Sunday, then it is impliedly obligatory on the President Elect to assume the Executive Department, whenever falling on that day; and General Taylor has made a mistake—for he had no right to leave the country without an Executive Head a single hour.

But I have no more space to trace the devious course of the advocates for the sacredness of the first day of the week. They do, truly, "strain out a gnat, and swallow a camel." Consistency, thou art a jewel! W. M. F.

Union of Societies.—There are in this country three regularly-organized Societies, the ostensible object of which is to promote the conversion of Roman Catholics. Two of them—the American Protestant Society, and the Christian Alliance—adopted a plan of co-operation in May last, which has since been acted upon. The Foreign Evangelical Society, however, has been prevented by some legal obstacles from entering into the union. It seems that the Foreign Evangelical and American Protestant Societies have a large interest in the Waldo Estate, to inure to their benefit on the demise of the only surviving member of that opulent and benevolent family. It has been apprehended that a union of the Societies, involving a change in the name, and, to some extent, in the object of each, would hazard, if not forfeit, these legacies, and for that reason chiefly such a union has not been consummated. But the heirs-at-law, on a full presentation of the subject, have honorably given their unanimous written consent to the union, in which the party having a life-interest in the estate also concurs, so that this obstacle is entirely removed. It is now thought that a union of the three Societies will take place, so as to constitute one great Society, comprehending the entire work of Roman Catholic evangelization at home and abroad, with the collateral effort to promote religious freedom and religious knowledge.

Church Names.—We were interested and amused, the other day, in looking over a list of Episcopal Churches, and noticing particularly the names by which they are designated. The names most commonly selected are those of the Apostles; and hence we have, all over the country, churches known as St Mark's, St. Luke's, St. John's, St. Peter's, St. Paul's, and St. Bartholomew's. It sometimes happens, however, that the list of Apostles is not large enough to meet the necessities of the case, and then the names of Saints are adopted, such as St. George and St. Clement. Now and then a case occurs in which the people prefer to identify their church with some important event in the life of Christ, and accordingly they have Churches of the Advent, the Annunciation, the Epiphany, the Nativity, the Resurrection, the Ascension, &c. But some churches seem to be over-greedy, and, instead of contenting themselves with the name of a single Apostle or Saint, they call themselves after a whole class, as the Church of the Holy Evangelists, the Church of the Holy Apostles, the Church of the Holy Martyrs, the Church of All Saints, and the Church of All Angels!

Sunday Legislation for New York State.—In the Legislature of New York, on the 11th of March, a resolution providing that no collector on the canals shall issue clearances on the first day of the week, and that no collector, inspector, or lock-tender, shall be required to perform official duty on that day, came up. Mr. Clarke, the mover, said it was intended to conform the practice to that now prevailing in Albany and Buffalo, where on Sunday no clearances were issued. It was against a statute of the State for any person to work on Sunday, and the State should not compel its officers to violate the laws of the land. Several Senators expressed their opinion favorably to prohibiting the issue of clearances, but averse to allowing lock-tenders to suspend their work on that day. The question was not decided.

Troubles of a California Expedition.—After considerable flourish, the steam propeller Hartford left New York for San Francisco on the 16th of February, with a complement of passengers. On the 16th of March, the steamer Trent arrived at New York from Bermuda, bringing sixteen of the Hartford's passengers. It seems that when the propeller was seven days out, she was overtaken by a storm, in which she lost her bowsprit, foremast, and top of mizen, and sprung the mainmast, her machinery also giving way at the same time. After some ten days, however, she succeeded in reaching St. George's, Bermuda, where she was examined by navigators and ship-builders, who pronounced her incapable of performing the voyage to California, and recommended the officers to abandon it. She will probably return to New York, after making necessary repairs. Some fifteen or twenty of her passengers determined to continue their journey to California by way of New Orleans and Chagres.

For California.—The steamship Crescent City sailed from New York for Chagres last week with three hundred and forty-seven passengers bound for California. Among them was Rev. Flavel S. Mines, who goes out to establish an Episcopal Church at San Francisco, under the auspices of several churches in this city. He is a native of Virginia, and has been pastor of the Episcopal Church at Rossville, Staten Island.

Another Southern Address.—Several Members of Congress from Kentucky and Georgia, who did not subscribe to the Calhoun manifesto, have issued an address to the South on the subject of Slavery. They speak largely of the political power of the abolition movement, and represent it as threatening a dissolution of the Union. In view of this danger, they call upon the people of the South to unite and stand firm in opposition to all such measures.

Renouncing Pork.—It is said that the Shakers have recently renounced pork-eating, founding their antipathy on that passage of Scripture where it is related that Satan entered into the herd of swine when he was cast out of the possessed man. The Shakers, however, raise pork, and send it to market for others to eat.

Baptism of a Presbyterian Minister.—The Rev. Mr. Anderson, late a minister of the Scotch Free Church, and highly esteemed in that body, having renounced Infant Baptism, was immersed at Aberdeen, a short time ago, by the Rev. W. Innes (now Dr. Innes) of Edinburgh.

De Ruyter Institute.—In the recent distribution of the Literature Fund, De Ruyter Institute received $343 02 to be applied to the payment of teachers, and $245 to be applied to the purchase of Library and Apparatus.

Religious Interest.—A letter from Bro. J. R. Irish, of De Ruyter, dated March 9, says: "We are enjoying precious social meetings, and some new witnesses are testifying for Jesus."

Bibles in Canada.—The Montreal Herald says that the Romish clergy, with but two exceptions in all the province, are opposed to the circulation of the Bible; and of the Romish people, not one house in a thousand has the Bible, except where it has been given by Protestants.

Doings at Washington.—The Called Session of the Senate continues. The most difficult question before them last week related to the eligibility of General Shields, Senator elect from Illinois. The case was first referred to a Committee, who reported adversely to the claim of the General, and after considering the subject several days, the Senate finally resolved, "That the election of James Shields to be a Senator of the United States is void, he not having been a citizen of the United States the number of years required as a qualification to be a Senator of the United States, at the commencement of the term for which he was elected." General Shields was born in Ireland. After coming to this country, in 1840, he obtained naturalization papers in Illinois. The law makes nine years citizenship necessary before becoming a Senator. That time will not be up till October next, after which he will be eligible, if re-appointed.

The number of office-seekers at Washington is said to be very large, and many of them are likely to be disappointed. The new administration has determined, it is said, to make few or no appointments at present, except in cases where commissions have expired or are about to expire. Among the appointments made we notice the following: Palmer V. Kellogg, of Utica, to be Marshall of the United States for the Northern District of New York; Charles Hudson, Naval Officer at Boston, Mass.; Archibald Williams, United States Attorney for the District of Illinois; Surveyors of Customs—Wm. P. Green, Providence, R. I.; G. Howland, Tiverton, R. I.; J. H. Cross, Pawtucket, R. I.

House of Industry and Home for the Friendless.—A writer for one of the N. Y. papers, says that this Institution, which was opened on the 13th of December last, in the handsome edifice erected under the superintendence of its managers, in 30th street, N. Y., now contains about 80 inmates in all. The average, per month, is about 70, very few of whom remain for a longer period than two or three months. There are constant applications for admission, and as the number for whom the Institution succeeds in finding places, is about equal to that which they receive, the increase does not overrun the capacity of the building. The good thus accomplished, in furnishing employment to friendless and destitute females, and in giving shelter and instruction to forsaken children, has repaid tenfold the labors of those by whom the Institution was established. The children have a very healthy and cheerful appearance, and are evidently under good care and management. They sang several hymns in the school rooms, with well trained voices and excellent lungs. In the nursery, some twelve or fifteen little innocents, just able to walk, were receiving the attentions of the nurse. Most of these are without parents, and many without relatives on earth. They are frequently taken from the Institution and adopted by persons in various parts of the country.

American Citizenship.—An interesting question has recently been raised at the U. S. Department of State, which will probably give rise to much discussion. In its broadest form, the question is this—Has the Federal Government a legal right to deny to any citizen of a sovereign State of this Confederacy the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States? The question arose on an application in due form to the State Department for passports for certain citizens of New York who chanced to be born with black skins, and who, had their complexion been white, would have unquestionably been entitled to and received passports. The gruff answer from the Passport Clerk of the Department was that passports are never granted under such circumstances, and that they might have known better than to apply for them. So says the N. Y. Tribune.

Distress among the Jews.—The Orient relates the following particulars respecting the suffering condition of the Jews in Prussian Poland, in consequence of the late revolutionary movements: 'The sanguinary contests of the past months, in which we had to mourn the loss of many Jewish lives, have been followed by a state of things which presses heavily on the Jewish community. The large number of Jews who live among the Poles, are now suffering from the deep-rooted hate which the latter continue to nourish. The Pole refuses to employ a Jew, either in country or town, and it is not surprising that, in consequence, great poverty prevails in many congregations.'

Religious Liberty.—A newspaper, published in Malta by Dr. Desauctis, formerly Divinity Professor at Rome, but now a devout Protestant minister, is widely circulated in Italy, presenting a popular system of Gospel truth in the Italian language. A monthly newspaper has also, recently, been issued among the long-persecuted Waldenses, probably the first thing of the kind ever seen in the Valleys of Piedmont; all the result of the changes of '48—the first pulsations of new born liberty in that long oppressed country. These are illustrations of the inseparable connection between the freedom of the newspaper press and the progress of religious liberty.

Revival in Wisconsin.—A letter dated at Troy, Wisconsin, February 1, says: "We are in the midst of one of the greatest revivals ever witnessed in Wisconsin. God is with us by the powerful operations of his Spirit. The work commenced in our school district, and scarcely any are left, especially of the young. There have been some thirty or forty converts in our neighborhood."

Improvements in the Ohio Penitentiary.—Arrangements have recently been made for thoroughly lighting all the cells in the Ohio Penitentiary. The means employed are gas lights, placed in the area between the cells and the outer walls. Now every prisoner can spend his long evenings in reading, instead of being doomed to think in total darkness. There is a library of several thousand volumes belonging to the prison.

General Intelligence.

Indian-killing in Yucatan.—Advices from Yucatan to Feb. 14, have been received, giving sad accounts of the destruction of the Indians. The commandant of the troops operating upon Tihosuco, writes under date of January 8, that he had twice dispersed the Indians, causing them great loss, at Telo and Calumpich. The commandant of the canton of Tekaz writes that with a guerilla of 40 men he had occasioned a considerable loss to the Indians and captured some ammunition. Commandant Yaskaba gives notice of another defeat suffered by the insurgents on the 11th, one league from Xmaven. A letter from the chief of the forces operating upon Tihosuco, announces, under date of January 11, a brilliant victory obtained by the Government troops near the town of Chikinconot, which resulted in the capture of that town and 27 Indian prisoners with their families, several officers, and a great quantity of ammunition. The commandant of Tekaz, under date of the 23d, speaks of several encounters with the Indians. On the 15th he took possession of Zul, after having routed the enemy; on the 17th he gained another victory on the road from Moreno, killing 11 and taking 7 prisoners; on the 19th, killed 4 more Indians and entered Moreno, and soon after entered Nohuccan, where the Indians lost 28 killed and 31 prisoners. On the road to Tihosuco, the Indians suffered another defeat on the 24th and 25th, in the loss of 9 killed, while 1 soldier was killed and several wounded on the part of the Government. At Oxkuzteab, on the 31st, a skirmish occurred, in which 12 Indians and 7 Government soldiers were killed. On the 24th Jan. the Indians lost a large number of men near Tihosuco. Letters from that place and from Valladolid, of Jan. 30 and 31, speak of other actions in which the loss was considerable on both sides, but greatest on that of the Indians.

Horrible Tragedy.—A correspondent of the New York Tribune gives an account of a horrible tragedy which took place at Warren, Bradford county, Pa., on the night of March 10. About midnight Mr. William Manning saw a blaze of light in the direction of the house of Charles Corben, one of his immediate neighbors. He at once gave the alarm, and hastened toward it. He found both house and barn wrapped in flames. It appears that at the time there were only three persons in the house, Mr. Corben and his two sons, one seven and the other thirteen years of age. Judge of the horror of the benevolent neighbor when he saw that the room occupied by the children had fallen in, and on the straw bed, not yet consumed, lying among the ruins, were the disfigured and scarcely recognizable remains of the two boys; their limbs were already burned to ashes. The body of the wretched father lay near them, on his back, his body similarly mutilated by the fire. It was too late to stay the conflagration. As soon as possible the almost formless cinders were removed. It could be seen that the father had cut his own throat after firing the house. There is no doubt in the minds of the neighbors that he first killed the children, or stunned them by a blow on the head. He also tied up eighteen head of cattle and one horse in the barn previous to setting it on fire.

The motive of this fearful crime is thought to have been a brutal ferocity excited by hatred of his innocent and affectionate wife. He had often threatened her life, and, three days previous, alarmed at his menaces, she escaped and went to Owego. He then went, and on pretence that his wife was dangerously ill, induced his daughter, who had also fled from his cruelty some months previous, to return to the house. There he confined her, treating her like a fiend, till the day before the fire, when with difficulty she again escaped. Immediately after he must have proceeded to carry out the horrible purpose described.

Ship Franklin—Serious Charge.—We have already announced the wreck of the ship Franklin, with the loss of several lives. She was on her passage from London to Boston, with a valuable cargo, in all worth from $50,000 to $60,000, which was insured in Boston. According to accounts of the wreck, received at the time, the Franklin anchored back of the Cape on Wednesday, February 28, on account of the head winds, and at 4 A. M. on Thursday went ashore, and soon broke in two. Captain Smith and ten others got into a boat, and were drowned on their way to the shore. Those who remained on the wreck were all saved except three, who were washed off and drowned. It is now said, that in the valise of the deceased Captain was found a letter from her owners, instructing him to prevent the Franklin from reaching her destination by running her ashore. One of the owners has been arrested, and held to bail in the sum of twenty thousand dollars for his future appearance. The other owner is not to be found.

Desperate Fight at Pernambuco.—The Philadelphia Inquirer announces the arrival at that port, on the 17th, of the bark Navarre, Capt. Veacock, bringing dates to Feb. 8. Capt. V. reports that on Jan 22, in consequence of the suppression of a Liberal journal, many of the citizens joined the country party, in opposition to the Government and foreign residents. A desperate assault was made by 800 of the Insurgents, and at the same time, by signal, a corresponding attack at a different point was made by about 3,000 of the same party, who contemplated, if successful, not only the extermination of all foreigners, but the sacking of the city. The Government troops, to the number of 400 men, were called out, and immediately charged with fire and sword, and though every inch of ground was fiercely contested, the Insurgents were completely routed, leaving 200 killed in the streets, 300 drowned, and 400 taken prisoners.

Clergymen Murdered in California.—'Among the private letters received from the Pacific by the Crescent City, is one,' says the Newark Advertiser, 'which we have seen, mentioning a painful rumor that Messrs. Newman and Pomeroy, clergymen of the Methodist and Baptist Churches, had been murdered in the Gold Region. The letter is of the latest date, and comes from a highly respectable source. It refers to the statement incidentally, as if it were a well-understood fact, but gives no particulars.'

Insurance Companies.—A bill has passed the Assembly of New York for a general act incorporating insurance companies—Fire, Life, Marine, and Health. It provides that any number of persons, not less than thirteen, may organize in New York and Kings counties with not less capital than one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and in other counties with not less than fifty thousand dollars. They are not to commence with less than one hundred applicants for insurance. Insurance companies chartered by other States, who have agents in this State, shall not be allowed to do any business until they satisfy the Controller that they are possessed of the capital and securities represented to be invested according to the law in the State chartering them. Present agencies have given to them three months to furnish such certificates. This act requires an exact statement of its affairs from such company every January. The present joint stock companies may come under this act with the consent of three-quarters of their stockholders. Charters under this act may extend thirty years.

Floods.—A dispatch from New Orleans, dated March 9, says that the Mississippi has broken over its banks, having carried away the levees or dykes at West Baton Rouge and Donaldsonville. The water has made a complete breach over many valuable sugar and cotton plantations, causing an immense amount of damage to property. The river has not been so high before so early in the season within the memory of the oldest inhabitants. New Orleans is in imminent danger of inundation.

On the night of March 7, there was another breach in the levee of West Baton Rouge. The break was a fearful one, taking in many acres, and overflowing a large extent of country around. The inhabitants of the vicinity and of the back concessions, have been reduced to much distress, and are seeking refuge upon all the elevated land to be found.

A dispatch dated March 13, says that there had been a great flood at Chicago, and the overflow of water was still increasing. The damage to property had already reached $50-000.

A Bad Weed.—B. H. Weed, of Knoxville, Tenn., went to Nashville on business, and was entrusted with $9,000 by the Union Bank of that place, to carry to the branch of that Bank at Knoxville. Instead of going home, he went to Charleston, S. C., bought a lot of flour and other goods, and sailed for California in the ship Othello, on the 31st ult. He sent back a check of $600 to his wife, which was recovered by the Bank. He was a member of the Episcopal Church, and has sustained a fair character during a residence of three years at Knoxville.

Education in the West.—Ex-Governor Slade of Vermont is delivering lectures in Chicago on the subject of Education in the West. The National Board of Popular Education, of which Governor Slade is the agent, has sent out to the West during three years, 110 school-teachers, at a cost of about ten thousand dollars, 96 of whom are now engaged in active duty. About eight thousand dollars of the above sum has been collected at the East, while the West, for whose benefit the enterprise has been undertaken, has only contributed a little over two thousand dollars. It is their intention to send about thirty additional teachers into the field next Spring.

Reaping the Fruits.—The Batesville (Ark.) Eagle says that Colonel Roane, if elected, cannot become the Governor of that State. The inauguration oath requires the party to swear that he has never been engaged in a duel, either as principal, second, or bearer of a challenge. Col. R. has, however, fought with Albert Pike. The Senate of the State, at its recent session, repealed the law, with an eye to the case of Col. R., but the House refused to pass the bill.

SUMMARY.

The New Orleans Delta says that another of those extraordinary land-slides, threatening destruction to property, occurred at Algiers, opposite New Orleans, on the 21st ult. A portion of the bature commenced giving way in the morning, until between 75 and 100 feet fell into the water. Soundings were taken at night, giving a depth of sixty feet water at places on which buildings stood in the morning.

D. H. Morris, tax-collector of Mount Morris, Livingston county, was assaulted on the 7th instant, near that village, rendered senseless by a blow, and robbed of over three hundred dollars. He had with him five hundred dollars more, which the robber did not find. The village authorities offer a reward of two hundred dollars for the arrest and conviction of the villain.

The New Orleans Delta details a most horrible murder perpetrated by Captain Joseph Bradley of the schooner Friendship, on his paramour Fanny Daley, alias Young, a native of St. Louis. After cutting her throat in several places, he cut his own and stabbed himself, and is not expected to survive. Bradley leaves a wife and family who reside in Massachusetts.

A man whose name was said to be A. J. Winters, a grocery-keeper in Albany, was killed at Rome, N. Y., on the 7th inst., in attempting to get on the cars while under motion. He had been to Buffalo, and was on his return home; he died in less than five minutes after the cars passed over his legs; he was in good circumstances; leaves a wife and several children.

The Lincolnton (N. C.) Republican of Feb. 27, says that Major G. W. Caldwell, operating in Lemon's mine, in Union county, on Saturday, the 10th inst., gathered up at one handful, ten pounds of virgin gold! We have been informed that it produced him the handsome sum of $2,400.

The Board of Health of Madison, Indiana, reported three cases of cholera in that town on the 25th ult., all of which terminated fatally; also another on the 27th ult., which terminated fatally.

The Austin Democrat says that the town of New Braunfels, Texas, is rapidly improving. It is beautifully situated on the west bank of the Guadalupe River, at the foot of the mountains, and possesses water power of the greatest value. Arrangements have been made for the establishment of cotton and wollen factories there within the present year. This will be the first enterprise of the kind undertaken in Texas. Already there are two saw and grist mills in full operation.

The friends of emancipation in Kentucky have fixed upon the 25th day of April next as the time, and Frankfort as the place, to meet, by delegates or otherwise, to consider and adopt such measures as may be deemed necessary and proper with reference to the approaching Convention to remodel the Constitution of the State.

Jesse D. Quantril, upon getting out of the Maryland State Prison, went to the hotel of Arthur Cowton, in Cumberland, Md., inquired for Mrs. Cowton, was shown to her room, and attempted to murder her, but she was rescued, and he sent to jail. Mrs. Cowton was Quantril's wife, but obtained a divorce while he was in prison, and was married to Mr. Cowton.

The Wabash and Erie Canal, when finished to the Ohio River, will be 375 miles in length, in Indiana, and including the eastern end of it, which lies in the State of Ohio, will be 459 miles in length from Toledo to Evansville, being the longest Canal in the United States. The Erie Canal is 363 miles in length.

The perfect skeleton of an Indian woman was found last week in the sand-bank excavation adjoining Niagara River. It rested in a sitting posture, with its head facing the North, (true Indian style,) about four feet below the surface. Immediately above grew a large hickory, two feet in diameter, at least 200 years old, whose huge roots encircled the skeleton on every side.

Letitia Page, who is under arrest for poisoning the family of Mr. Blaisdell, in New Boston, N. H., has made confessions implicating Mr. John Cheney, a farmer living in Goffstown, in the affair. There is a large amount of money due to Blaisdell from Cheney, and the inference is that there was a plan to make way with Blaisdell, in order to escape the payment.

On a recent Saturday, while one of the overseers on section 29, Hudson River Railroad, was touching off a sand blast containing two kegs of powder, the match, it is supposed, came in contact with some loose powder, when it exploded, throwing him entirely out of his boots, and about twenty feet into the river.

The people of Vermont have determined that no licenses to sell liquor shall be issued in that State for the year to come. Last year they voted just the other way. The No License majority will not be less than 10,000 or 12,000. Twenty towns give 3,000.

Speaking of cold weather, a person at Randolph, Vt., says that at that place, last winter, there were 26 days in the months of January and February that the mercury fell below zero, and 10 in succession in February. This is the coldest snap we have had since 1844.

DIED.

In DeRuyter, N. Y., on the 5th instant, S. Livonia Burdick, daughter of Thompson Burdick, Jr., aged 18 years. In her lingering illness and peaceful death the triumphs of the gospel were exemplified as the power of God unto salvation.

In Sangerfield, Oneida Co., N. Y., on the 10th inst., of consumption, Mr. George C. Burdick, son of Clark Burdick, in the 41st year of his age. Brother Burdick was hopefully converted to God some twenty years since, and immediately united with the Church of Christ. In his death, the church has lost a worthy brother, the widow an affectionate husband, the children a pious father, the parents a beloved son, and the brothers and sisters a kind brother.
S. B. C.

In Brookfield, N. Y., on the 12th inst., Mrs. Amy Miller, wife of Joseph Miller, in the 46th year of her age. Sister Miller had for many years been a member of the visible Church of Christ, and we trust has now joined the church triumphant. In her death, the church, the husband, the aged father, the children, the brothers and sisters, have all experienced a great loss; but we believe that their loss is her gain.

Our Accounts.—The fifth volume of the Sabbath Recorder will close on the 14th day of June next. As the accounts of the establishment up to that time will have no connection with subsequent accounts, it is important that they should all be settled before the volume closes. Most of those who owe the establishment, know the amount of their indebtedness; and it is hoped that they will forward the same immediately. The accounts remaining unsettled on the 15th day of May will probably be placed in the hands of a traveling agent for collection, and in all such cases $2 50 per volume must be charged, to pay the expenses. An early settlement, therefore, is for the interest of all concerned.

FARM FOR SALE.

THE subscriber offers for sale his farm, situated in the town of Genesee, county of Allegany, N. Y. Said farm codsists of 280 acres of first-rate land, 175 of which is level, ann the remainder gradually rising side-hill; all of which is susceptible of cultivation, mostly adapted to grazing purposes. About 75 acres, however, is a gravely quick soil, as productive of wheat and corn, as any in the southern part of said county. Upon said farm is about 100 acres improvement, two framed barns, and a large two-story framed house, well inclosed, lately built, and conveniently calculated. There are two good wells of water upon said farm, and it is also abundantly supplied with numerous brooks and springs. Said farm is situated in a good neighborhood, and convenient to school, and the central place of business for the western part of said town; and on the main traveled road from Angelica to Smithport. For pleasantness and locality iti s not surpassed by any in the township or vicinity. To those wishing to purchase a good farm, the present opportunity offers rare inducements. The farm will be sold low for cash; or, if desired, by paying one-half of the purchase money down, the balance will be arranged to accommodate purchasers for any reasonable length of credit. A careful view of the premises by a discerning individual, is only requisite to a thorough conviction that an investment made under such favorable terms as the subscriber offers, is but safe and a fair speculation. For farther information, address the subscriber, P. M. at West Genesee, Allegany Co., N. Y., or inquire at his house.

TO CLERGYMEN AND THEIR PEOPLE.

All Clergymen who will send their address to Messrs. Comstock & Co., 21 Courtland-st., New York, shall be furnished gratuitously, for their family use, with a Salve of most extraordinary merit for external sores or inflammations of long or short standing. In burns, or pains and swellings of nearly all descriptions, its effects are charming, and almost beyond belief. This Salve has already been used by quite a number of the clergy, for themselves or sufferers to whom they have given it; and they have called on or written to the proprietors to express their delight at its action, and a desire to have their names used in making known its virtues. The proprietors having realized a handsome sum by its sale, feel called upon by a sense of duty to their fellow-men to disseminate the knowledge of the existence of such a thing far and near, and to give it without charge to the reverend clergy without limitation. It is called CONNEL'S PAIN EXTRACTOR, and is owned solely by Messrs. C. & Co. All religious papers that will publish this a few times will be furnished with the Salve free, and they may also thereby relieve many suffering poor brethren from agonizing pain, and save them much expense. The names of nearly fifty clergymen recommending it, are to be seen at the office of C. & Co.

You will please observe, it is no "sovereign remedy for all complaints," but only intended for external applications in the following:—Burns, Scalds, Frosted parts, Chilblains, Chafe or Galls, Chaps, Tetter, Pimple, Blotch, Felon, Ulcer Sprains, Erysipelas, Cuts, Bruises, Ear and Toothache, Mumps, Sore Throat, Whitlows, Piles, Ringworm, Salt Rheum, Barber's Itch, Carbuncle, Eruption, Sore Eyes and Lids, Weak Sight, Sore Lips, Punctures, Biles and Warts, Fever Pains, Tender Feet, Inflammatory Rheumatism, Tic Doloureux, Ague in Face and Breast, Fever Sores, Old Burn Scars, Prickly Heat, Inflamed Skin, Broken Breast, Sore Nipples, Rough Hands, Blistered Surfaces, Dressing for Blisters, White Swellings, Cold in Wounds, Sore Corns, General Sores, Smallpox Marks, &c.

Though we have named numerous affections, experience has taught us that they are not too many. It will be necessary to know that this article is the only one we can recommend; but must caution against some imitation by like name. We will present it to the poor who have actual need of it.

TO AN OLD ACQUAINTANCE.

Oh! say, does the cottage yet peer from the shadow
Of ancestral elms on the side of the hill?
Its doorway of woodbine, that looked to the meadow,
And welcomed the sun as a guest on the sill?
The April-winged martin, with garrulous laughter,
Is he here where the mosses were thatching the eave?
And the dear little wren, that crept under the rafter,
The earliest to come, and the latest to leave?

Oh! say, is the hawthorn the hedge-row perfuming,
Adown the old lane? are the willows still there?
Where briery thickets in spring-time were blooming,
And breathing their life on the odorous air;
And runs yet the brook where violets were weeping?
Where the white lily sat like a swan on the stream,
While under the laurel, the shepherd boy sleeping,
Saw only the glory of life in his dream.

Hath the Reaper been there, with the sickle relentless?
The stern reaper Death in the harvest of Life?
Hath the foot crushed the blossoms, 'till withered and scentless,
They lay ere the frosts of the Autumn were rife?
Ah! yes, I can hear the sad villagers hymning
A requiem that swells from my heart on my ear;
And a gathering shadow of sorrow is dimming
Those scenes that must ever arise with a tear.

A CALIFORNIA INCIDENT.

Many touching incidents daily occur among the thousands flocking to the new El Dorado. Not long since, we heard of a clerk in a Wall-street bank, who caught the "yellow fever" so suddenly, and had it so severely, that he was carried off by it ere he could procure a change of raiment or take a parting leave of her who had borne him, and who, like Rachael of old, when she heard the news, refused to be comforted. Another incident occurred on the departure of the Peytona, on her long voyage. As usual, a large crowd had gathered on the pier, including several females, to bid a last adieu to relatives, friends, and lovers. One girl, who had probably seen seventeen summers, particularly attracted our attention. She was a beautiful blonde, clothed in a plain dress—with remarkably rosy cheeks—a lip the bee might swoon on, and soft dark eyes, now a little dimmed by the gathering moisture of sadness. While others were hurrying to and fro, she stood on the edge of the pier, gazing from her moorings. Her eyes were fixed on a handsome young man leaning over the taffrail, rigged out in a California dress, who was no less intently watching the fair girl he was leaving. Just as the vessel began to move in the water, and recede from the wharf, the tears unbidden started from their repose—tears, in whose dumb grief there was a powerful eloquence, filled her large melting eyes, and stretching out her hands to him, in a most thrillingly plaintive whisper, she said, "Charley! ain't you sorry now!" The color fled from Charley's cheek, his pale lip quivered a moment, and then he turned, without speaking, to hide himself and his tears in the cabin; and we turned away, thinking that that young man perchance was leaving behind him, in that fond and loving heart, a treasure of more worth than all the wealth in California, and thinking, too, were we of those lines—

"When eyes are beaming
What never tongue might tell;
When tears are streaming
From their chrystal well;
When hands are linked that dread to part,
And heart is met by throbbing heart—
Oh! bitter, bitter is the smart
Of them that bid farewell."

RECOVERY FROM INSANITY.

We stated recently, in general terms, the case of a man in the Newton poor-house, who, after an insanity of about forty years, thirty of which he was chained, and recovered his reason. We are now able to give the particulars of this remarkable case. The name of the unfortunate man is Elisha Robbins, formerly a shoemaker. He was born about the year 1786, and is therefore nearly sixty-four years of age. He was twenty-four years old when first seized with insanity. At that time he had just lost his wife, by whom he had two children then living. It is not certainly known, at this distant day, what actually caused his insanity—perhaps the loss of his wife. Soon after his seizure, he was so violent, that it was necessary to chain him down without clothes, save a shirt, and only straw to sleep upon. This course was rendered necessary by his habits, which were no better than the beasts of the field. At one time the paupers were farmed out by the town to the lowest bidders. Among others was Robbins, who was chained in a barn by his keepers, where he was found one morning with his feet frozen so as to render their amputation necessary. He was forthwith removed, and since that time has had every comfort compatible with his situation—his room being always kept heated. He was once visited by the celebrated Miss Dix, who made a special report upon the cruelty of chaining him almost naked in the straw. Perhaps with a more thorough understanding of some of the features of his case, she might have judged differently as to the humanity of his keepers. About a year ago, Robbins began to exhibit signs of returning reason. It was observed that he paid more attention to personal cleanliness. He was encouraged, and shortly appeared—after a lapse of nearly half a century—in the clothing of a man. After that, he was allowed to wander about the building, and sometimes he would help at light work, such as husking corn, &c. Finally, he began to talk of persons and places familiar to his youthful days, before his reason was clouded; but, beyond that period, all to him is a blank. He described with perfect accuracy places with which he was conversant in his early days; spoke of the companions of that period; of one in particular, whom he denominated a "gal," though, if now alive, she is threescore years of age. He has been tried in many ways as to the verge of his memory; but it always stops at the commencement of his insanity. One day, the marriage of an acquaintance, which took place in his early days of reason, was mentioned, and the name of the bride intentionally misstated. He instantly corrected the error and gave the real name. When asked what year he was born in, he replies, "About 1786," but still insists that he is but twenty-four years of age. At the last acounts he continued to improve, and it was hoped that reason had permanently returned. [Boston Mail.

PREMIUM GRAIN CROP.—Thos. Andrews, Esq., of Smithfield, R. I., has received a premium of fifteen dollars from the Rhode Island Society for the Encouragement of Domestic Industry, for the best crop of Indian Corn in the State. The field which Mr. Andrews planted contains three and one-half acres by actual survey; and he harvested four hundred and sixty bushels of ears, heaped measure—which, allowing two bushels of ears for one of shelled corn, will make two hundred and thirty bushels, averaging a fraction short of sixty-six bushels to the acre. The cost of this corn to Mr. A. was $83,-28, or 36 2-10 cents per bushel. The soil upon which it was raised is a hard loam, with a gravelly sub-soil.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCE.

Nearly fifty years ago, says the editor of the Newark Daily Advertiser, a boy eight or ten years old was known to live in one of the then new townships of our county. Probably there was not a book there, save a small Bible, here and there a copy of Watts' Psalms and Hymns, spelling-books, small arithmetics, and half a dozen or so of Morse's small school geography. These constituted the entire literature of the town. This boy was allowed to plant a little patch of potatoes, it may be half an acre. The produce was annually sold at about twenty cents a bushel, and the cash laid by. During this time he learned that there was such a thing as a newspaper printed at the capital of the State. For this he subscribed, and paid for it out of his potato fund. He also accidentally saw the last volume of Josephus, in six volumes, belonging to a little social library of two hundred volumes, in an older settlement, ten miles distant. He read that volume with eagerness. Previously he knew nothing of books, except those named. The influence upon his mind was indescribable. Of a library he had never before heard. The importance of this one acquired a value in his estimation greater than a gold mine. He resolved to appropriate a portion of his funds for an interest in it. He did so; and weekly for several years he continued to take half a day to obtain a book to be read the ensuing week. This, however, after a time, did not satisfy him; he wanted books of his own. His potato funds, very extravagantly as his never-to-be-forgotten mother thought, were used up in the purchase of them. At sixteen he resolved to obtain a public education. This he accomplished; studied a profession; took no small part in promoting the literature of the country; and finally, received the highest collegiate honors; the whole of which may be referred to mental improvement. And, in the mutations of life, that boy is now Fleming Grove.

MODERN WORKMEN'S DWELLINGS.

A building is now being erected in Glasgow, Scotland, by way of an attempt at some improvement in the construction of dwellings for the industrious classes. It consists of four stories, and contains in all thirty-one dwellings. The houses on each floor are ranged along a wide central passage, which communicates with the common staircase, and is lighted by a window at each end. The houses are arranged with the view of giving to their one main apartment the utmost value, by obviating as much as possible the necessity for performing any cleaning operations within it, and forming the bed-closets opening out of the same, so that there is no occasion for the occupants creating disorder by strewing their clothes about the room. The bed-bottoms and fixtures, are of rod-iron filled with hooping, to prevent the propagation of insects, as well as the loss, which is so great a grievance to the proprietors of small houses, from the use of the spare bed-bottoms for fire-wood. Each dwelling has also a scullery opening out of the main apartment, and containing a dresser, sink, coal-box, and press; and likewise a small, well-aired larder, in the outside wall; a kitchen-grate, with oven and boiler; an ash-box, with cinder-sieve, in the hearth, which is of cast-iron, and includes a fender, the latter having been cast with it; and, opening from the small entrance lobby, is a water-closet, with apparatus of simple and economical construction, with, in one corner of it, a trap, covering a shoot into a dust-shaft, through which all dry rubbish is conveyed to a cellar in the basement. Water is to be laid on in the scullery; and a jet of gas, for certain hours, in the main apartment, as well as in the central or common passages and staircases. The ventilation of the house is provided for by a louvred opening at the top of each window, and of the central passages by a few feet of the floor at either end being omitted, thus permitting a free upward circulation to the roof, where there will be large louvred outlets. There is a wash-house on the outside, on the ground story, with all necessary appurtenances, including a rotary drying-machine, which will be common to all the tenants in due succession. The rent, which is looked for as sufficient to meet the views of the energetic and well-intentioned founder of this establishment, is six pounds per annum—a small sum when compared with the advantages which it offers to the laboring man. [The Builder.

THE BEGGING "PROFESSION."—At a recent meeting of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, the Rev. Mr. Branch said that, a short time since, he visited a room in Westminster, where he saw a woman with a dying child in her arms. Commiserating the wretched creature's condition, he inquired into her history and her means of livelihood, and, in answer to his questions, she replied, "O, sir, my sufferings are great, and so are those of my child; but when my child is gone, I know not what to do." "But," observed Mr. Branch, "it will be a happy release for you and your child, as you can make no exertions while you are burdened with her." "O dear, sir," ejaculated the mother, "when she is gone, I'll have to pay 9d. a day for another child, while she costs me nothing. Unless I do so, I'll earn nothing by begging, for it is the children that excite compassion." In another room in the house, Mr. Branch found forty beggars, vagabonds, and rogues, male and female, young, old, lame, and blind, gathered round a fire, all relating their exploits, and planning for their next attacks upon the public. In a regular wareroom, in Westminster, he saw exhibited, for hire and sale, every variety of dresses, including widows' weeds and tattered rags, shabby genteel costumes, clerical suits, &c., adapted to the different plans of mendicant operations pursued by the several parties who patronized this extraordinary bazaar, and who made begging a "profession."

GENERAL WASHINGTON.

One Reuben Rouzy owed the General one thousand pounds. While he was President, one of his agents brought an action for the money; judgment was obtained, and execution issued against the body of the defendant, who was taken to jail. He had considerable landed estate, but this kind of property cannot be sold in Virginia, unless at the discretion of the person. He had a large family, and for the sake of his children, preferred remaining in jail to selling his land. A friend hinted to him that probably General Washington did not know anything of the proceeding, and that it might be well to send him a petition, with a statement of the circumstances. He did so—and the next post from Philadelphia, after the arrival of the petition in that city, brought him an order for his immediate release, together with a full discharge, and a severe reprimand to the agent for having acted in such a manner. Poor R. was consequently restored to his family, who never afterward laid down their heads at night without presenting prayers to Heaven for their beloved Washington. Providence smiled upon the labors of the grateful family, and, in a few years, Rouzy enjoyed the exquisite pleasure of being able to pay the money, with the interest, to this truly great man. Washington reminded him that the debt was discharged. Rouzy replied, that the debt of his family to the Father of their Country, and the preserver of their parent, could never be discharged; and the General, to avoid the pleasing importunities of the Virginian, who would not be denied, accepted the money—only, however, to divide it among the children of Rouzy, which he immediately did.

A THRILLING INCIDENT.—The Charleston Courier gives the following incident as related to her friends by the mother of the youth, (Mrs. Maury,) to whom it occurred on board the ship Thomas Bennett, on her late passage from Liverpool to Charleston. Mrs. Maury is of the family of the late James Maury, who for many years held the station of Consul of the United States at Liverpool, having been appointed to that responsible station by Washington.

"My son was standing on the outside of the mizen shrouds, and fishing for gulf-weed with a hook and line, when he overbalanced himself and fell into the water. His younger brother was providentially near him, and instantly gave the alarm. Captain Sherman ordered the ropes of the jolly boat to be cut, and she was cast at once into the sea, the captain and four sailors leaping into it. They rowed for about five minutes without seeing the boy, but at length perceived his hands only just above the water, and proceeding instantly to the spot, captain Sherman dragged him into the boat. He was conscious, but nearly exhausted, and in all human probability, another half minute would have seen him sink to rise no more. Once safe in the boat, the captain stripped him, and put on the boy his own flannels; they quickly rowed to the ship, where we put him into hot blankets, applied hot water to his feet and body, gave him a few teaspoonfuls of weak brandy and water, and after sleeping three hours, he awoke perfectly well. He had been about ten minutes in the water, and perhaps a quarter of an hour had elapsed altogether when they had reached the ship. No language could convey my own emotions during this time, but all can understand them. Under Heaven, Captain S. was the means of saving my child; but neither to Heaven above, nor yet to him who was its agent, could I ever express the gratitude I shall never cease to feel till the last hour of my life."

THE END OF THE WICKED.—Under this head, the Dayton Transcript mentions the death of Walter Maythe, by being shot in an affray at Cincinnati, O., and gives the following account of the Maythe family: They have long been known in the West as desperadoes and outlaws. The whole family, male and female, were of the most abandoned character. They knew no restraint, and followed no guide, but their own depraved appetites, and outrageously wicked propensities. Taking these as their guide, they regarded society and its members as their lawful prey. The long catalogue of their crimes embraced many of the blackest dye.

But fearful indeed has been the retribution that has fallen upon the whole family. With but one exception, the family is now extinct. But not one died a natural death. They lived by violence, and by violence they died. The two sisters died miserably in the hospital of Mobile. Smith Maythe was taken from the jail of Grant County, Kentucky, and hung by a mob. Scott Maythe was arrested among a gang of counterfeiters on the Mississippi River, and tied neck and heels with a companion in crime, and thrown into the river. How Walter Maythe came to his death we have already stated. There is but one member of the family living, and he is, we are informed, an inmate of the penitentiary at this time. What a lesson does the history of this family contain! What a fearful warning is their terrible fate!

WINTER SCENERY AT NIAGARA.—The Iris says, that for some weeks past, the winter scenery at Niagara Falls has been surpassing beautiful, and quite beyond description. On the perpendicular banks are suspended large icicles of the most fanciful shapes, which are white as alabaster, and appear at a distance like magnificent columns. But the most beautiful sight is the congealed spray upon the surrounding trees and bushes. Every branch is incrusted; little berries upon the shrubs are balls of ice. It appears like a forest of coral glittering with a profusion of hanging diamonds, and of dazzling whiteness.

PREMIUMS FOR THEIR HEADS.—The Union of German Americans at Philadelphia, through one L. A. Wollenweber, Secretary, advertise that as the monarchs and potentates of Germany persist in holding office, they see no other way than to get them killed off or otherwise thoroughly done for. As an inducement to speculators, Mr. Wollenweber offers 30,000 florins for the head of the Emperor of Austria, 25,000 for that of the King of Prussia, 15,000 for any other King, Prince, or Duke, and 10,000 for the head of Hangman Windischgrätz. For the payment of these little premiums, the members of the Union pledge their fortunes and their honors.

It is a common absurdity to drink rum, when water is so much cheaper and healthier.

MY DEAR GEORGE,—Having spent more shillings within the last fortnight than usual, I have just determined, "with glowing patriotism," to turn miser again, and now write down "this my high resolve," lest I forget it. And, as you are verging on manhood, I give you below the benefit of my evening's musing on the subject. Always remember to save the las shilling; and, if your debts are all paid, and that shilling left, you will always be RICH. But it would be a lonely shilling; therefore it will be well to give it the society of fellow shillings when you honestly can.

Truly yours, WILLARD, 3d.

TO MY LAST SHILLING.

1.

Oh, dismal disaster! oh, troublesome lot!
What a heart-rending theme for my musing I've got!
Then pray what's the matter? O, friend, I'm not willing—
The thought grieves me sore,
Now I'm driven ashore—
And must I then spend my last shilling?

2.

O painful reflection! thou whole of my store,
That for these three months in my pocket I've wore;
To spend THEE, thou jewel—the thought turns me chilling;
Oh must I, in spite
Of all reason, this night,
A farewell bid my last shilling?

3.

How oft in my corner I've bother'd my pate,
First gaz'd at my shilling, then mourn'd at my fate,
To think the world's rich, though painful and killing,
While I here endure
Sad pain past a cure,
Being drained to my very last shilling.

4.

Now could'st thou but answer, dear whole of my store,
I'd ask thee a question; thus friendless and poor,
'T is whether thou would'st to forsake me be willing?
Or, whether it still
Would be more to thy will,
To remain, and be called my last shilling?

5.

Thou source of reflection, my friend, and my all!
For tho' I'm left friendless, thou stick'st to thy stall,
And through vexing trouble seem'st cheerful and willing;
Thee to keep I'll contrive,
For I'm sure I shall n't thrive
If ever I spend such a shilling.

6.

So still, old companion, stick true to the breeches,
And wear this old pocket thread-bare to its stitches;
For, ever to keep thee I really am willing;
And who knows but thou
(Though I am hard ashore now)
May'st turn out a lucky last shilling?

LUMPS OF GOLD.—The largest lumps of gold recorded in the history of gold mines, are as follows: One found at the Wicklow mines, in Ireland, weighing twenty-two ounces; one in Peru, weighing twenty-six pounds and a half; several in Quito, reported to have weighed upwards of one hundred and six pounds; one in Lebanon, North Carolina, found in 1810, which weighed twenty-eight pounds; and one in New Grenada, which weighed twenty-seven pounds and a half. These are the largest lumps on record.

UNFORTUNATE HASTE.—The New Haven boat leaves New York at an early hour, and the passengers generally come at the last minute, in a desperate hurry. One day last week, a lady and her husband stepped on board, just as they were hauling in the plank—but just then she remembered that she had forgotten something, and screamed out—'Goodness, William, I must go back to the Astor House—I've left my teeth in the wash-bowl.'

A CHILD'S ANSWER.—A father once said playfully to his little daughter, a child of five years, 'Mary, you are not good for anything.'

'Yes, I am, dear father,' replied she, looking tenderly into his face.

'Why, what are you good for? Pray tell me, my dear.'

'I am good to love you, father,' replied she, at the same time throwing her tiny arms about his neck, and giving him a kiss of unutterable affection.

VARIETY.

The packet ship Liverpool, from Liverpool, arrived at the Quarantine, near New York, last week, with sickness on board. Forty persons out of four hundred died on the passage. There is some dispute as to whether the disease is cholera. Meanwhile the crew and passengers are all detained at Quarantine.

In the English Parliament, Mr. Stuart Wortley has moved to amend the law which forbids a man to marry the sister or niece of his deceased wife. He said that from 30,000, to 50,000 such marriages had taken place since the passage of the law, in contravention of its provisions.

Extract from a Lecture addressed to a Teacher's Institute, by William Russel, Principal of the Merrimack [N. H.] School for Teachers, and formerly Editor of the American Journal of Education:

"The edition of Dr. Webster's Dictionary, revised by Professor Goodrich, I would earnestly recommend to the attention of all teachers who are desirous of becoming fully qualified to give instruction in the English Language. The copious information which that work embodies, on all topics connected with Etymology—the extreme exactness, as well as the number, extent, and fullness of the definitions which it furnishes to every important word, render it a mine of philological wealth to instructors. The volume is, in fact, the teacher's encyclopedia, as well as lexicon, for daily reference. Could a copy of it be provided, as the permanent property of every district school, the effect, as regards the improvement of instruction, would be deeply and extensively felt, in the increased skill of the teacher, and the higher attainments of his pupils, in the most important part of education—the acquisition of an adequate knowledge and proper use of our own language."

"It has come to be a necessity to every educated man."—Lord Brougham

"This is emphatically a national work, and as such eminently deserving of a national support."

From the Commercial Advertiser.

"Such a work is invaluable, and is offered at a comparatively low price, in expectation of a large sale."

From the Luzern Democrat.

"The Statesman's Manual is a very valuable work, comprising a complete condensed political history of our country from the formation of our government until the present time."

From the Washingtonian, Ohio.

"It is but scanty praise to say, that no work of equal value to the American Statesman, Politician, Journalist, Historian, &c., &c., has ever before appeared."

From the Harrisburg (Pa.) Argus, August 26, 1846.

"No politician, no man who desires to understand the history of the several administrations of the General Government, should be without a copy of it. As a book of reference, it is invaluable."

SABBATH LAWS IN PENNSYLVANIA.*

"All men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God, according to the dictates of their own consciences; no man can of right be compelled to attend, erect, or support any place of worship, or to maintain any ministry against his consent; no human authority can in any case whatever, control or interfere with the rights of conscience; and no preference shall ever be given by law to any religious establishments or modes of worship."—CONSTITUTION OF PENNSYLVANIA—Art. IX., Sec. 3.

Although it is necessary to the stability of our Republic, that the laws of the States, as exhibiting the deliberately expressed will of the majority, should be unhesitatingly obeyed, and the constructions of the authoritative expounders of those laws implicitly received by all, as the rule of public conduct, it is still equally essential to the vitality of the Republic, that the deliberations, acts, and decisions of every governmental functionary should be freely criticised by the humblest of its citizens. A few remarks accordingly in examination of a judicial opinion recently given in Pennsylvania, may not be out of place, and indeed seem rather called for, as well from the importance of the principles involved, as from the discrepancy of judgment expressed from the bench, in regard to their extent and application.

The Legislature of Pennsylvania enacted, by act of 22d of April, 1794, (Sec. 1,) that "if any person shall do or perform any worldly employment or business whatsoever, on the Lord's day, commonly called Sunday, works of necessity and charity only excepted, or shall use or practice any unlawful game, hunting, shooting, sport, or diversion whatsoever, on the same day, and be convicted thereof, every such person so offending, shall, for every such offense, forfeit and pay four dollars." In 1817, a question arose on the constitutionality of the law, in the case of the Commonwealth vs. Wolf. (3 S. & R. 48.) The defendant, Abraham Wolf, was a Jew, by occupation a pencil-maker. He was charged on oath of James Pusey, before a magistrate, with having followed his worldly employment on Sunday. He admitted the fact and was fined. The case was removed by writ of certiorari to the Supreme Court of the State, where Judge Yeates decided the act of 1794 to be constitutional, and affirmed the conviction—Judge Gibson concurring.

This of course fully established the law; and the question of constitutionality could no longer be considered practically an open one. Still private doubts had frequently been expressed as to the propriety of the judgment; and it had been supposed, that if the point could again be raised before the Court, and a fuller argument presented, the former decision might be reversed. And now, after a lapse of thirty years, such a case does arise, and is admitted to a hearing before the Court—a case too involving not a Jew but a Christian.

The facts appear to be, that one Specht, a farmer, residing in Franklin county, in the south central part of the State, and a member of the very respectable sect of "Seventh-day Baptists," was indicted for following the ordinary labors of his farm on Sunday, and was fined by the local court. Specht appealed, on the old ground of the unconstitutionality of the law under which he was convicted, to the Supreme Court, where the proceedings of the lower court were affirmed, and the constitutionality of the statute reässerted; and it is upon this decision, and the reason assigned for it, that we propose briefly commenting.

Perhaps the most singular feature in the decision, which was given by two of the judges, is the fact, that while the opinions of both agree in their result, they are based on diametrically opposite grounds. Judge Bell pronouncing the act of 1794 constitutional, because it is purely a civil and not a Christian establishment; and Judge Coulter equally positively declaring the law constitutional, because it is a Christian establishment. Thus one of the judgments must necessarily be erroneous; and both must be partially wrong, unless one is totally so.

|---|---|
| "It is still essentially but a civil regulation, made for the government of man as a member of society; and obedience to it may properly be enforced by penal sanctions. . . . It cannot be said a primary object of the act was authoritatively to assert the supremacy of Sunday as of divine appointment. . . . In this aspect of the statute, there is therefore nothing in derogation of the constitutional inhibition." | "I wish it to be distinctly understood, that I believe the laws constitutional, because they guard the Christian Sabbath from profanation, and in the language of the act of 1794, prohibit work or worldly employment on the Lord's day. We are a Christian people and State. . . . I do not recognize the right of legislation to make a day of secular cessation from labor, independent of the Christian Sabbath." |

In logical phraseology, Judge B. may be described as denying the minor, and Judge C. as denying the major premiss of the complainant's argument; and it is remarkable, that in so doing, each admits the other premiss; so that eodem judicio, both propositions of the opposing argument, may be considered as made out, and the ground of the plaintiff in error completely established. The syllogism would stand thus:

I. All laws giving preference to any religious establishment are unconstitutional. (Admitted by Bell.)

II. The act of 1794 gives a preference to a religious establishment. (Admitted by Coulter.)

III. Therefore, the act of 1794 is unconstitutional. (Q. E. D.) Let us see how far either of these propositions is overthrown by the reasonings of the two judges. To take them in their proper order, we shall first present the essential passages of Judge Bell's argument:

"The Constitution of this State secures freedom of conscience and equality of religious right. No man living under the protection of our institutions can be coërced to profess any form of religious belief, or to practice any peculiar mode of worship in preference to another. In this respect, the Christian, the Jew, the Mohammedan, and the Pagan, are alike entitled to protection. . . . Does the act of Assembly in question, impinge upon this natural right, or on the constitutional declaration which seeks to foster and protect it? It is insisted, this question must receive an affirmative response, because, as it is said, the statute treats the first day of the week as a holy and sacred day; and it is thus proved to be, not a mere civil regulation to give rest to man, but an attempt to exalt by law the religious belief of certain sects over that of others.

"Though it may have been a motive with the law-makers to prohibit the profanation of a day regarded by them as sacred, and certainly there are expressions used in the statute that justify this conclusion, it is not perceived how this fact can vitally affect the question at issue. All agree, that to the well-being of society, periods of rest are absolutely necessary. To be productive of the required advantage, these periods must recur at stated intervals, so that the mass of which the community is composed, may enjoy a respite from labor at the same time. They may be established by common consent, or, as is conceded, the legislative power of the State may, without impropriety, interfere to fix the time of their stated return, and enforce obedience to the direction. When this happens, some one day must be selected; and it has been said the round of the week presents none, which being preferred might not be regarded as favoring some one of the numerous religious sects into which mankind are divided. In a Christian community, where a very large majority of the people celebrate the first day of the week as their chosen period of rest from labor, it is not surprising that that day should have received the legislative sanction; and as it is also devoted to religious observances, we are prepared to estimate the reason why the statute should speak of it as the Lord's day, and denominate the infraction of its legalized rest a profanation. Yet this does not change the character of the enactment. It is still essentially but a civil regulation, made for the government of man as a member of society, and obedience to it may properly be enforced by penal sanctions. To say that one of the objects of the Legislature was to assert the sanctity of the particular day selected, is to say nothing in proof of the unconstitutionality of the act, unless in this the religious conscience of others has been offended, and their rights invaded.

"The conclusions drawn from some of its language, are as inexpressive of its practical operation as of the principal intent of its maker. The phraseology used, may indicate a conviction of the holy character of the first day of the week; but as this simple expression of an abstract opinion, which all other men are at liberty to adopt or reject, carries with it no obligation beyond the influence attendant upon the expression itself, it cannot be said a primary object of the act was authoritatively to assert the supremacy of Sunday as of divine appointment. Had such been the intent irrespective of its statutory character as a day of rest from secular employment, its framers would not have stopped short with a bare interdiction of labor and worldly amusements. Following the example offered by older States and communities, they would have commanded the performance of religious rites, or at least, some express recognition of the day as the true Sabbath. Such a requisition, we agree with the plaintiff in error, would be a palpable interference with the rights of conscience. But nothing like this is exacted. On the contrary, every one is left at full liberty to shape his own convictions, and practically to assert them to the extent of a free exercise of his religious views. In this, as in other respects, the conscience of each is left uncontrolled by legal coërcion to pursue its own inquiries, and to adopt its own conclusions. In this aspect of the statute, there is, therefore, nothing in derogation of the constitutional inhibition.

"Nor can it be objected against the statute, that it gives a preference to any religious establishment or mode of worship. It leaves all free alike in the exercise of their distinctive religious tenets, saying to none, What doest thou? As I have said, the selection of the day of rest is but a question of expediency; and if from the choice falling on the first day of the week, the Jew and seventh-day Christian suffer the inconvenience of two successive days of withdrawal from worldly affairs, it is an incidental worldly disadvantage, temporarily injurious it may be to them, but conferring no superior religious position upon those who worship upon the first day of the week. The law intends no preference. The command to abstain from labor, is addressed to every citizen, irrespective of his religious belief; and if an inconvenience results to some, it is a consequence of the generality of the provision. But this affords no argument against the constitutionality of the law, however strong the argument might be felt when addressed to the Legislature, as a reason for a modification of the statute."

It is certainly a somewhat new position to assume, when attempting to discover the purpose and tendency of a statute, (for these alone can determine the question of its constitutionality,) that the phraseology being a "simple expression of an abstract opinion, which all other men are at liberty to adopt or reject," the object of the act cannot be said to be to make an authoritative assertion. There is no principle of legal interpretation better established, and certainly none more conformable to the plainest dictates of common sense, than that the design of the law-maker shall construe and give direction to the law. "The conclusions drawn from its language" are not "inexpressive" either of its practical operation, or "of the principal intent of its maker." And here it might be contended, that the simple expression "by law" of an abstract opinion, (unenforced by penal sanctions,) if it should give any "religious" preference, would obviously be in conflict with the prohibition of the Constitution. The actual admission, that all men were "at liberty to adopt or reject" it, could in no wise extenuate the violation of a principal.

What, then, was the intention of the Legislature in the present instance? "It may have been a motive with the law-makers," says Judge B., "to prohibit the profanation of a day regarded by them as sacred; and certainly there are expressions used in the statute, that justify this conclusion." The day protected from desecration, is emphatically styled "the Lord's day." Truly does this phraseology, in the language of the Judge, "indicate a conviction of the holy character of the first day of the week." It leaves no room to doubt its established sanctity in the view and intention of the law. Not only does it thus "assert the supremacy of Sunday as of divine appointment," but it more fully exhibits its object by forbidding "any worldly employment" upon that day. What possible antithesis to this epithet can the law propose, but spiritual or religious? Is it not the very language of theology, exchanging its surplice for the civic toga? It will not be pretended that the Legislature of 1794 intended to prohibit all employment. What exempted engagements then can the enactment possibly permit, (or rather by necessary implication, enjoin,) but the preferred devotions of Sunday Christians? Did the law-makers suppose that worldly employments were disadvantageous to the world, abstracted from all religious considerations? that worldly business could be improper on purely worldly grounds? If, then, it was so manifestly the intent to uphold a religious creed, can we say that "this does not change the character of the enactment?" that "it is still essentially but a civil regulation?" Are we at liberty thus to disregard the whole acknowledged scope of its provisions, in investigating their tendency? It surely will not be maintained.

Judge B., after admitting that the "expressions used in the statute justify the conclusion" that the design of the law-makers was to protect from profanation the "day regarded by them as sacred," very strangely denies that it was "a primary object of the act, authoritatively to assert the supremacy of Sunday as of divine appointment;" and he argues that "its framers would not have stopped short with a bare interdiction of labor," but "would have commanded the performance of religious rites." And how shall we know, how far religious intolerance may deem it prudent to carry its restrictions, except from their actual exhibitions? The fact that a person has not traveled beyond a certain point, can surely never prove that he has not traveled to that point. In the case before us, we have abundant evidence of the "primary object of the act," in its very phraseology; and when we consider that, in addition to this, it provides a penal compulsion to keep holy—by doing no work on—the appointed day, (the especial method, be it remembered, and the only method of "keeping holy," laid down in the Scriptures—see Exod. 20: 8 and 10; 31: 14;)—a penal compulsion extended to those who utterly deny the alledged sanctity of the day—to Sabbatarian Christians, to Jews, and to Infidels—what shall be said of the equality of the enactment? With what shade of plausibility shall it be asserted that "the law intends no preference?" And admitting this glaring preference; admitting "that one of the objects of the Legislature was to assert the sanctity of the particular day selected," how can it be held, that this "is to say nothing in proof of the unconstitutionality of the act?" The opinion of the law-makers, that the Lord's day ought to be guarded from the profanation of worldly labor, can no longer be called an abstraction. It is a most grievous fact. The pretended liberty of adopting or rejecting it, is perfectly nugatory; such liberty is indeed the most fictitious of "abstractions."

But if such be the avowed and unmistakable purpose of this ordinance, let us look at its practical tendency toward those whose religion enjoins a different Sabbath from the one it favors. Those supported by their own exertions (the presumed condition of all) are by this act deprived of a sixth of their secular time—their literal wealth; either because they do not observe the right day, or because they will observe the wrong one. Practically, the law says to the Sabbatarian, (whether Christian or Jew)—"Lay aside your foolish prejudices, and no longer adhere so strictly to the particular day required by the letter of the fourth commandment, else shall you lose one-sixth of your income." Such is the oppressive alternative presented by a government guaranteeing equality of religious privilege, and repudiating all authority to "control or interfere with the rights of conscience."* And what says Judge B. in justification or extenuation of this heavy loss imposed by law upon Sabbatarians? "It is an incidental worldly disadvantage—temporarily injurious it may be to them, but conferring no superior religious position upon those who worship upon the first day of the week. The law intends no preference." It is so anxious for the spiritual welfare of its subjects, that in comparison, any worldly loss is entirely overlooked, as a merely temporary and incidental injury, too unimportant for its notice! Is it not a mockery, when the Jew is legally robbed of a large portion of his secular time, while those of a more favored persuasion are secured in the enjoyment of the whole of their's—to tell him that there is no preference shown?—that the law is only temporarily injurious to him? "The command," continues Judge B., "to abstain from labor, is addressed to every citizen, irrespective of his religious belief; and if an inconvenience results to some, it is a consequence of the generality of the provsion." This is surely a strange consideration from whence to infer the impartiality of the statute. As though the universality of a requirement could exempt it from the charge of favoritism? If the case were reversed, and it were enacted that all men should "keep holy the seventh day," how would this reasoning sound to show that no preference was given by the statute?

This argumentum ad hominem is perhaps, after all, the most convincing one; and since it is a trite saying, that example is ever more efficient than precept, let us further elucidate the position for which we are contending, by presenting a case as analogous of this Sabbath legislation as any we can well get. Let us suppose, then, that under the provisions of the Constitution precisely similar to that of Pennsylvania, a Catholic majority in the Legislature of Maryland, should enact that "To guard the precepts of the Holy Church from infringement, if any person shall eat or swallow (the act would hardly be legal without a little tautology,) any flesh or meat whatsoever, on the sixth day of the week, commonly called Friday, and be convicted thereof, every such person so offending, shall for every such offense forfeit and pay four dollars." Can any one doubt that this would be "giving by law" an unconstitutional preference to a religious establishment? Would Judge B. himself hesitate so to decide? And yet, to preserve consistency with his Sabbath opinion, he would be required to pronounce a judgment something like the following:—

"Though it may have been a motive with the law-makers, to enjoin a religious observance, and expressions used in the statute justify this conclusion, it is not perceived how this fact can vitally affect the question at issue. In a Christian community, where a very large majority of the people observe Friday as a fast day, it is not surprising that that observance should have received the legislative sanction, nor that the statute should recognize the 'Holy Church.' Yet this does not change the character of the enactment. It is still essentially but a civil regulation. The conclusions drawn from its language are inexpressive. The phraseology used may indicate a conviction of the holiness and authority of the Catholic Church, but as this is a simple expression of an abstract opinion, which all other men are at liberty to adopt or reject, it can not be said a primary object of the act was authoritatively to assert the Catholic supremacy. Had such been the intent, its framers would not have stopped short with a bare interdiction of flesh meat. Following the example offered by European states, they would have commanded the performance of religious rites. If Protestants complain of inconvenience, it is an incidental disadvantage—temporarily injurious; but the law intends no preference. The command to abstain from meat, is addressed to every citizen, irrespective of religious belief; any inconvenience to some, is but a consequence of its generality. This affords no argument against the constitutionality of the law."

Does this do injustice to the positions laid down by the learned judge? We believe not; we believe this hypothetical case to be fairly parallel to the one before us. If it be said that the appointment of a fast-day would manifestly be a religious legislation, equally clear is it, as it seems to us, that a prohibition of "worldliness" of employment, can by no possibility escape the same imputation. This statutory establishment of "the Lord's day" observance is designed, it is enforced, it is universally received, as a religious one. It can not under any pretence be considered a purely civil regulation. If there is any difference between the enactment of a compulsory fast-day, and of a compulsory rest-day from worldliness, it is that the latter is vastly more oppressive and unjust than the former would be. How is it then that there should be such a wide difference in the general appreciation of these two cases? Republicanism blushes to answer; simply because "a very large majority of the people celebrate the first day of the week as their chosen period of rest;" and if the observers of a Friday fast were equally powerful, it would "not be surprising that that day should receive the legislative sanction."

As illustrating the spirit of the law in this State, it may not be irrelevant here to notice, that while it is so zealous to guard from desecration the day which orthodox Christians esteem holy, it denies all protection to the Jew, in his observance of the Bible Sabbath. In the case of Simon vs. Gratz and others, (2 Pa. R. 416,) a continuance was asked for by the plaintiffs, who were Jews, over their Sabbath; which postponement the Court refused to grant. Chief Justice Gibson remarked: "It never has been held, except in a single instance, that the course of justice may be obstructed by any scruple or obligation whatever." A happy exemplification of the tenderness with which the State protects "equality of religious right!" "It has never been held—except in a single instance!" The conscience of the Sunday Christian is undoubtedly to be fortified by every legal enginery, but that of a Jew can not be permitted "to obstruct the course of justice." Judge Bell thinks that since a "large majority of the people celebrate the first day of the week as their chosen period of rest from labor, it is not surprising that that day should have received the legislative sanction." It certainly is not good law that a majority, because "very large," can of right do what the established Constitution of their government expressly prohibits them from doing. One great pride and glory in this fundamental contract of the people is, that it was designed to secure the "natural and indefeasible rights" of the minority, however small, from the violations and encroachments of the majority; and to deny that the sacredness of conscience shall be measured by its popularity.

Let us glance at one more illustration of the law's rigid impartiality in upholding the rights of conscience. In the case of Stansbury vs. Marks, (2 Dall. R. 213,) the defendant offered Jonas Phillips, a Jew, as a witness in a trial occurring on Saturday. The witness refused to be sworn on that day, alledging that he dared not violate his Sabbath. He was fined, by the Court, ten pounds. Thus it is now the well-settled law of Pennsylvania, that a Sabbatarian shall be punished for violating a Sabbath which he utterly repudiates, and he shall be punished for refusing to violate a Sabbath which to him is sacred. And all this by judicial decisions under a Constitution which ordains that "no preference shall be given by law to any religious establishments or modes of worship."

* Decision of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, in the case of Specht vs. the Commonwealth, 1848. Opinions by Judges Bell and Coulter.

* In this respect, Pennsylvania is much less liberal than either of the large States adjoining her. Sabbatarians are not compelled to observe the first day, in either Ohio or New York.

CLERICAL INTREPIDITY.—Dr. Hacket is recorded as the last man in England who persisted in reading the Liturgy after it had been proscribed by Parliament; and the following anecdote is given by his biographer, illustrative both of his attachment to the Church, and his holy courage. One Sunday, while he was reading the Common Prayer in his church, a soldier of the Earl of Essex came in, and clapping a pistol to his breast, commanded him to read no farther. The doctor, not at all terrified, replied, 'I will do what becomes a divine, and you may do what becomes a soldier.' The tumult was quieted for a time, and the doctor permitted to proceed.

FEELING WHAT YOU GIVE.—The Rev. Daniel Baker, in his report of a missionary tour in the State of Texas, very pithily remarks: "Methinks one reading this report says—'Well, I will give five dollars to the cause of domestic missions. I can give this amount and not feel it.' Suppose, my Christian brother, you give twenty, and feel it. Your Saviour felt what he did for you. A remark of this kind, once heard from the pulpit, thrilled through my whole soul, and made me do more than empty my purse; I borrowed from a friend. The idea of feeling what I gave was delightful.'

IT IS TOLD ME I MUST DIE.

RICHARD LANGHORNE, a lawyer, was unjustly condemned and put to death as a traitor, in the reign of Charles II. Just before his execution, he wrote the following unique and most exquisite poem. In the language of the Quarterly Review, "A poem it must be called, though it is not verse. Perhaps there is not in this or any other language, a poem which appears to have flowed so entirely from the heart."

It is told me I must die;
O happy news!
Be glad, O my soul,
And rejoice in Jesus, thy Saviour.
If he intended thy perdition,
Would he have laid down his life for thee?
Would he have called thee with so much love,
And illuminated thee with the light of his Spirit?
Would he have given thee his cross,
And given thee shoulders to bear it with patience?

It is told me I must die;
O happy news!
Come on, my dearest soul;
Behold, thy Jesus calls thee!
He prayed for thee upon his cross;
There he extended his arms to receive thee;
There he bowed down his head to kiss thee;
There he opened his heart to give thee entrance;
There he gave up his life to purchase life for thee.

It is told me I must die;
O what happiness!
I am going
To the place of my rest;
To the land of the living;
To the haven of security;
To the kingdom of peace;
To the palace of my God;
To the nuptials of the Lamb;
To sit at the table of my King;
To feed on the bread of angels;
To see what no eye hath seen;
To hear what no ear hath heard;
To enjoy what the heart of man can not comprehend.

O my Father!
O thou best of all fathers,
Have pity on the most wretched of all thy children!
I was lost, but by thy mercy found;
I was dead, but by thy grace am now raised again;
I was gone astray after vanity,
But am now ready to appear before thee.

O my Father,
Come now in mercy, and receive thy child!
Give him thy kiss of peace;
Remit unto him all his sins;
Clothe him with thy nuptial robe;
Permit him to have a place at thy feast;
And forgive all those who are guilty of his death.

JOHN BUNYAN'S SILVER MINE.

A thoughtful perusal of the following passage from Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress may be useful to those who have been attacked, or are likely to be attacked, with the fever so prevalent in these days:—

At the farthest side of the plain called Ease, was a little hill called Lucre, and in that hill a silver mine, which some of them that had formerly gone that way, because of its rarity, had turned aside to see; but, going too near the brim of the pit, the ground being deceitful under them, broke, and they were slain. Some, also, had been maimed there, and could not, to their dying day, be their own men again.

Then I saw in my dream, that a little off of the road, over against the silver mine, stood Demas, to call to passengers to come and see: who said to Christian and his fellows, 'Ho! turn aside hither, and I will show you a thing.'

Chr. 'What thing so deserving as to turn us from the way?'

Demas. 'Here is a silver mine, and some digging in it for treasure. If you will come, with a little pains you may richly provide for yourselves.'

Hope. Then said Hopeful, 'Let us go and see.'

Chr. 'Not I,' said Christian; 'I have before heard of this place, and how many have here been slain; and besides, that treasure is a snare to those that seek it, for it hindereth them in their pilgrimage.' Then Christian called to Demas, saying, 'Is not the place dangerous?'

Demas. 'Not very dangerous, except to those that are careless.' But withal, he blushed as he spoke.

Chr. Then said Christian to Hopeful, 'Let us not stir a step, but still keep on our way.'

Hope. 'I will warrant you, when By-ends comes up, if he hath the same invitation as we, he will turn in hither to see.'

Chr. 'No doubt thereof, for his principles lead him that way, and a hundred to one but he dies there.'

PRAYING AND GIVING.

'What God has joined together, let not man part asunder.' This is not only applicable to the union of man and wife, but also to the great duties required by the gospel. Two of these duties are 'prayer and alms-giving.' And yet thousands are in the habit of sundering these two. Some men give, and give much, who never think of asking the guidance of Heaven in the distribution of their alms, nor for the blessing of God on what they impart. And, therefore, they have no reason to expect such a blessing to attend their charities. Other men pray both long and often, that the naked may be clothed and the hungry fed; but they very seldom put their hands in their pockets to relieve the wants of the needy. And such men stand but little chance of receiving the blessing of Him who said, 'Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me.' But God has required that prayer and giving should be united, and this union is happily illustrated in the case of the Rev. Jotham Sewall, a venerable clergyman well known in Maine. The American Messenger says that he once entered a meeting in behalf of foreign missions, just as the collectors of the contributions were resuming their seats. The chairman of the meeting requested him to lead in prayer. The old gentleman stood hesitatingly, as if he had not heard the request. It was repeated in a louder voice; but there was no response. It was observed, however, that Mr. Sewall was fumbling in his pockets, and presently he produced a piece of money, which he deposited in the contribution box. The chairman, thinking he had not been understood, said loudly, 'I didn't ask you to give, father Sewall; I asked you to pray.' 'O, yes,' he replied, 'I heard you, but I cannot pray till I have given something.'

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, March 29, 1849.

SUNDAY LAWS AND ANTI-SABBATH CONVENTIONS.

The Publishing Committee of the Anti-Sabbath Convention held in Boston last year, have issued a Call for another Convention, to be held in the same city, commencing on the fifth day of April, and continuing in session through two succeeding days. Its object, as set forth in the Call, is "the overthrow of religious and political tyranny in the shape of sabbatical penal enactments—to secure the right of man to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience—and to exhibit the liberty of the gospel in contrast with the bondage of the law." All persons who feel an interest in this object are cordially invited "to meet and consult together for its furtherance in the land, and throughout the world."

Judging of the future by the past, we expect to see this movement denounced by the religious press generally, as another wanton attack upon the Sabbatic Institution. But, uncharitable as we have the credit of being, we confess that we have too much charity to chime in with this denunciation. The leaders in the movement profess to aim mainly at securing two objects—the overthrow of those laws which prevent men from worshiping God according to the dictates of their consciences, and the promulgation of their peculiar views relative to the liberty of the gospel. Of their right to seek the latter object, through such means as they propose, nobody can doubt; and surely the advocates of Sunday, who have been so zealous and indefatigable to publish their own views within a few years past, ought to be the last to raise objections. As to the notion, that opposition to the Sunday laws necessarily implies hostility to the sabbatic institution, it is common, we know, but we believe it is contrary to reason and facts. For ourselves, we will yield to no one in regard for the sabbatic institution; and yet we would gladly see every law enforcing by fines and imprisonment the observance of Sunday, erased from the statute books. Indeed, we believe that three-fourths of the people of the United States regard the Sunday statutes as unjust and unnecessary, and desire to have them abolished; yet nobody in his senses can suppose that such a proportion of the people are hostile to the Sabbath. The truth is, that the most dangerous enemies of the Sabbath are they who advocate a forced observance of it; and there is reason to believe, that if the measures of such persons were to be carried out, they would do more to bring the institution into contempt, than all the Anti-Sabbath Conventions that ever were held or ever will be held.

But we did not commence this article to defend the callers of this Anti-Sabbath Convention. That is a work which we are as little inclined to do, probably, as they are to have us do. We wished simply to call attention to the intimate connection between Sunday Laws and Anti-Sabbath Conventions, and to suggest the probability, that the abolition of the former would put an end to the latter, or at least remove their strongest support. The Call itself places the overthrow of the Sunday Laws first in the list of objects; and the natural inference from this fact, that this is regarded as the most important object, is corroborated by the following extract from an article in the Liberator, written by one of the Committee, to call attention to the approaching Convention. Read it, all; ponder it, ye who profess so much grief on account of Anti-Sabbath Conventions, and yet give your influence in favor of Sunday Laws:

"What must be grappled with, first of all, with the energy and determination that should ever characterize freemen, are the penal laws in this Commonwealth, and in the States generally, making it a crime punishable with fine or imprisonment for any one to engage in recreation, or in honest or useful labor, on the first day of the week, whether on the ground that the day is "the Lord's day," or "the Sabbath day," or for any other reason. Those laws are grossly unconstitutional; they render it impracticable for the people to worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences, except in the spirit of martyrdom; they put darkness for light, and light for darkness—reverse every principle of morality, and caricature common sense—by branding as criminal, acts in themselves innocent, laudable, and essential to human existence. Now, with religious questions, no legislative assembly in this country has a right to meddle. How, when, or where, men shall worship God—what religious ceremonies they shall perform, or observances keep—it is not within the province of any such body to determine. Nor, as a matter of civil arrangement, may the Legislature determine on what days the citizens shall labor, or engage in recreation. They need no instruction, no guidance, no command on this point, any more than they need a law, determining the hour at which they shall eat their meals, or shave their beards, or kindle their fires. No act, under a theoretical government like our own, can be more despotic in principle, than to send a man to prison for doing on a particular day of the week, what he is required to do, and commended for doing, on all other days, for health or sustenance.

"Every sabbatical law, now in existence, MUST BE REPEALED. This is a point of religious liberty that we shall not tamely surrender. The doctrine of holiness of days must be left to the individual understanding and conscience, along with the doctrines of the trinity, atonement, total depravity, baptism, the eucharist, &c., &c. It must stand on its own merits, without the aid of the State. He who regards one day above another, let him keep it in accordance with his views, and let there be no law prohibiting such an observance on his part. He who regards every day alike, let him enjoy equal liberty, and not be forced either to suffer in prison for non-conformity, or to play hypocrite, in order to escape such a fate. Whoever wants his peculiar religious sentiments to be upheld or propagated by the sword and musket of the State, is to be dealt with as a bigot and oppressor, and not gratified in his evil desire. There must be no Popery in Protestantism, else Protestantism will share the fate of Popery. All candid men will see at a glance, that we are asking no special indulgence, but only demanding liberty and equality, justice and protection for all. Whenever the State shall obliterate its sabbatical enactments, we shall cease to have any controversy with it on that subject."

THE SUNDAY AT LOUISVILLE.

We have already given a tolerably full account of the manner in which the inhabitants of Louisville kept the Sunday on which Gen. Taylor visited them. The following extract from the Louisville Baptist Banner, will throw additional light upon the subject. Only think of a "large portion" of the congregations of the churches turning out to see the President elect, while their ministers were left to preach to comparatively empty seats. There must be something wrong in the manner of presenting the claims of the sabbatic institution, to produce such a state of things. It is common for religious teachers, in justifying the change of the Sabbath, to talk a great deal about the spirit of the Fourth Commandment as opposed to the letter of it, and to urge that the rigors of the law are abated under the gospel. We wonder if this course has not tended to produce laxity upon the subject of the Sabbath, and so bring about a state of feeling like that evinced at Louisville? This question deserves the consideration of those who use such pleas to justify the change of the Sabbath. We commend it particularly to the attention of the editor of the Louisville Baptist Banner, whom we quote:—

"The streets were crowded with men, women, and children, flocking to that portion of the wharf where the boat was expected to land. The military paraded, the bells were rung, and the thundering artillery uttered its repeated roars. Horses and carriages, and persons on foot, glutted the streets. We learned, from some who were there, that about 30,000 persons were present on the occasion. Such was the scene exhibited in our city on Sabbath last. If this mass of Sabbath-breakers had been composed entirely of the non-professing part of community, it would have been sufficiently afflicting to a godly mind; but that affliction is greatly aggravated by a knowledge of the fact, that many of the members of the various churches in the city, were among the Sabbath-breaking multitude.

"While the pastors of the various churches in the city went to the house of God in the morning, hoping to meet their flocks, and burthened with the weighty messages they were to deliver to them, many of their church members and a large portion of their congregations had gone with the 'multitude to do evil;' and while the minister was delivering his sacred message to those who met in the house of God, with his heart saddened to find so many pews unoccupied, these guilty members had forgotten their Christian vows—forgotten the law of God and the claims of him who suffered on the cross, and reckless of consequences to themselves and others, forsook the service of God and went with 'the multitude to do evil,' to dishonor Christ by desecrating the day dedicated to his service and commemorative of his resurrection from the dead."

REVIVALS.

The Christian Secretary notices revivals in several Baptist Churches in Connecticut—one in Danbury, where from forty to fifty profess to have been converted; another at Bridgeport, concerning which the pastor says, "Within a few weeks I have baptized eighteen willing followers of Christ, twelve of them fathers or mothers—four of them husbands with their wives—all of them between eighteen and thirty-six years of age."

The Independent publishes accounts of revivals in Congregational Churches in various parts of the country—one at Canton, Mich., where "some twenty or more have been hopefully converted to Christ;" another at Ionia, Mich., where "between twenty and thirty have expressed hope in Christ, and the work is still progressing;" a third at Bristol, Ill., in connection with which "twenty, it is hoped, have recently passed from death unto life, and others are deeply concerned." The same paper publishes the following extract from a letter dated Dubuque, Iowa, Feb. 26th:—"We are in the midst of an interesting revival in our church. The Lord is doing great things for us, whereof we are glad. There is also special interest in several of the churches in this region—in Albany, Moline, and Lyndon, Illinois; and in Beloit (a powerful work) and Lancaster, Wisconsin."

The N. Y. Observer says, that there are several revivals now in progress in Central New York. The congregations at Boonville, South Trenton, Rome, Westmoreland, and Paris Hill, are particularly mentioned.

A correspondent of the Christian Watchman and Reflector says there has been a revival in the Baptist Church at Phœnixville, R. I. Meetings were held twenty days; "upwards of sixty persons came forward for prayers; forty-five profess to have been converted; and thirty-two have been baptized."

At East Nantmeal, R. I., also, as we learn from the same authority, there has been a revival, and about twenty persons have been baptized.

Zion's Herald says, that revivals are in progress among the Methodists in Lyman, N. H., Augusta, Me., North West Bridgewater, and New Bedford, Mass. In the three places last named, the work has considerably extended, and quite a number of conversions are reported.

THE CHURCHES IN JEFFERSON COUNTY, N. Y.

From a private letter dated at Watertown, Jefferson Co., N. Y., March 19, we make the following extract, presuming that it will interest our readers, as it has interested us:—

The Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hounsfield last year erected a house of worship, and with praiseworthy perseverance succeeded in finishing and furnishing it very neatly. The house is only 42 feet by 32, but is sufficiently capacious for the society on ordinary occasions, though I am sorry they had not built a little larger, as then they might have accommodated more people on extraordinary occasions, when it is disagreeable to want room for any that would attend. The house was dedicated on the 29th of December, the meeting continuing three days, and on most of the evenings for more than a week. The attendance was large at nearly every meeting, and a good impression was made on the unconverted, while the Church was much revived and comforted. My experience has been considerable in revivals, but I can hardly remember an instance of a more thorough renovation of a church. Six persons have since been added to the Church, and others are expected to follow their example soon.

There seems to be considerable interest among the people here. Our prayer-meetings are well attended twice a week, and are lively and full of interest. Members of the different branches of the Christian family seem quite at home with us, and we are well pleased to have it so. There seems also to be a wide-spread interest on the Sabbath question. A considerable number have lately embraced the true Sabbath of the Bible, in this vicinity, one of whom united with the Church a week ago last Sabbath. A number more are looked for to join soon. In the same ratio that people become assimilated to the mind of Christ, they see the propriety of conforming to the commandments of God. Our hopes are that a cloud of mercy is suspended over the Church at Adams. The attendance on divine worship is steadily large, and the meetings are somewhat interesting. The good state of feeling now existing between the different branches of the "household of faith," is a cheering indication that our hopes for better times will be realized. The long time that has elapsed since a general revival has been experienced in this region has left a large number of the youth in an unconverted state. It is hoped that at no distant day many of these will be brought to Christ, and fitted by ardent piety to exert a good influence on community.

RELIGIOUS FAIRS.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Being somewhat interested in the correspondence between Omicron and Rhode Island Congregationalist, I ask the indulgence of a few remarks through the columns of your paper in reference to Religious Fairs generally, and in explanation of the one recently held at Westerly, R. I.

I have been an observer of many of the benevolent enterprises of the day, and can bear some testimony to the good resulting from well-directed efforts in this cause. Religious Fairs have not been confined to one society, or to one denomination of Christians, but are frequently occurring, and generally approved, while the hands of the laborers have been strengthened, and their hearts encouraged by the response of a liberal and intelligent community. The avails of such industry have been variously distributed. Suffice it to say, that they have been cast into the treasury of the Lord.

Now a word or two in explanation. The writer of January 4th gives a description, suiting himself, of the fair at Westerly, but differing as widely from a true exposition, as prejudice and bigotry differ from impartial judgment. His position is false, and to appearance designedly. "He that passeth by, and meddleth with strife belonging not to him, is like one that taketh a dog by the ears." "He that justifieth the wicked, and he that condemneth the just, even they both are an abomination to the Lord."

In justification of his assertions, and in condemnation of the post-office system, he gives a copy of a letter said to have been sold at the office. Possibly this may be true; but, if so, it was an imposition upon that society. I am authorized to say, that the managers of this fair knew nothing of such a letter until it appeared in your paper. If the writer had taken as much pains to publish some letters which were taken from the office, instead of the one written, I presume, to gratify a malignant spirit, he might have been exonerated from the censure which he now so justly merits. Some letters were distributed on that evening, full of reproof and instruction, calculated to benefit the individuals to whom they were addressed. In this way much truth can be circulated, even at Religious Fairs.

Without going into every particular in reference to the remarks of January 4th and February 21st, (for time and space will not admit of it,) I will merely say, that they appear in direct opposition to the spirit of the Gospel, and are as absurd as they are beneath the character of a gentleman, much more a clergyman.

He says, in reference to his remarks, "Such matters of fact can be substantiated by eye witnesses, Rhode Island Baptists, men not to be daunted." Possibly there are men, not to be daunted, though heaven and hell should speak. With this class I have but little to do. "They are joined to their idols; let them alone."

I trust the ladies will go on in this good cause with renewed zeal, continuing to "work with their own hands; being reviled, to bless; being persecuted, to suffer it." FRIEND TO THE FAIR.

WESTERLY, March 20th, 1849.

HOME FOR THE PERSECUTED PORTUGUESE.

Arrangements have been entered into by which the 600 Protestant Portuguese driven from the Island of Madeira on account of their religion, part of whom have been stopping in New York city for several months past, are to remove to a place in the State of Illinois, about midway between Springfield and Jacksonville, on the Meredocia and Springfield Railroad, and there be employed by the American Hemp Company. Those of the refugees now here, will proceed immediately to their new location, while those still remaining at Trinidad will embark with the least possible delay for New Orleans, and thence go up the Mississippi. Said Company has agreed to furnish the refugees with houses, and every thing necessary for their comfort for one year without charge. Besides this, the Company have engaged to give every family of the colony, in all one hundred and thirty-one families, ten acres of land in fee and unencumbered, on which a house can be built, where they can have a permanent home. These ten-acre lots are to be on the same tract of land, contiguous to each other. The expense of transporting this large number of emigrants to Illinois, together with the expense of bringing from Trinidad those who remain there, is to be borne by the American Protestant Society, and will necessarily be large. In view of it, an appeal has been made to the public for aid. Donations should be sent to the American Protestant Society, 150 Nassau-st., New York.

THE MORMONS.—There are now in the vicinity of the great Salt Lake about eight thousand Mormons, who have eleven thousand acres of land under cultivation. As their settlement is on the most direct route overland from St. Louis to California, they expect to do a large and profitable business in the way of supplying emigrants with provisions. Their number is rapidly increasing, and about 300 have arrived at St. Louis within a few weeks, principally from England. The St. Louis Republican says that those who do not know these people, or have not the means of witnessing the extent of their proselytism, will be surprised at the number who are connecting themselves with the Mormon Church. The persecutions they have met with have only given them strength, influence, and sympathy; and the persons who are now joining them are, in intelligence and property, above the rank which has usually been ascribed to their members.

MEETING OF ENGLISH DISSENTERS.—Deputies of the three denominations of Protestant Dissenters—Presbyterian, Independent, and Baptist—in and within twelve miles of London, recently met, and uttered their opinions in bold and unambiguous language. They declared it to be a matter of astonishment and remonstrance, that in the nineteenth century, in England, Protestant Dissenters should be subjected to coërcive, restrictive, persecuting, and oppressive laws, in violation of the claims of conscience and their civil rights. Among other resolutions, the following was adopted:—

"That the evils under which Dissenters suffer arise from the connection of the Church and State; and this meeting desires to enter its solemn protest against such union, and to hope that the time is fast approaching when it will be dissolved."

BAPTISTS IN NEW YORK.—The 27th Annual Report of the Baptist Missionary Convention of the State of New York says that the number of Associations in the State is 44; number of churches 794; ministers 703; licentiates 115; baptized during the year 3,860; total of members in the State 84,553. Amount of money received into the treasury, within the year, by bequests, the balance of the year before, and otherwise, $10,559 63; disbursements, $6,275 79. The annual report of the Secretary states that the Convention has aided 40 churches within its limits, and has appointed 14 brethren to missionary service, some of whom have gone as laborers into the Mississippi Valley. The following table shows, at a glance, the amounts contributed to benevolent objects for the year, by the Baptists of New York:—

|---|---|
| Am. Baptist Missionary Union, | $22,513 50 |
| Am. and For. Bible Society, | —— — |
| Am. Baptist Home Mission Society, | 6,754 19 |
| Am. Baptist Publication Society, | 3,500 00 |
| Am. Baptist Free Mission Society, | 2,438 82 |
| Bap. Ed. Soc. of the State of N. Y., | 12,000 00 |
| Missionary Convention of the State, | 7,204 41 |
| Whole amount, except Bible Soc., | $54,601 92 |

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I wish, through the medium of your paper, to ask the following questions, which I should be glad to have answered by some of your correspondents:—

1st. Can there be such a trespass as a church trespass?

2d. If so, What course should be taken by a brother acquainted with the trespass to reclaim the trespasser? For instance, if one brother should see another intoxicated, or living in the habitual violation of the Sabbath, or engaged in stealing, what course should the witness of such things take to reclaim the erring brother?

I am aware, that it is a common opinion, that there are two kinds of trespasses—one a church trespass, and the other an individual trespass; the individual trespass to be settled according to the rule in the 18th chapter of Matthew, while the church trespass is to be settled in some other way, perhaps through a committee appointed by the church. P.

CHURCH AT ADAMS.—We learn that Eld. Joel Green has received and accepted the unanimous invitation of the Church at Adams, Jefferson Co., N. Y., to become their pastor.

DOINGS AT WASHINGTON.—The Called Session of the Senate continued most of last week. The principal business was connected with appointments made by the new administration. Among the appointments agreed to were the following officers for Minesota Territory:—For Governor, Ex-Governor Pennington of New Jersey; Secretary, Charles K. Smith of Ohio; Chief Justice, Aaron Goodrich of Tenn.; Associate Judges, David Cooper and Benj. B. Meeker; Attorney of U. S., Henry L. Moss of Minesota; Marshal, Joshua L. Taylor of Minesota. A resolution was passed, directing the printing of ten thousand copies of the decision of the Supreme Court in relation to Emigrant Passengers. There was a debate relative to the Protocol attached to the Treaty with Mexico, but no action was taken upon the subject.

The death, at Washington, of Hon. Rodolphus Dickinson, of Ohio, Member of the House of Representatives, was announced to the Senate on Tuesday, and his funeral was attended on Wednesday.

BAPTIST MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.—The Baptist Missionary Magazine for March says that Messrs. Dean, Goddard, Lord, and Macgowan write from Ningpo under date of November 3, that they had just met at that place for fraternal conference and Christian communion. They had experienced in each other's society and counsels a pleasure, and derived from it a profit, which could be fully learned only by a residence in a heathen land. They had met, and consulted, and prayed, and wept together; and were then about to part, refreshed by the interview, and bearing on their hearts a still more lively interest in each other's happiness and success in the service of their common Lord. Brother Dean was about to return to Hongkong, and Brother Goddard to Shanghai, both with health improved by a short residence in those northern regions. Brother Goddard would remove his family to Ningpo in the spring, should no counter indication of Providence appear before that time.

THE CATHOLIC PRIESTHOOD.—The Catholic Herald makes the following significant acknowledgment with respect to the prospects of obtaining American youth, born and educated under the influence of free institutions, to enter upon the priesthood in that church:—

"We have many colleges scattered through the land, at which hundreds of youth annually finish their education; but how very few of them embrace the ecclesiastical state! Our ecclesiastical seminaries generally contain not more than ten or twelve students. And of this small number, very few, we believe, belong to families long resident in this country. Nearly all of them are young men, who have been led by charity and zeal, (worthy of all praise,) to leave their land and their kindred for the missionary life of our country. But where are the young men of American birth, or at least of American education? They are not to be found, (with but few exceptions,) among those who have devoted themselves to the ecclesiastical state."

FLOGGING IN THE NAVY.—The following paragraph, which is going the rounds, will give the reader some idea how they do things in the Navy. Who that reads it can question the need of reform?

"The U. S. frigate 'United States' arrived at Norfolk recently, from the Mediterranean; days at sea 457, days in port 530. During the cruise she visited all the coast of Africa, as far south as the equator, most of the ports in the Mediterranean west of Italy, also Cadiz and Tangier. She lost 14 men, 4 by accident, 8 by coast fever, and 2 from chronic diseases; served out the number of 8,172 lashes, being an average of twenty-two lashes to each man!"

MINISTERS OF THE OLDEST CHURCHES.—The Exeter News Letter says, that the three oldest churches in that State are the Congregational churches at Exeter, Hampton, and Dover; having existed about two hundred and ten years. Exeter and Hampton have had each 11 settled ministers, including those now in office. The average length of the pastoral relation of these has been nineteen years. Dover has had 14. Average length, fifteen years. Mr. Cushing, of Dover, who died in 1769, was the longest in office of any in that church, being forty-two years. He had a colleague the last two years. Mr. Ward Cotton, of Hampton, was in office thirty-one years. Mr. John Odin, of Exeter, was in office forty-eight years, being the longest of any one in these three churches. His son, Woodbridge Odin, was his colleague some ten years before his death, and the father and son were pastors of the church seventy years.

LIGHT IN DARKNESS.—The London Church Missionary Society has several prosperous missions in Western Africa. The station of Regent is one of much promise; the village contains about 1,500 inhabitants, who have been almost wholly redeemed from Paganism. The Church numbers 408 communicants, besides a large number of candidates.

TEACHING SLAVES.—Some of the southern churches, it is said, are waking to the importance of securing to the slaves the means of religious instruction. In the first Baptist Church in Charleston, S. C., schools have been established for the colored population, in which there is at the present time a deeply interesting state of religious feeling.

EXPELLING A MISSIONARY.—The Rev. James Gurley, missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church to the Wyandot Indians, west of the Missouri, has been expelled from the territory by the government sub-agent, in consequence of some difficulties arising out of the old church controversy respecting slavery.

The Baptist Register mentions a revival at Whitesboro, N. Y., in connection with which twenty-five or thirty persons "are already rejoicing in the Saviour."

General Intelligence.

FOURTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamer Canada arrived at New York on Sunday last, bringing fourteen days later European news.

There has been a frightful shipwreck on the English coast, off Harwick. The bark Floridian, of 500 tons, E. D. Whitmore, master, from Antwerp for New York, the property of Messrs. E. D. Hurlbut & Co., chartered by a German Company to convey emigrants, was lost on the 28th ult., and all on board perished, with the exception of three individuals, who were miraculously rescued from death. The master and crew, together with 126 passengers, were drowned.

The French Government continues to gather strength, and there is evidently a growing disposition, on the part of the nation, to crush any attempt at public disorder. Upon the whole, the prospects of tranquility are more favorable than they have been during the past year.

The Pope, after halting between abdication and soliciting foreign intervention, has now, it is said, made an application to Austria, and it is confidently stated that Spain is about to send a division of 10,000 men to aid in restoring his holiness. The latest intelligence from Italy states that the Roman Ministry had communicated to the Assembly that a joint intervention of Austria, Spain, and Naples is announced. France had not decided what part to take.

The revolution of Tuscany is complete. The Republic has been proclaimed at Leghorn. Florence and a central Italian Republic has been formed in union with the Romans. The Grand Duke has protested against this revolution, and has entreated all the powers of Europe to refuse to recognize the new authority.

The Imperial Guards of Russia—a body of men who have not quitted the capital since 1831—have marched through Wilna to the frontier, for the purpose, as is supposed, of keeping in check the disaffected Poles on the Prussian frontier, and giving support to the imperialists in the Hungarian struggle.

There has been more fighting and great slaughter in India. A conflict occurred on the left bank of the river Ihelum, near the spot which 2,000 years ago formed the battle-field of Alexander and Porus. The army of the Punjaub, under Lord Gough, and the Sikh forces, had a struggle, in which the British lost at least 93 officers and 2,500 men killed and wounded, 4 guns captured, and 4 or 5 regimental colors taken by the enemy.

The Austrian war has proceeded with variable success in the south of Hungary. The German population, finding the insurgents carrying destruction in every quarter, called on the Russians who now occupy Cronstadt and Hermanstadt. Several severe battles have taken place; one in the neighborhood of Oilau, lasting two days, with considerable slaughter. The imperialists seem to have had the advantage.

There was a battle on the 4th of March, near Salzburg, in which the imperialists had the advantage. The number of killed and wounded is quoted in the Austrian Bulletin as follows: Hungarians—killed, 700; wounded and captured, 140. Austrians—killed, 70; wounded, 160.

There was a battle on the 4th of February, between the Russians and the Szeklers. After fighting five hours and a half, the Russians obtained a complete victory over an enemy four times their own strength, and took possession of Petersburgh and Konigsberg, which the Szeklers had not been able to maintain. According to the bulletin, the rebels lost 150 men, and the Russians and Austrians not twenty, including officers.

Another battle was fought on the 14th Feb., which lasted 10 hours, and was attended with great slaughter.

On the 26th and 27th of February, there were battles between the Hungarians and Austrians near Erleau. The loss of the Austrians on the 26th was 7 killed and 35 wounded. The enemy had 60 killed and wounded. The conflict was renewed on the 27th, when it is reported that the Hungarians had 200 or 300 killed. They lost from 900 to 1,000 prisoners, among whom were 15 officers.

While Austria is pushing the war in Hungary, she is not unmindful of Italian affairs. She has marched a body of troops upon Ferrara, and seized upon the city and levied a fine upon the citizens of 200,000 scudi, which she handed over to the Pope.

Almost Buried Alive.—A correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, under date of Knowlesville, Orleans Co., N. Y., March 20, says: "A young woman of this place named Spencer was taken slightly ill a few evenings since. She went to bed, and in the morning was found insensible and supposed to be dead. Her funeral took place yesterday in the presence of a large number of the neighbors. Shortly after the conclusion of the funeral sermon, and before the coffin had been moved for the purpose of carrying it to the grave, it was discovered that life was not extinct. She was once more placed on the bed and the work of resuscitation commenced. It is, however, still doubtful whether she will recover or not."

Legislature of New Jersey.—In giving an account of the closing of the session of the Legislature of New Jersey, one of the papers says that the appropriation of $31,000 to the Lunatic Asylum, $10,000 extra to Public Schools, $4,000 for the purchase of a lot near the State House, and $4,500 to two Boards of Commissioners, with other drafts upon the Treasury, have caused an excess in the expenses of the State over the receipts; and a resolution was adopted authorizing the Treasurer to borrow $25,000 to meet it. There will be no State tax, however, as the whole expenses of the State are paid by impositions on the transit of goods and passengers.

It is intended that the cars shall run from Albany to Buffalo, in the spring, in thirteen hours; and that steamboats on the Lake shall perform their trip from Buffalo to Detroit in from about eighteen to twenty hours—thus enabling a person to make a journey from New York to Detroit in forty-two or forty-four hours.

A Statesman's Monument.—De Witt Clinton is to be honored by a most appropriate testimonial of the gratitude of the people he so faithfully served. By public subscription to the amount of $93,000, a triumphal arch, surmounted by a colossal statue of De Witt Clinton, is to be erected at the head of State-street, Albany, within the grounds and in front of the Capitol. It will be richly ornamented with a carved cornice, frieze, &c., and the general effect, in grandeur and simplicity, can not fail to strike all eyes. Albany, Buffalo, Utica, and Syracuse, each offered sites, but the preference was justly given to the seat of government—the point where the canal may be said to touch the sea.

◆

Pardon by Gen. Taylor.—Randolph Robinson was a few days ago found guilty of mayhem, (cutting out the eye of Mr. Tilley, of Georgetown, with a tumbler, while on a drunken spree,) and sentenced to the penitentiary for two years. In consideration, among other things, that a widowed mother and helpless brothers and sisters depended on him for support, President Taylor pardoned him before the arrival of the time for the sentence to go into effect, and he is now at liberty.

SUMMARY.

A meeting has been held at Buffalo, to take into consideration the construction of a railroad between Buffalo and the Pennsylvania State line. The proposed road to be 70 miles in length—40 miles in Chautauque and 30 in Erie. It requires a subscription of $1,000 per mile, or $70,000, in order to organize the company.

News from Port-au-Prince, Hayti, to the middle of February, announces that the Legislature, after laborious consideration, have matured a system of public instruction of the most comprehensive character. The first article of the law declares that public instruction is free in Hayti; and that it has for its essential bases religion, morality, and the love of country.

A petition from the interior of the State of New York has been presented to the Legislature praying that a survey be made for a railroad from the Hudson River to the western boundary of the State, to be part of a great national road from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The road to consist of two tracks of six feet each, with no curves of less than five thousand feet radius.

Mr. Verdalle went up in a balloon at New Orleans on the 11th inst. At starting he came in contact with a post, which made a rent four feet long in his balloon. The gas escaped as he rose, and when several hundred feet high, what remained exploded, and he fell to the earth. Luckily he was not injured, as the wind kept in the balloon so as to break the fall.

The proprietors of the U. S. Mail steamship Oregon have received a telegraphic dispatch from New Orleans, conveying the information that she was at Panama on the 28th Feb. The Oregon left New York Dec. 8, and was accordingly 82 days in reaching Panama, including stoppages. From Rio Janeiro, which place she left Jan. 9, she has been 50 days.

The Buffalo Commercial thinks that lake navigation will be resumed by the middle of April. The works upon the Canal between Buffalo and Black Rock are rapidly approaching completion, and they will probably be ready for service as soon as navigation is resumed upon the lakes.

A man in New York named Gallagher having been solicited for alms by a stout-looking mendicant, offered him employment to be fishing from the Battery, with only a potato at the end of his rod and line. The beggar took him at his word, and has since been industriously engaged at his novel vocation.

Rev. Thomas Driver, Pastor of the Baptist Church at Sturbridge, Mass., has resigned his charge, with the design of going to California. Hon. Stephen H. Chase, of Fryeburg, Me., and formerly President of the Maine Senate, has also started for California, with the intention of making it his permanent residence.

A bill has been reported in the New York Legislature establishing the salary of the Health officer of the port of New York at $6,000 per annum. The fees and emoluments of this office have hitherto made it the most lucrative in the country.

A singular epidemic has been prevailing in Fayette Co., Pa. It is generally preceded by heavy colds, and such is its violence that sometimes death ensues in a few hours. There have been about sixty cases of the disease, twenty-two of which proved fatal.

In Concord, N. H., Henry Larkin was poisoned by tincture of acomte, which he supposed to be brandy. It had been brought into the house by his daughter, Mrs. Gerald. He lived but a few minutes after drinking it.

A letter from the Purser of the store-ship Lexington, written just before she sailed from San Francisco, states that he had under his charge $178,000 in gold dust, which he was to land at Valparaiso and send forward to Panama for shipment to the United States via the Isthmus.

Catlin, the celebrated aboriginal historian, has been lecturing on his favorite theme in Manchester, Eng., and exhibiting many portraits of Indian Chiefs taken by him in his travels. He was received with great enthusiasm.

Hon. Wm. Livingston, President of the Lowell and Lawrence Railroad Company, has sued the publisher of the Lowell Courier in the sum of $5,000, for publishing a humorous article entitled, "How to save Fuel on a Railroad," which is supposed to refer to him.

There is a family of eight persons in New London, Conn., whose united weight is 2,357 pounds. The weight of the father is 370 pounds, that of the mother 250. One of the sons weighs 363 pounds.

John Nelson has been put under heavy bail at Pittsburg, Pa., for beating nearly to death a school teacher, named J. M. Phelps, who had occasion to correct one of Nelson's children.

The Pathfinder nominates Hon. Henry Clay for President in 1885, the earliest period at which any of the slaves of Kentucky would become free men by his scheme of emancipation.

The coal operators of Schuylkill Co., Pa., have resolved to suspend operations for a period of three weeks, with a view to secure a compensating price for the coal mined and sent to market.

The Messrs. Phinney, at Cooperstown, N. Y., whose large printing and book establishment was burnt down a short time since, have been again burnt out, with great loss. A building, with a large stock of paper, the stereotype plates of the octavo Bible, books in sheets, a press, &c., were destroyed. The loss is not half covered by insurance. The fire was, no doubt, the work of an incendiary. The trustees of the village have offered a reward of $1,000 for his detection.

A tremendous tornado or whirlwind occurred on Tuesday night, March 20, in Kentucky. It passed over the beautiful villages of Shelbyville and Beardstown, and over the adjacent country, prostrating and destroying nearly every thing in its course, tearing up trees, blowing down dwellings, and spreading general destruction in its course. The damage to property is said to have been terrible, and many lives were lost.

At the Court of Common Pleas, in Middlesex county, recently, Judge Perkins sentenced two persons for repeated violations of the license law, one to a fine of $160, and the second to $60, both to be confined in jail until the fine is paid. They both went to jail, where they will probably remain the usual time assigned for a non-payment of fines and costs, ninety days.

In Alfred, N. Y., Feb. 22d, by Eld. N. V. Hull, Mr. Samuel B. Shull, of Dansville, to Miss Harriet A. Norton, of Alfred.

DIED,

At his residence in Scott, Cortland Co., N. Y., March 13th, Mr. Perry Burdick, in the 93d year of his age. He embraced religion at the age of 21 years, and connected himself with the 1st Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton, R. I., in which he retained his standing until he removed to Scott, in 1829, and united with the Church here, of which he continued a member until his death. He has left a wife, and numerous friends, to mourn their loss.

Bro Burdick was a patriot of the American Revolution, and entered with zeal into the exciting scenes of that sanguinary struggle. He enlisted as a "minute man" at the first organization of those defensive operations in his native State, and continued as one during the continuance of the law under which he enlisted. He was a non-commissioned officer during the war, and was in actual service from six to nine months, in guarding the shore against the encroachments of the British army. In him were united a sound understanding, a rich and vigorous imagination, and much precision of character. Although his learning was not extensive, yet his judgment was profound. He was indeed a pillar of the church, and all looked to him as a guide and particular friend. His Christian character was not merely speculative, nor merely practical, but it was the blended influence of thought, feeling, and action. He had learned divinity as a Christian, and taught it in the every-day transactions of life. His love for mankind flowed in the purest currents, and in all his associations with others he was charitable and indulgent. In his dying moments the virtues of religion shone brightly; and when the companion of his bosom asked him if he felt that he was going home, he answered in the affirmative, and added, that his "hope was strong and sure, for it was based on the promises of Him who never spoke amiss." In short, his talents and piety recommended him to the notice and gave him a place in the affections of all.

In Rodman, Jefferson Co., N. Y., on the 2d inst., Sally Ann Whitford, wife of Edward S. Whitford, and daughter of Paul and Mary Green, aged 33 years. Sister Whitford was brought to a saving knowledge of Christ about 11 years since, and united with the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Adams, of which she remained an acceptable member till her death. For the last five years she had been in feeble health, and constantly declining, till within the last few months it became evident that she was in a consumption, and destined soon to leave her family and friends, and become an inhabitant of another world. When it became apparent that her stay on earth was short, the thought of leaving her husband and an only child, a daughter nine years old, occasioned a very severe conflict; but she finally evinced a calm resignation to the Divine Will, which was as comforting to her surviving friends, as it was evidential of a preparation for her exit to another world. Her funeral was attended by a very large concourse, which was addressed from Rom. 9: 22, 23, after which her remains were conveyed to the grave to await the final summons at the resurrection of the just.

In Alfred, N. Y., March 2d, Mrs. Rebecca Ballard, in the 75th year of her age. She was a worthy member of the 1st Seventh-day Baptist Church in Alfred.

In Alfred, March 2d, Ann Eliza Ford, in the 17th year of her age. She was a student of Alfred Academy and Teachers' Seminary. Her parents reside in Howard, some nineteen miles distant. She had only been with us a few weeks, but during her stay she had obtained a hope in Christ; and although she died almost without a moment's warning, yet we believe that she has gone to be with her Lord.

In Westerly, R. I., on the 16th of February last, Mrs. Eunice Chapman, wife of Joseph Chapman, in the 72d year of her age. She professed religion in early life, and became a member of the First Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton, where she remained an honor to her profession, until she left for the church triumphant.

Our Accounts.—The fifth volume of the Sabbath Recorder will close on the 14th day of June next. As the accounts of the establishment up to that time will have no connection with subsequent accounts, it is important that they should all be settled before the volume closes. Most of those who owe the establishment, know the amount of their indebtedness; and it is hoped that they will forward the same immediately. The accounts remaining unsettled on the 15th day of May will probably be placed in the hands of a traveling agent for collection, and in all such cases $2 50 per volume must be charged, to pay the expenses. An early settlement, therefore, is for the interest of all concerned.

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office. It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

FARM FOR SALE.

THE subscriber offers for sale his farm, situated in the town of Genesee, county of Allegany, N. Y. Said farm codsists of 280 acres of first-rate land, 175 of which is level, ann the remainder gradually rising side-hill; all of which is susceptible of cultivation, mostly adapted to grazing purposes. About 75 acres, however, is a gravely quick soil, as productive of wheat and corn, as any in the southern part of said county. Upon said farm is about 100 acres improvement, two framed barns, and a large two-story framed house, well inclosed, lately built, and conveniently calculated. There are two good wells of water upon said farm, and it is also abundantly supplied with numerous brooks and springs. Said farm is situated in a good neighborhood, and convenient to school, and the central place of business for the western part of said town; and on the main traveled road from Angelica to Smithport. For pleasantness and locality it is not surpassed by any in the township or vicinity. To those wishing to purchase a good farm, the present opportunity offers rare inducements. The farm will be sold low for cash; or, if desired, by paying one-half of the purchase money down, the balance will be arranged to accommodate purchasers for any reasonable length of credit. A careful view of the premises by a discerning individual, is only requisite to a thorough conviction that an investment made under such favorable terms as the subscriber offers, is but safe and a fair speculation. For farther information, address the subscriber, P. M. at West Genesee, Allegany Co., N. Y., or inquire at his house. JARED MAXSON.

Genesee, December 20th, 1848. 29m3.

TO CLERGYMEN AND THEIR PEOPLE.

All Clergymen who will send their address to Messrs. Comstock & Co., 21 Courtland-st., New York, shall be furnished gratuitously, for their family use, with a Salve of most extraordinary merit for external sores or inflammations of long or short standing. In burns, or pains and swellings of nearly all descriptions, its effects are charming, and almost beyond belief. This Salve has already been used by quite a number of the clergy, for themselves or sufferers to whom they have given it; and they have called on or written to the proprietors to express their delight at its action, and a desire to have their names used in making known its virtues. The proprietors having realized a handsome sum by its sale, feel called upon by a sense of duty to their fellow-men to disseminate the knowledge of the existence of such a thing far and near, and to give it without charge to the reverend clergy without limitation. It is called CONNEL'S PAIN EXTRACTOR, and is owned solely by Messrs. C. & Co. All religious papers that will publish this a few times will be furnished with the Salve free, and they may also thereby relieve many suffering poor brethren from agonizing pain, and save them much expense. The names of nearly fifty clergymen recommending it, are to be seen at the office of C. & Co.

You will please observe, it is no "sovereign remedy for all complaints," but only intended for external applications in the following:—Burns, Scalds, Frosted parts, Chilblains, Chafe or Galls, Chaps, Tetter, Pimple, Blotch, Felon, Ulcer Sprains, Erysipelas, Cuts, Bruises, Ear and Toothache, Mumps, Sore Throat, Whitlows, Piles, Ringworm, Salt Rheum, Barber's Itch, Carbuncle, Eruption, Sore Eyes and Lids, Weak Sight, Sore Lips, Punctures, Biles and Warts, Fever Pains, Tender Feet, Inflammatory Rheumatism, Tic Doloureux, Ague in Face and Breast, Fever Sores, Old Burn-Scars, Prickly Heat, Inflamed Skin, Broken Breast, Sore Nipples, Rough Hands, Blistered Surfaces, Dressing for Blisters, White Swellings, Cold in Wounds, Sore Corns, General Sores, Smallpox Marks, &c.

Though we have named numerous affections, experience has taught us that they are not too many. It will be necessary to know that this article is the only one we can recommend; but must caution against some imitation by like name. We will present it to the poor who have actual need of it.

38—mo 3.

BURNING OF A SHIP.

On the 14th of March, the schooner Duxbury arrived at Norfolk from Jeremie, having on board the crew of the ship Riga, of Boston, which was burned at sea on the 2d of March, in lat. 30 deg. 30 min., lon. 76 deg. 35 min. The following is the Captain's narrative of the disaster, published in the Norfolk Beacon:—

March 2, 11 1-2 P. M.—Smoke began to fill the cabin, and before we could get anything out the smoke was so dense as to cause suffocation and compel us to abandon everything there, having only saved a barrel of bread. We then shut up the cabin, and I took part of the crew and tried to keep the fire under, while the mate was employed with the rest getting out the long-boat and yawl. Let go anchors, which brought the ship head to wind and kept the fire and smoke aft, giving us a chance to leave the ship. After getting the long-boat in the water we found her of no use, as she would not float, and we were obliged to abandon her.

We then commenced building a raft, which we constructed with spare spars and four of our water-casks, one cask being lashed at each corner. We got the raft into the water, and found it floated very lightly. There being no fire in the forward part of the ship, as yet, the men were enabled to save a small portion of the dunnage. We then got a barrel of bread lashed upon the raft, and a bag in the boat with several pieces of pork. Not having suitable vessels in which to put water, of that most necessary article we were very short, our whole stock amounting to about two gallons. At 6 1-2 A. M. of the 3d, it being then 6 hours and 30 minutes from the time the smoke drove us from the cabin, finding there was no possible chance of getting the fire under, and as the decks were getting very hot, being fearful they would soon burst, we prepared to leave the ship, the two mates and five men on the raft, and myself and four men in the boat with the raft in tow. The mates, steward, and myself had but what we then stood in.

As we left the ship, the smoke was forcing its way out of the seams in her side aft; and at 7 A. M. the fire burst out of her cabin windows and companion-way. After pulling a short distance from the ship, and finding that little headway could be made, with the raft in tow, I concluded to stop in sight of the ship for a while, in hopes that some vessel might be attracted by the great light and run down to us.

At 8 30 the mizen mast went over the side, and the deck appeared to burst up, the flames gradually working their way forward. At 10 A. M. the main mast went by the board, and the fire burst out of the main hatch. The ship by this time appeared to be burnt nearly to the water, aft; although forward, about the fore-mast and bowsprit, every thing yet remained as usual, owing to the anchors acting as a drag, and keeping the ship's head to the wind. At 12 M. the fire worked its way up the fore hatch and the sails on the fore-mast caught. In a short time the fore-top-mast went over the side, leaving the fore-mast standing. The fire now found its way out on the bowsprit, and caught the jibs.

The ship was now one solid mass of fire, presenting a grand, and to us, in our situation, a most awful and appalling appearance. Throughout the night we kept in sight of the ship, still having hopes that some vessel might be attracted by the light. After passing a sleepless, though silent night, all hands seemingly occupied in watching the progress of the flames, just as the day dawned on the 4th, the remainder of the ship suddenly disappeared. It now seemed as if the last link was broken; and endeavoring to cheer one another as much as possible, and commending ourselves to God, I put the boat's head to the windward, with the raft in tow.

The weather being fine, and the sea tolerably smooth, raft made very good weather, though but little headway. Throughout the day the weather continued fine. Toward night I dropped down alongside of the raft, and gave those on it their portion of the water, cautioning them to keep a good look out through the night for vessels. Toward morning the wind increased and the weather looked threatening; and by daylight on the 5th it was blowing a strong gale from the N. E. with a rapidly increasing sea; so that I found it necessary to put the boat's head to the sea, to keep her from swamping.

Our situation was now very critical, as every sea was making a complete breach over the raft. In the afternoon of the 5th the wind moderated, and we again put the boat before the wind, making what sail we could on the raft, with blankets.

The morning of the 6th dawned, and no sail in sight. The men, though much exhausted by being constantly wet, still seemed to show great fortitude, and throughout the day were in good spirits. About 3 P. M. the joyful cry of "sail ho!" from the raft, made all hands leap. The sail appeared to be a schooner, bearing about S. S. E., and distant about 12 miles. The wind being light from the eastward, I immediately cast off from the raft, and pulled so as to cut off the strange sail if possible, which I had no doubt of doing if the wind continued light. After pulling about three hours, we succeeded in coming up with her, and were taken on board. She proved to be the schooner Duxbury, of Duxbury, Capt. James Cunningham.

After securing our boat, Capt. C. kept away in search of the raft, which he had lost sight of, as it was then dark. At about 9 1-2 A. M., of the 7th, the raft was discovered, and about 11 A. M. we came up with it and took the remainder of the crew from it, seven in number, including the mate, who reported having been passed that morning by several vessels, two of which came so near that the men upon the decks were distinctly visible moving about.

The Use of Lime.—In the summer of 1833, when the cholera spread all over Middle Tennessee, its course from Nashville, where it first made its appearance, was south, the authorities of Columbia, a town forty-two miles south of Nashville, and containing about two thousand inhabitants, caused fresh lime to be placed at the door of every house, and the citizens were requested to spread it freely on their premises, and in all open lots where there was any stagnant water. It soon reached Franklin, nineteen miles south of Nashville, then Pulaski, thirty miles south of Columbia, where it was terrific; thence to Shelbyville, east of Columbia forty-five miles, where it was worse than at any other place in Tennessee; two miles north of Columbia, in the country, it was very bad—nearly half of the negroes and whites died on some plantations. In fact, it was all over the surrounding country. Not a case originated in town. The system of liming continued throughout the summer and fall, and it was found that the usual fall fevers were light, so much so, that the custom of liming has been strictly adhered to annually, ever since, and, from a sickly town, it is now one of the healthiest in Tennessee.

A PATIENT MAN.

Forty years ago, in St. Paul's Churchyard, that famous place in the metropolis of England, there was a dry-goods store, the favorite resort of ladies. The partners of the house, and all the clerks were known for their respectful and indulgent conduct; but one of the clerks had earned the appellation of the 'patient man.' He had never been known to lose his temper or polite attention, under the trying tedium of a lady's whim—a thing of course very remarkable.

A lady of title and large fortune determined that she would test his patience. She induced another lady to accompany her, dressed in the most courtly style; drove in her elegant coach, with coachman and two footmen, in their elegant livery, to the store, and singled out the patient man.

She first desired to see some satins, and after handing down all that were there, none of them suited her. She then requested to be shown the velvets. These were as little to her mind, and they were left for muslins. These were unfortunate in price and quality, or else in breadth or length, or something; and she then asked to see their ribbons. Some were too plain, and others too much fringed; some were too narrow, and others too broad. At last she bought a yard of calico, and, (not without grumbling,) paid for it one shilling.

The patient man folded it up, handed her to her carriage, and politely bowing, went back to his counter to put up his satins, velvets, muslins, ribbons, calicos, &c., an occupation which cost him an hour or more.

'He is a patient man!' exclaimed the lady, when she had relaxed the tension of her face and mind, which had been requisite to the performance of her part. 'He is deserving of encouragement; I will return to-morrow, and really purchase.'

She went again, and singling him out, pleasantly apologized for her behavior the preceding day, and said that she meant to buy to-day. He said that no apology was needed; he never wished to sell when the ladies did not wish to buy.

She now had down the satins, and took a piece. She looked the velvets over, and selected the best piece. She took two or three pieces of muslin, and several rolls of ribbon. Her purchases amounted to £50, for which a check on her banker was given, and she asked the patient man to go home with the articles.

He went with her, and as the carriage drove along, she asked him, 'Why do you not go into business for yourself?' 'I have no capital,' he replied.

She told him that if he would select a place where business could be done, she would help him to set up a good store, and promised to secure him several families.

He was not prepared for this, and pleaded inexperience, and his fears of failure.

She insisted that his indomitable patience would surmount everything, and she would run all risks if he would make the experiment. He wished to inform his worthy employers, and ask their advice. She consented; and he was advised to accept the offer.

The lady sent her own surveyor and lawyer, and they chose a place on Ludgate Hill. She advanced two thousand pounds in cash, and backed his credit for a similar amount. He commenced and was successful. He took in partners, and in thirteen years, retired from the Ludgate Hill Great Shawl Establishment with forty thousand pounds, the basis of all of which was one hour's patience.

THE MOTHER OF HENRY CLAY.

We copy from Mrs. Ellett's Memoirs of the Women of the Revolution, the following sketch of Mr. Clay's mother:—

Our country offers abundant examples of men who have attained its highest eminence, ascribing all to early influence and training. For the mother of Henry Clay, that great man—has ever professed feelings of profound affection and veneration. Though her life offered no incidents of striking or romantic interest, she was what expresses perfection of female character—an excellent mother. She was the youngest of two daughters, who were the only children of George and Elizabeth Hudson. Her name also was Elizabeth; she was born in the county of Hanover, in Virginia, in 1760. Her education was such as was attainable at that time in the Colony. In her fifteenth year she was married to John Clay, a preacher of the Baptist denomination, and became the mother of eight children. Mr. Clay died during the war of the Revolution.

Some years afterward Mrs. Clay contracted a second marriage with Mr. Henry Watkins, and in course of time eight children more were added to the family. The cares devolving upon her in the charge of so many children, and the superintendence of domestic concerns, of course occupied her time to the exclusion of participation in matters of public interest.

Her son Harry was separated from her when only thirteen years of age, having before that period been frequently absent from home for months in going to school. In 1792 his step-father removed with his mother and family, from Hanover County to Woodford County, in Kentucky, leaving him in Richmond, Virginia. He did not again see his mother until the fall of 1797, when he himself emigrated to Kentucky. His estimable and beloved parent died in 1827, having survived most of her children, of whom there are but four now remaining—two by the first, and two by the last marriage.

It costs as much to govern the city of New York one year, as it does the whole State of Pennsylvania for six. The Courier says there are sixteen States in the Union which could have their aggregate expenses paid twice over by what it costs to govern that single city.

THE TOILING HAND.

All honor to the toiling hand,
Or in the field or mine;
Or by the hissing steam machine,
Or on the heaving brine.
Whatever loom, or bark, or plough,
Hath done to bless our land,
Or wrought around, above, below,
We owe the toiling hand.

It battles with the elements,
It breaks the stubborn sward;
It rings the forge, the shuttle throws,
And shapes the social board.
It conquers clime—it stems the wave,
And bears from every strand
The sweetest, best of all we have—
Gifts of the toiling hand.

FREE SCHOOLS IN NEW YORK.

The Legislature of New York has passed a bill to extend Free Schools throughout the State. The following are its provisions:—

Section 1 declares the schools to be free to all persons over five and under twenty-one years of age.

Sec. 2 provides for the levying of a County tax equal in amount to the moneys apportioned by the State, and this divided among the towns in the same proportion as the State school moneys; then they shall also cause to be levied and collected an amount equal to the State apportionment from each of the towns in their respective counties, in the same manner as town taxes are raised, (thus adding to the State bounty a sum twice as large.) It also provides that each shcool district shall make an estimate of the money necessary to be raised for the payment of the expenses of the school district, for fuel, furniture, school apparatus, district libraries, repairs, insurance, teachers' wages, &c., exclusive of the public money and the money required by law to be raised by the counties and towns, and the income of the local funds, and shall give due notice thereof and for a meeting of the district, and so much of said estimate as is approved of shall be levied on the property in the district liable to taxation.

Sec. 4 provides for the collection of the taxes levied.

Sec. 5 provides for an extension of time to prepare estimates in certain cases.

Sec. 6 provides that if the voters refuse or neglect to raise such sum in addition as will support the school for six months, then it shall be the duty of the trustees to cause a school to be kept four months, and raise the necessary amount by tax.

Sec. 7 provides that in all places where free and gratuitous instruction is not provided for, laws and ordinances shall be passed without delay to secure the same.

Several sections provide penalties for the non-performance of the law. Secs. 11, 12, and 13, provide for the submission of this law to the people at the November election, and directs that the ballots shall be endorsed "School;" as many as approve the law will vote "For Free Schools," and those that disapprove the law will vote "Against Free Schools." And the Inspectors of Elections are directed to furnish a separate ballot-box, in which shall be placed the ballots for or against the proposed law—the ballots to be canvassed and the returns to be made in the same manner as votes given for Governor and Lieut. Governor. In case a majority of the votes in the State shall be cast against the new school law, then the act to be null and void, and if the contrary, the act to go into effect on the first day of January, 1850.

HABITS AND CUSTOMS AT PANAMA.

The Independent publishes a familiar letter from Rev. Mr. Willey, Home Missionary to California, dated at Panama, January 22, 1849. Here is an extract:—

"This Panama is a queer place. They eat here twice a day; breakfast at 10, and dinner at 4. Coffee, however, as soon as you get up, and tea before you go to bed—but nothing to eat. They have a great fondness for the cock-fight. Fighting cocks are kept in nearly every house, with great care. We rent several rooms in the second story of a house, and the old woman below has tied in the corners and angles of the staircase along up the hall, three or four cocks, poor, mean looking things. But here they are kept and fed, till a thing, resembling a knife-blade, is tied to their toes, and a couple of them are set to cut each other's heads off; after which their tender bodies are served up for food. Women smoke; how it looks. They keep shops along the streets, and literally, absolutely, they manifest no more care for their appearance than pigs in the streets. But it is not noticed, and all passes well enough. There are women of a better class that dress and appear better. The houses, the best that I have seen, would be considered by you at the East, to be pretty good wash-houses, white-washed inside. There is not a wheel carriage, or even a wheel, in Panama. They have an aqueduct, but no fountains or jets. The aqueduct consists of a procession of mules, with a cask of water fastened on either side, coming continually from the mountain springs, outside the town. I saw a little child's funeral passing along. They had it on a little red hearse, carried by four men, accompanied by a small band of musicians, playing a lively march! I did not at first know what it was; thought it might be some Catholic emblem of plenty, or something of the kind; but was told it was a funeral. The prisoners of the public jails do the street repairing and paving, and work chained together in pairs. They are going by now, clanking their chains."

Turnip Meal.—A kind of meal made out of turnips has been introduced in Scotland. It is made by passing Swedish turnips through a potato starch mill. After having been passed through the washing machine, they are ground down by the rasping apparatus, and the pulp is passed between rollers which squeeze out the greater part of the moisture. The squeezed fibre is then dried on a kiln and ground into meal by mill stones. The liquid which is expressed is evaporated, and the dry solid part is mixed with the meal. The meal therefore contains nearly all the solid parts of the turnip, in a state which prevents decay, and in a light and portable form. It is confidently expected that this article will prove a good substitute for grain for feeding stock in that country. Prof. Johnston, analyzing it, found it to contain 13.68 per cent. of protein compounds, 48.72 of sugar, 4.14 of gum, and 1.11 per cent. of oil.

PENSION LAWS.

Among the documents ordered printed by the last Congress, was one embracing the pension laws now in force, together with certain regulations touching the subject. As the matter is one of pretty general interest, the National Intelligencer has taken the care to prepare a brief abstract of the more important features of these laws, which is in substance as follows:—

In substantiating a claim, all evidence shall be taken on oath or affirmation before the Judge of the District, or one of the Judges of the States or Territory in which the claimant resides, or before some person specially authorized by commission from said Judge. . . . Pensioners in States and Territories where there are no pension agents are to be paid at the seat of Government. . . . Volunteers disabled in the service are to be pensioned. . . . Pensions are granted to all officers who served to the end of the Revolutionary war in the continental army. . . . The widow or children are entitled to receive the balance due in the case of a deceased pensioner. . . . Provision is made for all persons who served six months in the army, militia, or navy, during the Revolutionary war. . . . Widows and orphans of officers and soldiers of the militia, rangers, sea fencibles, and volunteers, who have died since 1818 are entitled to five years' half pay. . . . The widows of Revolutionary officers are allowed pensions for the time that they remain unmarried. . . . The brothers and sisters of deceased soldiers of the Mexican war are entitled to the land which would have been claimed by the soldier if living. . . . Soldiers of the war of 1812 may select new land if the first warrants were located on land unfit for cultivation. . . . Invalids of the navy are allowed pensions. . . . Five years' pensions, amounting to half the monthly pay to which the deceased was entitled at the time of his death, are allowed to widows and children of navy officers slain in service. The same is true with regard to all persons slain in the naval service, including men, marines, engineers, and coal heavers.

A LESSON FROM EXPERIENCE.

The editor of the Madison (Wisconsin) Democrat, who was for many years a lead-miner in the territory, thus recalls that period of his life, and the delusion which led to it, for the purpose of enforcing the warning to the enthusiastic adventurers to California, that 'all is not gold that glitters':—

"Many in these parts will recollect the published accounts of the wealth of our Wisconsin lead mines but a few years since, confirmed by official reports, as in the present instance; and how many of us were made to feel the force of the adage, that 'all is not gold that glitters.' Mr. Owen, the geologist sent to these mines by the Government, reported that a man and a boy could easily raise thirty dollars worth of lead ore in a day—which was very true, in cases where the man and boy could find it to raise—and that every where, through a very large area of country, the same evidences of the presence of these minerals were to be found. Like Governor Mason, Mr. Owen reported in good faith, from the evidence which presented itself to his mind by the facts before him; but he did not take into account the vast number fruitlessly employed in the search for that which was so easily made available when found. We were among those who were deceived into trying their fortunes in the mines, believing, as we most religiously did, that a very short application would place us in competence for life. The result was, that for nearly four years of labor, compared to which that of a galley-slave would be a pleasant occupation, we did not obtain fifty dollars worth of mineral. Neither was our case a singular one—thousands have met with similar results. From the statistical facts, made up by us while engaged in digging, we came to the conclusion, that the whole amount of lead obtained in the Wisconsin lead mines, does not pay, on the average, a shilling a day for labor expended in the pursuit. Fortunes, it is true, are occasionally made very rapidly, but the instances are as rare as the obtaining of a grand prize in a lottery."

Hail Columbia!—Among the letters of excuse for non-attendance received by the Committee of Arrangements for the recent Franklin Festival in New York, was one from "Old John," a father of the press. He relates the following incident in his early life:—

"One day, when I had got to be foreman in the office of the Philadelphia Gazette, an evening paper, a piece of poetry came in at a late hour, and as was supposed was all set up. But just as we were going to press, it was discovered that the copy was written on both sides, and that we had omitted half. By dint of great scratching, we got the remainder up in pretty good time. That piece of poetry has made considerable noise in the world since that day. It was the song of 'Hail Columbia,' in the original manuscript of the author, Judge Hopkinson."

An interesting Geological Fact.—Professor Agassiz has been delivering a course of lectures in Boston, on the Trees of North America. The Philadelphia Ledger says that in his last lecture he stated one remarkable fact, in connection with his remarks upon the family of the rose, which includes among its varieties not only many of the most beautiful flowers which are known, but also the richest fruits, such as the apple, pear, peach, plum, apricot, cherry, strawberry, raspberry, blackberry, &c.—viz., that no fossils belonging to this family have ever been discovered by geologists! This is regarded as conclusive evidence that the introduction of this family of plants upon earth was coëval with, or subsequent to, the creation of man.

Doctors.—The Literary World says that at a meeting of the Academy of Medicine in New York, Dr. Manly stated, that "at the present time, Doctors were made at the rate of from 1,500 to 1,600 a year, not for the benefit of the public or the profession itself, but for the benefit of the very men who made them doctors. There were forty medical colleges throughout the country, which gave diplomas, and at many of them there were but two and three professors—no clinical instruction whatever, and no practice of anatomy."

THE BOOK

For every Clergyman—For every School District—For every Educated Man.

WEBSTER'S QUARTO DICTIONARY, Unabridged. Price $6.—Published by G. and C. MERRIAM, Springfield, Mass., and for sale by Booksellers generally.

"Will not the enlightened and liberal furnish their clergymen with a copy, as an indispensable volume in their libraries?"—Rev. T. H. Gallaudet.

Extract from a Lecture addressed to a Teacher's Institute, by William Russel, Principal of the Merrimack [N. H.] School for Teachers, and formerly Editor of the American Journal of Education:

"The edition of Dr. Webster's Dictionary, revised by Professor Goodrich, I would earnestly recommend to the attention of all teachers who are desirous of becoming fully qualified to give instruction in the English Language. The copious information which that work embodies, on all topics connected with Etymology—the extreme exactness, as well as the number, extent, and fullness of the definitions which it furnishes to every important word, render it a mine of philological wealth to instructors. The volume is, in fact, the teacher's encyclopedia, as well as lexicon, for daily reference. Could a copy of it be provided, as the permanent property of every district school, the effect, as regards the improvement of instruction, would be deeply and extensively felt, in the increased skill of the teacher, and the higher attainments of his pupils, in the most important part of education—the acquisition of an adequate knowledge and proper use of our own language."

"It has come to be a necessity to every educated man."—Lord Brougham

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS, &C.

From the President of the United States.

"To Mr. E. Walker—Dear Sir:—I have found your Statesman's Manual a valuable work, and exceedingly useful and convenient. Yours, J. K. Polk."

From the Hon. Henry Clay.

"My Dear Sir:—Your Statesman's Manual is a very valuable work for reference."

State of New York:
Secretary's Office,
Department of Common Schools, } Albany, Sept. 18, 1846.

I have examined the "Statesman's Manual," in two volumes octavo, compiled by Edwin Williams, and am of opinion that it is a proper work for school district libraries, and deserving of a place in these institutions, designed for the diffusion of useful knowledge.

Signed, J. S. Randall,
Dep. State Sup't Com. Schools.

From the Journal of Commerce.

"This is one of the most important books published in the United States for a long time."

From the N. Y. Courier and Enquirer.

"This is the most important contribution to American political history ever published."

From the Democratic Review.

"The whole forms a most complete library in itself, of all that concerns the politics of the country. No individual should be without these two volumes at hand for prompt reference. How many hours of idle discussion and senseless debates might be spared to heated partizans, were these books at hand for appeal. We shall have frequent occasion to refer to them."

From the N. Y. Express of August 21, 1846.

"This is emphatically a national work, and as such eminently deserving of a national support."

From the Commercial Advertiser.

"Such a work is invaluable, and is offered at a comparatively low price, in expectation of a large sale."

From the Luzern Democrat.

"The Statesman's Manual is a very valuable work, comprising a complete condensed political history of our country from the formation of our government until the present time."

From the Washingtonian, Ohio.

"It is but scanty praise to say, that no work of equal value to the American Statesman, Politician, Journalist, Historian, &c., &c., has ever before appeared."

From the Harrisburg (Pa.) Argus, August 26, 1846.

"No politician, no man who desires to understand the history of the several administrations of the General Government, should be without a copy of it. As a book of reference, it is invaluable."

SABBATH LAWS IN PENNSYLVANIA.

[Concluded.]

Leaving, however, these melancholy evidences that the law is not always "summa ratio," let us return to the point more particularly under consideration. Without enlarging further on the argument of Judge Bell, enough we think has been said fully to establish, with every unprejudiced mind, the proposition that the act of 1794 gives to the first-day Sabbath a legal preference over any other similar religious establishment. In support of it, we have at least high judicial authority, since Judge Coulter has given it his full and unhesitating assent. To his opinion let us now give a slight attention:—

> "I concur cordially in the judgment of the Court, that the Act of Assembly of 1705, and the Act of 22d April, 1794, are constitutional. The question has been so often decided by every court in the Commonwealth, and so repeatedly by this court, that I feel astonished at its being now entertained as a debatable or open question. * * * I wish it to be distinctly understood, that I believe the laws constitutional, because they guard the Christian Sabbath from profanation, and, in the language of the act of 1794, they prohibit work or worldly employment on the Lord's day.
>
> "We are a Christian people and State; we are part and parcel of a great Christian nation. All over the length and breadth of this great nation, the Christian Sabbath is recognized and guarded by the law as a day of sacred rest. Our national Congress recognizes it. All the State Legislatnres recognize it. Every convention of the people for the establishment of State or United States Constitutions, recognized and regarded it as a day of sacred rest. All our courts, national or State, so regard it William Penn, in the form of government and laws which he brought over to regulate the people of the new colony, so regarded it, and enacted that as such it should be observed as a day for worshiping the Almighty, in imitation of the primitive disciples.
>
> "The Pilgrims in the Mayflower, after being long tempest-tost, when they reached the shores of this continent, declined to land on the Sabbath day. It comes to us as a holy day, from the very dawn of our existence as a people, and was so regarded by the people from whom we sprung, since the days of King Athelstan. It is one of the primitive institutions of Christianity, one on the existence of which its continuance depends. General Christianity enters into the very frame of our social existence; it is part of the common law of the State. Law and order, springing from the same source—the bosom of the Almighty—lean upon it for support. Our memories of the past, our hopes of the future, are dependent upon it. Why then should the Supreme Court not regard it, as our forefathers regarded it, and as the statute declares it to be—the Lord's day?
> "In many other statutes it is so denominated, and in my humble judgment ought to be so regarded by this court, according to precedent, and for the establishment of conservative authority. I do not recognize the right of legislation to make a day of secular cessation from labor, independent of the Christian Sabbath. It never was attempted in any Christian country, except in France, when it formally abolished Christianity, and set up the Goddess of Reason, and established the tenth day as a day of rest. But the Goddess, the tenth day, and the government, have perished, or faded into the calmer lights of the mild philosophy of the Encyclopedists. Like water that flows, and the air we breathe, the Sabbath of rest, when the bondman and the free, the master and the apprentice, and all men, meet in equality at the Christian altar—comes to us secured by the very organization of society, and the formation of the social compact. And it is therefore protected and guarded by our laws."

With all respect for the learned Judge, this dissertation is surely much more rhetorical than logical—much more appropriate to the pulpit than to the bench. It is not easy to seize the precise chain of reasoning, whereby Judge Coulter defends the constitutionality of a law admitted by him to establish a religious precedence. "I believe the laws constitutional," says he, "because they guard the Christian Sabbath." This is at least not very cogent. The Constitution of the State no where enjoins that the laws shall guard the Christian Sabbath—how then can the fact of their doing so be a proof of conformity with that instrument? This declaration certainly exhibits great looseness and confusion of ideas in relation to the question at issue. If the law is constitutional at all, it most assuredly cannot be for the reason assigned. The Judge's major is utterly unfounded.

We are told that the Pilgrims "declined to land on the Sabbath day." And what authority can this present? Why are we not as well told that the Catholics under Lord Baltimore were much more liberal in their views? or that the Quakers under William Penn were much less rigid in their sabbatism? The Puritans did not discover, neither did they settle this country; and if they had done both, it is not seen how this could affect our legislation, or help to interpret our Constitution. It is to be hoped that we have made some advancement in republican institutions since the time when Sabbath-breaking was a capital crime, and it was held a civil offense for a mother to kiss her child. Why are we referred back to those times, in determining a simple question of constitutional law in the year of grace 1848?

The view taken by Judge C., so far as it can be collected from the opinion before us, appears to be, that although the act of 1794 was manifestly designed to give preference to a religious ordinance, it is not to be considered as coming within the intent of the constitutional prohibition, since Christianity "is part of the common law of the State." If such be the ground taken by Judge C., we must protest against it. We utterly reprobate the principle that the Constitution can be modified by any human law whatever. It stands—as the express will of the sovereign people—above all laws, whether common or statute. It is law for the law-maker; it defines the appointed bounds by which his delegated powers are limited. It is that by which all other laws are measured and proportioned. It is a wretched fallacy, then, to say the Constitution cannot mean thus, for the "common law" is otherwise. Rather, the common law cannot be, if it is otherwise than the apparent meaning of the Constitution. Discarding, therefore, every thing but this naked charter, we have only to consider what is the plain purport of the terms there used; and we have the language—(too perspicuous for explanation)—no political preferment shall be given "to any religious establishment."

But granting for a moment that this provision might properly be relaxed in favor of the Christian religion, how far would this admission help the Judge's argument? How far would it establish the day he designates as "the Christian Sabbath?"[*] Judge C. has here totally neglected his minor premiss. The sanctification of Sunday is not an essential of Christianity; it is only a part of the "mode of worship" of Lord's day sectaries. Alas! we are here involved in the very whirlwind of theologic controversy. On the one side, "a very large majority" assure us that the fourth commandment is by all means to be strictly observed—excepting so far as relates to "the appointed day," which they very confidently assume to have been changed by a subsequent amendment;—not indeed by any express statute—not even by an indirect implication from any doctrinal precept of the New Testament—but by an inference from certain historical passages therein contained, and by the slightly vague and disputed "authority of the Church." Another class of believers warmly denounce this corruption of the Scripture regulations, and contend that no part of the enactment can be repealed, except by a legislation as authoritative, as public, as specific, and as unmistakeable as was the enunciation of the original law itself; and that to except any part of the commandment, is to destroy the entirety of the decalogue, which was plainly designed as a complete and immutable code of universal duty. And as an hypotenuse in this recto-triangular warfare, the Anti-Sabbatarians arise, and declare that both are wrong; maintaining that the Sabbath was a purely Jewish ceremonial, commemorative of Israel's release from Egypt, and typical of the Christian's release from Sinai;—that the whole institution was abrogated by the new dispensation, as completely as circumcision; (Acts 15: 20, 1, and 28, 9;)—and that its observance is discouraged in Rom. 14: 5—condemned in Gal. 4: 10—and expressly forbidden in Col. 2: 16. How shall the State decide between these conflicting claims, in attempting to establish Christianity? Shall the question be settled by a popular vote? Shall it be learnedly argued by attorney before the Supreme Court? or shall the penal law summarily dispose of it, without an argument and without a hearing? But first of all, where is the State's authority for meddling with the question at all? * * * *

Although the doctrine laid down by Judge C., that "Christianity is part of the common law of the land," is wholly unconnected with the question under discussion, since it is clear that working at any trade on Sunday was no offense at common law, (1 Strange, 702,) it has yet been so often asserted judicially, and extrajudicially, that it merits a slight examination. Considering that only so much of the common law, as well as the statute law of England, was extended to this country as was necessary to the exigencies of the colonies, (3 Bin., R. Jud.,) it might naturally be supposed, that in rejecting the oppressive political Christianity of the mother country, tearing assunder the chains that had bound together in monstrous alliance the Church and State, and proudly standing on the broad ground that an unfettered worship, according to the dictates of conscience, was the natural and indefeasible right of all—that the young republic would sweep away every vestige of the ecclesiastical "common law," as unsuited to its genius and its aspirations. How could it effectually secure itself in its boasted religious freedom, or hope to continue the purity of its institutions, except by discarding every tenet of that spiritual despotism, which, through long centuries, had interwoven itself with the British code? Said Judge Brackenridge, in 1813,—"The Church establishment in England has become a part of the common law. But was the common law in this particular, or any part of it, carried with us in our emigration and planting a colony in Pennsylvania? Not a particle of it." (5 Bin. R. 562.)

In 1824, Judge Duncan, however, held that "Christianity is, and always has been, a part of the common law of Pennsylvania." (Updergraph vs. the Commonwealth. H. S. & R. 400.) The worthy Judge was evidently considerably puzzled in attempting to attach a definite idea to his announcement, and adds in explanation, "Not Christianity with an established church, and tithes, and spiritual courts, but Christianity with liberty of conscience to all men." An established religion, with universal liberty of conscience! Law, (an authoritative rule of action,) on a particular subject, with absolute personal immunity on the same subject! It must be confessed that the definition is not remarkable either for precision or perspicuity. Judge D. afterwards proceeds to explain that he does not refer to any Christianity in particular, but only in general. "By general Christianity is not intended the doctrine of worship of any particular church or sect." Christianity is not embodied in any particular sect! We opine that such Christianity would be rejected with wonderful unanimity by all sects, as a rank heresy. And shall that which all Christians look upon as heresy, be held to be the religious law of the land? Now if this "general Christianity" is truly the established law, since the Constitution of the State—the supreme law—prohibits "any religious establishment," it inevitably follows that "general" Christianity is no religion at all! which brings us back to the conclusion aforesaid, entertained by all good Christians. Be the "common law" ever so sacred, not one particle of it can be enforced beyond what the sovereign Constitution may tolerate. In other words, just so much of Christianity as is no religion, may be constitutionally established by law—not one whit more can be. If no political precedence can be given to any religious establishment, it needs no argument to prove that none can be given to any Christian establishment.

So much, then, for this vaunted dictum theoretically. Nor has it any greater value practically. Nothing of "general Christianity," as vaguely described by Judge Duncan, has been, or can be, enforced by legal authority. Neglecting the Sabbath law, which is here assumed to be clearly unconstitutional, (and which forms no part of "general" Christianity—since it is only a "doctrine of worship of particular sects," and is violently opposed by other sects,) there is not one distinctive feature of the popular religion permitted to intrude itself into our institutions. Let us hear Chief Justice Gibson in 1829:—

> "Christianity," says he, in Harvey vs. Boies, "has been indefinitely said to be a part of the law of the land. The law undoubtedly avails itself of the obligations of Christianity, as instruments to accomplish the purposes of justice But judicial oaths are not founded exclusively on the belief of the Christian's revelation—a Jew or a Gentoo being allowed to swear in the form prescribed by his faith.[*] Christianity is indeed recognized as the predominant religion of the country, and for that reason are not only its institutions, but the feelings of its professors, guarded against insult from reviling or scoffing at its doctrines; so far it is the subject of special favor. But further the law does not protect it. Happily, it neither needs nor endures the patronage of temporal authority." (1 Pa. R. 13.)

The assumption that Christianity forms part of our political law—this "form of sound words" without meaning, so common in judicial sermons—appears to be founded on the vague idea that a State, like an individual, if without any religion, is but a mighty Infidel. "We are a Christian people—and State," says Judge C., as though, by some kind of implication, the former involved the latter. The notion is most mistaken. The righteousness of the citizen can no more be imputed to his government, than can his stature or complexion. A political "State" is but a mutually defensive league. It is simply an associative machinery for the repression of violence and the protection of its constituents. "To secure their rights, governments are instituted among men." Being then so clearly the creature of worldly relations and of worldly necessities, with the sanctions of another life the State has, and legitimately can have, no concern. These are as utterly foreign to the true purposes of its establishment as would be a vindication of the systems of Copernicus and Newton. Like every other organism, it will then most perfectly fulfil its functions, when most strictly circumscribed within its appropriate range of operation. It is from inattention to this fundamental—vital element of republicanism, that the awakening world has so long suffered all the unnumbered miseries of oppression and misrule. Such is the impressive lesson read to us by universal history.

"A Christian State!" Why, it has only a corporate existence. It has neither a soul to be saved, nor even a body to be baptized. It can neither join the "communion-table" of the pious below, nor the chorus of departed saints above. A Christian State! How perfectly incongruous the conception. As well a Christian engine or a Christian clock!

Here, then, we may safely leave the subject. If we have been successful in making apparent, that a law giving preference to any Christian or other religious establishment, is in direct derogation of the language and the genius of the State Constitution, since the act of 1794 has already been fully proved to do so, the conclusion is forced upon us beyond all possibility of confutation or escape, that it is unconstitutional. The very decisions indeed, which have been under consideration, fully corroborate this position. Says Judge Coulter, "I do not recognize the right of legislation to make a day of secular cessation from labor—independent of the Christian Sabbath." Says Judge Bell, "Such a requisition, [that of a 'recognition of the day as the true Sabbath,'] we agree with the plaintiff in error, would be a palpable interference with the rights of conscience." The former denies the right of Sabbath legislation except in recognition of the Christian Sabbath, and the latter considers it a palpable wrong to require its recognition. Thus it is settled by the highest judicial authority in the State, that whether the Sunday act of Pennsylvania is regarded as a civil, or as a religious establishment, it is, in either case, equally a flagrant violation of political right.

[*] It might not have been improper in the learned Judge, while laying down ex-cathedra the religious law, to give some authority for his "Christian Sabbath." So far as the New Testament is concerned, there is but one Sabbath, either spoken of, referred to, or in the most distant manner hinted at; and that is the Sabbath of the fourth commandment—"the seventh day."

[*] The Deist who may "conscientiously refuse to take an oath," cannot be required to swear at all. It is certainly somewhat strange that any one could ever have pretended that judicial oaths were founded on the New Testament Revelation, when a large number of Christians reprobate all oaths as expressly forbidden by it! How far judicial oaths are supported by primitive Christianity, may be seen in Matt. 5: 33, 34; and in James 5: 12;—passages whose comprehensive and unqualified language, not all the ingenuity of juratory commentators has ever been able to extenuate or explain away.

CHRISTIAN TIMIDITY REBUKED.

"On going to a settlement, I was told of an infidel so depraved and wicked, that no one could approach him on the subject of religion, although he had been long confined to his bed by severe sickness. On this account I deferred visiting him, until I had passed through the settlement. When I called, I was received coldly but respectfully. I found him intelligent and communicative. I showed him my books, with the appearance of which he was highly pleased. He purchased two copies each of the Primer and Almanac, remarking that the circulation of these books ought to be encouraged, because they were finished in a style so much superior to any books ever offered for sale in that part of the country. I gradually introduced the subject of personal religion, our duty and accountability, and also spoke of death and the judgment. He listened apparantly with interest. As I left, I gave him James' Anxious Inquirer. He took my hand, said that he would read them carefully, and warmly invited me to call again. My conscience smote me. Had I called as I ought, at first, I might have had other opportunities for conversing with him. Now I may see him no more until the throne is set, and filled by Him whose eyes are as a flame of fire, to whom all must give account of duty discharged and of duty omitted." [Am. Mess.

CLOUD OR SUN.

This beautiful hymn, by the late Mrs. Sarah Flower Adams, was sung at her grave, August 21, 1848, by a few of her most intimate friends.

He sendeth sun, he sendeth shower,
Alike they're needful to the flower;
And joys and tears alike are sent
To give the soul fit nourishment.
As comes to me or cloud or sun,
Father! thy will, not mine, be done.

Can loving children e'er reprove
With murmurs whom they trust and love?
Creator, I would ever be
A trusting, loving child to thee;
As comes to me or cloud or sun,
Father! thy will, not mine, be done.

Oh, ne'er will I at life repine,—
Enough that thou hast made it mine.
Where falls the shadow cold of death,
I yet will sing with parting breath—
As comes to me or shade or sun,
Father! thy will, not mine, be done.

THE PLAGUE IN LONDON.

The year 1665 was an awful period in the annals of London. During the two previous years the plague had raged in Holland, and reports of that dire calamity had formed the staple of many a conversation by the firesides of England. People had heard from their parents of a similar visitation in their own country, in the days of King James. Cases of plague, too, it was believed, had frequently occurred at home since then, and therefore the tidings of the continental pestilence might well fill them with alarm. Two men sickened in Drury Lane, December, 1664. On inquiry, headache, fever, a burning sensation in the stomach, dimness of sight, and, above all, the livid spots upon the chest, indicated beyond all dispute, that the plague had reached London. The affecting intelligence soon spread. The weekly bills of mortality for the next four months exhibited an increase of deaths. The fears of the people rose to a higher pitch. The month of May showed that the dreaded disease was continuing and extending its ravages; and in the last week of June, two hundred and seventy-six persons fell victims to the destroyer. The plague had indeed come, and was spreading its wings over the great city. Men fled in terror; coaches and other vehicles were seen hastening along the highways, filled with those whose means enabled them to change their residence. But multitudes remained, especially persons of the poorer class, who, crowded together in narrow streets and alleys, seemed marked out by the Angel of Death as his certain prey; among them his ravages were most awful; they chiefly swelled the amount of deaths reported from week to week, rising from hundreds to thousands, till during the month of September, the terrific number of ten thousand, at least, was the weekly average of the bills of mortality. In one night, it is said, four thousand died—a night long to be remembered.

One shop after another, one dwelling after another, was closed. The long red cross, with the words, "Lord, have mercy upon us," inscribed on the door, indicated that within Death was doing his work. The watchmen appointed by the magistrates stood at the entrance, armed with halberts, to prevent all communication between the inmates and other persons; and thus to limit, as far as possible, the spread of contagion. Instead of the busy crowds that once lined the thoroughfares, a few persons might be seen walking cautiously along in the middle of the path, fearful of each other's touch. "The highways were forsaken, and the travelers walked in by-ways." A coach was rarely met, save when, with curtains closely drawn, it conveyed some plague-stricken mortal to the pest-house. The wain, laden with timber and other materials, had disappeared; for men had no heart to build; and the half-finished structure was left in premature ruin. The cart bearing provisions came not within the city gate; the market was held in the outskirts, where the seller feared to touch the money of the buyer till it had been dropped in a vessel of vinegar. In many of the streets the grass sprung up, and a fearful silence brooded every where, in harmony with the wide-spread desolation. The London cries, the sounds of music, the murmur of cheerful groups, the din of business, had ceased. That deep solitude, in a great city, must have been overwhelming. And how must the lonely passenger, as he walked along, have shuddered while now and then this portentous silence was broken, as there darted from an open window the shrieks of some miserable being, in the agony of disease or bereavement! In some cases no human sounds, even of terror, broke the awful tranquillity of the scene. Whole streets were desolate—the doors left open—the windows shattering with the wind—the houses empty—the inmates gone.

Suddenly did the disease smite the patient. Sometimes they suddenly dropped in the streets; others, perhaps, had time to go to the next stall or porch, "and just sit down and die." The man who drove the death-cart expired on his way to the huge pit dug for the reception of thousands, or fell down dead upon the heap of corpses that he was tumbling into that rude place of burial. A person went home, hale and strong; "at even-tide there was trouble, and before the morning he was not." As the mother nursed the babe, the purple spot appeared on her breast; and in a short time the helpless little one would be clinging to its lifeless parent—to follow her, in a few brief movents, to another world. Every man who was affected with sickness naturally thought his hour was come; and who but must be deeply affected with the following passage in Pepys' Diary: "June 17.—It struck me very deep this afternoon, going with a hackney-coach down Holborn, from the Lord Treasurer's; the coachman I found to drive easily and easily, and at last stood still, and came down, hardly able to stand, and told me he was suddenly struck very sick, and almost blind; he could not see. So I alighted and went into another coach, with a sad heart for the poor man, and for myself also, lest he should have been struck with the plague."

In some cases the disease lurked for several days in the system without discovering itself, yet all the while contagious; and it was very sad to reflect how such a person had been a walking destroyer, perhaps for a week or a fortnight—how he had ruined those whom he would have hazarded his life to save, and had been breathing death upon them, even, perhaps, in his tender kissings and embracings of his own children. When the disease reached its crisis, it was often attended with delirium in the most appalling forms, and the pitiable sufferers would start from their beds—rave on the passer-by whom they saw from the casement—perhaps rush down stairs—burst into the street—screaming in the most terrific manner—then haste to the river, and there terminate their earthly agonies by suicide. Awful as were the real horrors of the plague year, they were augmented by excited imagination. Men saw in the heavens portentous forms, blazing stars, and angels with flaming swords; and on the earth they discerned spectres in significant and menacing attitudes. Some fancied themselves inspired; one of these persons made the silent streets ring with the deep cry, "Yet forty days, and London shall be destroyed." And another, with nothing but a girdle round his loins, and bearing a vessel of burning coal upon his head, paced the city by night and by day, exclaiming, "Oh, the great and dreadful God!"

A CONNECTICUT SAILOR BOY.

A minister who had been on a sea voyage, relates a thrilling scene which took place on board the ship Cornelia in a storm. The winds had lashed the ocean into foam; the ship was rolling fearfully, and all began to fear it was her last voyage.

Some of the rigging became entangled at the mast head, and it was necessary to send some one aloft to adjust it. Who could climb those ropes to such a giddy height in such a fearful storm? On board was a Connecticut boy, the son of a poor widow, who had left home to brave the storms, and bear the perils of life on the ocean wave, for his mother's sake. But we will let the minister, who was eye-witness, describe the scene:

I was standing near the mate, and heard him order that boy aloft to do it! He lifted his cap and glanced at the swinging mast, the boiling, wrathful sea, and the steady, determined countenance of the mate. He hesitated in silence a moment, then, rushing across the deck, he pitched down into the forecastle. Perhaps he was gone two minutes, when he returned, laid his hands on the ratlines, and went up with a will. My eye followed him till my head was dizzy, when I turned and remonstrated with the mate for sending that boy aloft. He could not come down alive! 'Why did you send him?' 'I did it,' replied the mate, 'to save life. We've sometimes lost men overboard, but never a boy. See how he holds like a squirrel.' He is more careful. He'll come down safe, I h-o-p-e.'

Again I looked, till a tear dimmed my eye, and I was compelled to turn away, expecting every moment to catch a glimpse of his last fall.

In about 15 or 20 minutes, having finished the job, he came down, and straitening himself up with the conscious pride of having performed a manly act, he walked aft with a smile on his countenance.

In the course of the day I took occasion to speak with him and ask him why he hesitated when ordered aloft? Why he went down into the forecastle? 'I went, sir,' said the boy, 'to pray.' 'Do pou pray?' 'Yes, sir; I thought I might not come down alive, and I went to commit my soul to God.' 'Where did you learn to pray?' 'At home; my mother wanted me to go to Sunday School, and my teacher urged me to pray to God to keep me—and I do.' 'What was that in your jacket pocket?' 'My Testament, which my teacher gave me. I thought if I did perish, I would have the word of God close to my heart.' [Christian Sec.

A PREACHER WITHOUT ONE HEARER.

In a cotemporary print of recent date, I have read with pleasure, a notice of sermons preached to one hearer! What heroism is that, compared with preaching without a single hearer? Of such a case I have had a very graphic account from the preacher himself. He was then a Methodist circuit rider, in a district where stern Puritanism still kept the people carefully from all preachers except those of the right stripe.

His appointment was of a Saturday, at a school-house, a short distance from a small village. A few boys had repaired, for sport, from instinct or from habit, to their old play ground.

The preacher tied his horse, entered the school-house, placed his Bible and hymn book upon the teacher's desk, and waited for an audience. In vain he waited. Not a soul appeared. He gave out a hymn, which he sung himself. He prayed, but there was no response. He sang again, when, ever and anon an urchin's head would be seen at a window, or at the door, curiously spying out what could be going on. He took his text and preached his sermon. To the very conclusion no soul appeared. Uninvited and dinnerless, he went his way. It was a monthly appointment. When next he was seen tying his horse to the old place, off trooped all the boys from the play-ground, and soon ingathered a curious, eager crowd. No further hindrance was presented to the gathering of a small but flourishing society of Methodists.

Memory of a Mother.—John Randolph, some years ago, addressed himself to a friend as follows:—

"I used to be called a Frenchman, because I took the French side in politics; and though this was unjust, yet the truth is, I should have been a French Atheist, if it had not been for one recollection, and that was the time when my departed mother used to take my little hands in hers, and cause me on my knees to repeat, 'Our Father which art in Heaven.'"

CHOOSING AND CALLING MINISTERS.

In former times, it was customary to precede the choice of a minister by seasons of fasting and prayer; and when, after such preparation, the minds of the people were directed to a person who seemed suited to their circumstances, he was called to the pastoral office with the understanding that he should continue in it until some good reason was discovered for a change. The natural consequence was, that the pastor regarded his relation to the people as permanent and responsible, the people felt a deep and lively interest in whatever concerned the welfare and reputation of their pastor, and the intercourse betweeen the two was both pleasant and profitable. The history of the older churches in New England furnishes many illustrations of this custom; and to it, no doubt, those churches are greatly indebted for the intelligence and stability by which they are now characterized.

How different from this is the course pursued by many of the churches now-a-days in the settlement of their ministers. Instead of preceding their choice by fasting and prayer, the choice is not unfrequently made at a business meeting, with little or no reflection, and perhaps under electioneering influences. And then, instead of selecting the candidate with a view to his permanent settlement, he is chosen only for a year, with the expectation that at the close of his term of service the whole question will be again brought under review. It is hardly necessary to say, that such a course of proceeding is as impolitic as it is unscriptural. The minister who is chosen for so short a period, sees that it will be impossible for him to carry out any enlarged plans for the improvement of the people, and is therefore compelled to content himself with discharging the duties of a preacher in the most common-place way possible. The people, knowing that another election day will come round in a twelve-month, are always tempted to be on the look-out for a successor of the present incumbent, instead of endeavoring to make the most of the advantages they now enjoy. Indeed, preacher and people, all, are liable to be kept in a state of constant excitement, prejudicial alike to their religious interests and their social enjoyments.

The remedy for these evils is to a certain extent in the hands of the ministers. They know that "rolling stones gather no moss." Let them, then, as they regard their influence and usefulness, set themselves against such frequent changes. And, as the first step, let them, when called to take for a few months at a time the oversight of churches which need permanent pastors, make known their views of propriety in the case, and act accordingly. If all ministers were to adopt this course, attention would be effectully called to the evil, and it would rapidly diminish, and soon disappear.

—Since writing the above, our eye has fallen upon the following paragraph in one of our Baptist exchanges, for which we bespeak a thoughtful perusal. The editor, in answer to an inquiry as to the expediency of annually electing pastors, says:—

> "Our churches, instead of electing pastors, hire by the month, or year, as they do plantation overseers. The only difference is, the overseer is paid what is promised him, and the minister seldom is. It is, we say it fearlessly, an abomination of no common magitude. The working of the unscriptural system is, like that of every other departure from the teachings of the Bible, deleterious and ruinous to the cause of Christ. There is perhaps no one practice that tends more directly to depreciate the character and lessen the influence of our ministers, or to retard the prosperity of our churches, than these yearly hirings. The evils springing from these are LEGION."

AN INTERVIEW WITH THIEVES.

The English papers give the particulars of an interview between Lord Ashley and a congregation of London Thieves. It seems that a city missionary, named Jackson, had attempted to hold religious meetings among the thieves, and had thus obtained their confidence. In his intercourse with them, he found some who professed to be desirous of abandoning their former mode of life, if they could see a way of obtaining a livelihood and rising in society. Mr. Jackson questioned them in regard to emigration, and found that they would jump at the chance. He then proposed to assemble such of them as were inclined to emigrate, and invite Lord Ashley to meet them, and consult upon the subject. On the day appointed, 207 professed thieves were assembled, each of whom expressed his earnest desire to renounce his dishonest course, if it were possible. Lord Ashley and five or six gentlemen met with them. Several of the best and most experienced thieves were stationed at the door, to prevent the admission of any but thieves. Some four or five individuals, who were not at first known, were subjected to examination, and only allowed to remain on stating that they were, and being recognized as, members of the dishonest fraternity; and before the proceedings of the evening commenced, the question was very carefully put, and repeated several times, whether any one was in the room of whom others entertained doubts as to who he was. The object of this care was, as so many of them were in danger of "getting into trouble," or, in other words, of being taken up for their crimes, to ascertain if any who might betray them were present; and ano her object of this scrutiny was to give those assembled, who naturally would feel considerable fear, a fuller confidence in opening their minds. The meeting was opened by singing and prayer; after which Lord Ashley addressed the thieves for a considerable time upon the subject of emigration and changing their modes of life. The impression made by the conference, is said to have been very favorable, and it is hoped that many may be induced to forsake thieving and seek an honest livelihood in some new and distant country.

☞ We copy the following article from the Pennsylvania Telegraph, published at Harrisburg. The Bill passed by the Seuate remains to be acted upon by the House We can hardly believe that body will allow it to lie over, much less reject it.

THE SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS.

As a bill for the relief of the Seventh-day Baptists has passed the Senate Pennsylvania, and will be up before the House of Representatives in the course of a few days, permit me, through the medium of your paper, to address a few remarks to the Guardians of the People's Rights in behalf of these oppressed Christians.

Conscientiously regarding the requirement of the Lord, to hallow the seventh day as the Sabbath, and finding no repeal of the obligation it imposes, nor any transfer of the day to be sanctified, in the Scriptures, they are constrained to honor that day, and that day alone, unto the Lord. This service does not arise from any capriciousness in them, but from an abiding obligation, imposed by the Majesty of Heaven; which they can not throw aside at any sacrifice short of incurring his displeasure and indignation. This service is not of their own election; neither is the day a matter of their choice. The institution —the specific day—is imposed by the Most High; and until he abrogates it, or absolves them from the service, they must regard it as their solemn, imperative duty, strictly to adhere to, and conscientiously to obey. "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy; the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt do no work," is the sacred and awful injunction.

This is the source of their conscientious scruples on this subject. It does not satisfy them to be told, that that is the "Jewish Sabbath." The Scriptures no where speak of a "Jewish" or a "Christian" Sabbath. The Sabbath is but one, and has but one name—"the Sabbath of the Lord thy God;" which the Scriptures declare, is the seventh day; instituted more than two thousand years before there was a Jew in the world; and consequently could not have been a "Jewish Sabbath." "The Sabbath," Christ, who is Lord of the Sabbath, asserts, "was made for man"—the whole race of man—not a particular race or people, but for mankind at large. I shall only add on this point, that if it can be shown, by a single passage in the New Testament, that Jesus Christ, our Lord and Master, or his inspired apostles, have transferred the Sabbath, from the seventh to the first day of the week, the advocates for the sanctification of the seventh day, one and all, will cheerfully recognize the validity of the change, and yield implicit obedieuce to the requirement, when that requirement is adduced; but until that transfer is shown, in the clear, explicit language of Holy Writ—not based on vague, strained inferences, they will protest as in duty bound, against such a perversion of the Word of God, and will adhere, despite of all coërcive penalties to drive them from their profession, firmly, immoveably, to the express injunction of the Lord, to hallow the seventh day—the only heaven-appointed weekly Sabbath.

Until quite recently the German Seventh-day Baptists of Pennsylvania, enjoyed the privileges secured to all the citizens of the State by their republican Constitution; but within a few years past they have been wantonly and maliciously persecuted and mulcted in fines, time after time, for not yielding two-sevenths of their time to holy rest, whilst but one-seventh is required of their neighbors. In these circumstances, and when forbearance was no longer a virtue, they appealed to the Supreme Court of the Commonwealth, to test the constitutionality of the law imposing this grievious burden on them. The Court, in sustaining the law, abandoned, entirely, the ground of the first day of the week possessing any sacredness, save what it acquires from the civil law; repudiated the motives of the makers of the law, in claiming for it a sacred character, and declined to recognize it as a holy day—as the Sabbath, but affirmed it, solely, on the ground of its being a "civil regulation"—a political rest-day, which the Legislature is competent to impose, and change to any day of the week, or abolish, at pleasure; at the same time intimating the propriety of providing, for these people, exemption from the operation of the statute, as other States have done.

The Seventh-day Baptists have never asked any protection for the Sabbath they honor; have never desired to force it upon others; have never attempted to interfere with the law at large—they never asked for aught but exemption from the penalties of an unjust and invidious law—a law destructive of their equal rights and the free exercise of religious conscience; and this only in virtue of being Sabbath-keepers—having claimed no more than most of the other States of the Union have cheerfully acceded—nay, spontaneously provided for them in advance of their asking for it; which a reference to the statutes of Maine, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Ohio, Kentucky, Missouri, Michigan, Wisconsin, Indiana, Illinois, and Arkansas, fully attest. Other States may have been equally liberal, but I have not within my reach the statutes of the remainder to examine them. Louisiana has passed no Sunday law; consequently has no restriction whatever.

Without making any pretensions to any special favors, if any denomination of Christians in the Commonwealth deserve any particular consideration from the Government of Pennsylvania, or indeed from the Federal Government, it is these "harmless" German Seventh-day Baptists. Persecuted in their "Vaterland," they left their homes and their kindred, to seek an asylum in the wilds of America, where they might "sit under their own vine and fig-tree, and worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences," there "being none to make them afraid;" and arrivad at Boston, early in the last century; but suffering from the rigor of the Puritan dynasty, they, on assurances of perfect religious freedom, removed, in 1720, to Pennsylvania, then commonly called Quaker Valley. They settled in the interior of the Province, and were among the first pioneers who penetrated the wilds beyond the Schuylkill. As a quiet and industrious people, they improved the country, and made "the wilderness blossom as the rose;" and from the earliest period of their occupation of the soil, they have rendered important services to the country.

Regarding conflict with arms as unbecoming the Christian profession, still they were ever the advocates of equal rights, and succored the struggle for "Liberty and Independence," to an extent no other denomination, as a denomination, can boast. During the French War, (the war of 1756,) the doors of their whole establishment at Ephrata, then their only settlement, were thrown open, as a refuge to the scattered inhabitants of Paxton and Tulpehocka, the extreme frontiers, from the incursions of the hostile Indians—all of whom were received and entertained by the Society, without charge, during all the period of danger and alarm; upon hearing of which, the Royal Government sent a company of Infantry from Philadelphia, to protect that retreat. At this seat of learning and piety, the Declaration of Independence was translated into seven different languages, by Peter Miller, to whom it was sent for that purpose, at the suggestion of Charles Thompson, the distinguished Secretary of the Continental Congress, to be forwarded to the different Courts of Europe. After the battle of Brandywine, in the year 1777, the whole establishment was again thrown open to receive the wounded American soldiers, sent thither by Washington, himself; great numbers of whom (400 to 500) were taken to that place, on wagons, a distance of 60 or 70 miles; were nursed, fed, and comforted under their sufferings, and one hundred and fifty to two hundred of whom, who sunk under their wounds and camp fever, had their dying eyes closed by the pious hands of the brethren and sisters, and were interred in Mount Zion Cemetery, where their mouldering bodies still repose.

These are some of the services and sacrifices which the German Seventh-day Baptists made for the cause of civil and religious liberty. Their only reward has been persecution. They have never received—they never asked—any thing at the hands of Government, but liberty of conscience and equality of civil rights. They ask for no exclusive privileges. They disclaim all right of human government to exercise authority over, or fetter in the least, the religious rights of any being. While, in civil affairs, they respect "the powers that be," and strive "to obey those in authority," yet, they contend for the indefeasible right of observing the laws of God, as declared in His Word, without abridgement therefrom, in their civil rights. They recognize the laws of the land in secular matters, and honor the laws of God, and God alone, in religious faith and practice. These are the inalienable rights of all the members of the Republic. There are rights reserved, by the people, to themselves, in the formation of the Government; which they consider no power can legitimately wrest from them.

It remains to be seen, whether the State of Pennsylvania, in this enlightened day—whether the present Legislature, will endorse and continue the bigoted intolerance which the Act of April 22d, 1794, inflicts on that people, and persevere in their stringent efforts to crush an humble and harmless band of disciples of the lowly Jesus, who conscientiously endeavor to do the will of God their Maker. We do hope that the present Legislature will not rise, without displaying a magnanimity, commensurate with the enlarged policy of her sister States, above alluded to, in reference to this matter, and wipe out, the injustice inflicted on the seventh-day people, and at the same time remove the disgrace of intolerance from our institutions.

Commending this important matter, in this brief manner, to the members of the Legislature, and trusting to their patriotism, I close by the earnest, yet respectful admonition: Do unto these perseeuted brethren, as you would others should do nnto you in like circumstances.

A GRAVE PRESENTMENT.

The following extract from the report of the Grand Jury of the city of Albany, N. Y., may suggest profitable reflections. It is rather mortifying, we confess, to have a common method of raising money for benevolent purposes represented as "originating" lotteries and raffling. But if the facts justify such a representation, it is time the matter were understood, and the evil reformed.

GRAND JURY ROOM, Jan. 12, 1849.

The Grand Jury of the city of Albany respectfully submit, That a practice exists in this city, which, while those who are engaged in it may not be aware of it, is a violation of the law, and in its tendency is so manifestly evil that they cannot refrain from presenting it. We refer to the disposition of property by private lotteries. The practice, originating in the fairs connected with the charitable objects of the various religious societies of our city, has come to be indulged in by the respectable merchants, for the disposition of their costly goods—artists, for the disposition of their works—booksellers, of expensive and elegant books—jewellers, of their wares—and extending downward to small grog-shops, in the disposition of different and cheaper articles, fitted to the tastes and fancies of those who resort there. While the Grand Jury regard this practice as a palpable violation of the law, yet the benevolent motives from which many engage in it, have induced them to refrain from preferring bills against any. It might be unwise, without previous admonition, to select any individuals from the great number engaged in it for punishment. It is therefore deemed just that the evil be brought publicly to the notice of all, before setting in motion the machinery of the law for its suppression, that the good may be admonished to refrain from it, and those who pursue it for personal gain may be warned that to continue it would call down upon them the penalties denounced by the statutes against them.

"WHO IS ON THE LORD'S SIDE?"

This question is a trite one. It was originally proposed in seriousness, to be answered, not in word, but in practice. It is now often asked from the pulpit, and in our social religious meetings; and the response expected, is a short public speech—a repetition of some matter-of-course confessions, which mean everything in general, but nothing in particular—a confession that we are great sinners, &c., while, if our brethren or our consciences accuse us of any one sin, we readily deny or excuse it. We confess that we love God, yet continue in practice to deny his authority—to disobey him. Many are on the Lord's side to speak for him; but who to act for him? Many are on the Lord's side to commend his precepts; but who to obey them? Many there are to eulogize his meekness, love, benevolence, self-denial, and charity; but who to imitate them? Reader! be not deceived; the Lord knoweth all that is in thine heart, and taketh cognizance of all thy ways. He says unto thee, "If thou love me, keep my commandments." And again, "If any man will be my disciple, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." GORDON.

MYSTIC VALE, March 29th, 1849.

MISSION TO CENTRAL AFRICA.—The Missionary Journal publishes the report of a Committee of the Southern Baptist Missionary Board, recommending the organization of a mission in Central Africa. Two persons have offered themselves for the mission, and there seems a good prospect that the enterprise will be undertaken. Should the Board determine to establish the mission, the Committee recommend that the missionaries, whom they may appoint, should sail to some port on the coast of Africa; and there decide, whether to take an overland route to the Niger, or proceed down the coast to the mouth of the River, and ascend it until they reach a suitable place for location.

EMIGRANT CHRISTIANS AT THE WEST.—Under the head of "A Painful Subject," the Puritan speaks of "the apostacy of emigrant professors as the common complaint of Western missionaries," and says that "in many cases the missionaries avow that their work would be comparatively easy, if the ungodly lives of back-sliding professors were not in their way." So great is the evil at the present moment, that the Home Missionary "affectionately and earnestly calls upon Presbyteries and Associations at the East to bring up the subject in their deliberative meetings," and remarks that "they are likely to have no topic of greater importance to occupy their discussions and their prayers."

ENGLISH BISHOPS AND ROMAN CARDINALS.—The English Bishops, says the N. Y. Observer, receive much larger salaries than the Roman Cardinals. Some years ago Parliament reduced their salaries. The Archbishop of Canterbury now receives £15,000, equal to $75,000; the Archbishop of York £10,000; the Bishop of London £10,000; the Bishop of Durham £8,000, &c. The lowest salary of a Bishop was fixed at £4,000, equal to $20,000. At the same time, 2,000 clergymen of the Church of England have incomes under £100 a year; and some as low as £50, and even £20. The Cardinals at Rome receive each $4,000 a year.

DENOMINATIONS IN ENGLAND.—Some of the most prominent, aside from the national establishment, are, according to a correspondent of the Watchman and Reflector, Independents, with chapels, 1920; Baptists, 1450; Wesleyans, 3,000; Primitive Methodists, 1420; Papists, 534. In Scotland, Free Church, 847; Presbyterians, various, 579; Congregationalists, 141; Baptists, 120; Papists, 80. Neither in England nor Scotland do Papists hold any comparison with the prominent dissenters as a body, and either of them singly exceed them greatly in numbers.

FIRST CHURCH IN GENESEE.—From a letter of Eld. James Bailey, dated Little Genesee, March 24, we copy the following: "For a number of weeks past, the Church in this place has been enjoying a season of revival, in which most of the members have been quickened and comforted. We also hope that several have passed from death unto life. Seven have been baptized, and become members of the Church. There are some others of whom we have hope, that they have been born of God."

REMOVAL OF MADISON UNIVERSITY.—It is said that Chancellor Walworth has given it as his opinion, that there are no legal obstacles to prevent the removal of Madison University to the city of Rochester. He also gives it as his opinion, that the Baptist Education Society of the State of New York are equally free to remove to that city with their property. His opinions are said to be supported by an elaborate and exceedingly able argument.

MUNIFICENCE.—The Boston Atlas states that the Rev. Charles Avery, of Alleghany City, has given a lot of ground on Library street, in that city, worth $2,000, and has put under contract a building worth $10,000, for the benefit of the colored Wesleyan Methodists. The building is intended to be used for a church, college, and primary school. It is the intention of the donor that the highest branches of education shall be taught.

ELD. ALFRED B. BURDICK requests his correspondents to address him at Westerly, R. I.

DECLINE OF INFANT SPRINKLING.

The inconsistency of denying the doctrine of baptismal regeneration, and yet advocating the practice of infant sprinkling, is the subject of a long article in the high-church Episcopal paper published in this city. In that part of the article which treats of the consequences of this inconsistency, we find the following statement relative to the decline of infant sprinkling, which is calculated to suggest serious reflections:—

> "It is demonstrable from facts and figures, that, if infant baptism grow as rapidly into disuse among Presbyterians for the time to come as it has done for fifty years past, one hundred years hence the Presbyterian Church as a pœdobaptist society will exist no more. It is already, as we have called it, a semi-Baptist denomination. In the Presbytery of St. Louis the number of adults baptized the last year wanted but eight, to be equal to that of baptized infants; that of Cincinnati wanted but twenty-two; that of New Brunswick, including Princeton, wanted but twelve; the adults being 153, the infants 165.
> "The Baptists see distinctly that infant baptism cannot be maintained, and is not worth maintaining, on the popular grounds adduced by Presbyterians in its defense. In fact, they see that, separated from regeneration, it ceases to be a sacrament; and not knowing "a more excellent way," and laying themselves the stress which Holy Scripture lays upon the ordinance, they will stand firm, and must necessarily increase by continual accessions from the Presbyterians, who will find it more and more out of their power to resist the encroachment."

DANE COUNTY, WISCONSIN.—A correspondent of the Morning Star gives the following account of the physical and religious condition of the County in which the Seventh-day Baptist Church of Albion is located. We copy it for the benefit of any who may be looking to the west as a place of residence:—

> "Dane County contains 35 townships, each six miles square, and a population of some 15,000 inhabitants. The soil is very fertile. There are thousands of acres of entered land, of the choicest quality, unoccupied, as yet. In this County are the four lakes. In the center of the County, at the capital, is a University, which has just been opened. A railroad route to connect with the Chicago railroad has been laid out, and the grading is to be commenced in the spring. There are great inducements for emigrants, but more particularly for ministers. The right kind of ministers are very scarce. I believe there are only 22 in the County, and only about 20 evangelical churches—11 Baptist and 9 Pedo-Baptist. But it may be said, There is not room for more ministers. And there is not for the aristocratic and opulent, but plenty of room for those who really care for souls. Dane County really needs 10 or 12 humble and devoted ministers. The people need to be visited and looked after. Many ministers here do not care for the flock. They preach perhaps twice on the Sabbath, and the rest of the week are about the secular concerns of life."

"I NEVER READ A NEWSPAPER."—A gentleman in London, in conversation with a Christian minister, found him ignorant of the great events that were transpiring on the Continent, and upon expressing his surprise, the minister answered, "I never read a newspaper," seeming to think this a thing quite beneath his profession. He was one of those who, because he must preach the Gospel, thought he must have nothing to do with the revolutions, reforms, and stirring scenes of this world. And so he sunk into an ignorance that unfitted him to preach the Gospel. Such a living above the world is a poor qualification for any duty. Better come down and dwell amid the realities and activities of life, and gather motives and materials therefrom for doing the Lord's work.

All ministers and people in this country read a newspaper, but should some Christians be questioned by their minister about the moral changes of our own and other countries, they might be driven to the confession, "I do not read a religious paper." It is a shame to any Christian to be ignorant of the progress and triumphs of Chiristianity in this age of the world. And yet he will be ignorant if he does not read a religious newspaper. [Bost. Rep.

TEMPERANCE IN MAINE.—The editor of the N. Y. Tribune, who has recently returned from a tour in Maine, says: "We were surprised and delighted at the general prevalence and onward march of Temperance in that State. We saw no man even partially intoxicated during ten days' constant intercourse with the people of her largest towns and most traveled thoroughfares. In no tavern was any liquor displayed, while many of the best are thoroughly purified from the poison. Nearly every where what grog-selling is still prosecuted is under the ban of the law, and the enforcement of that law is becoming more and more strenuous."

AN UNKNOWN CITY BROUGHT TO LIGHT.—The Courier des Etats Unis states that an ancient city has been accidentally discovered in Asia Minor, situated on the borders of the old kingdoms of Pontus, Cappadocia, and Galatia. Seven temples and about two hundred houses have been found, although in a partially ruined condition. Dr. Brenner, who has visited these structures, has not, as yet, been able to find any inscription, or bas-relief, that could furnish the least trace to the name or history of this city, situated in the midst of extensive excavations, which no traveler has been known ere now to visit.

A work on the Geology and Natural History of New York, authorized by the Legislature, has, it is said, already cost the State four hundred and thirteen thousand dollars, and is likely to cost much more before it is finished.

The property question in dispute between the northern and southern branches of the Methodist Church will probably be submitted to arbitration.

The Girard College is said to be in a most flourishing condition. It now contains 208 orphans.

CALIFORNIA ITEMS.

The New Orleans Picayune has received papers from California to the 25th of January, (thirty days later,) from which the following items are gleaned :—

A new paper has been started at San Francisco, called the Alta California, edited by Edw. Gilbert, Edw. C. Kemble and Geo. C. Hubbard. It is creditable to the American press, the tone of its articles being much above what we might have looked for.

The winter has been a very severe one throughout the country, but we have no account of distress among the miners.

The papers give the proceedings of several meetings of citizens to consider of the necessity of forming a Provisional Government and appointing delegates to a Convention for this purpose. This Convention was to have been held on the 5th day of March, but in order that all parts of the Territory might be fairly represented, and to give time to Congress to provide a Territorial Government, the day for the Convention to assemble has been changed to the 1st day of May next.

The latest news which had been received at San Francisco on the 25th January, reached there that day by the American schooner Swallow, fifteen days from Mazatlan. Thereby the Californians learned the election of Gen. Taylor.

Gen. Lane was in San Francisco, on his way to Oregon. He took the southern route from Santa Fé to Los Angelos.

Gold is scarcely mentioned in the papers received from California.

The Alta California copies a paragraph about a meeting of sempstresses in New York, complaining of their hard work and poor pay, and comments thereon as follows: "We would advise a colony of these same working girls to come to California as soon as possible. They can earn from $5 to $35 per day in the manufacture of clothing; and if they are anxious to do still better than that, they will find hundreds of young, good-looking, and enterprising men ready to embrace an opportunity which promises a good wife."

COL. FREMONT'S CALIFORNIA EXPEDITION.—Last fall Col. Fremont, a son in-law of Senator Benton, left the State of Missouri, with thirty odd men, for California, intending to cross the Rocky Mountains at some point among the head springs of the Rio del Norte, and ascertain by surveys whether there is a pass thence over the mountains to the waters of the Colorado, and a practicable route in that direction for a great national highway to the Pacific. On arriving at California, on the Pacific, it was the intention of Col. Fremont and his party to establish themselves in a permanent settlement some where on the Sacramento. Mrs. Fremont, with her brother-in-law, Mr. Jacobs, left New York in the last steamer for Chagres, en route for San Francisco, with the expectation of meeting Col. Fremont at that point, in April.

But last week a telegraphic dispatch was received at New York, stating, that letters had been received at Independence (Mo.) from Taos, New Mexico, giving information that the winter on the mountains has been unusually severe; that Col. Fremont, while passing through one mountain gorge lost 130 mules in one night; that he was then left to make his way on foot; and, determining it was impossible to proceed farther, finally dispatched three men to seek some settlement. Succor not arriving in 20 days, Fremont started for Taos, distant 350 miles, where he arrived in nine days. Major Beale immediately dispatched a party of dragoons, with mules and provisions to relieve Fremont's party. Fremont was much emaciated, but accompanied the expedition. The sufferings of the party are represented as having been very great, having even been forced to the extremity of feeding upon one another. Later reports assert that all of Fremont's party perished except the Colonel, who is badly frost-bitten.

The friends of Col. Fremont do not fully believe this report. They think that the animals were lost, and that the men suffered much, perhaps some of them were lost, but that they were too well provisioned to have occasion for feeding upon each other.

FROM THE RIO GRANDE.—A telegraphic dispatch to the N. Y. papers, dated at New Orleans, March 30, says that the steamer Globe has arrived from Brazos Santiago, bringing later dates from the Rio Grande. The most important advice received by her is the intelligence of the breaking up of Col. Webb's California expedition, and that eight of their number have been swept off by the cholera, on the Rio Grande, four of whom were from New York. The Globe brought eighteen of the company to New Orleans. Audibon, a son of the eminent American Naturalist, whose company embarked from this city in January, had been robbed of $12,000 in gold, $4,000 being subsequently recovered from the robbers. Messrs. Webb and Audibon remained behind in order to recover the residue of the money. There is much sickness reported along the Brazos.

LOSS OF A WHOLE FAMILY BY A FLOOD.—The Keokuk (Iowa) papers contain accounts of the loss of a whole family by the breaking up of the ice in the Des Moines River, which formed a gorge and caused the water to back up at a great distance and overflow farms and houses. Two families, named Frederick and Cross, finding themselves suddenly surrounded by water, attempted to make their escape in a canoe to the highlands; but as the canoe was too small, it was determined that Frederick and his family should go on first, while Cross, his wife, and two children—one four and the other one and a half years old—remained on a log. Frederick and family reached the shore nearly frozen. A man named Colvin then took the canoe and went to the relief of Cross and family. After taking them into the canoe he set out for the shore. The canoe upset, and Colvin took the children, and by holding on to the branches, with their feet in the water, all kept afloat. Although the shore was within hailing distance, and their situation was made known to the people, all efforts to save them were unavailing. Cross and wife, after remaining an hour and a half in this situation, sunk. The children froze to death in Colvin's arms. He was relieved by a float constructed of two cabin doors.

COLORED MEN IN PARIS.—Robert Walsh, in one of his letters to Littell's Living Age, writes:

"The black man—the ebony—in the delegation of the Antilles, who sits in the center of the Montagnards in the Assembly, was the servant of a white General resident in the capital. An intimte acquaintance of the master told me, a few days ago, that the Representative had not resigned his domestic post, whether from personal attachment or prudential motives, he would deserve credit for either. A gentleman from New Orleans, on a visit to Paris, relates to me that, about a fortnight since, while seated in a side box of the first tier of the grand opera, he distinguished a colored family in the one immediately opposite; by his opera glass he discovered that the head of it, whom he recognized, distinguished him, and was about to come around to him by the lobby. A feeling natural to a southern American, induced him to prefer that the interview should not be in the box which he occupied. He met the visitor in the lobby; the latter grasped his hand, and reminded him that he had been his tailor in New Orleans. 'I retired,' he added, 'with a good property; we are well settled here; that's my box once a week; we shall be happy to see you at our apartments.'"

INSTANCE OF HONESTY.—The editor of a N. Y. paper says he has been shown an order on Bell, McLaughlin & Co., Agents of the Bank of British North America in this City, for £3, in favor of Mrs. Arnett, widow of Geo. Arnett, who died here about 22 years ago. The money was forwarded by Mrs. O'Neil, widow of Chas. O'Neil, of Navan, County Meath, Ireland, who died about 18 years ago. The money had been lent to O'Neil by Arnett, 30 years since, when both of them were single men. Arnett came to this country, married, and here died. O'Neil died in Ireland 4 years afterwards, leaving his widow in very narrow circumstances and with many debts to discharge. Since that time she has continually labored to repay every thing he owed, and finally, after the lapse of 30 years, returns this loan of £3, which her husband borrowed from a friend before their marriage. The letter enclosing the order was written by the curate of the parish in Ireland, to Mr. John Fitz Patrick, of this City, at whose house Mrs. Arnett is residing.

AMERICAN PORK.—Last week, says an English paper, the steamship Niagara brought, among other goods, an importation of fresh American pork, to the extent of 200 pigs. The way this has been accomplished was by packing the carcases in ice, no salt having been used. The Niagara left Boston on the 28th ultimo., and was about eleven days in making her passage. To show the extent of the supply of American provisions, we may state that at one sale last week, and that not a very important one, 200 tons of butter, 179 tons of lard, and 65 tons of cheese were disposed of.

SUMMARY.

A telegraphic dispatch dated Louisville, March 25, says: "A number of steamers have arrived at this port from New Orleans, with the cholera on board, which is said to be again quite prevalent in that city. Fourteen deaths had occurred on board the steamer Bride, and many more were still sick. The George Washington lost 15 of her passengers previous to her arrival at Memphis. On board the Creole 3 deaths had occurred."

On the 26th of March the boilers in Fife's cotton factory in Allegany City, Pa., exploded, carrying away the roof of the building, and throwing the boilers 40 feet. Five bodies were dug out of the ruins, but there were others badly injured. Such was the terrible force of the explosion, that five dwellings situated near the factory were destroyed!

The Gloucester News says that over 80 vessels engaged in the fishing business have commenced their voyages from that port this season, and there remain about 70 more to be fitted out. The fleet will employ about 1,500 men and boys. At Annisquam, from 35 to 40 vessels will be engaged in the business, and probably about 60 vessels from Rockport.

At Montreal on the 24th a verdict of $18,000 damages was given against the proprietors of the North Upper Canada stages, for injuries sustained by Mr. Russell, in consequence of the intoxication of a driver. He was precipitated into the water, which resulted in the loss of his feet and hands.

The recent Report of the Clerk of Otsego county in this State, for the year 1848, gives the number of marriages in the county at 295; births 686; (males 391; females 395;) deaths 436—of which 40 males and 54 females died of consumption, or 94 in all, from this one disease.

The different churches in Springfield propose to raise the sum of $500, to purchase a female slave with her two children at Richmond, Va. She is the daughter of a colored printer at Springfield, who has not the means to procure her freedom.

The Newport (R. I.) News says that a worthy widow in that town has received a letter postmarked at Boston, enclosing $200, which the writer says was due to her husband on an old unsettled account. She has not the remotest idea from whom it came.

The Pope designs nominating a Bishop for San Francisco, says the Journal du Havre. The dignity will be conferred upon a French Ecclesiastic, who will be accompanied by several missionaries.

The steamers Dr. Franklin and Atharanth came in collision near the mouth of the Illinois, March 26, by which the latter was sunk. The loss is put down at $30,000, on which there was a slight insurance.

The New Orleans Bulletin of the 19th of March announces the arrival at Panama of a brig from San Francisco, which reports $5,000,000 of gold at that port to be shipped on board the steamer California.

There were 13 cases of cholera and 9 deaths at St. Louis, during the week ending 12th of March. At Clarksville, Tenn., up to the 20th, 17 cases and 4 deaths had occurred.

The Jefferson Medical College, in Philadelphia, graduated 188 young doctors last week.

A telegraphic dispatch, dated Wheeling, Va., March 30, says that the steamer Virginia, while on her way to Steubenville, about twelve miles above Wheeling, burst her boiler, near a place called Rush Run. Three persons, were instantly killed by the disaster, while thirteen are missing, and twelve badly wounded. Nearly all on board suffered more or less injury. It was a most fearful explosion. The boat is a perfect wreck.

The Louisville Democrat says that from Tuesday, the 13th, to Monday, 19th ult., twenty-seven deaths have occurred among the troops now stationed at Jefferson Barracks. The informant states that the fatal disease, in all its symptoms, was that of cholera.

Mrs. Farnham has issued a circular containing the articles of the "California Association of American Women." The ship Angelique, in which passage has been engaged, will be ready to sail about the 15th of April. The price of a share, including passage, freight, and medical attendance, is $250.

A correspondent of the Day Book, writing from Grand Rapids, Wisconsin, March 2, says: "Three bloody murders were committed here a few days since, in a drunken row between a band of Pottawattomies and some of the Menomonies living here. Two Pottawattomies, a squaw and a warrior, and one young Menomonie were the victims."

Iron and coal are found in abundance near Tuscaloosa, Alabama, and a company of practical iron-workers from Tennessee are about commencing operations there. Coal has long been dug there for home use, but rudely and unskillfully.

MARRIED,

In Hopkinton, R. I., on the 30th of November, 1848, by Eld. Henry Clarke, Mr. WASHINGTON DANIELS, of East Lyme, Ct., to Miss ELIZABETH GREEN, of Hopkinton, R I.

In Hopkinton, R. I., on the 23d of March, by Eld. Henry Clarke, Mr. ARCHIBALD G. COON, of Brookfield, N. Y., and Miss PHEBE A. CRANDALL, of the former place.

DIED,

In South Kingston, R. I., Mrs. SARAH T. HOLLAND, widow of Mr. Henry H. Holland, in the 77th year of her age. The deceased was the mother of ten children, and leaves seventy-seven grand-children. She was a member of the Baptist Church, was faithful unto death, and we trust has gone to receive a crown of life. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

In the town of Lima, Wis., on the 16th of Feb., 1849, of a lingering disease, ALBERT H. TRUMAN, second son of John and Maria Truman, aged 20 years. Also, on the same day, an infant daughter of said John and Maria Truman.

In Wirt, Allegany Co., N. Y., March 12th, of scrofula, WILLIAM CLARK, son of Squire P. and Mary Ann Witter, in the 16th year of his age.

Thou art not here—no more to me
 Shall life its former aspect wear;
How dark and dim all things will be,
 Which once appeared so bright and fair!
While Mirth's gay laugh falls on the ear,
 We only feel, Thou art not here.

Thou art not here—and memory dwells
 On each long-treasured look and tone;
And sadly in our bosoms swells
 The bitter sigh o'er joys long flown;
And when Hope whispers words of cheer,
 We but reply, Thou art not here.

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office. It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to GEO. B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

FARM FOR SALE.

THE subscriber offers for sale his farm, situated in the town of Genesee, county of Allegany, N. Y. Said farm codsists of 280 acres of first-rate land, 175 of which is level, ann the remainder gradually rising side-hill; all of which is susceptible of cultivation, mostly adapted to grazing purposes. About 75 acres, however, is a gravely quick soil, as productive of wheat and corn, as any in the southern part of said county. Upon said farm is about 100 acres improvement, two framed barns, and a large two-story framed house, well inclosed, lately built, and conveniently calculated. There are two good wells of water upon said farm, and it is also abundantly supplied with numerous brooks and springs. Said farm is situated in a good neighborhood, and convenient to school, and the central place of business for the western part of said town; and on the main traveled road from Angelica to Smithport. For pleasantness and locality iti s not surpassed by any in the township or vicinity. To those wishing to purchase a good farm, the present opportunity offers rare inducements. The farm will be sold low for cash; or, if desired, by paying one-half of the purchase money down, the balance will be arranged to accommodate purchasers for any reasonable length of credit. A careful view of the premises by a discerning individual, is only requisite to a thorough conviction that an investment made under such favorable terms as the subscriber offers, is but safe and a fair speculation. For farther information, address the subscriber, P. M. at West Genesee, Allegany Co., N. Y., or inquire at his house. JARED MAXSON.

THE BOOK

For every Clergyman—For every School District—For every Educated Man.

"Will not the enlightened and liberal furnish their clergymen with a copy, as an indispensable volume in their libraries?"—Rev. T. H. Gallaudet.

Extract from a Lecture addressed to a Teacher's Institute, by William Russel, Principal of the Merrimack [N. H.] School for Teachers, and formerly Editor of the American Journal of Education:

"The edition of Dr. Webster's Dictionary, revised by Professor Goodrich, I would earnestly recommend to the attention of all teachers who are desirous of becoming fully qualified to give instruction in the English Language. The copious information which that work embodies, on all topics connected with Etymology—the extreme exactness, as well as the number, extent, and fullness of the definitions which it furnishes to every important word, render it a mine of philological wealth to instructors. The volume is, in fact, the teacher's encyclopedia, as well as lexicon, for daily reference. Could a copy of it be provided, as the permanent property of every district school, the effect, as regards the improvement of instruction, would be deeply and extensively felt, in the increased skill of the teacher, and the higher attainments of his pupils, in the most important part of education—the acquisition of an adequate knowledge and proper use of our own language."

"It has come to be a necessity to every educated man."—Lord Brougham

Kitto's Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature.

TO CLERGYMEN AND OTHER STUDENTS OF THE BIBLE.—The undersigned beg leave to ask your attention to the following Work, which they now offer for sale. Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature, in two thick volumes of 1,878 pages royal octavo, beautifully and substantially bound, by JOHN KITTO. D. D., F. S. A., &c., published by MARK H. NEWMAN & Co., 199 Broadway, New York.

This Work contains such information as is indispensable for the right understanding of the Bible and its historical interpretation. It comprehends Criticism, Geography, Natural History, and Antiquities, in all their branches, religious, political, social, and domestic.

The Works of Horne, Calmet, and others, are now found to be wholly inadequate to the wants of the student. Theological science is progressive, as well as every other, and the "old learning" of the "Bible Dictionaries" which have for so long a time been in use, is felt to be unequal to the advancement of mankind at the present time.

The efforts of the German Rationalists, of the Strauss school, to resolve all the facts of Bible History into myths and fables, has awakened a corresponding spirit of research among sound and Christian scholars; a determination to place the Scriptures upon a basis of indisputable evidence. The result has been, the discovery and accumulation of a mass of information from every portion of the field of biblical learning. A multitude of new, striking, and most useful facts have thus been placed at the disposal of the editor of this work. He has accordingly availed himself of all the latest discoveries down to the very year of its publication.

Nor is the Cyclopedia compiled by one man alone. Dr. Kitto distributed the subjects discussed to more than forty different individuals, of the first eminence in those departments. Their names are attached to their articles, and they are thus individually responsible for them. The Natural History of the Bible was written expressly for this work, by two distinguished Naturalists. The Botany of Scripture, by Dr. Royle, of King's College, London. The articles on Scriptural Zoology, by Hamilton Smith, President of the Devon and Cornwall Natural History Society. The articles in the department of Criticism, by Dr. Davidson, Professor of Biblical Literature in the Lancashire Independent College. Those on the Books of the Old and New Testament, by Havernich, Hengstenberg, Dr. Wright, of Dublin, and others.

The articles on the New Testament were furnished by Dr. Tholuck, Dr. Alexander, and others.

Various subjects are discussed, by Dr. John Pye Smith, Dr. Woods, of Andover, and others.

The Scriptural Geography exhibits the results of Dr. Robinson's biblical researches in Palestine.

It will be seen, therefore, that the work is a compilation of biblical learning, by the ablest biblical scholars of the age.

The undersigned ask the attention of students of the Bible to the Cyclopedia, in full confidence that no one acquainted with its character will suffer himself to be without a copy. The low price at which it is offered, (less than half the price of the English edition,) places it within the reach of all.
MARK H. NEWMAN & Co.

NOTICES OF THE CYCLOPEDIA.

From Horne, Author of "Horne's Introduction to the Study of the Scriptures," last edition.

"This Cyclopedia surpasses every Biblical Dictionary which has preceded it, and leaves nothing to be desired in such a work which can throw light on the criticism, interpretation, history, geography, archeology, and physical science of the Bible."

From the Biblical Repertory and Princeton Review.

"Dr. Kitto comes recommended even to those not acquainted with his other writings, by the well-known general facts of his experience and success as a book-maker, and of his long familiarity, in this capacity at least, with Biblical subjects.

"He has boldly and faithfully acted on the principle that such a plan can be worthily executed, in the present state of learning, only by distributing its parts among many hands, and such hands too as have been fitted by anterior experience to perform them most successfully."

From the Biblical Repository.

"The limits of a notice like the present forbid such a description of this learned work as its merits deserve, or sufficient to give the reader a just idea of its plan. We regard it as a most important and practically useful contribution to the cause of sound Biblical learning, and have no doubt that it will soon take the place, in the estimate of scholars, of every compilation of the kind.

"The enlistment of so many scholars in the production of a single work, each one presenting in a brief compass the results of a life-time of research, in precisely the matters where he is most at home, could not fail of enriching it with an amount of learning and scholarship to which, of course, the work of no single mind, however great, could pretend."

From the Methodist Quarterly Review.

"This work was not compiled in the method hitherto usual with works of similar character, namely, on the basis of Calmet and the old learning of his day, with a few shreds of modern discovery interwoven. All the more important articles are written expressly for their present use, not by one individual, but by an arrangement between not less than forty different scholars in Europe and America, all of whom stand high in their several departments."

The Cyclopedia can be ordered through the local Booksellers in every part of the country.

Miscellaneous.

ALL IS ACTION—ALL IS MOTION.

BY J. HAGEN.

All is action, all is motion,
In this mighty world of ours!
Like the current of the ocean,
Man is urged by unseen powers!

Steadily, but strongly moving,
Life is onward evermore;
Still the present is improving
On the age that went before.

Duty points, with out-stretched fingers,
Every soul to actions high;
Woe betide the soul that lingers—
Onward! onward! is the cry.

Though man's foes may seem victorious,
War may waste and famine blight,
Still from out the conflict glorious,
Mind comes forth with added light.

O'er the darkest night of sorrow,
From the deadliest field of strife,
Dawns a clearer, brighter morrow,
Springs a truer, nobler life.

Onward, onward, onward ever!
Human progress none may stay;
All who make the vain endeavor,
Shall like chaff be swept away.

SHIPWRECK—TWO HUNDRED LIVES LOST.

The following are the details of the shipwreck on Long Sands, Essex Coast, Eng., of which a brief account was given in our foreign news last week:—

The vessel lost was the bark Floridian, 500 tons burden, Captain E. D. Whitmore master, from Antwerp. She was the property of Mr. E. D. Hurlbut, of New York, and had been chartered by a German company for the conveyance of emigrants to the United States. She sailed from Antwerp on the previous Sunday, when she left that port and proceeded down the river. She did not, however, finally take her departure from the coast until Tuesday. The number of emigrants that had taken passage by her at Antwerp, and had come on board before her weighing anchor, is stated to have been from 170 to 200. They comprised German agricultural laborers with their wives and families, and many mechanics; among the number on board were from 50 to 60 women, and between 20 and 30 children. The ship was worked by a crew of nearly 20, part of whom were Englishmen, a surgeon being on board. It was late on Tuesday evening when the Floridian put out to sea, at which time the weather was fine. The course taken after clearing the Flemish banks was westward for the Straits of Dover. At midnight the wind shifted round to the S. W., blowing very hard, with a fall of hail and snow, and so heavy was the fall that it became impossible to see the length of the vessel. They tacked ship and bore to the N. W. until four on Wednesday morning, and then altered her course. Daybreak brought fearful weather; the wind had sprung up terrifically, with a great fall of snow and a heavy rolling sea on. At about eight the chief mate expressed some misgivings as to the course they were then pursuing, it being their intention to make for the South Foreland Lights; and calling to the second officer, requested him to take charge of the watch while he went below to look to his directory.

Scarcely had he quited his post before the ship struck with such force that her planks and false keel immediately rushed up alongside. The emigrants hastened on deck in frantic dismay. Within a few moments of the vessel striking, the sea broke into her hull, driving up the hatchways, and sweeping many of the poor creatures overboard, while others were drowned in their berths, being unable to rise from sea sickness. Capt. Whitmore gave orders to his men to launch the boats, which were carried out with dispatch, but they were utterly inefficient for the purpose of saving all on board; they were not capable of containing even one-third of the emigrants. The first boat broke adrift the moment she was launched, and it is said capsized immediately with two men who were in her. The moment the second boat was lowered, the Captain jumped into it with Mrs. Whitmore, his wife. This led to a desperate rush towards the craft. Some 20 or 30 poor creatures, men and women, leaped from the quarter deck of the foundering ship into the boat. The result was, that it also instantly capsized, and the whole party were precipitated overboard and instantly lost.

There being now no possible means of escape left for those on board, the crew took to the rigging, to which they lashed themselves, and upward of 100 of the emigrants congregated on the quarter deck. Here they had not been more than an hour, before the ship broke in two amidships. The mainmast fell over the side, and a tremendous sea carried away the whole of the quarter deck, with the mass of human beings on it. By great efforts, 8 or 10 were rescued by the men, who had secured themselves in the rigging. The moment the ship broke in two, her cargo floated, and men, women, and children were floating about on the packages. Ere night had set in, however, all had disappeared. The then survivors, about 12 in number, continued in the rigging of the foremast, (which, with the forepart of the vessel, was all that remained of the wreck,) the whole of the night, enduring the greatest suffering. The sea kept breaking over them, and the cold being most intense, rendered their condition the most painful.

When Thursday morning broke, it was discovered that six of the poor fellows had died, apparently from cold, in the course of the night, and their bodies were dangling in the rigging. All that day the same fearful weather continued, and no aid could be rendered those who still floated in the rigging. They could see vessels passing at a distance, but they were too far off for the crews to observe their situation. Thursday night and a great portion of Friday passed away, yet no help came. Only four now remained, three sailors and one passenger, the other two were frozen to death in the course of the preceding day and night. About seven on the third evening the revenue cutter Petrel came to the aid of the survivors. The crew belonging to her, by direction of the commanding officer, lowered their boat and pushed off to the spot—the heavy surf beating round the wreck in such a manner as to render the running of the cutter alongside the wreck exceedingly dangerous. After considerable difficulty the poor fellows were gotten off and taken on board the cutter, where every thing was done for their comfort. The names of the seamen saved are Henry Hill, William Harry, and a Swede, name unknown. The fourth is one of the emigrants, apparently a mechanic. He has been deranged ever since he has been landed.

SLAVE MARKETS AT THE SOUTH-WEST.

The following is an extract of a letter from Memphis, Tenn., to the Syracuse Star:—

Perhaps I have not given Memphis all the credit it deserves as a business place, and will add, that here is also a great market for slaves. They are brought from the more northern slave States, and here sold to the negro traders, to supply the demand of the newer and more sickly portions of the South. The average life of slave laborers on sugar plantations does not exceed five years—consequently, new supplies are in constant demand.

There are two slave markets or pens, in the city, where human beings are confined like cattle, and exposed for examination and sale. They are here, and also at New Orleans, arranged upon the side-walk for show, precisely as a merchant would expose his goods, or a mechanic his wares. Negro auctions, where men, women, and children, are sold in the streets to the highest bidder, are of almost every-day occurrence. Never shall I forget one of the sales that I attended. A large lot was offered, and the auctioneer stated, by way of excuse for their travel-worn appearance, that they had "walked from Virginia, a distance of 700 miles, and were somewhat tired—but if he could keep them a week to recruit, he would make them look $100 apiece better." Among the number was a slave mother, and her five young children. After being sold herself, she stood holding her master's horse in the crowd, and with all a mother's anguish depicted in her countenance, she was watching the sale of her children, as one by one they found an owner and were taken from her, to go she knew not whither. I could not repress the tear of sympathy as I looked upon her, and remembered, too, that this scene was one of every-day occurrence in this fair land. I may possibly be laughed at for my sensibility, by those who think the slave almost destitute of humanity; but I saw enough in the hour I stood there to show that they are not the soulless beings they are sometimes represented. Would to Heaven they were, for then they would not feel the wrongs which are so cruelly heaped upon them. I fancied many in the crowd looked ashamed of the transaction in which they were engaged.

CHLOROFORM APPLIED TO THE SKIN.

Some cases have recently occurred in which fatal consequences were attributed to the inhalation of chloroform; surgeons have been turning their attention of late to the employment of this powerful sedative locally, in order to deprive of sensation parts intended to be operated upon. A very interesting experiment of this kind was made at the Royal Cornwall Infirmary, as related by the Cornwall Royal Gazette, by Mr. Spry, on a young man from the parish of Breage, who had been suffering for seven years from a very painful tumor in the sole of his left foot. The pain had been gradually increasing with the size of the swelling since December last, so that he could not make a single step without greatly aggravating his sufferings. Folded lint saturated with chloroform was applied to the tumor, over which a piece of oiled silk was placed, to prevent its too rapid evaporation, and a few turns of a roller were made around the foot to retain the lint in contact with the skin. After a quarter of an hour had elapsed, more chloroform was added to the lint, but the quantity used was rather less than two teaspoonfuls; and in about half an hour from its first application, it was found that the skin, which would not before bear the slightest touch without pain, might now be compressed with impunity. The operation was then proceeded with, the patient betraying no sign of suffering, either by the retraction of the foot, or by the expression of the countenance; and he afterwards assured the gentlemen present, that the only part of the process at which he felt any pain, was in the deepest part of the incision, but that it was so little as not to be worth talking about. Every one is aware of the peculiar sensitiveness of the skin of the sole, and therefore this case was selected as a fair test of chloroform efficacy when applied externally. The result was highly satisfactory, and the poor man looked on with the greatest composure, not moving a limb while the diseased part was being removed, although he had been taught to expect, before coming to the Infirmary, that the operation would occasion great pain, and perhaps even a locked-jaw.

EXTRAORDINARY CIRCUMSTANCE.

The Hannibal (Mo.) Journal has a fearful story, to the effect that a Mr. Weatherford, sheriff of Schuyler county, in that State, and ex-officio collector of the county revenue, conceiving a design to cheat the commonwealth out of some $2,200, which he had collected—left the money in the care of his wife, part in silver and part in paper, with the declaration that he would be gone several days, and enjoined upon her that she should permit no one to stay all night at the house during his absence.

At night a traveler, rather an aged man, applied for entertainment. The woman, at first refusing, under instructions of her husband, was finally persuaded to permit him to remain.

About eleven or twelve o'clock the same night, some persons demanded entrance into the house, and upon being permitted to come in, they were found to be disguised as negroes, and immediately demanded of the woman money, which they said they knew was in the house. The woman handed them the paper money. They told her there was also silver money, which she must surrender. She replied that she would go up stairs (where the traveler was lodging) and get it. She informed the old gentleman of the state of things below.

He told her to take one of two pistols which he had—to put the money into her apron, with the pistol concealed behind it, and when either of the robbers came forward to take it, to fire, and he would serve another of them with the remaining pistol. She did as instructed, and one of the men fell dead at her feet. The old man fired and killed another, and the third made his escape. Upon examination, it was found that the guilty husband had fallen by the hand of his own wife.

GOSSIP-MONGERS.

There is a description of trade, we believe confined to China, and highly characteristic of its social condition. The Chinese name, which literally signifies gossip-monger, may sound rather new to British ears in connection with a paying vocation; yet such it is, and it is handsomely remunerative. A number of elderly ladies, generally widows, make it their business to collect gossip, on dits, and stories of all sorts, with which they repair to the houses of the rich, announcing their arrival by beating a drum, which they carry for that purpose, and offer their services to amuse the ladies of the family. When it is reccollected that shopping, public assemblies, and even morning calls, are all but forbidden to the beauty and fashion of China by their country's notions of both propriety and feet, some idea may be formed of the welcome generally given to these reporting dames. They are paid according to the time employed, at the rate of about half-a-crown an hour, and are besides in the frequent receipt of presents—their occupation affording many opportunities of making themselves generally useful in matters of courtship, rivalry, and etiquette. On these accounts they generally retire from business in easy circumstances, but are said never to do so unless obliged by actual infirmity; and the Chinese remark that theirs is the only profession to which its practitioners are uniformly attached by inclination.

Patent Flour Barrel Manufactory.—Messrs. Humphrey & Dodge having secured the right for the State of New York, to use improved patent machinery for the construction of barrels, have established an extensive manufactory at Kasoag, Oswego county, on the head waters of Fish Creek, in the town of Williamstown. It employs from 50 to 75 men, and turns out easily 400 flour barrels in a day. They are manufactured entirely by machinery, each stave taking, in the process of manufacturing, the same position it occupies in the barrel, when set up; consequently all the barrels must be precisely alike. All the staves are of the same width, and after they have been seasoned, are passed through the finishing machine, where they are planed, joined, crozed, and champered. The planing gives the barrel a beautiful appearance; the croze is similar to the croze for tight work, and the chime is left thick and strong. The heading is also passed through machinery, which gives it the same accuracy as the staves. Oswego affords the largest market for flour barrels in the world, requiring for its own use at least a million of barrels per annum, beside the ordinary Canadian demand and the demand for other Lake ports on the American side.

Funeral Ceremony over a live Man.—It is said that the Emperor Charles V., after his abdication and retirement to a monastery, where he put his body to torture for the good of his soul, ordered his tomb to be erected, and every preparation to be made, and Charles was clothed in the habiliments of the grave. In slow and solemn procession did the monks and his domestics wind their way through the cloisters into the chapel, a dim light being cast on the scene from the black tapers which each carried; after them followed Charles in his shroud. The service for the dead was chanted, and Charles joined with agonizing earnestness in the prayers which were offered up for the repose of his soul, mingling his tears with those shed by his attendants, as if they were celebrating a real funeral—the event which was soon to follow cast its shadow upon them! At length he was solemnly laid in his coffin, and the office for the dead being concluded, the ceremony was closed by the coffin being sprinkled with holy water in the usual form. Then all the attendants retiring, the doors of the chapel were shut, and Charles left to his own meditations.

Liquor and Tobacco.—It is a singular fact, that man is the only creature that delights in tobacco and ardent spirits—he is the only creature that will even taste them; so far is he placed above or so much does he sink himself below the brute creation. Few ever learn to use tobacco in any way, without at first suffering the most distressing sickness; and were it called medicine, and administered by a physician's advice, a second dose would never be very willingly taken. John Q. Adams says: "I have often wished that every individual of the human race afflicted with this artificial passion, could prevail upon himself to try but for three months the experiment which I have—giving up smoking and chewing—I am sure it would turn every acre of tobacco land into a wheat field, and add five years of longevity to the average of human life."

◆

Teeth Blacking.—In the east of Asia, where black teeth are admired, from China to Kamtckatka, the profession of a tooth-stainer is quite as extensively followed, and in no less repute, than that of the European dentist, whose place it occupies. Dental diseases are by no means of such frequent occurence in those regions as among the nations of Europe; and physicians have ascribed the fact to the simpler diet of the people, and the thoughtless, indolent current in which their lives flow on. The blacking business is practiced by both sexes, and some of its chiefs enjoy considerable reputation and emolument from the permanence of their dye, and the jetty polish imparted by their art; the secrets of which are kept with oriental tenacity.

Drinking Like a Horse.—The Christian Register relates, that at a funeral in Boston, about fifty years ago, when it was the custom to have refreshments (spirits of some kind) on funeral occasions, the Rev. John Murray, Universalist, declined partaking, and being urged, he said, "No—but when I do drink I shall drink like a horse." Shortly after, some of his friends said to him, "Your remark, sir, has caused much surprise, and many have expressed their opinion of the impropriety of an expression of that kind from you on this solemn occasion." "Why," said the Rev. gentleman, "I always drink like a horse—for a horse drinks only water, and leaves off when he has enough."

The way to attain strength and power of endurance, is to be strictly temperate in all things, to avoid all debilitating stimulents, such as alcoholic drinks, tea and coffee, tobacco, &c.; to rise early, to take an abundance of exercise in the open air to bathe often and observe the most rigid system of cleanliness, and abstain from all licentious practices.

VARIETY.

The Salem Gazette records an instance of honesty which occurred recently in that vicinity. Mr. Edward Lamson was compelled to suspend business in Salem in 1834, paying his creditors but 62 1-2 per cent. He is now a partner in the firm of Twombly & Lamson, Boston, and has placed in the hands of M. Sheppard, Esq., his late assignee, a sum sufficient to pay the balance of his former liabilities, together with compound interest to the present time.

Colonel James Davis, of Franklin county, Tenn., died on February 21st, aged 93. He was born in Albemarle county, Va., entered the revolutionary army at the commencement of the war, distinguished himself at Brandywine, was made a captive with the few men remaining of his regiment at Germantown, and was in prison a year, after which, on his discharge, he again entered the service, and remained in it till August 1, 1779.

The ship Isaac Wright, of the Black Ball Line of Liverpool Packets, since she has been running, about two years, has brought over 2,500 emigrants, and but three deaths have occurred among them all. These deaths were of infants, one was occasioned by being overlaid by the mother, and the other two from croup.

The whole number of inmates of the House of Industry, at South Boston, Mass., on the 1st inst., was 726, of whom 187 were born of American parents, and 142 were born in this country of foreign parents. The balance, 397, were born in foreign countries, and 153 arrived in the United States since January 1, 1848.

The Hartford Times has a letter from the Rev. C. Lyman, dated San Francisco, Nov. 18, in which he says: "Gold does not quite absorb every thing here. The people of this town have employed a minister, the Rev. L. D. Hunt, of Rochester, N. Y., a graduate of Yale, and a fair preacher, at a salary of $3,500."

A pedlar in Chicago, a few days since, fell in a fit, in the street. Attached to his clothes was a card, upon which was written, "If I fall in a fit, light my pipe—it is the only thing that will relieve me." This was done, and the man was relieved in the manner prescribed. So says the Chicago Tribune.

Mr. Henry Collins, the celebrated Gretna Green Blacksmith, who married so many runaway couples, died recently at Lambeth, Till, Scotland, aged 70. In twenty-three years he celebrated 7,000 marriages, and left a considerable fortune, the avails of his matrimonial fees.

The New York Globe tells a tough story about a quantity of gold dust found in the sediment of some ancient tan vats in that city—supposed to have been deposited from California hides tanned there, "long, long ago."

Rev. Dr. Cox, in a sermon before the Brooklyn Bible Society, mentioned the singular fact, that until he was nineteen years old he had never owned a Bible; and that the first he ever had, was given him by a distributor. It was over a borrowed Bible that he devoted himself to Christ.

The Journal of Health, in cases of croup, advises instant, sudden, and free application of the coldest water, with a sponge, to the neck and chest; then, after wiping the patient dry, wrap in warm covering, giving it freely of cold water to drink.

A woman, who always used to attend public worship with great punctuality, and though residing at a distance, took care to be always in time, was asked how it was that she could always come so early. She answered, very wisely, "that it was a part of her religion, not to disturb the religion of others."

Dr. Johnson being once in company with some scandal-mongers, one of them having accused an absent friend of resorting to rouge, he observed: "It is, perhaps, after all, much better for a lady to redden her own cheeks, than to blacken other people's characters."

THE BOOK

For every Clergyman—For every School District—For every Educated Man.

"Will not the enlightened and liberal furnish their clergymen with a copy, as an indispensable volume in their libraries?"—Rev. T. H. Gallaudet.

Extract from a Lecture addressed to a Teacher's Institute, by William Russel, Principal of the Merrimack [N. H.] School for Teachers, and formerly Editor of the American Journal of Education:

"The edition of Dr. Webster's Dictionary, revised by Professor Goodrich, I would earnestly recommend to the atention of all teachers who are desirous of becoming fully qualified to give instruction in the English Language. The copious information which that work embodies, on all topics connected with Etymology—the extreme exactness, as well as the number, extent, and fullness of the definitions which it furnishes to every important word, render it a mine of philological wealth to instructors. The volume is, in fact, the teacher's encyclopedia, as well as lexicon, for daily reference. Could a copy of it be provided, as the permanent property of every district school, the effect, as regards the improvement of instruction, would be deeply and extensively felt, in the increased skill of the teacher, and the higher attainments of his pupils, in the most important part of education—the acquisition of an adequate knowledge and proper use of our own language."

"It has come to be a necessity to every educated man."—Lord Brougham

TO CLERGYMEN AND THEIR PEOPLE.

All Clergymen who will send their address to Messrs. Comstock & Co., 21 Courtland-st., New York, shall be furnished gratuitously, for their family use, with a Salve of most extraordinary merit for external sores or inflammations of long or short standing. In burns, or pains and swellings of nearly all descriptions, its effects are charming, and almost beyond belief. This Salve has already been used by quite a number of the clergy, for themselves or sufferers to whom they have given it; and they have called on or written to the proprietors to express their delight at its action, and a desire to have their names used in making known its virtues. The proprietors having realized a handsome sum by its sale, feel called upon by a sense of duty to their fellow-men to disseminate the knowledge of the existence of such a thing far and near, and to give it without charge to the reverend clergy without limitation. It is called CONNEL'S PAIN EXTRACTOR, and is owned solely by Messrs. C. & Co. All religious papers that will publish this a few times will be furnished with the Salve free, and they may also thereby relieve many suffering poor brethren from agonizing pain, and save them much expense. The names of nearly fifty clergymen recommending it, are to be seen at the office of C. & Co.

You will please observe, it is no "sovereign remedy for all complaints," but only intended for external applications in the following:—Burns, Scalds, Frosted parts, Chilblains, Chafe or Galls, Chaps, Tetter, Pimple, Blotch, Felon, Ulcer Sprains, Erysipelas, Cuts, Bruises, Ear and Toothache, Mumps, Sore Throat, Whitlows, Piles, Ringworm, Salt Rheum, Barber's Itch, Carbuncle, Eruption, Sore Eyes and Lids, Weak Sight, Sore Lips, Punctures, Biles and Warts, Fever Pains, Tender Feet, Inflammatory Rheumatism, Tic Doloureux, Ague in Face and Breast, Fever Sores, Old Burn Scars, Prickly Heat, Inflamed Skin, Broken Breast, Sore Nipples, Rough Hands, Blistered Surfaces, Dressing for Blisters, White Swellings, Cold in Wounds, Sore Corns, General Sores, Smallpox Marks, &c.

Though we have named numerous affections, experience has taught us that they are not too many. It will be necessary to know that this article is the only one we can recommend; but must caution against some imitation by like name. We will present it to the poor who have actual need of it.

THE SABBATARIANS—NO. 1.

Through sectarian spectacles, we sometimes see men as trees walking. Long-established usages, and educational prejudices, are apt to blind us to our own faults, and sometimes to darken the tenets of others, however truthful. I shall not attempt to elucidate the laws of reflection and refraction which give to these curious instruments this wonderful power of discrimination. It appears most evident to a candid inquirer after truth, that this intolerant sectarian spirit, which leads persons to expect that truth will die with them, is the death-worm that is gnawing out the vitals of the church, and rearing on its ruins high temples to the loathsome gods of bigotry and superstition. This accursed spirit hid the sixteenth century in the gloom of death; and when its icy chains had crushed the soul of man beyond the power of endurance, and when the light of the Reformation dawned on this cheerless night of death, it drank the blood of slaughtered millions. The Romish Church is a sad picture of excessive sectarianism. Hers is a faith handed down by the inexorable laws of hereditary transmission.

Whence comes this selfish spirit? It is the legitimate offspring of mental indolence. A non-thinking people must be a sectarian people. Content with the traditions of their fathers, however absurd, they rest in the arms of mental somnolency. Their faith being inseparably linked with paternal regard, when assailed it calls up the strongest emotions of the mind, and awakens the strongest powers of resistance. This is the secret of sectarianism. But though such fatal effects follow the excessive development of sectarianism, I am not sure but its complete inaction would result equally unfavorable. There will be differences of opinion growing out of the unequal development of mind in the world; so that, if a man has any belief, it must be in opposition to the belief of some one else. Thus are we sectarians of necessity. We conclude, then, that a consistent sectarianism is an element of the perfected Christian character. Such was Christ, the great model character. A want of this element paves a way to skepticism and infidelity.

We, as Sabbatarians, derive our sectarian character from the advocacy of a single doctrine or two in opposition to the mass of the church. Without preferring any charges, I may express the conviction, that quite too many of us occupy the two extremes of sectarianism. Are there not a few hereditary Sabbatarians, and consequently rabid sectarians? Opposed to these, may there not be found a few who are so horrified at the name of sect, that they would yield God's holy law to disgrace, rather than be sectarians? Striving to avoid these two extremes, let us make an effort at self-examination, hoping to arrive at some definite view of our true position as a people professing godliness. It shall not be with a complaining spirit that I endeavor to point out our weak points as a church, but with humiliation, and prayer that God may inspire us to greater activity in his cause.

Perhaps that which first strikes the observer is the paucity of our numbers. Hence the frequent question, "If your principles are right, why are your numbers so few?" Now, although this interrogation is prompted by a philosophy as false as it is senseless, I can but believe, that there is in our midst an active agent which, till checked, will constantly diminish our strength, though it may increase our numbers. We often remark, that truth will triumph, and then sit down and look to see it go forth to battle. What do we mean? Do we suppose that truth is a living, moving, resisting, embodiment in itself, which can take hold on falsehood, and break it in pieces? The mind of man is the vehicle of truth; and if that sleep in inaction, no truth, however nearly allied to Heaven, can progress a single step. It seems to me, that this mistaken notion, that truth will go forth of itself to triumph, has inclined us to comparative inaction, and hung upon us the onerous pall of non-progression. This non-progressive spirit is the destroying element alluded to. It cripples us in every department of action. I appeal to the consciousness of every Sabbatarian—Are we prepared to meet the demands of the age? and, more, are we preparing the young to meet the tenfold greater demands which coming ages will make upon them?

Of all our various spheres of action, if one can claim superiority in point of influence and responsibility, the ministry stands preeminent. I have the most profound respect for those faithful servants of God whose dauntless bosoms have so nobly met the arrows hurled at us. They have done much—more than could have been expected, when we consider the obstacles which even the church itself has placed in their way. Still, who can deny that they could have done much more under other circumstances? The ministers will not deny it. Often have I seen the tears of regret and disappointment fall from the eyes of our ministers, in view of their disabilities, arising from a want of early training. Whoever may declaim against an educated ministry, it is sure that our ministers will not. It has ever been remarked, that such declamations come from the uneducated. Now we may well ask, how such men know what they say? They can neither appreciate the minister's duties, nor the necessity of education in the discharge of such duties. We should pity rather than blame such men, for they know not what they say. The guilt of this inefficiency rests not wholly upon the ministers. Far from it, for in their early days they had not the opportunities for improvement; and since they entered the ministry, most surely they have found enough to do besides study; for they, like other men, have to eat and drink and be clothed, and are as much obligated to clothe and feed a family as other men are. It probably takes a minister just as long to produce a bushel of corn or wheat as it does others. Now, most men find ample employment for much of their time in this way, ministers not excepted. How, then, can they exceed others in literary attainments? But it will be said, that we pay our ministers. Well, grant that we pay them. But how much do we pay them? I speak within bounds when I affirm my honest conviction, that a majority of our ministers are not paid enough to defray the extra expenses incident to the calling, and support them and their families during the time of actual service in the church; so that the balance of time, if any, must be devoted to the demands of their families, and if they spend all their time in actual service, then surely none is left for study. The minister then is not alone accountable for his inefficiency. He is dragged down and held to the earth—he can not rise. The fact that most of our ministers are compelled to spend much of their time out of the ministry for the support of their families, should make us blush. Now, is it strange that the spirit of non-progression hangs upon us? A church will not go ahead of its minister, and no minister can in such circumstances keep pace with the age. He then must wander up and down the beaten paths of the past, and the church follow along, gazing vacantly on the oft-seen objects in their accustomed wandering, excited by nothing, save as they occasionally hear the rush of the swift car of progression, bearing immortal minds to their high destiny. The amount of labor, care, and responsibility involved in the minister's calling is not understood. Were Gabriel, with his mighty powers, to descend from heaven, and devote all his energies to a single church, he could no more than meet the demand. Then surely less than all the powers of punny man can not suffice. How insulting to Heaven, and the dignity of the minister's calling, to suppose that a moiety of any man's labor can meet the demand. Yet this singular sentiment we subscribe to by placing our ministers in such a position that they can not devote their undivided energies to the work. If we admit that the work demands the minister's entire attention, then surely he can not be obligated to spend his time in the support of his family. But who shall support it? Why, most surely, by all the laws which govern social intercourse, those to whose benefit he devotes his time are bound to do it. This custom of giving to the minister is a curse to the church, and an insult to him; for, to support a minister by giving, is a virtual denial that his labors are worth any thing. Now, when the minister is thus held upon the charities of the church, what can we expect him to be but a crouching slave? How can he, with the dignity of a man and a Christian, meet the duties of his profession? It is no wonder that some ministers speak just as their masters say. The constant condition of a servile dependent will crush any man's dignity of character. How can his wife and children meet the duties of their stations, thus thrown as paupers upon the charity of community? If any thing could drag the ministry, and every thing exalted in the church, down to earth, this would do it. Why do we talk about giving to the minister? Why, if we would pay him what justice demands, he would have no need of our gifts. We do not comprehend the extent of our indebtedness to the ministry. Stop, and think a moment. To what are we indebted for the facilities of acquiring wealth, for that order in society which renders person and property secure? To the preached gospel we are indebted for every thing above heathenism. It is the center and circumference of all our social and civil intercourse. Blot this from existence, and a night of death will cover the earth, upon which no morn can rise. Let us stop giving to the minister, and go to paying him. We can never fully compensate him, but we can support him, and let him labor for God. His expenses are more than ours are. His library must often be replenished, else how can he keep pace with the world? He should have religious and political newspapers; he should visit the conventions of other churches, and different parts of our own church; his children should all be well educated. Is this all? What do we mean when we talk about laying up a little something for old age and our children? Do not ministers grow old; and can they, better than we, endure the thought of dying and leaving their families dependent upon the cold charities of the world? Now, do I misapprehend the true state of affairs when I thus speak of a crippled ministry? D. E. M.

MUSIC AT MIDNIGHT.

It is related of the saintly George Herbert, the quaint old English church poet, that once in a walk to Salisbury to join a musical party, he saw a poor man with a poorer horse that was fallen under his load. They were both in distress, and needed present help; which Mr. Herbert perceiving, put off his canonical coat, and helped the poor man to unload, and after to load his horse. The poor man blessed him for it, and he blessed the poor man; and was so like the good Samritan that he gave him money to refresh both himself and his horse. Thus he left the poor man; and at his coming to his musical friends at Salisbury, they began to wonder that Mr. George Herbert, who used to be so trim and clean, came into that company so soiled and discomposed. But he told them the occasion; and when one of the company told him "he had disparaged himself by so dirty an employment," his answer was, "that the thought of what he had done, would prove music to him at midnight; and that the omission of it would have upbraided him and made discord in his conscience whensoever he should pass by that place; for if I be bound to pray for all that be in distress, I am sure that I am bound, so far as it is in my power, to practice what I pray for; and let me tell you, I would not willingly pass one day of my life without comforting a sad soul, or showing mercy; and I praise God for this occasion." O, how many might have the anxious thoughts which infest often their midnight hours, changed into sweet music, if they would only be more frequently seen, with full hands and friendly words, in the abodes of poverty and suffering! These are the places in which to attune one's conscience to midnight harmonies!

GENTLE WORDS—LOVING SMILES.

The sun may warm the grass to life,
  The dew the drooping flower,
And eyes grow bright, and watch the light
  Of autumn's opening hour;
But words that breathe of tenderness,
  And smiles we know are true,
Are warmer than the summer time,
  And brighter than the dew.

It is not much the world can give,
  With all its subtile art,
The gold and gems are not the things
  To satisfy the heart;
But O, if those who cluster round
  The altar and the hearth,
Have gentle words and loving smiles,
  How beautiful is earth! [Chr. Intel.

EXAMPLES OF BENEVOLENCE.

It has been common of late, for the newspaper press to record the benefactions of certain wealthy men, and to speak of them as noble examples of benevolence. We may, indeed, learn from them something of the true value of property, as a means of doing good; yet the New Testament presents before us far more illustrious examples of benevolence.

The first example, is that of the Saviour of mankind. He was owner of the created universe. "All things were made by him and for him." Yet, "though he was rich, for our sakes he became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich." During the period of his ministry, he dwelt in no stately mansion; he was a wanderer, not having "where to lay his head." He rode in no splendid carriage, but traveled on foot, to preach his own gospel, and to relieve the distressed. "Being found in fashion as a man, he made himself of no reputation, and humbled himself to death, even the death of the cross." And the heavenly mandate to men now is, "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus."

The next instance I shall mention, is that of the "poor widow" whom our Lord commended. While he saw "the rich men casting their gifts into the treasury, he saw also a certain poor widow casting in thither two mites; and he said, Of a truth I say unto you, that this poor widow hath cast in more than they all; for all these have of their abundance cast into the offerings of God, but she of her penury hath cast in all the living that she had." And Jesus now beholds how people cast into the treasury of the Lord, and puts a just estimate upon their various offerings. He sees who they are that cast in much, who little, and who nothing. And he approves the "two mites," the full extent of the widow's ability, and perhaps disapproves the large donation, applauded in the newspapers, which costs no sacrifice, and which was less than duty demanded.

Still another example of noble benevolence, is that of the churches of Macedonia. Paul writes as follows concerning them: "Brethren, we make known to you the grace of God bestowed on the churches of Macedonia, how that in a great trial of affliction, the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded to the riches of their liberality; for to their power, I bear record, yea, and beyond their power, they were willing of themselves; praying us with much entreaty that we would receive the gift, and take upon us the fellowship of the ministering to the saints." 2 Cor. 8: 1—4. We learn from this passage—1st. That the grace of God bestowed upon churches or individuals produces benevolence. 2d. We learn that, though the brethren of Macedonia had been much afflicted, and were very poor, yet their willingness to impart for the benefit of the "poor saints," was fully equal to their ability. O that it were so now, with those who cultivate productive farms, and follow lucrative trades! 3d. They were willing of themselves, to do this. They needed no agent to visit them to plead the cause of benevolence, or to excite their sympathies in favor of the needy. Their conduct was the natural result of the religion of love that dwelt within them.

The benevolence of rich men now-a-days, who practice little or no self-denial to do good, and who, while they bestow thousands, retain more for themselves, is very much unlike these illustrious cases recorded in the Bible. Nor does it equal the benevolence of some in modern times. Those missionaries who are willing, for the sake of Christ and the Gospel, and the souls of the heathen, to deny themselves of all unnecessary articles of clothing, and to wear only that which is of the plainest kind, far exceed in true benevolence these rich men. So did the little boy who denied himself of the use of sugar, that he might have the means of doing good.

Reader, are you poor in this world? Think not, that because you can not count the property God has lent you, by thousands, or tens of thousands, or even by hundreds, of dollars, that you may neglect the cause of benevolence without guilt. While "the world lieth in wickedness," while hundreds of millions of eternity-bound souls are destitute of the Bible and the preached gospel, it is no time to compare yourselves with the rich, or to wait till your possessions have become great, before you attend to the calls of God and perishing souls.

Are any of my readers rich in this world? Such, especially, should "set their affections on things above, and not on things on the earth." Let them "not be high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God." Let them be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate, laying up in store for themselves a good foundation, against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life.

TOLERATION OF RELIGION.

BY JOHN WALKER, OF ENGLAND.

Toleration is not the opposite of intolerance, but is the counterfeit of it. Both are despotisms. The one assumes to itself the right of withholding liberty of conscience, and the other of granting it. The one is the Pope armed with fire and faggot, and the other is the Pope selling indulgences. The former is Church and State, the latter is Church and traffic. But intolerance may be viewed in a much stronger light. Man worships not himself, but his Maker; and the liberty of conscience which he claims is not for the service of himself, but of his God. In this case, therefore, we must necessarily have the associated idea of two beings; the mortal who renders the worship, and the immortal Being who is worshiped. Toleration, therefore, places itself, not between Church and Church, nor between one denomination of religion and another, but between the being who worships, and the Being who is worshiped! and by the same act of assumed authority by which it tolerates man to pay his worship, it presumptuously and blasphemously sets itself up to tolerate the Almighty to receive it. Were a bill brought into any Parliament, entitled, "An Act to tolerate or grant liberty to the Almighty to receive the worship of a Jew or Turk," or to "prohibit the Almighty from receiving it," all men would be startled and call it blasphemy. There would be an uproar. The presumption of toleration in religious matters would then present itself unmasked; and the presumption is not the less because the name of "man" only appears to those, for the associated idea of the worshiper and the worshiped cannot be separated. Who, then, art thou, vain dust and ashes—by whatever name thou art called, whether a King, a Bishop, a Church or a State, a Parliament, or any thing else that obtrudest thy insignificance between the soul of man and its Maker! Mind thine own concerns. If he believes not as thou believest, it is a proof that thou believest not as he believes, and there is no earthly power can determine between you.

THINGS IN HAYTI.

The Oberlin Evangelist publishes a letter from the wife of Rev. Mr. Cushman, missionary at St. Marc, Hayti, giving some account of the annoyances and customs of that Island. The following are specimens:—

"We have been exceedingly annoyed by a species of insects called chigres, that bury themselves in the flesh of the feet and there lay their eggs. I have had twenty extracted from my feet within the last two weeks, thirteen of them yesterday morning. The pain was excruciating, and I am still quite lame from this cause. My husband has had eleven taken from his feet. He thinks the musquitoes are more troublesome still, but their bites do not annoy me so much. Cockroaches are very abundant, but the ants are by far the most troublesome. I had supposed that by a little perseverance these might be to a great measure exterminated, but I find it true that 'Hayti is one vast ant-hill.' The ants are of three kinds. The red ants (or white as they are often called) are very destructive, but the others trouble us more by their omnipresence. It is unsafe to set a dish of food down, even for a moment in the kitchen. One has to be exceedingly cautious while kneading bread, and even our dining table is not safe from their presence. We shall have our cupboard feet stand in tin cups containing turpentine and oil. Our store-room would present a singular spectacle to your eye. Our barrels of flour, beef, vegetables, &c., are all suspended from the roof by ropes. And we have a large shelf suspended in the same manner to hold dishes of food. It is perfectly astonishing how quick metals of every kind tarnish here. There is a passage of Scripture which cannot be fully appreciated except by one residing in a tropical climate. 'Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal,' &c. This is an apt description of things here, for this is a nation of thieves."

"O, Mary, you would feel very bad, often, if you were here to see how cruel this people are. The day before we landed here, the Catholic priest beat a servant of his, an old gray-headed man, nearly to death, so that they thought he would die. The priest obliges the people to burn candles in the church before the images, and as soon as they are gone, he makes his servant steal the candles away for his own use; but once the servant stole a few for himself and he was beaten for this reason.

"They never punish their children here except when angry, and then they beat them so cruelly that I feel almost faint to hear it. And they are just as cruel to their donkeys and other dumb beasts. They love to beat and torment them, and seem to enjoy their suffering. There is one verse in the Bible, that describes Hayti; it is, 'The dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty.'

"I sometimes see animals that have been dreadfully mangled and beaten dragging their broken, putrid limbs along in the utmost agony. It is a dreadful sight, and makes me think of what the Bible says: 'The tender mercies of the wicked are cruel.' One would not probably kill a cat here even to save his soul. They will not take the life of any creature except for food, they are so full of 'tender mercy,' but they will nearly kill them and then let them go."

ANCIENT NINEVEH.

A year or two since it was announced that a number of interesting ancient sculptures had been discovered on the site of ancient Nineveh, by certain travelers who made excavations under ground among the ruins of that city. Within the past year, many of these relics have been transported down the Tigris and Persian Gulf, to Bombay, and thence to England. Some of the articles were destroyed or badly mutilated on the passage, but those which remain entire, possess great value as antiquities. These reveal, in an unexpected manner, what was supposed to be totally lost, a knowledge of the costumes, dwellings, art of war, and private life of the Ninevites. A description of some of these sculptures has recently appeared in the London Athenæum, from which we have gathered the following particulars:—

One of the relics is an obelisk, covered with sculptures, divided into compartments.

The first compartment represents the great King, who, holding two arrows, and attended by his eunuch and bearded domestics, the captain of the guard, receives the homage of a newly-subjugated province, of which the person standing erect before him is constituted governor. The King seems to be in the act of presenting the arrows and the bow, as insignia of office. High in the back ground, between the great King and the satrap, are two remarkable emblems, one resembling the winged globe of the ancient Egyptians, the other a circle surrounding a star. The same emblems occur on other sculptures.

The second compartment comprises the same number of figures, and similarly arranged, except that the eunuch behind the King holds an umbrella, and in the place of his satrap stands the cup-bearer with his fly-flap.

In the third compartment are two men, each leading a camel of the two-humped species. The men wear the fillet round the head, and the short tunic, and are without boots and sandals.

The fourth compartment exhibits a forest in a mountainous country, occupied by deer and wolves. This is an episode in the story related on the mountain, intimating the vastness of the dominion of the King of Nineveh, which extended not only over the people, but over the forests and the mountains inhabited solely by wild beasts. Thus in Daniel, "And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field and the fowls of heaven hath he given unto thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all."—Dan. 2: 38.

The fifth compartment represents a short-bearded race of people, wearing long robes and boots, and a remarkable cap like a bag, the end of which is made to turn back, instead of falling toward the front like the Phrygian. They carry wood or bars of metal, baskets with fruit, bags and bundles.

Other slabs and blocks of stone are covered with sculptures in relievo. One of these is remarkably interesting, as showing the military tactics and discipline of those days. Ranks of soldiers are sheltered behind a wicker breastwork. In front of the soldiers is a war-engine, on wheels, protected by a hanging, which has been impelled against the wall of a fort up a steep ascent, on which stands a city, a levelled roadway having been evidently formed by the besiegers for the purpose. The two spears of the engine have made a breach in a tower, on the top of which is a man extending his hands as if imploring a cessation of hostilities. In front, and within view of the citizens, are three men impaled, to strike terror into the besieged.

In another relievo is an impetuous assault upon a town and citadel fortified by two ranges of embattled walls, the lowest of which is higher than a full-grown date tree. A moveable castle containing arches is thrust forward against the walls, and the battle is vigorously maintained on both sides. The dead are falling into the ditch beneath. Farther from the town are soldiers felling the date trees, and advancing with spear and shield.

In another relievo is the passage of a river by the army of the great King and his allies. The soldiers have taken off their clothes and accoutrements, which, with the chariots, are ferried over in boats. The horses, likewise, being relieved of their trappings, are guided by swimmers. All these are supported by skins, which they blow up as they proceed.

The above curious remnants of antiquity have been deposited in the British Museum. They are justly regarded by the antiquaries of London as among the most interesting and valuable illustrations of ancient history and ancient manners that the researches of modern travelers have produced. ## OUR PUBLISHING SOCIETY.

The Convention of Delegates from the several Associations, which met in New Jersey last fall, formed a Constitution for a Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society, and appointed a Committee to carry out the plan. That Committee have employed Bro. Lucius Crandall to visit the different churches, for the purpose of explaining the objects of the new organization, and obtaining members. He has already gone through the Eastern Association, and is now on his way westward. His success thus far gives good evidence that out our publishing interests are regarded as important, and encourages the hope that they will be placed upon a sure foundation.

It may not be amiss, in this connection, to re-state the plan of the organization. There exists in the State of New York a general law for the incorporation of literary and benevolent Societies, according to which any number of persons may associate together for a specific object of a scientific or religious nature, and by recording certain certificates in the proper Courts they become a body corporate, capable of transacting business and holding property. Under this law it is proposed to organize our Publishing Society. Any person may become a member of it by the payment of five dollars, or an Honorary Director by the payment of twenty-five dollars. The money obtained for memberships goes to form a capital with which to carry on business—the printing of a weekly newspaper, and the publication of such periodicals and books as the circumstances of the denomination may seem to require. The officers of the Society are to be chosen annually, and under their supervision the whole business is to be transacted. And finally, the profits of the concern, should any accrue, are all to be appropriated, under the direction of the Society, to certain benevolent objects specified in the Constitution.

Several important advantages, it is believed, will be attained by the new organization. In the first place, the permanent establishment, and satisfactory conducting of a denominational paper will be secured. As things now are—(and as they always have been and always will be where denominational publications are left entirely to individual enterprise)—the permanence of our publications is by no means secure, nor is there any certainty that while they are continued they will be conducted in a manner to honor and benefit the denomination. Very slight changes in the circumstances and feelings of individuals, might produce important changes in our publications, and changes too which would be exceedingly troublesome and disastrous to the denomination. It is proposed, therefore, to take these interests out of the hands of a few individuals, and place them in the hands of a Society composed of persons scattered throughout the churches, whose feelings as a body will be less liable to change, who may be supposed to understand the wants of the denomination, and who will be interested in their several spheres to promote the objects of the Society, and thus secure the permanence of our publications.

Another advantage which, it is hoped, the new organization will attain, is security against a collision of publication interests. Persons at all acquainted with the history of denominational publications, know that there is great danger of such collision, and that it often produces most serious consequences. Scarcely a week passes in which we do not find, in some of our exchanges, sad evidences of ill feeling between cotemporary publications connected with the same denomination. Nothing else could reasonably be expected, where such publications are established with reference to individual interests rather than to the wants and interests of denominations or truths. Even small denominations are not exempt from this evil. There are small denominations, as well as large ones, in which the evil exists; and, on the other hand, there are denominations of both classes, in which the adoption of some general plan for the regulation of publication interests, has proved an effectual barrier to the evil. Let us profit by the experience of others. We are at present free from all collisions of this kind. Now is the time, therefore, to make such arrangements as will effectually prevent them in future. The Constitution adopted by the Convention was framed with wise reference to this. It throws open the door of admission so wide that all may enter; and at the same time it guards the distribution of any surplus that may arise from the transaction of business, so as to prevent its going into the pockets of individuals, and secure it for benevolent objects which all approve. By this means it is hoped that a great evil will be averted, and a great advantage secured.

—For the benefit of those who may not have examined the Constitution of the Publishing Society when first printed, we copy it below:—

Art. 1.—This Society shall be known by the name of "The Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society."

Art. 2.—The object of this Society shall be to print and publish such periodicals, books, &c., as shall meet the wants of the Seventh-day Baptist Denomination, and promote the cause of Christ generally.

Art. 3.—Each contributor of five dollars may become a Member of the Society, and each contributor of twenty-five dollars may become an Honorary Director, with the privilege of participating in the deliberations of the Board of Managers.

Art. 4.—The Society shall hold an Annual Meeting, at which it shall elect a President, a Vice President, a Corresponding Secretary, a Recording Secretary, and a Treasurer, who, together with four others elected for the purpose, shall constitute a Board of Managers to conduct the business of the Society, having power to make their own by-laws, and to fill any vacancies that may occur in their body.

Art. 5.—The Board of Managers shall meet quarterly for the transaction of business, at such time and place as shall have been appointed at a previous meeting. The Recording Secretary shall call extra meetings of the Board, whenever any three members of the Board shall request him to do so.

Art. 6.—The minutes of each meeting of the Board shall be signed by the Chairman and the Recording Secretary.

Art. 7.—The first Annual Meeting of the Society shall be held in the City of New York on the fourth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, 1849, (25th day of the month;) and subsequent Annual Meetings may be held at such times and places as the Society shall direct. At these meetings the Board of Managers shall present a Report of their transactions, together with the Treasurer's account.

Art. 8.—Should there at any time, on the presentation of the Annual Report of the Board of Managers, be a surplus on hand, over and above what may, in the judgment of the Board, be required to meet the wants of the establishment, the Society shall divide such surplus in equal sums among the following benevolent objects, viz: Missions, the circulation of religious Tracts, the education of candidates for the ministry, and the support of indigent superannuated ministers or their widows and orphans. Should the Society for any reason ever be dissolved, its property, if any, shall be divided in the same manner as above provided in case of surplus.

Art. 9.—This Constitution may be altered at any Annual Meeting of the Society, by a vote of two-thirds of the members present.

POLITENESS OF THE CHINESE.

From a letter of Mrs. L. M. Carpenter to Mrs. T. B. Stillman.

With what trembling anxiety I look for every word written about our beloved Khoo-a. I know that nothing but the religion of the blessed Jesus, can keep him in the midst of the temptations by which he is surrounded. The Chinese, notwithstanding their national pride, and their reverence for ancestors, seem peculiarly subject to extraneous influences. The very characteristic which one would think should preserve them, is the one most of all liable to work their downfall. They are taught from their childhood, not only to reverence and respcet their ancestors, whom indeed they worship, but also, that deference to superiors, and politeness to all, is the great virtue, the constant practice of which constitutes their "golden rule," and the violation of it, the only unpardonable sin. Could you see two Chinamen of the better sort, meet in the street, or at the door, or inside the house, you would see a greater display of politeness, and humiliating gesture,

> "And scrupulousness of ceremonious rite,
> Each to each bowing most respectfully,
> And large profession make of humble service,"

than is to be found, I believe, any where this side of the "thousand years fulfilled." Men, women, and children, all are polite. Even the beggar in the street, if you do not chance to find him prostrate, will throw himself into some humble attitude, amid the cries of "Foo-yah, law-yah," [great father, venerable father,] or "Foo-nyang, law-nyang," [great, or venerable, mother,] or "tah-tah," which is a still higher term of respect for a lady; and thus heap his honors upon you until you give him a cash, (the fifteenth part of a cent,) or lose his voice in the distance. From the highest to the lowest, all expect to give and receive these flattering titles. For example, our servant—(I don't like to use the word servant, it sounds too much as if there were a master; I believe I must call him, as Mr. Syle playfully does in speaking of him, "our great man"—that sounds better)—and Mr. Wardner's, whose names are respectively, "Foo-quay" and "Che-quay," call each other by the dignified titles of "Law-Foo," "Law-Che," [venerable Foo, venerable Che.] This very obsequious spirit, joined with the natural tendencies of the human heart, gives them an easy prey to the destroyer; and the very refinement of European vices, renders the downward course still more irresistible. This may seem a strange contrast to draw between heathenish and civilized immortals; but there is too much reason to fear, that the heathen of more than one land—the inhabitants of more than one moral Sodom—will rise up in judgment, to condemn those who, having heard the truth, repent not.

While these things are so, we feel that there are many obstacles in the way of benefiting the Chinese. The great difficulty in talking with them is, they are too polite to dispute, and will tacitly assent to all you say, leaving you nothing to defend. Sometimes, in conversing with our teacher, he will talk heathenism most vehemently, until I suddenly appeal to his judgment or his conscience for the truth of what he says, when he will very coolly tell me, he does not believe so, and there are but few educated men who do; it is only the common people. Of course there is little use in fighting an absent opponent; so I can only talk Christianity in the abstract, which he seems to hear very kindly. One day, in speaking of the offerings to the dead, after hearing his usual conclusion, "It is done to honor ancestors," and acknowledging all to be a deception, I asked him if he considered it any apology for us, that our forefathers had been in error; and said, Suppose they believed and practiced a lie, is that any reason their children should do so? He acknowledged it was not, and we dropped the subject. Now, you must know, that all this was very impolite in me, particularly as coming from a woman; and yet I did not give up, for, a few days after, we had another and still warmer controversy. It was on the subject of household gods. He persisted, quite contrary to his usual custom, in maintaining that houses were not safe without a door-god to keep the evil spirits from entering. It was in vain that I told him, They have eyes, but see not; ears, but they hear not. He acknowledged that their outward eyes did not see, but the spirit within, took cognizance of passing events, being perfectly adapted to see the spiritual. I then reminded him of the custom of burning these gods, (which, by the way, are only pictures,) and asked what use was a god that lived only a year, and then was burned. But he insisted that it was only the picture that perished; the god within passed into the next picture that was stationed there. I asked him how it happened that the evil spirits never troubled us, as we had no household god. He said we were not unprotected; there was a spirit in the air, that watched over "Yah-joo-loong," (the name of our residence,) and as we were good people, he would not allow the evil spirits to molest us. If we were bad, even this protector would not prevent the necessity of a "mung-tung," or door-god. I had never seen him so firm, and I had never manifested so much earnestness in talking with him. I remained silent awhile, very undecided as to my duty; then, in order to test his mental frame, I told him I wished to say a little more—that I feared I sometimes offended him by speaking too warmly—that I should be sorry to wound his feelings—but I could not believe as he did, and if I talked with him, I must speak what I believed to be truth. He saw that I was much moved, and was nearly as much so himself; he could hardly reply, which he finally did, by begging me never to refrain from speaking on his account—that he was not displeased—that my words were excellent words, and he wished to hear them. I think the effect upon both our minds will not soon be forgotten.

As a farther illustration of Chinese politeness, I will translate for you a dialogue which my teacher has written out for me, as a kind of summary of compliments to be used on occasion of calls. He supposes me to meet my neighbor at the door, where she, with another lady, wait to be welcomed.

1. I beg you to enter; pray be seated within.
2. Being within—I beg you will not allow me to interrupt you; I do not wish to have conversation.

1. Be seated. Allow me to inquire after your illustrious family.
2. How dare you inquire after my ignoble house. Your own is truly illustrious.

1. Do your honorable family reside near?
2. Just across the way.

1. In what kind of merchandize is your noble husband at present employed?
2. In the money exchange; formerly he was a grain merchant.

1. Madam, how old are you at present?
2. I am now twenty-eight years of age.

1. And the lady with you is how old?
2. She is my junior by two years; now, twenty-six years old.

1. I presume madam has several sons and daughters.
2. I have two sons and one daughter.

1. Indeed, you have great felicity. Your great son is of what age?
2. My eldest little son is this year twelve years old.

1. Is he attending school?
2. He is at present in school.

1. Allow me to ask what teacher instructs him?
2. Allow me to say it is Lo-Seen-Sang.

1. He has doubtless studied several years?
2. He has studied six years.

1. He is truly talented and learned.
2. O, he is not talented; he is ready to die with stupidity.

1. Allow me to inquire after your second son.
2. He has also been in school a little for three years past.

1. O, you have much enjoyment, truly. How old is the young lady?
2. Nine years.

1. Labors admirably, no doubt?
2. But very little as yet. She can only sew cotton.

1. I have heard that the Chinese ladies are skilled in working cotton. They must be very accomplished girls.
2. O, that is merely coarse work.

1. I wish, hereafter, to visit them and behold their skill. Madam, in calling on me, would it please you to see the ways of foreigners—their manner of doing their work, also their furniture and rooms?
2. Yes; every thing pertaining to their household, I wish to see.

1. Be pleased to enter, and look about; you will find that every thing is very like the Chinese; you may possibly notice some slight dissimilarity, but I fear all will appear to you very mean indeed.
2. What words! Would you have me believe them? Every thing is so exceedingly beautiful. But I must withdraw.

1. Again be seated. You will drink tea before going?
2. Many thanks, many thanks! I do not wish any.

1. Slowly go, slowly go.
2. I beg you will not approach to accompany me one step.

1. Allow me to see you to the door, or at least to the top of the stairs. Hereafter, I hope you will come again and make me a visit.
2. I shall certainly desire to come.

There are other similar questions, used on all occasions, which are equally polite, more common, and, as we should think, no more proper. When you meet a person in the street, if he is not too unsocial, his first question will probably be, "Where are you going?" The second, "Have you had your rice?" And the third, "What time do you eat your rice?" (or dine.) "Where do you live?" "Have you any children?" "How many years have you been in China?" But there are very proper answers to these questions, quite as common, and entirely non-committal; as, for instance, I am going for amusement, or, I am returning, &c.

Missions in the Sandwich Islands.—A correspondent of the Independent says that the American Board of Commissions for Foreign Missions have recently received letters communicating interesting intelligence from several missionary stations. Mr. Hitchcock, from Molokai, Sandwich Islands, makes very encouraging statements respecting the revival that has been in progress in his field of labor. He has already propounded 200 for admission to the church, and has a large number more yet to examine. He mentions also, as a result of the revival, and an illustration of the spirit of the people, that their contributions to the cause of benevolence have been considerably increased. During the first seven months of 1848, besides contributing over $200 for the support of a missionary, their monthly concert contributions amounted to $230, $50 of which have been given to the Home Missionary Society, towards the support of a minister of the gospel in Oregon. Accounts of similar success have come from other missionaries. Mr. Kinney has received 75 to the church under his care, Mr. Clark 139, and Mr. Johnson 200 to 300.

INFORMATION ABOUT THE WEST.

Albion, Dane Co., Wisconsin, March 10, 1849.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

It may be gratifying to some of our Sabbath-keeping friends at the East, to know that there are still flattering prospects held out in our new and growing State. For want of such knowledge, many have wandered away by themselves, and settled their families where they must be deprived of the pleasures and benefits of society, or sacrifice their principles upon the unhallowed altar of convenience.

Impressed with the importance of having another rallying point, where lands can be purchased cheaper than in our old settlements, I have recently visited our brethren who have settled in Marquette county, to inquire into their prospects; and I was happy to find them maintaining religious worship upon the Sabbath, and the most of them, I trust, in the enjoyment of living faith. This society is situated on Fox River, some twenty-five or thirty miles West of Fon-du-Lac, and may be addressed at Dartford, Marquette Co. It consists of some twelve or fourteen families. The Government land in this neighborhood is nearly all claimed or preëmpted, and will be in market this spring; but many of the settlers are not able to pay for the land they have claimed, and will therefore sell their improvements for a reasonable sum. This would be more convenient, and in many cases better economy, for those who have families to provide for, than to purchase an entirely new farm, in which case they would have to buy all their eatables for a year or more while they were subduing the wild earth.

To such, however, as wish to brave the wilds of a new country, as the first settlers here did, many of whom have thereby made their fortunes, there is now considerable inducement held out from the lands lately purchased of the Indians, lying between Lake Winnebago and Wisconsin River, bounded on the South by Fox River, and consisting of about four millions of acres. There will doubtless be a great rush to that tract of country the coming season, and those who are there first will possess the advantage of choice in their location.

Now I would suggest to the friends who intend to come West within a few years, the propriety of coming as soon as navigation shall open this spring. Some will probably argue, that they should remain in the eastern country until they shall have earned money to purchase a farm with when they come West. But while they tarry there to earn one dollar, they lose two, if not five, in the choice of their location. Nor is this all, but inasmuch as the land is a late purchase, it is not yet in market; it will doubtless be surveyed as soon as practicable this season, after which it will take another act of Congress to bring it into market, which will postpone the pay day at least another year; and when brought into market, each settler is entitled to a preëmption for another year, which will postpone the pay day, in all probability, three years, in which time an individual with any degree of prosperity can pay for his land with the avails of his farm; or, if he should not succeed in this, he can sell one eighty-acre lot, with a small improvement, for sufficient to pay for the other lot, and thus secure for himself a farm and a home. Another urgent consideration in this matter, is that our Seventh-day Baptist friends, who are first in the country, not only have their choice in location, but will be able to settle together, where they can enjoy the benefits of society and Sabbath privileges. In view of the importance of securing such advantages, can we not urge with propriety that those who are coming West within a year or two come now. A number of families are intending to emigrate from this place as soon as the ground settles.

But those who prefer settling in an older country, where society, with its attendant blessings, is already established, can accommodate themselves quite to their liking in this part of the country, or upon the rich prairies of Illinois—the garden of the world—in which interesting field I should rejoice much to see a society of Sabbath-keepers permanently planted.

Those intending to emigrate to the new purchase, will do well to land at Sheboigan, thence to Fon-du-Lac, then Dartford, then inquire for Delos Maxson, three miles West of Shaw's Ferry, who can give all suitable information concerning the settlement.

Since writing the above, Elder Daniel Babcock has called at my house, and not only approves of what I have written, but also wishes to give his testimony to the correctness of Bro. Davison's description of Illinois. O. P. Hull.

REVIVALS.

A correspondent of the N. Y. Baptist Register gives some account of an interesting revival of religion at Three Mile Bay, Jefferson County, N. Y. A meeting commenced on the 26th of February, and continued nearly every day for three weeks. In the progress of it many wanderers have returned, and over one hundred souls have given evidence of being born again. "We have visited the baptismal waters," says the writer, "nine days almost in succession, and eighty-five willing converts have been buried with Christ in baptism; and some twenty-five others have been received as candidates for the ordinance."

The same paper mentions a revival at Sherburne, Chenango Co., N. Y., where the Congregational and Baptist Churches held a sort of union meeting. "It is believed, that nearly a hundred were converted to God, and reclaimed from their wanderings."

Revivals are also mentioned at Acton, Ill., where forty-one were added to the Presbyterian Church, and many more converted; at Lafayette, Mich., where twenty had joined the Congregational Church, and twenty-one the Methodist Episcopal Church; at Erie, Pa., where forty persons, including fourteen heads of families, had joined the Baptist Church; at Geneva, where about forty persons connected with the colored congregation of Rev. H. H. Garnett, had been converted; at Chester, N. J., where above fifty, it is hoped, have been converted.

Religious Liberty in France.—One article of the new Constitution of France guaranties to all religions equal liberty and equal protection. But it seems that some of the Prefects of the Departments, saw fit to construe this article as applying "only to forms recognized or salaried by the State;" and accordingly undertook to molest the American Baptist Mission in the north of France. But we are glad to learn that steps have recently been taken to secure high official opinions upon the subject, and that the result is most satisfactory. In reply to a letter setting forth the grievances of the unrecognized churches, M. de Falloux, the Minister of Worship, says:—

"In guarantying to all religions equal liberty and equal protection, the 7th Art. of the Constitution of 1848, has not made between those which are recognized by law and those which are not, any other distinction than that relating to the salary of their ministers. The right which you demand, (as a minister of a Christian church not recognized by the State,) is therefore incontestable, and there can be no objection to your freely celebrating your own mode of worship."

Preaching in Unsanctified Places.—The English papers announce that Rev. James Shore, M. P., was arrested on the 9th of March, at the instance of the Bishop of Exeter, and conveyed to Exeter Jail, for the offense of preaching in a dissenting place of worship. The Dissenters, it is said, are taking up his cause heartily, and are aided by the more liberal portion of the Church Establishment.

A Bill is before the House of Commons, to "disclergyfy clergymen" of the Church so as to enable them to preach in dissenting chapels without incurring the penalties and costs, for the non-payment of which Rev. Mr. Shore is in Exeter Jail. It is referred to a Select Committee, and is likely to pass the Commons.

Another Theological Seminary.—A Baptist Theological Seminary is soon to be established at Fairmount, one mile north-east of Cincinnati. The site has been obtained, and the grading of the grounds commenced preparatory to building. The location is one of surpassing beauty, and the buildings, it is said, will make a fine appearance, being on a hill, in full view of Cincinnati, Covington, and Cumminsville. Our readers will doubtless remember the recent controversy about the Seminary at Covington, Ky., in which the Kentuckians or pro-slavery interest triumphed. The establishment of this new Seminary in Ohio is probably a result of the controversy.

Important Decision Respecting Newspapers.—Jesper Harding, of Philadelphia, has recovered of Henry D'Wolf, of Bristol, R. I., the amount of nine years subscription to the Inquirer. He proved that the name was on his books, and the papers regularly mailed, and bills sent from time to time. The defendant denied having ordered the paper. The court ruled that the regular mailing of a newspaper for a length of time, was at least prima facie evidence of its reception; and that receiving a paper for a certain time and not ordering the name discontinued, was sufficient to hold a person liable for the subscription price, notwithstanding he may never have ordered the paper sent. Verdict for the plaintiff.

"A Father Pleading with his Son."—Under this head the Christian Contributor has published a very earnest letter on the subject of slavery, written by a venerable Baptist minister, Rev. Jesse Hartwell, of Perry, Lake Co., Ohio, to his son, Rev. Jesse Hartwell, D. D., of Georgia. Eld. Hartwell is nearly eighty years of age, and from the style in which he pleads with his son, it appears that his feelings are akin to those of the aged patriarch when he mourned over his son in Egyptian bondage.

A bill has passed the Wisconsin House of Representatives to submit the question of Negro Suffrage to the people at the next election. It was passed by a vote of 36 to 22.

General Intelligence.

FOURTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Niagara, with two weeks later intelligence from Europe, arrived at Boston on the 7th inst.

In England, there has been no improvement in the trade for breadstuffs; in fact, prices at all the leading markets have continued to recede. The cholera is fast disappearing; total number of cases has reached 14,304, of which 1,200 were in the metropolitan districts, about 1,100 in the country, and more than 12,000 elsewhere. The total deaths have been 3,464. The weather has been uninterruptedly mild and fine for the season.

The West and South of Ireland seems to be in a deplorable condition. Several frightful murders are reported. The cholera is committing extensive ravages. In Limerick, to compensate for their sad and distressing visitation, the farmers have commenced tilling the ground, and the potato is again planted to a greater extent. The attachment of the Irish to this their precarious mode of sustenance, cannot be eradicated.

The Hungarian war proceeds with unrelenting fury. The Magyars have adopted a guerrilla warfare, and Prince Windisgrätz no longer taking the field, but remaining at Buda, showing that the war has only just commenced.

The King of Holland has been removed from the scene of impending strife on the Continent, having expired on the 17th ult. His son, now King William III., was in London at the time, but immediately proceeded to his dominion, where probably he has peaceably ascended the throne.

Austria has taken the most extraordinary and unlooked for step. The Diet of Kremsier, which was convoked by the late Emperor, has been dismissed, after having promulgated a Constitution, not only for the countries represented at Kremsier, but for the whole Austrian Empire. The great object which has been kept in view by the designers of this Constitution is, the making of all Austria into a free, independent, indivisible, indissoluble Constitutional Monarchy. The press is not allowed to be put under censorship. The complete equality and toleration of all religions, the independence of every church and sect in the management of its own property and affairs, the extension of education to all languages, and its prosecution as government work, are especially secured. The Imperial Diet is to consist of two Houses, whose Constitution approaches nearer to that of the American Senate and House of Representatives, than the Legislative Assembly of any other State.

At Rome, every preparation is being made for the expected war with Austria. On the 27th of February, the Assembly voted the abolition of the Holy Office. The temporal power of the Pope is at an end. By order of the present Roman Government, it is stated, the prisons of the Holy Office, as the Inquisition was blasphemously called, have been visited and the prisoners liberated. In a gloomy dungeon was found a wretched bishop of Egypt, condemned under Pope Leo XII.; he had nearly lost the use of his legs from long incarceration. Two nuns were among the prisoners; they were removed to a charitable institution.

The Paris papers of the latest dates contain the following startling information, about which it is hoped there is some mistake:—

"In the Convent of Spello, an official letter from the Court at Gaeta to the Superior, has been lately discovered. The following are some passages of this appeal to the massacre: 'The Liberals, the Jacobins, the Carbonari, and the Republicans, are people of like kind; they wish to destroy religion and its ministers. In our turn, we must disperse the remains of all this race. Continue to embrace with your zeal those of your order and the inhabitants of the country. Advise them not to fail at the sacred rendezvous which will be announced to them by the sound of the alarm-bell, and then let each one, without pity, bury his steel in the breasts of the profaners of our holy religion. Bid them repeat their vows to exterminate our enemies, not excepting their children, in order to avoid the revenge which they might hereafter attempt upon us. In a word, prepare all, so that when we raise the cry of reäction, it may be repeated everywhere without fear.'"

COL. FREMONT'S EXPEDITION.

The following particulars of Col. Fremont's disastrous expedition, are gathered by the St. Louis Republican from Mr. J. W. Folger, who left Santa Fe on the 24th of February, and reached St. Louis on the 29th of March:—

The published letters from Col. Fremont and his friends left him ascending a mountain and within five or six miles of the summit. But this elevation he never reached. A storm came up, which forced him to retreat, and to seek shelter in the valley below. Here, it is said, the snow drifted, and accumulated to the depth of thirty or forty feet, and the party lost all their animals, and were compelled to leave their entire outfit. The snow covered the animals and every thing else from view, and Col. F. and his party were driven to seek safety on the sides of the mountain.

In this emergency, Bill Williams, a hardy mountaineer, and two others, volunteered to seek succor from the nearest settlements; and it was arranged that they should return in twenty days. As they failed to do so, however, Col. Fremont and one or two others resolved upon attempting to reach Taos; and on the sixth day from their leaving camp, they overtook Williams and one of his companions. The other, (Mr. King, of the District of Columbia,) was represented to have died of the exposure and of hunger, and in the extremity to which they were driven, the survivors were forced to eat a part of his body.

Col. Fremont made his way to Taos, obtained aid, provisions and horses, and then set out in search of his party. But more than one-third of his men had, in the interval of his absence, died from exposure and hunger; and one or two had given out, and were left to die, when he came up with them. Capt. Cathcart, of the English army, was among the survivors. Col. Fremont lost his whole outfit—his mules, instruments, baggage, and every thing else of value. On his arrival at Santa Fe he was furnished with horses by the Quartermaster, and with stores by the Commissary of the United States, and after recruiting his party he again set off for California—taking the route pursued by Col. Cook in 1847. He and his party have suffered terribly in this expedition, and it will be a warning to all others never to attempt such a journey in mid-winter.

The Government Jewels.—A man named Henry T. Jones was arrested in New York last week, on suspicion of being concerned in stealing the Government Jewels. At his house, 121 diamonds of various sizes, 143 pearls, together with three pounds of gold in bars, were found buried in the cellar. One large bottle of ottar of roses, containing nearly a quart, was also found. The original bottle had been substituted by the one found. The scabbard of the sword which had been presented to Commodore Biddle by the Emperor of Russia, and a gold snuff-box presented by the Governor of Morocco, had been melted down into bars. The settings of the diamonds and pearls had been removed and deposited in a tin box. The Grand Jury of Washington have indicted Tom Hand as the individual who stole the jewels, and it is believed that Henry T. Jones proceeded to Washington and brought on the jewels to New York. He recently commenced a suit against George Wilkes for having stated that he was implicated in the robbery, and in the course of the present week the Grand Jury would probably have found an indictment against him for slander, which has been completely done away with by the arrest of Jones and the recovery of the property.

Mysterious Sickness.—A mysterious sickness prevails in Milbury and Sutton, Mass. The patient is seized with severe cold and shivering, and in a few moments becomes insensible. After this he complains of his head and back. There has been one case of death in less than twelve hours; others have lived twenty-four or thirty-six hours, and one case continued two weeks. In Sutton, a man 40 or 50 years of age, one of the Overseers of the Poor, was taken as he was on the point of going to meeting, and died on Monday. There have been twenty deaths in the two towns of this malady. The Boston Traveler says that a merchant of that city was seized upon 'Change on Monday with precisely similar symptoms, and was carried to his home insensible.

The Young Incendiary.—The Boston Traveler, of March 31st, says that the lad Adams, ten years of age, charged with setting fire under the Park-st. Church, and to the stable of S. Child & Co., Harrison-av., was examined in the Police Court, and held for trial at the Municipal Court—his bail being fixed at $1,500 in the first case, and $2,000 in the second. The boy's previous good character was established by a large number of witnesses. The defense of the deed is that the accused was at the time under the influence of what is called "Pyromania," or fire-madness, which was stated to be an uncontrollable desire to set fires.

Slaves in California.—The National Era says: "We are told that several slave droves have been sent out from the South, and that individuals, as well as companies, from that section, are taking slaves with them. One company went through Washington a few days since, with eight or ten slaves. We may state also, on good authority, that arrangements are in progress in this country for the establishment in California of a press to advocate the Pro-Slavery side of the Territorial question." The Era adds, that an Anti-Slavery paper will also shortly be established at San Francisco by Mr. Crane, recently of the Richmond Southerner.

Telegraph for the World.—Prof. John D. Pierce, of Marshall, Mich, proposes that the telegraphic wires for Europe via Behring's Straits, should go first from St. Louis to San Francisco, and there divide so as to send one branch through Mexico and all the capitals in South America to Rio de Janeiro; and the other by Oregon and the Russian settlements to the Straits, thence through all the chief cities of Eastern Asia, Calcutta, Bombay, &c., to Jerusalem; there divide again, and one branch extend to Cairo, and ultimately to the Cape of Good Hope, and the other to Smyrna, Constantinople, Vienna, Paris, and London.

Reduction of Canal Tolls.—The Canal Board, at Albany, have been engaged in reviewing the Rates of Toll established by the Board last year, and, after mature deliberation, have determined upon making some important reductions for the coming year on property received from the West. A reduction of 33 1-3 per cent. has been agreed upon on corn and corn-meal, and 25 per cent. on barley, oats, and bloom iron. Last year corn-meal was charged 3 mills per 1,000 pounds per mile; this year it will pay 2 mills. Barley, oats, and bloom iron, last year paid 4 mills per 1,000 pounds per mile; this year they are charged 3 mills.

Canal Bank.—A correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, writing from Albany, under date of April 6, says he has good authority for stating that the Receiver of the Canal Bank will, on or about the 1st of July next, declare a farther dividend of 40 cents on the dollar on notes or bills of this Bank. It will be remembered that on the 24th of January last a dividend of 60 cts. was paid on the bills. Those who are familiar with the assets of the Bank are very sanguine that the Receiver will be able to pay the depositors a dividend of 30 cents on the dollar.

The Newark Advertiser of the 6th inst. says, that John King, a respectable colored man of some 50 years, committed suicide by hanging himself in his house yesterday, while the family were all absent, and was not discovered until this noon, having evidently been dead 24 hours. He was to have been married this evening. He has always been a sober, industrious, peaceable man. Within a few years he has been a Methodist preacher among the people of color. He was a widower, owned a little property, and leaves a family.

The Cincinnati book trade is declared by the papers of the Queen City to be growing into great importance, sufficient, they say, to make that city one of the principal book marts at no distant day.

SUMMARY.

Thompson's Bank Note Reporter says:—"Checks on the Utica City Bank, having the appearance of Bank notes, and evidently intended to be passed as the notes of the Bank, are in circulation. We have seen some of the 10s, which require some scrutiny to discover their real character. When carefully read, it will be found a check on the Utica City Bank. These checks are drawn to the order of J. J. Hinman and D. G. Barnes, by Jno. E. Hinman.

A Mexican paper says that the Apache Indians lately made an irruption in the Department of Sonora, committing the most horrid ravages. They were 100 in number, and destroyed three several detachments of armed men sent against them. 73 Mexicans were slain during the foray, and from 800 to 1,000 head of cattle carried off.

There are plenty of exaggerated reports of cholera at the West. The steamboat Wm. Noble came up from New Orleans to Louisville last week. It was rumored that fifty persons died on the passage, but it turns out that there were only six out of 229 passengers. Nothing is gained by such fright. Keep cool, and the disease will not be half so likely to catch you.

The ship Christoval Colon sailed from New York for California on the 6th of January, full of passengers. When four days out, she encountered a terrific hurricane, which lasted 36 hours, and came near being the end of her. The vessel was badly injured, much of her rigging and all of her deck load lost. She has gone to Rio Janeiro to refit.

The Democrats of St. Louis have had a grand mass meeting at which resolutions were adopted claiming that Congress has the right to prohibit slavery in Territories, and approving of the course of the Missouri delegation in Congress in not signing Mr. Calhoun's address.

EASTERN ASSOCIATION.

The Annual Meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist Eastern Association will be held with the Church in Pawcatuck, R. I., on the fifth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, at 10½ o'clock, A. M. Introductory Discourse by Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J.; alternate, Samuel Davison, of Farmington, Illinois. S. S. GRISWOLD, Cor. Sec.

Executive Committee.—The Executive Committee of the Eastern Association will hold its annual session on the fourth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, in the lecture-room of the Seventh-day Baptist Church at Pawcatuck, R. I. at 10½ o'clock, A. M. S. S. Griswold.

P. S. Churches are requested to specify in their associational letters the amount they will raise for missionary purposes within the limits of the Association for the ensuing year.

FARM FOR SALE.

THE subscriber offers for sale his farm, situated in the town of Genesee, county of Allegany, N. Y. Said farm codsists of 280 acres of first-rate land, 175 of which is level, ann the remainder gradually rising side-hill; all of which is susceptible of cultivation, mostly adapted to grazing purposes. About 75 acres, however, is a gravely quick soil, as productive of wheat and corn, as any in the southern part of said county. Upon said farm is about 100 acres improvement, two framed barns, and a large two-story framed house, well inclosed, lately built, and conveniently calculated. There are two good wells of water upon said farm, and it is also abundantly supplied with numerous brooks and springs. Said farm is situated in a good neighborhood, and convenient to school, and the central place of business for the western part of said town; and on the main traveled road from Angelica to Smithport. For pleasantness and locality it is not surpassed by any in the township or vicinity. To those wishing to purchase a good farm, the present opportunity offers rare inducements. The farm will be sold low for cash; or, if desired, by paying one-half of the purchase money down, the balance will be arranged to accommodate purchasers for any reasonable length of credit. A careful view of the premises by a discerning individual, is only requisite to a thorough conviction that an investment made under such favorable terms as the subscriber offers, is but safe and a fair speculation. For farther information, address the subscriber, P. M. at West Genesee, Allegany Co., N. Y., or inquire at his house. JARED MAXSON.

Genesee, December 20th, 1848. 29m3.

THE BOOK

For every Clergyman—For every School District—For every Educated Man.

"Will not the enlightened and liberal furnish their clergymen with a copy, as an indispensable volume in their libraries?"—Rev. T. H. Gallaudet.

Extract from a Lecture addressed to a Teacher's Institute, by William Russel, Principal of the Merrimack [N. H.] School for Teachers, and formerly Editor of the American Journal of Education:

"The edition of Dr. Webster's Dictionary, revised by Professor Goodrich, I would earnestly recommend to the attention of all teachers who are desirous of becoming fully qualified to give instruction in the English Language. The copious information which that work embodies, on all topics connected with Etymology—the extreme exactness, as well as the number, extent, and fullness of the definitions which it furnishes to every important word, render it a mine of philological wealth to instructors. The volume is, in fact, the teacher's encyclopedia, as well as lexicon, for daily reference. Could a copy of it be provided, as the permanent property of every district school, the effect, as regards the improvement of instruction, would be deeply and extensively felt, in the increased skill of the teacher, and the higher attainments of his pupils, in the most important part of education—the acquisition of an adequate knowledge and proper use of our own language."

"It has come to be a necessity to every educated man."—Lord Brougham

UNION ACADEMY.

E. P. LARKIN, Principal.
Miss S. E. CRANDALL, Preceptress.

Opened March 12th, 1849.

THE Trustees of this Academy beg leave to say to the inhabitants of West Jersey in particular, and the public in general, that the universally acknowledged and deeply regretted want of such an institution in this section of country, especially by those desiring to give their children a liberal education, has been the prevailing motive with them, and those whom they represent, in commencing a school that shall be conducted on such a plan, and governed by such principles, as to meet their entire wants in these respects.

The Trustees of this Academy consider themselves bound to see the following principles observed, and strictly carried out, in the conduct of the school:—

First. Nothing sectarian shall be taught or countenanced in this school.

Second. Equal advantages shall be afforded to every student, whatever may be his, or her, religious denomination.

Third. The exercises of the institution shall be suspended on the first and seventh days of each week.

Fourth. No efforts shall be wanting to make the advantages of the institution equal to those of the most approved Academies in the Eastern and Middle States.

This institution is pleasantly located at Shiloh, Cumberland County, New Jersey, three and a half miles West of Bridgeton, the county seat, and 12 miles South-east of Salem; amidst an industrious, enterprising, and moral community, and removed from the vices ever attendant on large villages and cities.

TERMS.—Tuition from $3 50 to $5 00 per term, settled invariably in advance, either by payment or satisfactory arrangement. No admittance for less than half a term.

Board can be had in families at from $1 00 to $1 50 per week. Rooms can be obtained at a moderate expense by those desiring them.

The Winter Term of the first year will commence the first Monday in December. Each term will continue fourteen weeks.

Board of Trust.

To Clergymen and their People.

All Clergymen who will send their address to Messrs. Comstock & Company, No. 21 Courtland-street—(after the 1st of May No. 57 John-street)—New York, shall be furnished gratuitously, for their family use, with a Salve of most extraordinary merit for external sores or inflammations of long or short standing. In burns, or pains and swellings of nearly all descriptions, its effects are charming, and almost beyond belief. This Salve has already been used by quite a number of the clergy, for themselves or sufferers to whom they have given it; and they have called on or written to the proprietors to express their delight at its action, and a desire to have their names used in making known its virtues. The proprietors having realized a handsome sum by its sale, feel called upon by a sense of duty to their fellow-men to disseminate the knowledge of the existence of such a thing far and near, and to give it without charge to the reverend clergy without limitation. It is called CONNEL'S PAIN EXTRACTOR, and is owned solely by Messrs. C. & Co. All religious papers that will publish this a few times will be furnished with the Salve free, and they may also thereby relieve many suffering poor brethren from agonizing pain, and save them much expense. The names of nearly fifty clergymen recommending it, are to be seen at the office of C. & Co.

You will please observe, it is no "sovereign remedy for all complaints," but only intended for external applications in the following:—Burns, Scalds, Frosted parts, Chilblains, Chafe or Galls, Chaps, Tetter, Pimple, Blotch, Felons, Ulcers, Sprains, Erysipelas, Cuts, Bruises, Ear and Toothache, Mumps, Sore Throat, Whitlows, Piles, Ringworm, Salt Rheum, Barber's Itch, Carbuncle, Eruption, Sore Eyes and Lids, Weak Sight, Sore Lips, Punctures, Biles and Warts, Fever Pains, Tender Feet, Inflammatory Rheumatism, Tic Doloureux, Ague in Face and Breast, Fever Sores, Old Burn Scars, Prickly Heat, Inflamed Skin, Broken Breasts, Sore Nipples, Rough Hands, Blistered Surfaces, Dressing for Blisters, White Swellings, Cold in Wounds, Sore Corns, General Sores, Smallpox Marks, &c.

Though we have named numerous affections, experience has taught us that they are not too many. It will be necessary to know that this article is the only one we can recommend; but must caution against some imitation by like name. We will present it to the poor who have actual need of it.

APRIL SONG.

BY G. GRAHAM.

The Spring is coming—it is!
The snow is melting away,
And birds which fled, as Summer sped,
For fields more green and gay,
Have come again to their native plain,
To cheer us with their song,
And they sit upon the forest-tree
And sing there all day long.

The Spring is coming—it is!
And flowers will soon be here,
With perfume rare to fill the air,
And bid our spirits "cheer;"
And the vernal grass will spring,
And the forest-trees look gay;
The hills shall ring with songs we sing,
This merry April day.

The Spring is coming—it is!
Let every heart rejoice,
And let each tongue that ever sung
Chime in with Nature's voice;
Bid gloomy care and dark despair
And every ill away,
And seek relief from every grief
On Nature's holiday. [Tribune.

United States Postage, according to the Act approved March 3, 1849.

The inland postage, for 300 miles and under, is 10 cents an ounce; for half an ounce and less it is 5 cents.

The inland postage for greater distances than 300 miles, is 20 cents an ounce; 10 cents for half an ounce and under.

The whole postage by the British or American mail steamers, from or to Great Britain or Ireland, is 48 cents an ounce; 24 cents for a single [illegible] ounce or less.

T[illegible]nited States inland postage, whatever [illegible] the distance, on letters sent by the [illegible] steamers to foreign countries, other than [illegible] Britain or Ireland, is 10 cents an ounce; [illegible] cents the single half ounce.

The postage, by the American steamers, to foreign countries, other than Great Britain or Ireland, or letters to be sent through the British mail, is 42 cents an ounce; 21 cents the single half ounce.

To and by Bremen, from the post, and the reverse, 48 cents an ounce; 24 cents the single half ounce. The inland postage to be added.

To and from Havana, 25 cents an ounce; 12 1-2 cents single.

To and from Chagres, 40 cents an ounce; 20 cents single.

To and from Panama, 60 cents an ounce; 30 cents single.

To and from other places on the Pacific, 80 cents an ounce; 40 cents single.

To and from the West Indies (except Havana) and islands in the Gulf of Mexico, 20 cents; 10 cents single, with inland postage.

Any fractional excess over an ounce is always to be regarded as an ounce.

The above postage may be prepaid or not, at the option of the sender; except to foreign countries, other than Great Britain or Ireland. And where the letters pass through the Bremen Post Office, in most cases, the whole postage may be prepaid. (See table 1, exhibit D Senate document, Executive, No. 25, 30th Congress, 2d session.)

A postage of six cents is charged on letters and pacquets brought into the United States in any private ship or vessel, or carried from one port therein to another, if they are to be delivered at the Post Office where the same shall arrive; and two cents are added to the rates of postage if designed to be conveyed to any place. And postmasters are to receive one cent for every letter or pacquet received by them to be conveyed by any (private) ship or vessel beyond sea, or from any port to another in the United States.

One cent is to be added to the rate of each way letter. Way letters are those brought to a Post Office by the post riders, and other carriers of the mail, whose duty it is to receive them, when presented more than one mile from a Post Office.

There is charged upon letters and other matter delivered from steamboats, except newspapers, pamphlets, magazines, and periodicals, the same rates as if they had been transmitted by mail.

Drop letters, or letters placed in any Post Office for delivery there, are charged two cents each.

Advertised letters are charged with the cost of advertising, which is not to exceed four cents for each letter, in addition to the regular postage.

Not more than two cents to be paid to the letter carriers employed in cities for the delivery of letters, or for receiving them to be deposited in the Post Office.

Newspapers of and under the superfices of 1,900 square inches are conveyed from one Post Office to another in the same State for one cent; and any distance not more than 100 miles at the same rate, and 1 1-2 cent for any greater distance. One quarter's postage is always to be paid in advance by those who receive newspapers by post. The sea postage on newspapers is three cents each, with the above rates added when transported inland. Newspapers may be mailed or delivered at any Post Office in the United States to or from Great Britain or Ireland on the payment of two cents. Letter carriers employed in cities are not to receive more than 1-2 cent for the delivery of newspapers. The postage on newspapers not sent from the office of publication is required to be prepaid; and the whole postage, in all cases, when they are directed to foreign countries.

Handbills, circulars, and advertisements, not exceeding one sheet, are subject to three cents postage each, whatever the distance (inland) to be prepaid. The sea postage on price currents is three cents, with inland postage added when so transported. The law makes no distinction of handbills, circulars, advertisements or price currents, when regulating sums to be paid to the letter carriers of cities.

Newspapers are defined in the 16th section of the act approved March 3, 1845. When they exceed two sheets, or a superfices of 1,900 square inches, they are to be charged with the same rates of postage as that on magazines and pamphlets. All pamphlets, magazines, periodicals, and every other kind of printed or other matter (except newspapers) are charged at the rate of 2 1-2 cents per copy, of no greater weight than one ounce, and one cent additional for each additional ounce, any fractional excess of not less than 1-2 ounce being regarded as an ounce. The sea postage on each pamphlet is three cents, with the above rates added when transported inland. There is to be paid on pamphlets sent to or received from Great Britain and Ireland, one cent for each ounce or fractional excess. Letter carriers employed in cities are not to receive more than 1-2 cent for the delivery of pamphlets.

EASTERN AFRICA—ITS CLIMATE.

Quite recently the English have made a settlement at Aden, near the Red Sea. Having once obtained a foothold, they began to push about them, and one of their first discoveries was a river where none was marked upon a chart, and upon this they steamed three hundred miles without finding the least obstruction. Having now passed round this continent, let us look up into the interior. For half a century the English government has been expending lives and treasures in a partial exploration. They have found that this whole tract of country is one of amazing fertility and beauty, abounding in gold and all sorts of tropical vegetation. There are hundreds of woods, invaluable for dying and architectural purposes, not found in other portions of the world. Through it for thousands of miles sweeps a river, from three to six miles broad, with clear water, and of unsurpassed depth, flowing on at a rate of two or three miles an hour, without rock, shoal, or snag, to interrupt its navigation. Other rivers pour into this tributary waters of such volume as must have required hundreds of miles to be collected, yet they seem scarcely to enlarge it. This river pours its waters into the Atlantic, through the most magnificent delta in the world, consisting perhaps of a hundred mouths, extending probably five hundred miles along the coast, and mostly broad, deep, and navigable for steamboats. Upon this river are scattered cities, some of which are estimated to contain a million of inhabitants, and the whole country teems with a dense population.

Far in the interior, in the very heart of the continent, is a nation in an advanced state of civilization. The grandeur and beauty of portions of the country through which the Niger makes its sweeping circuit, are indescribable. In many places its banks rise boldly a thousand feet, thickly covered with the richest vegetation of tropical climes. But all this vast and sublime country, this scope of rich fertility and romantic beauty, is apparently shut out forever from the world. It is the negro's sole possession. He need not fear the incursions of the white man there, for over this whole lovely country moves one dread malaria, and to the white man it is the "valley of the shadow of death."

In expedition after expedition, sent out from the English ports, on the Island of Ascension, not one man in ten has returned alive; all have fallen victims to this seemingly beautiful country. It seems impossible for an Englishman to breathe that air. So dreadful is it—so small the chance of life, that criminals in England have been offered pardon on condition of volunteering in this service, more terrible than that of gathering the poison from the fabled Upas. This country, tempting as it is, can only be penetrated at the risk of life, and it is melancholy to think, that those who have given us the meager information that we have, did so at the sacrifice of their lives. [Simmond's Col. Mag.

STRAITS OF MAGELLAN.

As these Straits are to be navigated by some vessels to California, the following account of them, by Capt. Morrell, in his book of voyages, published in 1832, by the Harpers, may interest some persons. He had been six times through this passage:—

The Straits are about 375 miles in length. Their source forming an elbow, or two sides of a right angled triangle. The distance across the land is about 190 miles—Cape Forward being the southernmost point of the South American Continent—the Island of Cape Horn being over 100 miles farther South. The Straits at the eastern entrance are six and seven leagues wide, and have from 15 to 30 fathoms of water. The tide on the Atlantic rises about 16 feet, and about 8 feet on the Pacific. The passage is safe for vessels of any size, and the navigation pleasant and easy. There are many safe and commodious harbors all the way through. Wood and water can be procured with ease, and abundance of fish, and anti-scorbutic vegetables, and birds and deer at the eastern entrance. The land is low on both sides, like a rolling prairie. Towards the middle and West it becomes hilly and mountainous, some parts of it resembling the scenery of the Hudson River.

The country is well peopled. Near the eastern end of the Straits, Capt. Morrell saw about 200 Indians, all on horseback; and towards the western end he was visited on shore by more than a thousand, who were very peaceable and friendly.

About 120 miles from the eastern entrance is Port Famine, so named by the English navigator Cavendish, who in 1587 rescued the only survivor of a colony of 400 Spaniards, who had been settled here in 1581, to form a nucleus for the protection of Spanish commerce. The place was named Philipville, in honor of the reigning monarch of Spain. The unfortunate settlers were left without sufficient provisions, and did not pay sufficient attention to their crops. When the place was visited by Cavendish, he found only one individual alive, whom he carried to England. All the rest had perished by famine but 23, who set out by land for the Rio de la Plata, and were never afterwards heard of.

Had this colony been composed of such men as are daily emigrating from New England, to our western wilderness, so far from suffering famine, they would have converted Patagonia into a fruitful country, and Philipville would have in time become a large city. It has a fine harbor, abundance of fish, game, and wild celery, and the finest trees I ever saw; oaks, beeches, and cedars, five to seven feet in diameter. Some of them would make the finest masts for line of battle ships.

The valleys are clothed with a luxuriant verdure. The clover fields of Pennsylvania, if suffered to grow a few seasons unmowed, would alone furnish a parallel.

Capt. Morrell visited the ruins of Philipville, and says the fort erected by the Spaniards is but slightly decayed, and with little labor could be repaired, and would command the Straits. The Captain made an excursion into the country, of which he gives an interesting account. In the night they were disturbed by a loud roaring, which he afterwards found was the South American lion.

THE SALAMANDER.

The ancients have described a lizard that is bred from heat, that lives in the flames, and feeds upon the fire, as its proper nourishment. It is needless to say, there is no such animal existing; and that, above all others, the modern salamander has the least affinity to such an animal. The fact is, that when the animal is exposed to the fire, drops of milky fluid ooze through all the pores of the skin. The same circumstance, however, occurs whenever it is handled. This fluid seems to be of an acrid nature.

The salamander, best known in Europe, is from eight to eleven inches long; usually black, spotted with yellow; and when taken in the hand, feeling cold to a great degree. The black water mewt being reckoned among the number. The idle report of its being inconsumable by fire, has caused many of these poor animals to be burnt—but we can not say as philosophical martyrs—since scarce any philosopher would think it necessary to make the experiment. When thrown into the fire, the animal is seen to burst with the heat of its situation, and to eject its fluids. And we are gravely told in the "Philosophical Transactions," that this is a method the animal has to extinguish the flames.

The whole of the lizard kind are so tenacious of life, that they will live several hours after the loss of the head; they also sustain the want of food in a most surprising manner. One of them, brought from the Indies, lived here months without any other nourishment than what it received from licking a piece of earth, on which it was brought over. Another was kept by Seba in an empty vial, without any food, for six months. And Ledi tells of a large one, brought from Africa, which lived for eight months, fasting in like manner. Indeed, as many of this kind, both salamanders and lizards, are torpid, or nearly so, during winter, the loss of their appetite for so long a time is less surprising. If wetted with vinegar, however, or sprinkled with powdered salt, the animal soon dies in convulsions.

California Adventurers.—"This life is a riddle," says an old monk, and if the saying is not literally correct, there is certainly much in the history of men, and women too, that is inexplicable by any rule of reasonable and rationable conduct. Our city is now crowded with an immense number of persons from all quarters of the Union, on their way to the gold regions of California. We saw in the street, yesterday, in a rickety wagon, with a very poor team, consisting of a yoke of oxen and an ill-fed horse, an aged man, we suppose full seventy years, and his wife, scarcely a year his junior, on their way from some county in Illinois, to California. The old man was as buoyant in the hope of making a fortune in the gold diggins as any of the many young men that are destined for the same place, and his withered and aged partner talked eloquently of the enjoyments she anticipated on her return with an abundance of the rich metal to her children some years hence. They had sold their farm, and proposed to make the entire trip by land. They were willing to endure all the privations, exposure, and hardships consequent upon such a journey, under the consolation, and cheered by the prospect of returning in a few years, rich in gold. They had built their air castle, and even age and infirmity did not mantle any part of it with the moss or ivy of doubt or distrust as to the result. [St. Louis Republican, March 22.

Prices in California.—A correspondent of the Philadelphia North American, under date of San Francisco, Jan. 26, 1849, says:—

"I find that property has risen nearly 1,000 per cent. since I left here five months ago. For a lot which I sold for $1,000 last July, the present holder has refused $10,000. Other sales have been made, some nine or ten, in which property has advanced in equal proportion. The influx of population is already so great that there are nearly 300 people (although it is the rainy season) sleeping out in tents and under porches and whale boats.

"The rent of a room fifteen feet square is fifty dollars per week. Board, with space sufficient to spread a mattrass on, is fifteen dollars per week. Carpenters' wages $10 per day. Lumber $120 per 1,000, and not 2,000 feet for sale or to be had even at that price. Immigrants from the coast of South America are daily arriving; one thousand at least are expected within the next few days.

"Such a state of affairs as here exists never before existed. Mexican coin and gold dust are so abundant, and many of the necessaries of a rapidly increasing population are so scarce, that the relative value of the precious metals is almost nominal. Capitalists are still pouring in from all quarters of the Pacific."

Women in California.—If the thirst for gold-seeking has been unfortunately strong enough on our side of the continent, to cause the disruption of domestic ties, either positive or contemplated, it would seem that in the gold region itself the feeling is reversed, in some degree, for a lady writes from San Francisco to her friend in Massachusetts, after the following fashion:—

"The demand for marriageable women seems to be as great as for goods. This is the only country in the world where women are properly appreciated. The proportion of males in the territory is five to one of females, and the labor of females is as much needed in cooking, &c., at the gold regions, as the males. There have been more marriages the last few months than in ten years previous, in this country. The squaws, before they will go to the gold region, make efforts to get white husbands, which they soon obtain in the present state of affairs.

"Father Manaque, the Catholic priest, has informed me that he married, the last month, 110 men to squaws. The consequence is, that the poor Indians will soon be left without any class of females from which they can choose, as certainly no white woman of whatever condition in society will marry an Indian, when she can readily marry a white man of some wealth and prominence. Some of the most ugly and slovenly servants here marry traders who have accumulated fortunes in a week."

A New Thing in Mechanics.—Mr. Joseph Harris, Jr., of this city, says the Boston Chronotype, has invented and patented a box and axle which require no oil, and yet almost completely escapes that destroying angel of machinery, friction. At least, so we cannot but hope, from seeing a working model, which we understand from Mr. Harris has been put in a lathe and turned 1,000 revolutions in a minute, a motion which, with a common sized railroad truck-wheel, would carry it about two miles in a minute, or 120 miles an hour, without producing any perceptible heat, and without the use of a particle of oil. The mechanism by which a result so desirable and astonishing is effected, is a wheel in the middle of a wheel, or rather six wheels in the middle of one. The box is about five inches in diameter, and the axle three inches, and in the space between them are disposed, at equal distances, six anti-friction rollers, which are kept in their places by teeth at both their ends, playing into corresponding circles of teeth in both the box and axle. There is no bearing upon these teeth, which are cut to the anti-friction curve. The bearing is entirely upon the smooth portion of the rollers between the teeth. The only service of the teeth is to prevent the possibility of the rollers getting out of place.

◆

Mysterious Disease.—The North Adams (Mass.) Transcript relates a case of disease and death in that village, which, in its character, bears a resemblance to the epidemic that was recently described in Uniontown, Pa. A son of Mr. Wm. Erwin, on Friday complained of headache in the afternoon, and came from school just at night, saying he did not feel very well and was all of a flutter. Soon there was loss of muscular power manifest, the knee bending and giving way as he tried to walk, and he falling. There seemed to be a general prostration, and he was soon very delirious. In the night he was taken in a fit of short duration, followed by loss of voice and consciousness; in the morning small purple spots appeared under the skin, and in about 33 hours from the time he was taken ill he was a corpse. The disease entirely baffled the skill of the physicians, and none could tell what it was.

Suicide by a Slave.—The Nashville American says a negro girl belonging to Mr. Louis C. Lisby, hung herself last week. Her mother had run off, and the girl being threatened with punishment if she did not give information as to the whereabout of the runaway, committed suicide.

Had the two persons referred to above been white slaves in Constantinople or some other place, the conduct of this self-sacrificing daughter would have been considered in the highest degree heroic, even by those who make merchandise of human flesh and blood, but as they were only 'niggers' in republican America, we presume the affair will be put down as another indication of the natural obstinacy and stupidity of the African race. [N. Y. Tribune.

◆

Newspaper "Patronage."—Newspaper "patronage" is a curious thing. The following, which hits in every community where newspapers are published, is as good as it is true:—

"A man lives near you—never took your paper—it is too small—don't like the editor—don't like the politics—too whiggish, too locofocoish, or too something else—yet goes regularly to his neighbor, and reads his by a good fire—finds fault with its contents, disputes its positions, and quarrels with its type. Occasionally sees an article he likes—saves half a dime and begs a number. This is newspaper patronage."

◆

Marriages on Sunday.—It is said that the Pennsylvania courts have decided that marriage is a civil contract, and that they have also decided that no contract made on Sunday is valid. The Register says that the question is now being agitated whether marriages made in that State on Sunday are lawful, and whether indictments for bigamy can be sustained when the first marriage had taken place on Sunday.

VARIETY.

A few years ago, as the story goes, a couple of Dutchmen, upon the high hills of Limestown, though generally very friendly, had a dreadful falling out about one killing the other's dog, for which he sued for damages. When in court, the defendant was asked by the judge if he killed the dog. "Be sure I kilt him; but let him prove it." This being quite satisfactory, the plaintiff was asked at what amount he estimated the value of the dog, or what he thought him worth. "Be sure," said he, "de dog was wort noting, but since he was so mean as to kill him he shall pay de full wallue of him."

Discoveries in agriculture are not only for the time and country in which they are developed, but they may be considered as extending to future ages, and as ultimately tending to benefit the human race; as affording subsistence for generations yet to come; as multiplying life, and likewise providing for its enjoyment.

Those that are teaching the people to read, are doing all that in them lies to increase the power and to extend the influence of those that can write; for the child will read to please his master, but the man, to please himself.

The number of letters passing through the post office in the United Kingdom, in 1848, was 329,000,000—an increase in 9 years of 253,000,000. Such is "penny postage!" When shall we republicans learn wisdom upon this subject?

Mr. John H. Warren, Clerk to the Solicitor in the Treasury Office, Washington, died one night last week. The office is worth some $1,100 per annum, and about 100 applicants were after it the next day.

The rule adopted by the French Assembly, excluding adulterers from membership, has been changed to read those who have been condemned.

All the business of the Pension and Indian Departments, at Washington, are transferred, by law, to the Department of the Interior.

A new town, to be called Appleton, has been surveyed and laid out near the Grand Chute, on Fox River, Wisconsin.

Mr. Chase introduced into the Senate of Wisconsin, on the 7th ult., a bill to repeal all laws for the collection of debt.

TERMS AND VACATIONS.

The Academic Year for 1848–9, is divided into Three Terms of Fourteen Weeks each.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| First, commencing Wednesday, | Aug. 23, | ending Nov. 29. |
| Second, " " | Dec. 13, | " March 21. |
| Third, " | April 4, | " July 11. |

COURSE OF STUDY.

The classic course gives full facilities to Students for an advanced standing in College. The Ornamental and Scientific Departments are such as to meet the advancing demands of this educating age. Each member of the school will be required to write compositions, and read or speak select pieces, at stated intervals.

EXPENSES.

| | |
|---|---|
| Tuition, according to studies, | $3, $4, or $5 0 |
| Extras—Drawing, | 1 00 |
| Painting, | $2 00 or 4 00 |
| Tuition on Piano, | 8 00 |
| Use of Piano, | 2 00 |
| Chemical Lectures, and Experiments, | 1 00 |
| Writing, including Stationery, | 50 |
| Study rooms, with stove, chairs, table, and bedstead, | 1 50 |
| Board in private families, per week, | $1 00 to 1 50 |

TEACHERS' CLASSES.

Classes will be formed at the opening of the First Term and middle of the Second Term, to continue seven weeks, with daily lectures and instructions in relation to the duties of those intending to teach, accompanied by a thorough review of the Common English branches. Tuition, $2 50.

AGRICULTURAL AND ANALYTIC CHEMISTRY.

Instructions in this Department, will be equal to any that can be obtained in the State, but will not be fully opened until about the first of January. A circular explaining more fully this Department, will be forwarded to any wishing it, by applying to the Principal, at DeRuyter; or Gurdon Evans, Analytic Labratory, Yale College, New Haven, Ct.

Text books furnished at the lowest prices.

Kitto's Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature.

TO CLERGYMEN AND OTHER STUDENTS OF THE BIBLE.—The undersigned beg leave to ask your attention to the following Work, which they now offer for sale. Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature, in two thick volumes of 1,878 pages royal octavo, beautifully and substantially bound, by JOHN KITTO, D. D., F. S. A., &c.; published by MARK H. NEWMAN & Co., 199 Broadway, New York.

This Work contains such information as is indispensable for the right understanding of the Bible and its historical interpretation. It comprehends Criticism, Geography, Natural History, and Antiquities, in all their branches, religious, political, social, and domestic.

The Works of Horne, Calmet, and others, are now found to be wholly inadequate to the wants of the student. Theological science is progressive, as well as every other, and the "old learning" of the "Bible Dictionaries" which have for so long a time been in use, is felt to be unequal to the advancement of mankind at the present time.

The efforts of the German Rationalists, of the Strauss school, to resolve all the facts of Bible History into myths and fables, has awakened a corresponding spirit of research among sound and Christian scholars; a determination to place the Scriptures upon a basis of indisputable evidence. The result has been, the discovery and accumulation of a mass of information from every portion of the field of biblical learning. A multitude of new, striking, and most useful facts have thus been placed at the disposal of the editor of this work. He has accordingly availed himself of all the latest discoveries down to the very year of its publication.

Nor is the Cyclopedia compiled by one man alone. Dr. Kitto distributed the subjects discussed to more than forth different individuals, of the first eminence in those departments. Their names are attached to their articles, and they are thus individually responsible for them. The Natural History of the Bible was written expressly for this work, by two distinguished Naturalists. The Botany of Scripture, by Dr. Royle, of King's College, London. The articles on Scriptural Zoology, by Hamilton Smith, President of the Devon and Cornwall Natural History Society. The articles in the department of Criticism, by Dr. Davidson, Professor of Biblical Literature in the Lancashire Independent College. Those on the Books of the Old and New Testament, by Havernich, Hengstenberg, Dr. Wright, of Dublin, and others.

The articles on the New Testament were furnished by Dr. Tholuck, Dr. Alexander, and others.

Various subjects are discussed, by Dr. John Pye Smith, Dr. Woods, of Andover, and others.

The Scriptural Geography exhibits the results of Dr. Robinson's biblical researches in Palestine.

It will be seen, therefore, that the work is a compilation of biblical learning, by the ablest biblical scholars of the age.

The undersigned ask the attention of students of the Bible to the Cyclopedia, in full confidence that no one acquainted with its character will suffer himself to be without a copy. The low price at which it is offered, (less than half the price of the English edition,) places it within the reach of all.

MARK H. NEWMAN & Co.

NOTICES OF THE CYCLOPEDIA.

From Horne, Author of "Horne's Introduction to the Study of the Scriptures," last edition.

"This Cyclopedia surpasses every Biblical Dictionary which has preceded it, and leaves nothing to be desired in such a work which can throw light on the criticism, interpretation, history, geography, archeology, and physical science of the Bible."

From the Biblical Repertory and Princeton Review.

"Dr. Kitto comes recommended even to those not acquainted with his other writings, by the well-known general facts of his experience and success as a book-maker, and of his long familiarity, in this capacity at least, with Biblical subjects.

"He has boldly and faithfully acted on the principle that such a plan can be worthily executed, in the present state of learning, only by distributing its parts among many hands, and such hands too as have been fitted by anterior experience to perform them most successfully."

From the Biblical Repository.

"The limits of a notice like the present forbid such a description of this learned work as its merits deserve, or sufficient to give the reader a just idea of its plan. We regard it as a most important and practically useful contribution to the cause of sound Biblical learning, and have no doubt that it will soon take the place, in the estimate of scholars, of every compilation of the kind.

"The enlistment of so many scholars in the production of a single work, each one presenting in a brief compass the results of a life-time of research, in precisely the matters where he is most at home, could not fail of enriching it with an amount of learning and scholarship to which, of course, the work of no single mind, however great, could pretend.'

From the Methodist Quarterly Review.

"This work was not compiled in the method hitherto usual with works of similar character, namely, on the basis of Calmet and the old learning of his day, with a few shreds of modern discovery interwoven. All the more important articles are written expressly for their present use, not by one individual, but by an arrangement between not less than forty different scholars in Europe and America, all of whom stand high in their several departments."

The Cyclopedia can be ordered through the local Book sellers in every part of the country.

THE SABBATARIANS—NO. 2.

I fear we do not appreciate the importance of a thoroughly educated ministry. Though I may incur the charge of insanity, I can not suppress the conviction, that the very existence of our denomination fifty years hence depends upon some great educational reform yet unattempted. The rolling car of improvement will crush us to atoms unless we up and on. We do no irreverence to our fathers when we say, that their attainments will not answer for us. The wheels of progression are driven by the lightning of awakened intellect, and all the hosts of indolence can not resist their mighty momentum. As well might the infant snatch the comet from its fiery orbit. It is vain to expect, that if we do not move on we can maintain our present position, for progression or retrogression is the inevitable condition of mind. I would not that we should seek the gaudy trappings of the world; this is not improvement. I mean, that mighty uprising of intellect, that expansion of mind, and development of thought, before the thunder of which grey-haired monarchs flee from the terrific crash of their falling thrones, and by whose resistless tread time-honored dynasties are crumbled to atoms. The immortal mind, long held in slothful inaction, has burst its fetters, and now holds nature's fearful elements in tame subserviency. Mind, awake, declares its relationship to Omnipotence. Does not such an age demand higher qualifications in every profession, especially the ministry, than any former age?

It is often asserted, that the minister need not be a scientific man, and that the church is unidentified with science. We grant that she is to a very great extent, and this is her bane. In thus absolving herself, she severs what God has joined together. Obliterate science and its results, and Christianity falls beyond the power of a resurrection. It is by the magic touch of science, that the Bible is sent as on the wings of the wind over the earth. Her lucid rays alone can light up those sacred pages in the dark corners of the world, and make them living oracles. It is the light of science alone, which calls man's moral nature from its undeveloped state. By it alone are his true relations pointed out, upon a knowledge of which depends his moral agency. A scientific development being a necessary antecedent of a moral character, and consequently a religious one, whoever discards science stabs religion to the heart. The intellectual and moral character will maintain this relationship forever. No star in man's moral firmament ever did or can arise until called up by some luminary of intellect. Paradoxical as I may seem to be, I affirm, that the principles of ethics and metaphysics clearly teach, that no man's moral development can ever transcend his intellectual. Why do brutes possess no moral being? Because they have no intellectual. Strike from man his intellect, and is he a moral being? Most clearly not. Now, as man is obligated to secure the greatest possible development of his moral powers, he must be equally obligated to secure an expansion of his intellect. With this view, we can well comprehend the beautiful remark of the Rev. Dr. Barnes, that science and religion are as streams flowing from adjacent hills, uniting in the valley, and thus flowing on to the great ocean of eternity. God is seen only in his works. It is the sphere of science to unfold those works, and thus unfold a God. This is the alpha and omega of scientific research. The farther we penetrate its coral labyrinths, the nearer we approach the undimmed presence of the great God, the center of universal existence. With these views, how infidel those denunciations against a learned ministry—a scientific church.

I have already remarked, that the attainments of the past do not meet the demands of the present; how much less, then, will those of the present meet the demands of the future? If we admit that our present ministers are fully adequate to the demand of the present, how far short must those for the future fall of the future demands, if educated only for the present. They must be educated now for the future. Oh, my young brethren, how would I appeal to you, and beseech you to prepare for the battles of the Lord. But I know your discouragements. I know, too, your devotion to other ends. The church of God has never pointed you up, but rather held you down. Still, put on the strong weapons of perseverance, of self-sacrificing devotion to God and humanity, and mountains will sink to mole-hills before you. Difficulties will vanish like shadows; and though the world may not crown you with her garlands, yet, with a name written in the Lamb's book of life, and a memory embalmed with the tears wiped from the eyes of suffering humanity, with a soul dedicated upon the altar of your God, come up to the noble work of glorifying God and blessing the world. But though I would encourage and urge you, by every consideration, yet beware lest you deceive yourselves. Count well the cost—examine well the field—before you enter. What does the world demand of you? I appeal to those proposing to enter the ministry. Can you believe that the station demands less of you than the most thorough mental discipline? The mind is not of spontaneous growth. Nothing but long, patient and persevering application, can ever give your powers expansion. Nothing but the most rigid discipline of mind can ever prepare you to grasp and unravel the crafty lies of atheism, and the fine-woven sophistries of infidelity. The combined energies of the church are directed to overthrow the Bible Sabbath. Who shall defend it? Our devoted leaders have met the foe in private walks, in ecclesiastical conventions, and before judicial tribunals. They have grasped with iron hand, and shivered, the weapons hurled at us. But when they are dead, who shall meet new emergencies? The foe has not yet exhausted its means. New weapons will be hurled, against which our sleeping fathers can not defend us. From the original depths of our mentality we must draw our resources. We must think for ourselves. But if we sleep in the cradle of mental indolence, till the enemy shall weave his sophistical snares around us, can we then expect to stand up in full development to unravel them? As well might we expect the acorn to leap up to a towering oak in a day, or the infant from its mother's arms to seize and hold firm the helm of an ocean ship. Mind and body, by a stern law of their copartnership, must mature; otherwise one is doomed to decay. The process, then, must be slow; and, as physical labor alone can give growth to the body, so mental exercise alone can give strength to the mind. Expect, then, long years of herculean toil as an indispensable prerequisite to extensive usefulness, such as the age demands.

You will often be urged to go into the field, and not spend the best part of your life in schools. But let sad experience teach you better. Look at the scores who have yielded to such ill-timed advice, and avoid their humiliation. You are not losing, but actually gaining time. The man who shall spend his time from the age of twenty to thirty in school, will be able to spend more time in actual service than if he enter the field at twenty. For all your public duties you must have preparation, by reading, studying, thinking. Now, if all this be postponed until such duties are demanded, the aggregate of time then employed in preparation will much exceed the time required for a systematic training in college, and fall far short, in its effects; for all must know, that success in mental training depends upon unbroken application. As a means, then, of saving time, you are bound to make a thorough preparation before entering the field.

Again, it will be said, that you will have no occasion to apply your geometry, trigonometry, &c., to any practical purpose connected with your duties as a minister; therefore, it is gravely conclued that you are wasting time. Now, none but those who have never studied the mathematical and intellectual sciences make such affirmations. Shame on that false notion of education, which makes it consist in the simple attainment of practical facts and abstract principles. What though the minister may never need to demonstrate that "the square described on the hypotenuse of a right-angled triangle, is equal to the sum of the squares described on the other two sides;" or that "in every rectilineal triangle the sines of the angles are to each other as the opposite sides;" yet, in comprehending the principles involved in these propositions, the mind gains an expansion which nothing else can give, and which must better fit it for any station. This alone is education. It is the expansion of the immortal mind to a comprehension of truths difficult and abstruse. A thorough mastery of geometry constitutes a better qualification for the ministry, than a mere knowledge of all the rusty systems of theology that ever cursed the earth. Universal Nature and the Bible are God's books of theology. Prepare the mind to read understandingly from these, and your theology will be direct from heaven. I do not declaim against the study of theology; for it is the minister's peculiar business. But second-hand theology is dangerous. Bitter poisons frequently lie concealed in the sweetest flowers. Let us be able to take the pure metal from its bed with our own hands, and convey it to others without alloy. The languages, and the pure and the mixed sciences, are but tools used in building up the mind to maturity. Each one conquered, adds a hewn stone to the building. Each step up the acclivity renders the next more easy, until the mountain cliff is scaled as with eagle's wings.

Be sure, then, that your preparation be thorough, although mountains be before you, for in removing them alone may you hope to gain strength. The wise have learned, that there is no royal road to erudition, though fools promise to impart a knowledge of French, German, Latin, &c., in six easy lessons. Were the Greek language to be conquered in a few easy lessons, it would scarcely be worth attaining. But it is far otherwise. Before the student can converse intelligibly with the ancient dead in their own tongue, he must chase the Greek verb through nearly three thousand terminations, in doing which the mind must yield to the sternest discipline. Herein is the efficacy of classical study. I fear that too many misapprehend the duties of the student, and when they meet its stern realities, shrink before unexpected difficulties, and sink back to inactivity. Be advised, by one who knows these trials, to study well your ability to persevere, before you become a student. I well know how often the student has to hear the opprobrious charge of laziness from those as ignorant as they are ungenerous. The toils of the farmer and mechanic, though severe, can not compare with those of the faithful student. I have day after day stood by the forge and anvil, and plied the file and hammer; I have followed the plough, and swung the scythe; I too have paced the student's narrow cell, searching for the gems of thought. The former are easy, are light; the latter will subdue a giant constitution, without the most assiduous attention to the laws of health. The student, relying upon his own industry, will suffer deprivation and want. But his tears are secret ones, as he sees others rising to wealth and rioting in ease. His grief will be hidden, when far away from the solace of a mother's voice, and the bliss of a sister's smile, and a father's counsels. Sickness shall shut him in his lone room, where week after week he may feed his aching heart on its own loneliness. The world may not know his emotions, as his last garment betokens decay—a certain indication that he must interrupt his studies to procure another—and then be accused of being too long in his preparation for the field. My young brother, be not alarmed at these things, but first consecrate your all to God, and then labor for him. Oh, then, the hope that some suffering son of sorrow may be blessed by you, and that some truth may be rescued from disgrace, shall sweeten all your toil. Your Father in Heaven will smile on you, though your brethren forget you. I am not unmindful of the faithful few, who have sundered every personal tie, and are preparing, amid every discouragement, for God's service. Go on, my brothers, and may God help you to keep humble at his feet. How many, now enjoying the ease of home, and prospects of wealth, are willing to exchange them for all the toils and hardships incident to a preparation for God's service, with the hope of nothing in this world but the toils of a reformer's life, and may be a martyr's death?

Now, brethren of the church, have I misapprehended our true condition? If not, I beseech you to look on your grey hairs, fast falling to the earth; then on your children, and in them read the future destiny of our cause. Are they prepared to uphold the cause of God, and save his holy ark? While you live, bless the future by placing the sword of the Lord in the hands of your children. Educate them, and give them to God fit instruments for his service. D. E. M.

HYMN FOR TWO CHILDREN.

(Each to say one line by turns.)

Who came from heaven to ransom me?
Jesus, who died upon the tree.
Why did he come from heaven above?
He came because his name was "Love."
And did he die—the Son of God?
Yes, on the cross he shed his blood.
Why did my Lord and Saviour bleed?
That we from evil might be freed.
When he had died, what happened then?
On the third day he rose again.
Where did he go when he had risen?
He went to God's right hand in heaven.
Where is he now? Is he still there?
Yes, and he pleads with God in prayer.
What does he pray for, and for whom?
He prays that we to him might come.
Should we not come? Should we not come?
O yes, Christ is the sinner's home;
Christ the weary sinner's home—
O, let us come! O, let us come! [Script. Facts.

LOT'S WIFE.

From a "Narrative of the late Expedition to the Dead Sea, edited by E. P. Montague," a notice of which we find in the Literary World, we extract the following :—

"Wednesday, 26th.—This morning we are examining the hills of Usdom, and seeking with a good deal of curiosity that ever-famous 'Pillar of Salt,' which marks the judgment of God upon Lot's wife. On pulling round the shores of the sea, we saw an immense column, rounded and turret-shaped, facing towards the south-east. This, we were told by the Arabs, was the Pillar of Salt in which Lot's wife was encased at the overthrow of Sodom. With some difficulty we landed here, and our esteemed commander and Dr. Anderson obtained specimens from it, and Mr. Dale took a sketch of it. Our boat's crew landed also, and their curiosity was gratified by their gathering specimens, some from its summit, and others from its base. It was measured, and found to be sixty feet in height, and forty feet in circumference. We can not suppose that Lot's wife was a person so large that her dimensions equaled those of this column. Many think that the statue of Lot's wife was equal to the pillar of salt which the Bible speaks of, let that pillar be where it may, and whatever be its size. They will not probably credit that this is the pillar, their preconceived notions having much to do with the matter; and they would have everybody think that she was at once transformed into a column of very fine-grained, beautifully white salt, about five feet, or a few inches more, in height, and in circumference that of a common-sized person of the nineteenth century.

"Be that as it may, no two minds have perhaps formed exactly the same opinion on this matter who have not visited this spot. But here we are, around this immense column, and we find that it is really of solid rock salt—one mass of crystalization. It is in the vicinity which is pointed out in the Bible in relation to the matter in question, and it appears to be the only one of its kind here. And the Arabs of the district, to whom this pillar is pointed out, declare it to be that of Lot's wife—the identical Pillar of Salt to which the Bible has reference—the tradition having been handed down from each succeeding generation to their children, as the Americans will hand down to succeeding generations the tradition of Bunker's Hill Monument near Boston. My own opinion of the matter is, that Lot's wife, having lingered behind in disobedience to the express command of God—given in order to insure her safety—that while so lingering she became overwhelmed in the descending fluid, and formed the model or foundation for this extraordinary column. If it has been produced by common, by natural causes, it is but right to suppose that others might be found of a similar description. One is scarcely able to abandon the idea that it stands here as a lasting memerial of God's punishing a most deliberate act of disobedience, committed at a time when he was about to show distinguishing regard for the very person. We carefully brought away our specimens, intending to show them to our friends in America, when we shall have the good fortune to arrive there, and talk with them on the subject."

AN EXCURSION AMONG THE CHINESE.

A letter from Rev. Wm. Dean to the editor of the New York Recorder, dated Shanghai, Oct. 20, gives the following account of his recent excursion to the forbidden regions of the Celestial Empire :—

"I have just returned from a trip into the country. I left here on Monday in a Chinese boat and in Chinese costume, and after a pleasant trip returned in safety, and with improved health, on the following Saturday. The weather was delightfully cool, the winds northerly, the thermometer varying from 75 to 84 deg. The country through this whole region is one extensive plain of rice and cotton fields, intersected by rivers and canals, and ornamented with cities, villages, and farm-houses, and groves of shade trees marking the resting places of the dead. These last are scattered promiscuously over the gardens and fields, the coffins placed on the surface of the ground, many covered over with only a mat or a thatch of straw, while the more wealthy cover the coffins of departed friends with a mound of earth or a monument of brick, and plant around them the willow, the cedar, and cypress trees. This gives to the picture an air of romance, and the traveler fancies himself in a fairy land, while viewing these objects at a distance; but on closer inspection, the enchantment which distance lends to the view, is exchanged for disgust at the filth of the streets, the stench from sewers and public receptacles of offal, and he pities the people who, though in nature's paradise, still live in domestic discomfort and moral darkness. The rice fields, now covered with a luxuriant growth within one month of the harvest, are irrigated by means of the Chinese water-wheel, which draws the water up from the rivers and canals, and these are turned sometimes by a single buffalo or bullock, and sometimes by men, and not unfrequently by women; and in some instances we saw women with small feet turning the water-wheel, which is done with the feet!

"The same ground that is here occupied by rice and cotton from May to October, is growing wheat, barley, beans, cabbage, &c., during the winter months. The succeeding crop is often sown before its predecessor is removed from the ground. The wheat here is poor. The Indian corn is found in small quantities, and used mostly while green, but we get a little corn meal coarsely ground by the hand mill, or the stones turned by the buffalo, which is used for hommony or johnny-cake, which is very acceptable to corn-eaters, but is not equal to the corn meal of America. The wheat is ground in the same way, and is coarse and dark-colored, but if used while fresh makes very good bread. Cotton, one of the chief articles of export from this region, is this year an unpromising crop. Instead of rising to the height of three or four feet, as usual, the stalks this year are not more than a foot and a half or two feet high, in consequence of the flooding of the country by the typhoon in July. The plants which produce the yellow and the white cotton are not distinguishable, and are often found growing promiscuously in the same field. The flowers are yellow, and each blossom, within two or three days after opening, withers away; then forms the bud or oval pod an inch or two in diameter, containing the cotton. We saw the old men, women, and children in the fields gathering the first ripening buds of cotton, while the opening flowers were seen on the branches around them. The whole process, from the cultivation of the fields to the weaving the cloth, is done by hand, and the low price of the nanking or yellow cotton cloth here in market, shows the small returns for manual labor. We saw some fields of tobacco, orchards of mulberry trees, and plants resembling the indigo, from which they extract a blue dye.

"The way was lined with old temples, mostly in a state of decay; here and there a small pagoda; but neither pagodas nor temples so high by far, nor in so good repair, as in Siam and Burmah. We saw, as we passed along, images mutilated and neglected, often exposed to the weather, and sometimes in a prostrate position; with here and there a mendicant priest of Buddh, with the object of charity marked in large letters on his back, and with a small bamboo drum, walking the streets, and receiving, now and then, a few cash from the people. Idolatry in this region appears by no means to be in its glory, but apparently going to decay, not from any exterior influence, but from the indifference of the people and the want of some inherent and self-supporting principle. We passed several cities where the people, as usual, were busily engaged in getting gain, or in gambling and dissipation, but we rarely saw any one engaged in any religious act. All passed us by with no further notice than they are accustomed to bestow upon an ordinary Chinaman, and not even the dogs paid us the salute we used to receive in an English dress. I am inclined to attribute this to the dreamy, unobserving habits of the people, rather than to any very nice imitation of Chinese in mode and manners on my part. However, we passed on land and water unrecognized, and enjoyed a peep into the forbidden regions of the central country, and returned quite improved in health."

A rogue asked charity, on the pretence of being dumb. A lady having asked, with equal simplicity and humanity, how long he had been dumb, he lost his guard, and answered, "From birth, madam." "Poor fellow!" said the lady, and gave him a dollar.

THE DEATH OF A CHILD.

No one feels the death of a child as a mother feels it. Even a father cannot realize it thus. There is a vacancy in his home, and a heaviness in his heart; there is a chain of association that comes round with a broken link; there are memories of endearment, a keen sense of loss, a weeping over crushed hopes, and pain of wounded affection. But the mother feels that one has been taken away who was still closer to her heart. Hers has been the office of constant ministration. Every gradation of feature has developed before her eyes. She has detected every new gleam of intelligence. She has been the refuge of his fears, the supply of his wants. And when he dies, a portion of her own life, as it were, dies. How can she give him up, with all the memories of these associations? The timid hands that have so often taken hers, in trust and love—how can she fold them on his breast, and give him up to the cold clasp of death? The feet whose wanderings she has watched so narrowly—how can she see them straightened to go down to the valley of death? The head that she has pressed to her bosom, that she has watched in burning sickness and peaceful slumber, a hair of which she would not see harmed—oh! how can she consign it to the chamber of the grave? The form that every one night has been beyond her vision or knowledge, how can she put it away for the long night of the sepulchre, to see it no more?

Man has cares and toils that draw away his thoughts and employ them; the mother sits in loneliness, and all these memories, all these suggestions, crowd upon her mind. How can she bear all this? She could not, were it not that her faith is strong as her affection; and if the one is more deep and tender than in man, the other is more simple and spontaneous, and takes, more confidently, hold of the hand of God. Faith teaches her to exclaim :—

"I know thy blood-washed soul, whose light
To us so brief a time was given,
With kindred spirits, pure and bright,
Is happy now in Heaven." [Mothers' Jour.

OLD PSALM TUNES.

To forward the favorable reception of such tunes, two facts as to their original intention must be particularly borne in mind. They were sung faster than we usually sing them, and, what is better, by a far greater number of voices. It is a great mistake to suppose old tunes should be sung in a heavy drawling style. Our forefathers in the church were cheerful Christians. A psalm of a dozen verses was but short to them. Hence, as well as from other circumstances, it is clear that they sang in a quicker and livelier manner than is commonly conjectured. The Old Hundredth tune is made a dirge in our days, but in theirs it was a joyous and animating canticle. "All people that on earth do dwell, sing to the Lord with cheerful voice!" In like manner, York tune, which is shelved among the the dull and obsolete, was little more than a century ago the liveliest and most popular tune of the entire kingdom. But to hear old tunes to advantage, they must be sung in old style. Not only must they be sung with decent gravity and sanctity, but by masses of people, by a multitude of voices, "by all the people together," as the original directions state. "Six thousand voices were wont to be heard at St. Paul's Cross; three or four thousand singing at a time in a church in this city is but a trifle," said the learned Roger Ascham, in a letter from Augsburgh, dated the 14th of May, 1551. [Hackett's National Psalmist.

TEST OF PIETY.

What sacrifice would it be to a man who has £500 a year, to devote annually £100 to the purposes of religion and intellectual improvement; to another, who has £1,000 a year, to devote £300; and another who has £10,000, to allow £4,000 annually for the same object? It would not deprive any one of them either of the necessaries or luxuries of life, or of any thing that contributes to comfort, honor, or sensible enjoyment. It is now high time that the sincerity of a profession of Christianity should be tried by the test of pounds, shillings, and peace. That man who refuses to come forward with his wealth, when it is proved to be requisite for the purposes alluded to, ought not to assume the name of a Christian. He has never felt the influence of that divine maxim of our Saviour, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." He virtually declares that "laying up treasures on earth," providing fortunes for his family, keeping up a certain rank of society, and living in luxurious abundance, are matters of far greater importance than the approach of the millennium and the regeneration of the world. If a man is in doubt with respect to the existence of religious principle in his soul, I know not a better test than this by which to try the sincerity of his Christian profession. Is he willing at the call of God to give up a portion of his possessions to his service, and even to "forsake all" to prove himself "a follower of Christ?" [Dr. Dick.

THE ROCK OF CALVARY.—In Fleming's Christology, it is stated that an unbeliever, visiting the sacred places of Palestine, was shown the clefts in the rock of Mount Calvary. Examining them narrowly, and critically, he turned in amazement to his fellow-travelers, and said, "I have long been a student of nature, and I am sure the clefts and rents in this rock were never done by nature, or an ordinary earthquake, for by such a concussion, the rock must have split according to the veins, and where it was weakest in the adhesion of parts; for this I have observed to have been done in other rocks when separated or broken after an earthquake, and reason tells me it must always be so. But it is quite otherwise here; for the rock is rent athwart and across the veins, in a most strange and preternatural manner; and, therefore, I thank God that I came hither to see the standing monument of miraculous power by which God gives evidence to this day of the Divinity of Christ."

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, April 19, 1849.

"THE SUNDAY LIQUOR TRAFFICK."

Great efforts have been made in New York, within a few months past, to stop what is called "The Sunday Liquor Traffick." A large committee of citizens was first appointed, to wait on the Mayor, represent to him the extent of the traffick, and solicit his interference to enforce the laws against it. Then a Circular was issued to the ministers and churches of the city, "on the desecration of the Sabbath by the open sale of intoxicating liquors," and calling upon them to exert their influence in favor of its suppression. And finally, several of the leading ministers have preached discourses upon the subject, in which they have set forth the demoralizing influence of the traffick, and the danger that its continuance will make the Sabbath a curse rather than a blessing to the people.

Being ourselves warmly attached to the temperance cause, and desiring most earnestly to see the traffick in intoxicating drinks abolished, we have watched these movements with very deep interest. We have hoped, that the concentration of thought upon the subject, and the combination of powerful religious and social influences against the liquor traffick, would do much to enlighten and arouse the public mind, and so check the progress of intemperance. But after weeks of observation and suspense, we have to confess ourselves sadly disappointed. The movement, which was begun with high hopes, and pushed forward for a while with great vigor, seems to have gradually waned, so that now comparatively little interest is felt in it; and the traffick, instead of being suppressed, seems to have gained strength from the opposition which it has met.

In view of this failure, one naturally inquires what obstacles there can be to the success of a movement which carries on its face such an air of piety. To us it seems that one great obstacle is the inconsistency of licensing some four thousand men in the city to sell intoxicating drinks, and then attempting to compel them to suspend operations one day in seven. In granting the license there is an implied sanction of the business; and it is very difficult to make those engaged in it see, that what they are licensed to do on six days of the week is so abominably wicked when done on the seventh. The course pursued towards them is not at all calculated to enlighten them. No appeal is made to their reason or conscience. No attempt is made to convince them that the business is all wrong. They are simply told that on Sunday they must shut up shop. This they of course regard as an infringement upon their rights, and set themselves against. The result is, that the officers of justice, even if they are disposed to execute the law, find the suppression of the traffick impossible.

There is another obstacle to the success of this movement, perhaps even more formidable than the inconsistency to which we have alluded; and that is, the evident attempt to establish a compulsory observance of the Sunday in connection with the suppression of the liquor traffick. It is not the liquor traffick, but the Sunday liquor traffick, which is to be suppressed by law. Those who have read the addresses or listened to the sermons upon the subject, can not have failed to notice, that the Sunday, and not the liquor, is the principal theme. This circumstance is regarded by many as an indication—nay, a postive proof—that it is the desecration of the Sunday, and not the sale of the liquor, which this movement aims to suppress. Of course those who do not believe in compelling men by law to keep the Sunday, stand aloof from the movement, if they do not oppose it. We are not prepared to say, that this is one link in the chain by which it is attempted to bind all men to the observance of Sunday. But we do say, without fear of contradiction, that the addresses which have been put forth on the subject are so written as naturally to suggest this idea. It need not surprise any one, therefore, to find persons who are opposed to compulsory Sunday-keeping, somewhat skeptical of the advantages, in the long run, of this movement against the Sunday liquor traffick. They lament that traffick, and would do all in their power to suppress it, not only on Sunday, but on every other day of the week. But they can not unite in a movement which, by compelling its suppression on Sunday, would imply a sanction of it on the other six days, and also a sanction of compulsory Sunday-keeping. If it is the liquor traffick, which the leaders of this movement desire to suppress, let them go against the liquor traffick, as such, and on all days. But if they wish also to suppress labor on Sunday, let them say so, that their designs may be distinctly understood, and their efforts duly appreciated.

New Postage Regulation.—The Postmaster General has recently published a circular, making some alterations in the rates of postage, from which it seems that the late Congress, though it had no time to pass a law for the reduction of postage, found time to adopt a regulation which increases the postage of letters weighing more than half an ounce. By the old rule, less than half an ounce was a single letter; half an ounce, and less than an ounce, was a double letter; and ounce, and less than an ounce and a-half, was a triple letter; and so on—an additional single postage being charged at each half ounce in the ascending scale of weight. By the new regulation, double postage is charged, as before; but when a letter exceeds an ounce in weight, it is charged quadruple postage; and when it exceeds two ounces, it is charged sextuple postage. If, therefore, a man wishes to send through the mail a communication weighing more than an ounce, and less than an ounce and a half, he can save one postage by dividing it and forwarding it in two separate envelops—the Department, as it would seem, choosing to carry and deliver two letters for a given price than one.

ANTI-SABBATH CONVENTION.

The Anti-Sabbath Convention, so called, was held in Boston on the 4th and 5th days of April. From a report of its proceedings, which appears in the Liberator, we judge that the attendance was not as large as last year. Soon after the Convention opened, a series of resolutions was introduced, the discussion of which occupied most of the time till the final adjournment. We give below those resolutions with which our readers will be principally interested:—

Resolved, That the seventh-day Sabbath is an institution of Jewish religion, peculiar to the Jewish people, and to them alone, commemorative to them, as the books of Moses show, of two special matters, namely: first, the declaration in Jewish theology that God rested from his labor; and second, the fact in Jewish history of the bondage in Egypt.

Resolved, That the first-day Sabbath is an institution of formal, ceremonial religion, interpolated into Christianity, against its spirit, upon Jewish analogies, by the church and the State.

Resolved, That States called Christian, in establishing the first day of the week for a legal Christian Sabbath, have affirmed for a truth, a gross fiction in theology; for Christianity, a plain interpolation; for religion, a hollow observance; and by the penalties of Sunday laws have passed outside of the true limits of the State, and invaded the sphere of the private conscience.

Resolved, That the Sunday laws, in the various States of this Union, are alien to the idea of civil and religious liberty originating our American Commonwealths, and ought to be abolished.

Resolved, That Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, are the Lord's days, given by him to man, not less than Sunday, to be sanctified by well-doing; and that we hereby protest against the desecration of these days by the misrepresentations of the clergy.

A resolution was adopted, recommending the people of Boston, especially the laboring classes, to petition the different railroad companies whose roads lead from the city, that Sunday morning and evening trains of cars be run to such places as will enable those whose occupations confine them and their families to its sickly, and (to very many) fatal atmosphere, to inhale the invigorating breezes of the country, at least once a week during the most unhealthy months of the year. A petition, in accordance with this resolution, was also prepared and adopted by the Convention. A committee consisting of Wm. Lloyd Gorrison, John W. Brown, Charles K. Whipple, Francis Jackson, and J. T. Everett, was appointed to prepare a petition to the Legislatures, suitable for circulation among the friends of religious liberty throughout the country, asking for a repeal of all sabbatical laws. The same committee was instructed to prepare and circulate an address to the inhabitants of the United States, on the proper use of the day of rest.

MISSIONARY LABOR IN RHODE ISLAND.

From a private letter of a correspondent in Rhode Island, we copy the following paragraph:—

I have spent about two months, the winter past, in laboring in the cause of God along the sea-coast of Rhode Island. The blessing of God has attended my efforts in the cause, and a number have professed religion. I have baptized two; one has united with the Seventh-day Baptist Church at South Kingston, and four others have made an offering to join that Church, all converts to the Sabbath. I have preached the Sabbath, and distributed tracts upon that subject; and I find, as in the gospel, that the common people hear gladly, while others oppose the truth, and would gladly keep the people from hearing and embracing it. But, thank God, the truth is powerful, and must and will prevail. There is much encouragement for missionary labor along the co[illegible] of Rhode Island. I have repeatedly had requests from unconverted men to come and hold meetings in their neighborhoods. I have one appointment of this kind, at the request of an unconverted man, sent by a brother in the church. He stated to the brother who brought the message, that some of the first-day Christians did not like me, because I preached up the Sabbath; but, for his part, he believ- that the seventh day was the Bible Sabbath, and if he was a Christian, duty would require him to keep it. I can not feel satisfied to see this field of labor forsaken. The more I labor, the more I see the way open before me to labor. But it can not be duty to spend time and strength, and not be sustained; and support can not be expected from the first-day people, unless we make a compromise in regard to the Sabbath. In conversation with a first-day minister, recently, he said to me, If your people believe the seventh day is the Sabbath, why do they not preach it; and then he cited some ministers who did not say any thing about it. I believe that by a wise and well-directed effort much may be expected in this field of labor. If all my brethren felt about these things as I do, their prayers and alms would go together, and God would remember and bless them, and bless their efforts, to the praise of his great name.

THE SECOND COMING AND KINGDOM OF CHRIST.

"The powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory." Luke 21: 26.

So confident was the writer of this article, in 1844, that the papal power would continue till 1848, that this view was published in a paper printed at Buffalo, and dated Jan. 1, 1845. This was understood from comparing the thirteenth chapter of Revelations with Jones' History of the Christian Church, which says that "John the faster, of Constantinople, a prelate distinguished for his authority, in a council held at Constantinople, in the year 588, assumed the title of Universal Bishop, which was confirmed to him by the council." Pelagius II., then Bishop of Rome, called this act of John "an execrable, profane, and diabolical procedure." But Gregory the Great, who succeeded Pelagius II., as Bishop of Rome, wrote a long letter to the Emperor in consequence of John's assuming the title of Universal Bishop, in which he says, "But far from Christians be this blasphemous name, by which all honor is taken from all other priests, while it is foolishly arrogated by one." In another letter to the Emperor, Gregory says, "And therefore I am bold to say, whoever adopts or affects the title of UNIVERSAL BISHOP has the pride and character of Antichrist, and is in some manner his forerunner." (Here, then, are two Bishops of Rome to agree with Protestants, that popery, or papacy, is "Antichrist.") This was in 588, to which add "forty-two months;"* (Rev. 13: 5,) thirty days to the month, according to Jewish reckoning; and each day for a year, as reckoned sometimes by the prophets. Thirty times 42 is 1260, to which add 588 for the rise of the "beast" as above, and we have 1848, the year in which the Pope's temporal power was broken at Rome. This view of the subject, thus far, which was published in 1845, is now seen to be correct. Thus, "that wicked," "that man of sin," that "mystery of iniquity," that "mystery, Babylon the great," that papal power, which has ruled and reigned over the kings of the earth, and in the church, for these many hundred years, which has had "power to continue forty-two months," is now shaken!

But, says the objector, the powers of heaven were to be shaken immediately before the second personal coming of Christ, and not the powers in the church. But I would ask the objector, What powers in heaven? Can the throne of God, or the kingdom of Christ, be shaken? No; that "cannot be moved." Heb. 12: 28. We read of "the third heaven," and if there is a third, there must also be a first and second heaven, like the corn in the blade, then in the ear, then the full corn in the ear. The present state of the church is understood to be the first heaven, where the church "sit together in heavenly places in Christ," and where, sometimes, wickedness is also seen, as John saw "a great red dragon in heaven," "war in heaven," &c. The second heaven, the personal reign of Christ with all of his saints for one thousand years "on the earth," (Rev. 5: 10;) where Jerusalem shall give laws to the whole earth; and where the twelve apostles "shall eat and drink with Christ at his table, and sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of the children of Israel." The third heaven, the eternal state of the blessed after the sabbatic thousand years rest.

That this shaking of the heavens and the earth means the earthly powers, and the kingdoms of this world, which are "made" by men, we have Bible proof. See Hag. 2: 6. "Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land; and I will shake all nations, [as has been fulfilling for the year past,] and the desire of all nations [which is Christ] shall come; and I will fill this house with glory, saith the Lord of hosts." Verses 21, 22—"I will shake the heavens and the earth; and I will overthrow the throne of kingdoms, and I will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the heathen; and I will overthrow the chariots and those that ride in them; and the horses and their riders shall come down, every one by the sword of his brother." See Heb. 12: 27, which shows the shaking of things both in church and state to mean "the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain; wherefore we, receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved," &c. One thing, in this overthrowing of thrones and kingdoms during the year past, is very remarkable; it is done by revolutions in their own countries, and by their own people, "every one by the sword of his brother."

That the shaking and removing of the papal power was to be quickly followed by the coming and kingdom of Christ, seems to be clearly shown from other scriptures, as Daniel 7: 21, 22—"I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them, until the Ancient came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." Again, Dan. 12: 1—"And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince that standeth for the children of thy people." Again, Rev. 14: 1—"And I looked, and lo, a Lamb stood on the Mount Zion, and with him an hundred and forty and four thousand," &c. This was after his view of the forty-two months' reign of the beast.

But I must close this article, with a few words of application. My dear reader, art thou ready? My brother, my sister, art thou ready? Backslider, poor sinner, art thou ready? Prepare to meet thy God! Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him. Therefore be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh. The Lord himself, that shall descend from heaven—that same Jesus which was taken up into heaven, and who shall so come in like manner—commands us to be ready. He says, "Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be. Surely, I come quickly; Amen." Can we say with John, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus." Rev. 22: 12, 20.

A Home Missionary's Wife.—It is a very common notion, that education and refinement generally unfit persons, particularly females, for the more self-denying and laborious duties of life. No doubt there is a kind of education and refinement, so called, which has this effect; but a genuine and thorough education has precisely the opposite effect. It develops the whole character, and fits its possessor not only to shine in refined circles, but to discharge with honor and success the duties of every station in life. Instance the following account which a missionary of the American Home Mission Society gives of his wife:—

"She has truly been a help-meet for me. Although brought up to know no wish ungratified, she has not complained of the privations that have fallen to our lot. Nor has she faltered at any call of duty. The sick in squalid poverty she has visited, nor has she hesitated to perform the most menial offices to promote their comfort. When I myself have been prostrate, she has cheerfully faced the cold and driving storm, and the fingers that plied the needle on delicate embroidery, and wielded the pen for the public eye, handled the pitchfork with, I doubt not, as much grace as did James Fitz James

——— 'the oar
Which sure that noble arm ne'er plied before.'"

Cholera and Lent.—One of the secular papers of St. Louis recently stated that the Catholic Archbishop had dispensed 'the faithful' of that city from the abstinence of Friday and other days as usually required during the season of Lent. The circumstance having excited some surprise, and given occasion for remarks, an explanation is now made. It seems that the change is made in apprehension of the approach of cholera, the Archbishop having yielded to the advice of physicians, who believe that the use of vegetables is pernicious, while the atmosphere is impregnated with the infection.

Baptist Mission Receipts.—The Secretary of the American Baptist Missionary Union has given notice, that the donations and legacies paid into the treasury of that institution during the month of March, amounted to $33,352 21—making the receipts of the year $88,902 99. Thus the receipts of the last month exceed those of the corresponding month of 1848, by upwards of $6,000; and the receipts of the year which has just closed, are an advance of more than $3,000 over those which preceded it.

Results of Colportage.—A correspondent of the N. Y. Observer says that since the system of colportage was adopted by the American Tract Society, in 1841, colporteurs have visited more than nine hundred thousand families, or a fourth part of the entire population of the country. They have found more than 137,000 families destitute of every religious book; have circulated more than 300,000 volumes gratuitously, and more than 2,000,000 by sale.

Departure of Missionaries.—The following missionaries, sent out by the American Board to the Zulu Mission, on the S. E. coast of Africa, sailed from Boston on Sabbath, April 7th, in the ship Concordia: Rev. Hinman Wilder and lady, of Marshall, Michigan; Rev. Andrew Abraham and lady, of Florida, N. Y.; Rev. Josiah Tyler and lady, of East Windsor, Conn.

Doctor Dick.—A Canada papers says that Dr. Dick, whose works are familiar to so many in this country, has expressed his intention of visiting the United States during the approaching summer. Dr. Dick has near relatives residing in Canada, one of whom is a Methodist clergyman.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Do the Scriptures teach, that the discipline, government, and management of a church, are vested equally in the brethren and sisters, or in the brethren alone? Will you, or some of your correspondents, answer?

The Pope and Popedom—Important Distinction.—The following incident is mentioned by the Italian correspondent of the N. Y. Commercial Inquirer. The distinction which it represents a Roman boy as making between the Pope and Popedom is more man-like than boyish:—

"While the cannon of St. Angelo announced the formation of the Constituent Assembly, and a deputy from the battery of the capitol, read to the people the decision of the deputies to proclaim a republic—at the same moment the funeral bell of the capitol, which only tolls on the death of a Pope, pealed forth its solemn knell. I happened just then to be at the Piazo del Popolo, and an Englishman traveling for mere pleasure, asked a boy, 'What means the sound of that bell? Is the Pope dead?' 'No, Signore,' replied the Roman boy, 'it is not Pius IX who is dead, but Popedom!'"

Temperance Declaration of Seven Presidents of the United States.

We have just received, says the New York Organ, the following declaration, with Gen. Taylor's name affixed. At at the time it was drawn up, it was generally supposed that distilled liquors were the principal cause of intemperance, but all who have since examined the subject have concluded that intoxicating liquors, under whatever name, should be termed spirituous liquors, and should be avoided as a beverage, as never beneficial, but always injurious. General Harrison died so soon after his inauguration to the Presidency, that time was not allowed to procure his signature to the declaration. He would doubtless have signed it, as it was generally understood that soon after the Temperance Reform was agitated, he at once closed the fires of a large distillery in which he was interested.

DECLARATION.

Being satisfied from observation and experience, as well as from medical testimony, that ardent spirit, as a drink, is not only needless but hurtful, and that the entire disuse of it would tend to promote the virtue and happiness of the community: We hereby express our conviction that should the citizens of the United States, and especially all young men, discountenance entirely the use of it, they would not only promote their own personal benefit, but the good of the country and the world.

A Great Question.—The Church of England, and more particularly the evangelical clergy, are at this hour upon their trial before an ecclesiastical court. Early last year, the Lord Chancellor presented a living to a Cornish clergyman of high character and attainments. Forthwith the Puseyite and pugnacious Bishop of Exeter cited Mr. Gorham, the clergyman, and subjected him to long and harrassing examinations, on the subject of the sacraments, particularly of baptism. These examinations were repeated at intervals, and in the end the Bishop refused to induct, on the ground that Mr. Gorham held opinions upon the efficacy of baptism not consistent with the liturgy of the Church. The Bishop is a doctrinal Romanist, Mr. Gorham an Evangelical. An action is brought against the Bishop in the "Court of Arches," and the pleadings have been of a most extraordinary character. It was urged against the Bishop, that he, contray to the teaching of the Church, held "the unconditional efficacy of baptism," and that on this unsound ground he had rejected Mr. Gorham. On behalf of the Bishop, it was said, "he was not such a madmam as to hold this doctrine, except in the case of infants," this exception, by the way, being the rule in the Church. So says the Independent.

Affairs in the Island of Jamaica.—Recently we published some account of the troubles in Jamaica, but not such as to give a clear idea of their source. The Courier des Etats Unis has a communication on the subject, which shows the source of trouble. It seems that the people of this island are beginning to find out how they are both taxed and humbugged to support the old plantocracy. The salary of Governor is $30,000; Chief Justice $15,000; Assistant Justices each $10,000, and a host of other officers at similar rates. In addition, at least half a million of dollars have been squandered for bringing in poor Hindoos, and other laborers, in order to coërce the freed people to work at inadequate wages; but the whole project has failed. And now the revenue has fallen short from $60,000 to $100,000, and the Assembly has passed a bill for the reduction of salaries 10 to 20 per cent. But the Council, who themselves receive a salary of $2,500, reject the bill on the ground that an office is a vested interest for life, and therefore the salary cannot be reduced. The Legislature then attempt to appropriate the revenue entirely to public purposes. In the apprehension that the revenue bill might fail entirely, the Governor ordered in all the troops from the outposts, to compel the enforcement of the rules of the Custom-House, and all is discontent and confusion.

Foreign News.—The steamship Hermann arrived at New York on sixth-day last, bringing two days later news from Europe. Nothing important had transpired in England. In France, trouble is evidently brewing, but it is difficult to say exactly what are the causes of it. The war movements in Italy have not yet amounted to much, one or two small towns only haveing been burnt. The Assembly at Frankfort have refused to make the King of Prussia Emperor of Germany, and the Ministers of the Empire have consequently resigned. The Austrian Government is about to apply to the different European powers to induce them to join it in a step to prevent the clandestine export of the works of art from the museums at Florence and Rome. Austria has already ordered that an embargo should be laid upon all objects of the kind which may be brought into her own territories.

Gold-Hunters Returning.—Several persons have returned from the Isthmus of Panama to New York within a fortnight. They say that there are now 1,500 persons in the neighborhood of Panama, waiting for a conveyance to San Francisco. Some of them left this country soon after the gold-fever began to rage, and have been waiting there for a couple of months. Many of them wish themselves back, but do not return, because they have spent their money or have too much pride to give up. The prospect of getting conveyances from Panama was quite dubious. Tickets for the steamers California and Oregon, which cost in N. Y. $100, had been sold there at $500 a piece. The California had been expected at Panama from San Francisco every day for two weeks. Her non-arrival is attributed to a lack of coal or the absconding of her men at San Francisco.

SINGULAR AND FATAL SHIPWRECK.

The Baltimore Sun, of April 11th, says that on the 31st of March, the Baltimore pilot-boat Coquette, Capt. Joseph B. Sable, with Messrs. J. A. Milburn, John Haney, Thos. H. Bolt, Thos. M. Watts, and Robert M. Ling, pilots, on board, while cruising in latitude 36 14, about sixty miles from Cape Henry, and about thirty-five miles from land, fell in with the wreck of what they supposed to be a sloop, bottom upward. The water was here about twenty fathoms deep. The small boat was launched, and sent to the wreck, when it was discovered that she bore the name of the "Thomas Russell, of Cape May." Some of them got on the bottom, for at this time the after part was floating well out of water, while the forward part was down, her head being under. Mr. Ling was on the bottom, and bringing his head close to the planks, he thought he heard a noise inside—listening again, he was assured that there were persons alive inside. With these gallant men, it required but a moment to act. Raps were given on the bottom to inform those inside that they were heard. Axes and saws were instantly brought, and all hands went to work to cut through the bottom to rescue those inside. In a short time they could be heard speaking. A hole being made, the confined air escaped very fast, causing the vessel to settle more and more. They conversed with those inside and learned that there were five of them. Time being precious, they continued cutting as fast as they could, having the assistance, also, of a stout colored man, the cook of the pilot-boat. The hole being cut, one man came to it, but could not get out. From him they learned that the name of the captain of the vessel was Brady, at least so it was understood. Efforts were still made to cut a larger hole, to allow them egress. The vessel continued settling. At this time three had been drowned. The man who had his head out, dropped back, and as he went in, he looked upon the bright sun and remarked, "This is the last sun I shall ever see." The efforts of the pilots were redoubled, but without avail, the whole of those inside perishing, so fast did the vessel settle, before a hole large enough to let them out could be made. Every conceivable effort was made by the pilots, which was urged on by hearing the efforts of the drowning men to breathe and sustain themselves until relief could be afforded.

They all perished together in a few minutes after the hole was cut which allowed the air to escape; and the last words heard from them were supplications to the Great Arbiter of events to have mercy on them and save them. While the men were at work the sea was breaking over them, which greatly retarded their operations. It is supposed by the pilots that the vessel was capsized on the 27th or 28th of March, and that the lost persons had been confined about three days. There was a severe gale at that time. The opportunity for conversation with the lost men was so brief that their names, or the cause of the disaster, were not ascertained. Indeed, so intent were the pilots in their efforts for a rescue, that they did not take time to make inquiries. Mr. Milburn informs us that in the course of his experience he never saw a similar circumstance, and that the events he witnessed, in the few brief moments which passed between the discovery of the wreck and the perishing of her crew, can never be effaced from his memory. All that men could do was done, and with a hearty good will, but all effort was unavailing. We may add here, that the vessel appeared to be at anchor, as she was steady, with the tide running by her. It is supposed that when she capsized, her anchor and chains must have run out, and brought her to her present position.

California.—The National Intelligencer publishes a letter from Capt. Folsom, of the Quarter-Master General's Department, to Gen. Jessup. It is dated San Francisco, Jan. 23, 1849. Capt. Folsom says that life and property will continue to be unsafe in that country until Congress gives it a stable government. As things were then, there was no government and no law in California. A general feeling of insecurity depressed the whole population. The only tribunals which have attempted any jurisdiction in cases of murder, &c., were those formed for the occasion as it arises. Several executions had taken place in pursuance of this kind of law. Outrages were occurring in all quarters of the country, and house-breaking, thefts, and robberies were of almost hourly occurrence.

The natives have a strong antipathy to the foreigners, whom they look upon as their conquerers and enemies. In the excitement of gold digging this antipathy has threatened more than once to break out into open hostilities, and in the ensuing summer the probability of such an occurrence will be increased a hundred fold.

Mining in California.—The Baltimore Patriot notices the arrival in that city of J. S Wethered, who left San Francisco in the U. S. ship Lexington. The following is his mining experience:—

Mr. Wethered, after having disposed of his stock of goods by the "Rhone," formed a company of 12 for the purpose of mining, most of whom vamosed. He sold out his tents and provisions to 5, who remained with him, and after a tour of observation for several days, returned to San Francisco. He believes he reached a distance of 350 miles from San Francisco up the Americano, which is farther than any American had gone, and saw the smoke of what he supposed was a large volcano, some 40 or 50 miles distant. He passed large numbers of persons at the different placers, some of whom had been very successful; others so unsuccessful, that they preferred returning to San Francisco and working for good wages.

A National Convention of the Friends of Common Schools and Universal Education throughout the Union, is invited to assemble in Philadelphia on the 10th of August, for the promotion of this paramount interest of our Republican Institutions. Hon. Joseph R. Chandler is Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements, and Alfred E. Wright, Corresponding Secretary—to whom letters may be addressed. Bishop Potter, Professor Bache, Professor Hart, Horace Mann, Dr. King of New Jersey, and other friends, unite in the call.

French Immigrants.—The arrival of 281 French Communists at Nauvoo, Illinois, is noticed in the Quincy Whig, where, we learn from the same source, they intend to locate permanently. They are composed mostly of mechanics and farmers, having with them their implements of husbandry and a variety of tools suited to their several trades. Their religion is similar to that of the Unitarians, and their manner of living much like the Socialists; though, unlike many of the French and English Socialists, they are scrupulously strict in the preservation of the virtue of their domestic circle. This company is headed by Monsieur Cabet, the great French politician who for forty years has been the leader of the Republican party in the House of Deputies, five years Chief Justice of the Island of Corsica, was instrumental in the overthrow of Charles X. and Louis Philippe, and was banished by the latter from France for a term of five years. In this company are many of Monsieur Cabet's firm friends, who have been with him in his endeavors to extricate France from kingly power, and have often been imprisoned for their advocacy of republican principles. Monsieur Cabet and company lead the way, and 30,000 follow in the wake.

European Nobility in America.—The last number of the Lavaca (Texas) Journal contains an advertisement of a sale of lands in that State, on a writ of attachment, for a claim of $5,945, against the estate owned by numerous German noblemen, and a citation for them to appear and answer, viz: The Duke of Nassau, Duke of Meiningen, Duke of Coburg Gotha, Prince Frederick of Prussia, Landgrave. This array of German nobility is known in Texas as the German Emigration Company, under whose auspices large numbers of German emigrants have been introduced into that State. The claim against the Company is for $5,945, on account of several drafts drawn by the Company's agents.

Cholera.—The Macon (Geo.) Journal and Messenger states that a company of immigrants from Monroe Co., in that State, for Texas, numbering 34 whites and 43 negroes, proceeded to New Orleans, where they embarked on board a steamboat bound up the river. On the second day one of the party died of the cholera, and the others went ashore to bury him, when the entire company were prostrated with the disease in its most malignant form. At the latest advices, eighteen of the company had been buried—seven negroes in one grave. Some of them died in three hours after they were taken. At the time the letter was written, the company had remained at their encampment for ten days, and most of the sufferers were convalescent.

---

Gallant Deed.—At a fire in Catharine-st., N. Y., last week, an incident occurred which deserves honorable notice. It seems that the occupant of one of the houses on fire desired his wife to take the children with her, but in the confusion the infant was left in the house, and it was not until some fifteen minutes had elapsed that the discovery was made that it was missing. A fireman named Abraham Brower, touched by the grief of the mother, volunteered to rescue the child if possible, and a ladder being raised, he entered the upper part of the house and discovered it lying on a bed. Seizing it in his arms, he bore it down stairs through the flames and smoke and placed it in the mother's arms. The child, however, was already suffocated by the smoke, and injured by the flames, and expired almost immediately.

SUMMARY.

The town of Wilmington, Mass., has been thrown into a great state of excitement in consequence of a most horrid murder which has been perpetrated on Mrs. M. B. Preston and her two twin daughters, only 4 years of age, who were found in their bed on Wednesday, with their throats cut in a most awful manner. The husband having escaped, suspicion was at once fastened on him, and search immediately made, which proved successful, he being found in the woods with the blood of his victims upon him. He was at once arrested to await the charge.

The British steamer Thames, which arrived at Mobile direct from Havana, brings intelligence of a negro insurrection at St. Lucia, W. I., on the 14th ult., which was directed by the whites; the authorities were compelled to send to Barbadoes for assistance. Two hundred British soldiers were dispatched to St. Lucia, who fired upon the rioters, killing and wounding many, which effectually quelled the outbreak.

The Great Barrington (Mass.) Courier of April 12th, says that the large factory of the "Glendale Woolen Company," the dye-house attached and a dwelling-house were destroyed by fire on Sunday morning. The buildings burned occupied the site of those destroyed by fire in the fall of 1847, and were scarcely rebuilt, and in operation, when the raging element again devoured them. Loss estimated at $40,000, and insurance at $32,000.

In the Massachusetts House of Representatives, on the 11th inst., a Special Committee reported a bill abolishing capital punishment, except for murder in the first degree, viz: premeditated wilful killing, or killing when engaged in the commission of treason, arson, or other offenses now capital.

In New Orleans, on the 7th inst., a Mr. Blanchard, an extensive banker of that city, was robbed in the day light, of a box containing $6,000 in money, and notes and papers valued at $200,000. He advertises that the robber can retain the $6,000, if he will return the papers and notes.

The troubles of the Methodist Church, which caused a division of that body, have appeared in the Cherokee country. The Church North sent among the Indians a minister to represent the cause of freedom, and the consequence has been a riot. No religious meetings, it is said, can now be held without a riot.

A party of eight slaves absconded from Wheeling, Va., on the 1st, crossing the river into Ohio at Martin's Ferry. The ferryman was arrested under the State law making the act of passing slaves across a bridge or water-course into an adjoining State, a penal offense; but the owners of the slaves not wishing to prosecute the matter, he was discharged.

The Burlington (Iowa) Hawkeye says: "A gentleman from Keokuk County brings the melancholy intelligence that during the cold weather of last month, a party of 5 persons were returning home from a ball, which they attended in that county, and it is supposed that they lost their way, as they were all found frozen to death on the prairie."

The degree of Doctor of Medicine was conferred upon 190 graduates of the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, on Saturday last. The other three Medical Schools in Philadelphia have this season conferred similar degrees upon 245, making an aggregate of 435 new Doctors in one year.

The ship Colchis, from Valparaiso for Boston, reported ashore off Nantucket, was fallen in with afloat and in good condition, by three New London fishing-smacks, on the 6th, and taken into Stonington.

A battle is reported to have taken place, some time since, on one of the forks of Kansas River, between the Kansas and Pawnees. Seven of the former and twenty of the latter are said to have been killed.

Four young men left Goodrich, Ohio, on the 30th ult., in a boat for the head of Lake Huron. A tremendous gale came up, and they were blown on a reef of rocks, and immediately disappeared. This was witnessed by a vessel not very far distant.

There was a severe gale on Lake Erie on the night of the 5th inst. The steamers Lexington, Champion, and Chautauque, in the vicinity of Buffalo, sustained some damage.

A mammoth mastidon tooth, four feet in length, was found on the bank of the Ohio River, near Patriot, a few days since, by a boy. A gentleman named Lawrence purchased it for $20. So says a Cincinnati paper.

The Baltimore firemen celebrated Sunday before last by a disgraceful street fight, in which hundreds participated. The result was that some twenty or more of them were lodged in the watch house, two or three were shot and stabbed, and some of the police received considerable damage.

DIED.

In Hopkinton, R. I., April 6th, Elizabeth Brown, in the 23d year of her age. Though called thus early in life to part with earth, death, for her, had no terror. She knew in whom she had believed, and when called to enter the valley of the shadow of death, she feared no evil. She found that Jesus could make a dying bed feel soft as downy pillows are—

"Sister, rest from sin and sorrow;
Death is o'er, and life is won;
On thy slumber dawns no morrow;
Rest—thine earthly race is run."

At Unadilla Forks, N. Y., April 8th, Dwight B. Stillman, son of Albert and Aurelia Stillman, aged 3 years and 4 months.

'Twas hard indeed to part with him—
To look the last farewell—
To lift the heart to Heaven, and say,
"He doeth all things well."

* * * * *

But though our eyes are filled with tears,
Though sighs our bosoms swell,
Love, prayer, and praise, be unto Him,
"Who doeth all things well."

UNION ACADEMY.

E. P. LARKIN, Principal.
Miss S. E. CRANDALL, Preceptress.

Opened March 12th, 1849.

THE Trustees of this Academy beg leave to say to the inhabitants of West Jersey in particular, and the public in general, that the universally acknowledged and deeply regretted want of such an institution in this section of country, especially by those desiring to give their children a liberal education, has been the prevailing motive with them, and those whom they represent, in commencing a school that shall be conducted on such a plan, and governed by such principles, as to meet their entire wants in these respects.

The Trustees of this Academy consider themselves bound to see the following principles observed, and strictly carried out, in the conduct of the school:—

First. Nothing sectarian shall be taught or countenanced in this school.

Second. Equal advantages shall be afforded to every student, whatever may be his, or her, religious denomination.

Third. The exercises of the institution shall be suspended on the first and seventh days of each week.

Fourth. No efforts shall be wanting to make the advantages of the institution equal to those of the most approved Academies in the Eastern and Middle States.

This institution is pleasantly located at Shiloh, Cumberland County, New Jersey, three and a half miles West of Bridgeton, the county seat, and 12 miles South-east of Salem; amidst an industrious, enterprising, and moral community, and removed from the vices ever attendant on large villages and cities.

TERMS.—Tuition from $3 50 to $5 00 per term, settled invariably in advance, either by payment or satisfactory arrangement. No admittance for less than half a term.

Board can be had in families at from $1 00 to $1 50 per week. Rooms can be obtained at a moderate expense by those desiring them.

The Winter Term of the first year will commence the first Monday in December. Each term will continue fourteen weeks.

Board of Trust.

To Clergymen and their People.

All Clergymen who will send their address to Messrs. Comstock & Company, No. 21 Courtland-street—(after the 1st of May No. 57 John-street)—New York, shall be furnished gratuitously, for their family use, with a Salve of most extraordinary merit for external sores or inflammations of long or short standing. In burns, or pains and swellings of nearly all descriptions, its effects are charming, and almost beyond belief. This Salve has already been used by quite a number of the clergy, for themselves or sufferers to whom they have given it; and they have called on or written to the proprietors to express their delight at its action, and a desire to have their names used in making known its virtues. The proprietors having realized a handsome sum by its sale, feel called upon by a sense of duty to their fellow-men to disseminate the knowledge of the existence of such a thing far and near, and to give it without charge to the reverend clergy without limitation. It is called CONNEL'S PAIN EXTRACTOR, and is owned solely by Messrs. C. & Co. All religious papers that will publish this a few times will be furnished with the Salve free, and they may also thereby relieve many suffering poor brethren from agonizing pain, and save them much expense. The names of nearly fifty clergymen recommending it, are to be seen at the office of C. & Co.

You will please observe, it is no "sovereign remedy for all complaints," but only intended for external applications in the following:—Burns, Scalds, Frosted parts, Chilblains, Chafe or Galls, Chaps, Tetter, Pimple, Blotch, Felon, Ulcer Sprains, Erysipelas, Cuts, Bruises, Ear and Toothache, Mumps, Sore Throat, Whitlows, Piles, Ringworm, Salt Rheum, Barber's Itch, Carbuncle, Eruption, Sore Eyes and Lids, Weak Sight, Sore Lips, Punctures, Biles and Warts, Fever Pains, Tender Feet, Inflammatory Rheumatism, Tic Doloureux, Ague in Face and Breast, Fever Sores, Old Burn Scars, Prickly Heat, Inflamed Skin, Broken Breast, Sore Nipples, Rough Hands, Blistered Surfaces, Dressing for Blisters, White Swellings, Cold in Wounds, Sore Corns, General Sores, Smallpox Marks, &c.

Though we have named numerous affections, experience has taught us that they are not too many. It will be necessary to know that this article is the only one we can recommend; but must caution against some imitation by like name. We will present it to the poor who have actual need of it.

THE GAMBLER'S WIFE.

Dark is the night! How dark! No light! No fire!
Cold, on the hearth the last faint sparks expire!
Shivering, she watches by the cradle side,
For him who pledged her love—last year a bride!

Hark! 'tis his footstep! No! 'tis past!—'tis gone.
Tick—tick! How wearily the time crawls on!
Why should he leave me thus? He once was kind,
And I believed 'twould last. How mad—how blind!

Rest thee, my babe—rest on! 'Tis hunger's cry!
Sleep, for there is no food! The fount is dry!
Famine and cold their weary work have done;
My heart must break! and thou—The clock strikes one!

Hush! 'tis the dice-box! Yes, he's there—he's there!
For this—for this he leaves me to despair!
Leaves love—leaves truth—his wife—his child. For what?
The wanton's smile, the villain, and the sot!

Yet I'll not curse him—No; 'tis all in vain:
'Tis long to wait; but sure he'll come again!
And I could starve and bless him, but for you—
My child—his child! Oh, fiend! The clock strikes two!

Hark! how the sign-board creaks—the blast howls by.
Moan—moan! a dirge swells through the cloudy sky.
Hark! 'tis his knock. He comes—he comes once more!
'Tis but the lattice flaps—our hope is o'er.

Can he desert us thus? He knows I stay
Night after night, in loneliness to pray
For his return; and yet he sees no fear!
No—no! It cannot be! He will be here!

Nestle more closely, dear one, to my heart!
Thou'rt cold! Thou'rt freezing! But, we will not part!
Husband, I die! Father—it is not he!
Oh God, protect my child! The clock strikes three.

They're gone—they're gone! The glimmering spark hath fled.
The wife and child are numbered with the dead,
On the cold earth, outstretched in solemn rest,
The babe lay frozen on the mother's breast.
The gambler came at last; but all was o'er:
Dread silence reigned around! The clock struck four.

CAPT. SUTTER AND SUTTER'S FORT.

The following sketch of Capt. Sutter and Sutter's Fort is from an excellent letter from California, in a late number of the Home Journal:—

Capt. Sutter is about 52 years of age, of middling hight, straight form, and possesses that symmetry and smallness of hand and foot which Lord Byron sets down as a sure evidence of gentle blood. In manners and conversation, Capt. Sutter is a perfect Chesterfield; he is well educated, and speaks several different languages fluently; he is a native of Switzerland, and was one of the officers of the Swiss Guard in the Revolution of July, during the reign of Charles X. After this Revolution, he emigrated to the United States, became naturalized, and resided several years in Missouri; thence, in 1839, he came to California, and obtained a grant of ninety miles square of land from the Mexican authorities. In his private character, Capt. Sutter is kind, hospitable, and generous. In fact, his generosity frequently lays him open to be preyed upon by the idle and worthless. When asked why he permitted such large demands upon his hospitality without a recompence, he replied: "What can I do, sir—they come here, eat, drink, and sleep; and sometimes without even thanking me—but what can I do? I cannot turn them out in the wild forest." Surrounded as he was, on his first settling in this country, by tribes of wild Indians, he has, by kindness and just dealing, attached them to his interest, and he now has from three to four hundred of these Indians devoted to him and his. They, for their food and a pay from four to six dollars per month, man his fort, work his farms and mills, and do all the labor generally required in new settlements.

Sutter's Fort, now called Fort Sacramento, is situated a short distance from the southern bank of the American Fork, on one of the tributaries of the Sacramento, 5 miles from its mouth, and 120 miles from San Francisco. The fort is in form of a parallelogram, 500 feet in length by 150 in breadth. The walls and houses are built of the oft-mentioned mud brick or adobe. Bastions at the angles, with cannons mounted, protect all sides, and numerous guns project from the mud walls. On the inner side, facing the court, are numerous buildings, occupied as store-houses, dwellings, and barracks for the garrison. The main store-house was rented, during the fever of gold digging, at $3,000 per month. The garrison of the fort being more trusty men, are better clothed and fed than the farm Indians.

The crop of wheat raised by Capt. Sutter, for the year 1848, was upward of 30,000 bushels, which is valued at the round sum of $80,000. This is the proceed from the labor of 125 rude Indians. He has also erected a mill for grinding wheat and sawing timber, and it was in the construction of a dam and race for a saw-mill that one of the persons in his employ discovered the gold.

LARGE SCYTHE FACTORY.

At North Wayne, sixteen miles from Hallowell and Augusta, Me., is situated the scythe manufacturing establishment of Reuben B. Dunn, Esq., the largest in the world. It is a matter of just pride to the citizens of our State that we can boast of such a man and such an enterprise. Your readers may be interested in a brief description of this establishment, which I have obtained during a short sojourn in this beautiful village, for the purpose of making certain land surveys.

The establishment consists of, besides warehouses, finishing-shops, &c., three principal buildings for manufacturing, two of which are one hundred and forty-four feet each in length. In these, and in departments connected with the establishment, are employed about one hundred men, many of whom have families in the place. A flourishing village has grown up within a few years, and is rapidly increasing.

Twelve thousand dozen sythes are annually manufactured, to produce which are required 450,000 pounds of iron, 75,000 pounds of steel, 800 tons of hard coal, 10,000 bushels of charcoal, 100 tons of grindstones, and half a ton of borax. The last-named article is used in the process of welding.

The system of division of labor has here been successfully adopted. First, the welders mark and cut the bars of iron and steel into portions of suitable length for each scythe. A portion of about five inches or more in length is folded over another of steel, when both are heated and drawn to the proper length for a scythe. It then passes into the hands of the pointer, whose business is to harden, draw, and break a small portion of the point, to see that the steel has not been overheated—that the iron has not been drawn over the steel, and to examine the whole process thus far. The plater then spreads the rod to a proper width, leaving the full thickness at the back. It then passes a process of fitting for the machine hammer, when the finisher turns it back and gives its general shape. One fashions and finishes the point, another turns and finishes the heel, when it passes the hardening process by a different hand, from whom it is taken to the tempering forge, and then into the hands of the grinders.

An experienced workman does nothing but carefully examine each scythe, and test the correctness of each process thus far, and every imperfect article is thrown aside. After passing the polishing wheel, it goes into the hands of the painter, and finally to those whose business it is to straw the scythes into bundles of a dozen each.

A CURIOUS CASE.

The Lawrence Courier contains the following report of a case lately tried in the Court of Common Pleas at Salem, Mass.:—

A rather curious case of slander has been on trial lately—the main facts of which are as follows: The defendant (Gould) lost some meal, about six bushels, which he supposed to have been stolen from a loaded wagon, left unguarded in the road, over night. Being a believer, or willing to become a believer, in the "Mesmeric Art," he forthwith proceeded to a neighboring town in search of a "cunning medicine man"—who, upon the application, proceeded to mesmerize a convenient subject. The revelation, given in a somewhat roundabout and confused manner, was, that the lost meal was taken by a man who drove (first he thought a bay horse, then a grey one,) that he lived in an old house—with a new barn, standing somewhat higher than the house; and that in going to his house, he passed willow trees; and that he went eastwardly; he also added that the man who took the meal was a little lame. Aroused by this information, thus communicated by supernatural authority, Gould proceeded to Town Meeting, and there made known the result of his inquiry of the mesmerizer. The description, thus given, it seems, applied to the plaintiff Averill, and to no one else in the town. If insisted upon, it certainly was a pretty strong insinuation that the plaintiff was the man indicated by the mesmerizer, and of course, by the defendant; hence, for this "utterance" the defendant is charged with slander—an offense to be atoned for, in the opinion of the Jury, by the sum of $90, current money, which sum by their verdict, they direct the defendant to "stump up." The parties reside in Middleton.

THE MAD DOG.

As you must hear the story of our dog Prince, I may as well tell it you. On Thursday morning, when I got on my horse at St. Hoare's, David told me that there was something the matter with Prince, that he had killed the cat, and almost killed the new dog, and had bit at him and Elizabeth. I ordered him to be tied up and taken care of, and then rode off to town. When I got into Hampstead, I saw Prince, covered with mud, and running furiously, and biting at everything. I saw him bite at least a dozen dogs, two boys, and a man. Of course I was exceedingly alarmed, being persuaded he was mad. I tried every effort to stop him or kill him, or drive him into some outhouse, but in vain. At last he sprang upon a boy, and seized him by the breast; happily I was near him, and knocked him off with my whip. He then set off towards London, and I rode by his side, waiting for some opportunity of stopping him. I continually spoke to him, but he paid no regard to coaxing or scolding. You may suppose I was seriously alarmed, dreading the immense mischief he might do, having seen him do so much in the few preceding minutes. I trembled at the idea of his getting into Camden and London, and at length considering that if ever there was an occasion that justified a risk of life, this was it, I determined to catch him myself. Happily he ran up to Pryor's gate, and I threw myself from my horse upon him, and caught him by the neck, he bit at me, and struggled, but without effect, and I succeeded in capturing him without his biting me. He died yesterday raving mad. Was there ever a more merciful escape? Think of the children being gone! I feel it most seriously, but I can not write now more fully. I have not been at all nervous about it, though certainly rather low, occasioned partly by this, and partly by some other things. I do not feel much fit for our Bible meeting, on Wednesday; but I must exert myself. P. S. Write me word whether Fowell has any wound on his fingers, and if he has one made by the dog, let it be cut off immediately; mind, these are my positive orders." He afterwards mentions some particulars which he had omitted in this hurried letter. "When I seized the dog," he said, "his struggles were so desperate that it seemed at first almost impossible to hold him, till I lifted him in the air, when he was more easily managed, and I contrived to ring the bell. I was afraid that the foam, which was pouring from his mouth in his furious efforts to bite me, might get into some scratch, and do me injury; so with great difficulty I held him with one hand, while I put the other into my pocket, and forced on my glove; then I did the same with the other hand, and at last the gardener opened the door, saying, 'What do you want?' 'I've brought you a mad dog,' replied I; and telling him to get a strong chain, I walked into the yard, carrying the dog by his neck. I was determined not to kill him, as I thought if he should prove not to be mad, it would be such a satisfaction to the three persons whom he had bitten. I made the gardener, (who was in a terrible fright,) secure the collar round his neck, and fix the other end of the chain to a tree, then walking to its farthest range, with all my force I flung him away from me, and sprung back. He made a desperate bound after me, but finding himself foiled, he uttered the most piercing yell I ever heard. All that day he did nothing but rush to and fro, champing the foam which gushed from his jaws; we threw him meat, and he snatched at it with fury, but instantly dropped it again. The next day, when I went to see him, I thought the chain seemed worn, so I pinned him to the ground between the prongs of a pitch-fork, and then fixed a much larger chain round his neck; when I pulled off the fork, he sprung out and made a dash at me, which snapped the old chain in two! He died in 48 hours from the time he went mad." [Life of Sir T. F. Buxton.

THE BOA CONSTRICTOR.

In the marshes of the valley the boa constrictor is often met with of considerable size. It is not uncommon throughout the province, particularly by the wooded margins of lakes, marshes, and streams. Sometimes they attain the enormous length of forty feet—the largest I ever saw at this place, but it was not alive. Some weeks before our arrival at Sape, the favorite riding horse of Señor Lagoeira, which had been put out to pasture not far from the house, could not be found, although strict search was made for it all over the Fazenda. Shortly after this, one of his vaqueiros, in going through a wood by the side of a small river, saw an enormous boa, suspended in the fork of a tree which hung over the water. It was dead, but had evidently been floated down alive by a recent flood, and, being in an inert state, it had not been able to extricate itself from the fork before the water fell. It was dragged out to the open country by two horses, and was found to measure thirty-seven feet in length. On opening it, the bones of a horse, in a somewhat broken condition, and the flesh in a half digested state, were found within it, the bones of the head being uninjured. From these circumstances we concluded that the boa had devoured the horse entire. [Gardner's Brazil.

REMINISCENCES OF A REVOLUTIONER.—The following is a letter from an old Revolutionary soldier, who is the only survivor of the band who threw the tea overboard at Boston. His name is David Kennison, and he lives in Chicago, Illinois:—

"If I live until the 17th day of November, 1848, I shall be one hundred and 12 years old. I was born in Kingston, N. H., and my father moved to Lebanon, Maine, when I was an infant. I was a citizen of that place when, at the age of about thirty-three, I assisted in throwing the tea overboard in Boston harbor. I was at the battle of Bunker Hill, and stood near Gen. Warren. I also helped to roll the barrels filled with sand and stones down the hill, as the British came up. I was at the battles of White Plains, West Point, and Long Island. I helped to stretch the chain across the Hudson River, to stop the British vessels from coming up. I was also in the battles at Fort Montgomery, Staten Island, Delaware, and Philadelphia. I witnessed the surrender of Lord Cornwallis, and was near West Point when Arnold betrayed his country, and Andre was hung.

"I have been under Washington, (for whom I frequently carried the mail and dispatches,) Prescott, Putnam, Montgomery, and Lafayette. I now draw a pension of $8 a month for services in the Revolutionary war.

"When the last war broke out, I was living in Portland, Maine, where I enlisted and marched to Sackets Harbor, and was in the battle at that place, and also at other places; and now have the marks of a wound received in my hand during that war."

SCOTCH LIBRARIES.—An official return recently presented to the British Parliament on the subject of the Public Libraries, gives the following as the number of volumes at present in the libraries of Aberdeen University and King's College, St. Andrew's University, Edinburgh University, Glasgow University, and the Library of Advocates, Edinburgh:—Aberdeen University, printed books, 33,284; MSS., 74. St. Andrew's, printed books, 51,265; MSS., 63. Edinburgh University printed books, 90,854; MSS., 310. Glasgow University printed books, 58,096; MSS., 242. Advocates' Library printed books, 148,000; MSS., 2,000. Number of persons frequenting the libraries in 1848: Aberdeen—students, 140; other persons, 246. St. Andrew's—students, (only,) 188. Edinburgh—students, 1,118; other persons, 81. Glasgow—students, (only,) 929.

PRINTING.—N. P. Willis, when a boy, worked two years at type-setting in his father's office—the Boston Recorder. In an editorial in a late Home Journal, recounting the advantages he had derived from that experience, he thus compliments "the craft." Journeyman printers are necessarily well instructed and intelligent men. It is a part of the proof-reader's duty to make a "query" against ever passage in a new book which he does not comprehend. Authors who know what is valuable, profit by these quiet estimates of their meaning; and many a weak point, that would have ruined a literary reputation, if left uncorrected for the reviewers to handle, is noiselessly put to right by a proof reader's unobtrusive "qr?" Of most books, indeed, we would rather have the criticism of the workmen in the office where it was printed, than of the reviewers who skim and pronounce upon it.

READY-MADE HOUSES FOR CALIFORNIA.—The following extract from a letter from a gentleman in San Francisco, to his friends in this city, indicates the opening of a profitable trade with the gold regions in ready-made houses:—

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 29.

Do not forward me the goods ordered in my last, but in their stead send me three or four middling-sized house-frames complete. The rent of these will be a fortune to me. The place is already full of goods of all kinds, and they sell at low prices, while from the amount on its way, rents are very high; one hundred dollars a month is paid for a small room. Lumber is worth a high price—indeed, it cannot be bought at all. You have no idea of the scarcity of houses. People are living in tents, stables, or in any place that can be obtained. A bed cannot be had for any price. If any of your friends are about to come here, advise them to bring plenty of clothes. The weather here is very cold at present. We have ice, hail, snow, and plenty of mud.

GRAFTING CHERRIES.—The saddle graft is most sure. With a sharp and thin knife cut in the end of the scion diagonally, about three-fourths of an inch, commencing at the outer bark and finishing the cut at the center of the stick; then turn it and cut the other side in the same way. You thus take out a wedge. Then tip your stock to a wedge to fit the scion, put the scion in its place, and wind it with paper or cloth that has been dipped in grafting wax. It is best that the stock should be of the same size with the scion. The band is to be loosened at the proper period of growth.

VARIETY.

The editor of the Wilmington Journal states, that three months since he saw four pieces of Carolina gold, weighing together over four pounds. The largest piece was fully twenty-four ounces avoirdupois, and the smallest twelve ounces. These pieces were found on the surface, in Richmond County, North Carolina, all within less than half a mile of each other, and within a mile of the Pee Dee River.

The Banking-House of Wm. Nisbet & Co., St. Louis, was entered on the 23d ult., by making a hole from an adjoining cellar into the vault, and robbed of $20,000 or $25,000. There was a great excitement in St. Louis the next day. Four men were arrested on suspicion, but nothing definite ascertained.

The Worcester Palladium thinks that if the bill giving the interest of $750,000 to the colleges should pass the Legislature, some one should move an amendment giving the interest of $1,000,000 to the newspapers of the Commonwealth, as it is notorious that the press does vastly more every day for the education of the people than is done by the colleges.

Kitto's Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature.

TO CLERGYMEN AND OTHER STUDENTS OF THE BIBLE.—The undersigned beg leave to ask your attention to the following Work, which they now offer for sale. Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature, in two thick volumes of 1,878 pages royal octavo, beautifully and substantially bound, by JOHN KITTO. D. D., F. S. A., &c., published by MARK H. NEWMAN & Co., 199 Broadway, New York.

This Work contains such information as is indispensable for the right understanding of the Bible and its historical interpretation. It comprehends Criticism, Geography, Natural History, and Antiquities, in all their branches, religious, political, social, and domestic.

The Works of Horne, Calmet, and others, are now found to be wholly inadequate to the wants of the student. Theological science is progressive, as well as every other, and the "old learning" of the "Bible Dictionaries" which have for so long a time been in use, is felt to be unequal to the advancement of mankind at the present time.

The efforts of the German Rationalists, of the Strauss school, to resolve all the facts of Bible History into myths and fables, has awakened a corresponding spirit of research among sound and Christian scholars; a determination to place the Scriptures upon a basis of indisputable evidence. The result has been, the discovery and accumulation of a mass of information from every portion of the field of biblical learning. A multitude of new, striking, and most useful facts have thus been placed at the disposal of the editor of this work. He has accordingly availed himself of all the latest discoveries down to the very year of its publication.

Nor is the Cyclopedia compiled by one man alone. Dr. Kitto distributed the subjects discussed to more than forth different individuals, of the first eminence in those departments. Their names are attached to their articles, and they are thus individually responsible for them. The Natural History of the Bible was written expressly for this work, by two distinguished Naturalists. The Botany of Scripture, by Dr. Royle, of King's College, London. The articles on Scriptural Zoology, by Hamilton Smith, President of the Devon and Cornwall Natural History Society. The articles in the department of Criticism, by Dr. Davidson, Professor of Biblical Literature in the Lancashire Independent College. Those on the Books of the Old and New Testament, by Havernich, Hengstenberg, Dr. Wright, of Dublin, and others.

The articles on the New Testament were furnished by Dr. Tholuck, Dr. Alexander, and others.

Various subjects are discussed, by Dr. John Pye Smith, Dr. Woods, of Andover, and others.

The Scriptural Geography exhibits the results of Dr. Robinson's biblical researches in Palestine.

It will be seen, therefore, that the work is a compilation of biblical learning, by the ablest biblical scholars of the age.

The undersigned ask the attention of students of the Bible to the Cyclopedia, in full confidence that no one acquainted with its character will suffer himself to be without a copy. The low price at which it is offered, (less than half the price of the English edition,) places it within the reach of all.

MARK H. NEWMAN & Co.

NOTICES OF THE CYCLOPEDIA.

From Horne, Author of "Horne's Introduction to the Study of the Scriptures," last edition.

"This Cyclopedia surpasses every Biblical Dictionary which has preceded it, and leaves nothing to be desired in such a work which can throw light on the criticism, interpretation, history, geography, archeology, and physical science of the Bible."

From the Biblical Repertory and Princeton Review.

"Dr. Kitto comes recommended even to those not acquainted with his other writings, by the well-known general facts of his experience and success as a book-maker, and of his long familiarity, in this capacity at least, with Biblical subjects.

"He has boldly and faithfully acted on the principle that such a plan can be worthily executed, in the present state of learning, only by distributing its parts among many hands, and such hands too as have been fitted by anterior experience to perform them most successfully."

From the Biblical Repository.

"The limits of a notice like the present forbid such a description of this learned work as its merits deserve, or sufficient to give the reader a just idea of its plan. We regard it as a most important and practically useful contribution to the cause of sound Biblical learning, and have no doubt that it will soon take the place, in the estimate of scholars, of every compilation of the kind.

"The enlistment of so many scholars in the production of a single work, each one presenting in a brief compass the results of a life-time of research, in precisely the matters where he is most at home, could not fail of enriching it with an amount of learning and scholarship to which, of course, the work of no single mind, however great, could pretend.'

From the Methodist Quarterly Review.

"This work was not compiled in the method hitherto usual with works of similar character, namely, on the basis of Calmet and the old learning of his day, with a few shreds of modern discovery interwoven. All the more important articles are written expressly for their present use, not by one individual, but by an arrangement between not less than forty different scholars in Europe and America, all of whom stand high in their several departments."

The Cyclopedia can be ordered through the local Book sellers in every part of the country.

MISSIONS—TO THE JEWS AND TO THE HEATHEN.

> "And ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth."

This prophetic injunction of our Lord—the last delivered to his disciples on earth, or before his ascension to his Father—contains, I think, the germ of all our views and speculations respecting the present condition and future prospects of the chosen people of God, and our duty as Christians in our intercourse with them. More than seven hundred years previous to this injunction of our Saviour, we find another equally remarkable prophetic declaration concerning the Jews: "The Lord shall scatter thee among all people, from one end of the earth even to the other;, and yet thou shalt dwell alone, and not be reckoned among the nations." There is another prediction, of nearly the same date, and closely allied to the same subject:—"And they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more; and no one shall say to his neighbor, Know thou the Lord, for all shall know him, from the least to the greatest."

At this day, few persons, if any, have doubts as to the complete fulfillment of these ancient prophecies respecting the dispersion of the Jews, though perhaps all are not familiar with the history of their captivity, suffering, and present condition. "They have been expelled at different times from every part of the world, which hath only served to spread them in all regions. From age to age they have been exposed to misery and persecution, yet still they subsist, in spite of the ignominy and hatred which hath pursued them in all places, whilst the greatest monarchies have fallen, and nothing remains of them besides the name. They swarm all over the east, and are settled, it is said, in the remotest parts of China, India, and Hindostan. The Turkish Empire abounds with them. There are more of them at Constantinople and Salonica than in any other places. They are spread through most of the nations of Europe and Africa, and many families of them are established in the West Indies; and some are discovered in the interior parts of America, if we may give credit to their own writers." In addition to this, we may consider what providential reasons may be assigned for their numbers and dispersion. "Their firm adhesion to their religion, and being dispersed all over the earth, has furnished every age and nation with the strongest arguments for the Christian faith; not only as these very particulars are, foretold of them, but as they themselves are the depositaries of these and all other prophecies which turned to their own confusion, and the establishment of Christianity. Their number furnishes us with a sufficient cloud of witnesses that attest the truth of the Bible, and their dispersion spread those witnesses through all parts of the world."

Thus we find the first of these prophecies literally and completely fulfilled, and placed beyond the reach of cavil; and the second, many people, and among them the learned Dr. Buchanan, think was fulfilled when the "Messiah appeared, and the gospel of peace was preached to men, and the sound thereof went to the ends of the earth—that Christ, who abrogated the old covenant with Israel, which was confined to a few, and made a new covenant with the world, which was extended to all." But I see no reason for believing any such thing. Their swords are not yet turned into ploughshares, nor their spears into prunning-hooks, and more than half of the world know not God and his law, nor worship before his throne. Rumors of wars, and contending armies with their swords bathed in blood, continue to reach our ears. How, then, can we say or think that the happy day so long anticipated has arrived?

Dr. Buchanan says that he expects no miracle for the Jews, but their conversion to Christianity; yet he admits that their dispersion, and their preservation in their present condition, has been accomplished only by the miraculous power of God. Now, if miraculous power has been necessary, and is to be again, I can see no good reason why there should be a break in the chain. I have long been of the opinion, that they ever have been and ever will be protected by a miraculous power, till their warfare is accomplished; or, in other words, I believe they are retained as witnesses for God to the ends of the earth, and that they will not be released till the final consummation of the great trial which is now progressing between Christ and Antichrist, when satan shall be bound, and wickedness shall cease on earth—when "the saints of God will see eye to eye, and the wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the young lion and the fatling together, and a little child shall lead them; when the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

I have never considered it a Christian duty to send missionaries to "meliorate the condition of the Jews," and of course have contributed nothing to the expense. Much time and money have been spent for that purpose; and what has been accomplished? Let the missionaries answer. They are not heathen, who know not God, neither regard his precepts. They have not annulled his laws, nor changed his holy Sabbath; neither have they taught the heathen that Sunday is the last day of the week, or that the first is the seventh. Are they more given to dishonesty, and a violation of our municipal laws, in their dealings with their neighbors, than other people? Let our police records answer. Of one thing, however, I am well satisfied, that the Jews have no desire to change conditions with Christians or any other class of human beings. I have conversed with missionaries who have visited them; and have also conversed with them myself, and those too of the highest standing for learning and intelligence; and their language is, "We desire to be left to ourselves—to our own master we stand or fall." And I believe that the missionaries generally have concluded to grant their request. I saw several years ago a report of an Episcopal missionary in England recommending to the Society to abandon certain stations as hopeless, and leave the Jews to the prayers of the churches; but, unfortunately he did not propose any form of prayer to be used on the occasion. Were I permitted to suggest, I would recommend the Lord's prayer, especially the first four sentences, as in that form they would be sure not to ask that which was not consistent with his holy purposes to grant.

Although there have been but few, if any, real converts obtained by the missionaries, from the Jewish to the Christian religion, yet such has been the persecution and horrid slaughter of them by the Mohammedans and Romanists, that many have renounced their religion to save their lives. What became of them afterwards is a question; whether they embraced the religion of their oppressors, or remained in disguise to avoid persecution, we are not informed.

Whatever differences of opinion there may be respecting the Jews, in one particular I believe all Christians are agreed, that it is our duty to send the gospel to the heathen, in proportion to our means and abilities to accomplish the work. The commisssion, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel," has never been revoked. Much remains to be done, before the long-prayed-for and happy day can arrive, when peace and good will shall reign triumphant. From the best authorities, it is believed that there are at present near four hundred millions of the human family in heathen darkness. A formidable number, surely. But without expecting any thing more miraculous in the last days than was manifested at the day of Pentecost, when three thousand were converted and baptized at one meeting, we may look for a nation to be born in a day. Numbers will be no obstacle in the way of God's providence. More efficient means will be called into use, more laborers will be sent forth into the harvest, when the fields are ready for the sickle. Although we are not permitted to know the time, yet I have no doubt that Zion is travailing, and at no very distant day will bring forth righteousness and peace throughout the earth.

An ardent friend of missions, after relating several remarkable cases of conversions in some of the heathen islands in the South and East, says: "The time will, I trust, ere long arrive, when the missionaries, by their perseverance, courage, and devotedness, shall reclaim the inhabitants of those islands from their sensual and savage customs, and bring them within the folds of Christianity and civilization. For the success of their meritorious labors, they have my most hearty prayers. And is not this the prayer of every Christian? And have we not good reason to believe that the Lord is answering their prayers? What but the guidance of the Holy Spirit could enable them to make such sacrifices as they are compelled to make? To forsake the land of their fathers, all their friends and Christian society, without hope of returning, is, I think, what all the honors and riches of this world would scarcely induce men to do, even if they were to fall in with heathen who are civilized, like the Chinese. But suppose it should be among barbarous cannibals, as in the Feejee Islands, where our mariners do not consider their lives or property safe, unless under the care of an armed guard, so little confindence can be placed in the honesty or friendship of the people, then gloomy indeed is their situation. Yet we are informed by Capt. Wilkes, in his Journal of the Exploring Expedition, that there are six missionaries with their wives and families on these islands, all from the Wesleyan Missionary Society of Great Britain, and that their lives are as yet protected by the God of Missions. As Capt. Wilkes has given an interesting account of their situation, and trials, I will make an extract from it, thinking it probable that but few of your readers will have the opportunity of perusing the original:—

"In the course of the narrative of our operations in the Feejee Islands, I have already shown something of the trials that the missionaries have at times had to undergo; but this is only a small part of their hardships. They, their wives, and children, are almost hourly liable to fall under the displeasure or caprice of these merciless savages. The natives, notwithstanding, seem desirous of having the missionaries among them, partly from the feeling that it will be advantageous to them in their intercourse with the vessels that come from time to time to bring them supplies, and partly for the protection which, in their opinion, the Spirit, or God of Missionaries, will afford to the koro where they reside. Upon the whole, I think the missionaries are safe as to life. They require much nerve and temper to withstand the trials they are often compelled to endure. I cannot speak too highly of the cheerfulness and resignation with which the members of the mission, and their families, meet the trials they have to go through; nor can I withhold my surprise, how the ladies or their husbands can endure a residence, attended with such dangers and discomforts, cut off, as they are, from all communication with their friends and kindred. Truly there is no poetry in such a life; it requires all the enthusiasm that fervent religion calls forth, to endure the pains and perils which meet them in the way." J. S.

TRUTH AND FALSEHOOD.

BY JOHN PIERPONT.

On the page that is immortal,
We the brilliant promise see;
"Ye shall know the TRUTH, my people,
And its might shall make you free!"

For the TRUTH then let us battle,
Whatsoever fate betide!
Long the boast that we are FREEMEN,
We have made and published wide.

He who has the truth and keeps it,
Keeps what not to him belongs,
But performs a selfish action,
That his fellow mortal wrongs.

He who seeks the truth and trembles
At the dangers he must brave,
Is not fit to be a Freeman—
He, at best, is but a slave.

He who hears the Truth, and places
Its high promptings under ban,
Loud may boast of all that's manly,
But can never BE A MAN.

Friend, this simple lay who readest,
Be not thou like either them,—
But to Truth give utmost freedom,
And the tide it raises, stem.

Bold in speech, and bold in action,
Be forever!—Time will test,
Of the free-souled and the slavish,
Which fulfills life's mission best.

Be thou like the noble Ancient—
Scorn and threat that bids thee fear;
Speak!—no matter what betide thee;
LET them strike, but MAKE them hear!

Be thou like the first Apostles—
Be thou like heroic Paul;
If a free thought seek expression,
Speak it boldly!—Speak it all!

THE INFLUENCE OF PHILOSOPHY,

In perverting pure Christianity and in engendering Mongrel Systems of Religion.

From Professor Tappan's "Theses on the Unity of the Church."

It hath not pleased God to reveal to man the truths of philosophy and science; but He formed him with an intellect capable of achieving them, and afforded him in the wide world the occasions, the phenomena, and the means. Many centuries have worn away, while man has been slowly gaining these truths. It was ordained that he should develop his being in the struggle, and become great only as he became wise. God has revealed to him only those truths for which he could not wait through the long toil of centuries, and which even the toil of centuries would have failed to find. Man makes himself the philosopher, the artist, the poet, the mechanician, the statesman; God's grace gives him the light, and makes him the child of heaven.

But if God revealed that which philosophy had not found and could not find, and yet philosophy itself be not revealed, but left as a legitimate object of human research, to be wrought out by the unaided human faculties, then how preposterous to set the dogmas of philosophy above, or to commingle them with, the pure word of God! On the one hand, the revelation is degraded from its throne of pure light, to be illumined by the murky gas-light of human wit; and philosophy, as yet unachieved and only in a progressive state, is elevated to expound the great truths which lie beyond her province. On the other hand, the progress of philosophy is interdicted, since the authoritative dogma consecrates the philosophy, however crude, which gave it birth, and prohibits as heresy those researches which, reaching forward to a more perfect philosophy, tend to modify, if not to overthrow, the dogma.

The divine grace met man in the midst of his philosophy, as well as in the midst of his ignorance and his wretchedness. The ignorant and the wretched embraced the Gospel as a relief. The publicans and the harlots passed into the kingdom of heaven; but the philosophers, even when they embraced it, went on speculating, and aimed to settle the great questions awakened by the contact of Christianity with human nature. Hence arose all the forms of philosophical Theology, of Christianity Gnosticized, Manichæized, Platonized, Peripateticized, and so on.

Contemporaneously with philosophico-theological dogmas, was the rise of the Hierarchy; and the creed which the philosopher had formed, the mitred Bishop proclaimed with an assumed apostolical authority; and by a terrific mimicry of Heaven's thunderbolts, and a real display of earthly power, awed the timid, confounded the ignorant, and struck down the rebellious.

During the middle ages, the doctrines of Scripture were inwrought with the ancient philosophies, until their true original form no longer appeared. The great doctors, who drew after them thousands of disciples, and whose subtle and angry disputes are but partially preserved in the ponderous tomes which now lumber old libraries in the old world, or take voyages to the new, to astonish, if not to pollute, our fresh and free thoughts; these great doctors were but men, philosophizing under ancient authorities, and theologizing without Scripture.

When the blessed and glorious Reformation took place, men were called back to the simple Word of God, and magnified, as of old, the fundamental and plain doctrines of salvation. And now, why did not all who felt the fresh beams of the Sun of Righteousness rising again with healing under his wings, have again a perfect unity and harmony in one faith, one Lord, one baptism, as in the sweet prime of Christianity, when the Apostles were upon the earth? There were two hindrances: First, the habitual awe which men felt for a hierarchy, which was hoary and venerable for its antiquity, analogous to the awe they felt for the old kingly authority in the civil government. Secondly, their reverence for the philosophical dogmas, which had been associated for ages with Gospel truths, so that hallowed creeds and all theological language had taken form in accordance with them. Hence, the glorious men of the Reformation did not get rid entirely either of the hierarchal spirit or of the dogmatical modes of thinking and speaking. Luther was an Augustinian monk, and retained to a great degree the Augustinian philosophy. Calvin, and the Reformers generally, drank at the same ancient fountain, which seemed then to be haunted by none but heavenly spirits. And the hierarchy prevailed more or less, but most of all in England. In this age, and in the age immediately following, sprang up many dogmatical controversies, and the creeds which were formed, embodied the points for which the parties contended. These creeds still exist, in very form or in substance, and are those which we are now called upon to subscribe.

It is not fit that creeds formed amid the heat and uproar of the battle of the Reformation, or amid the conflicts of the contending sects afterwards, should be retained for the time of peace and concord which the church is sighing for, and the dawn of which is opening upon us.

It is not fit that creeds shaped by particular philosophical tenets should be received as standards, whereby to judge of Christian character or ministerial qualifications. To private Christians generally, they must be inappropriate, inasmuch as philosophy is not a common study, and no one can truly and safely receive a dogma shaped by a philosophy, who is unacquainted with the grounds, the history, and the methods of this philosophy. Again, to candidates for the sacred office they are inappropriate. Philosophy, like all other parts of human knowledge, can be fitly pursued only in obedience to the laws of rational cognition. Hence, philosophical dogmas cannot be laid down by authority. And the student of theology, if he comprise philosophy in his educational course, must pursue it with all the freedom of mind and thoroughness of investigation, which the terms of rational cognition demand. But, if philosophical dogmas are embodied in creeds, and then these creeds are required to be received at the very porch of theological study, and at the very beginning of our ministry, free investigation is precluded; and we do, in fact, embrace upon authority, what authority has no right to determine. We do, indeed, and very properly, receive the revealed truths of the Bible upon the authority of the great and all-wise God. But we may not, side by side with this, receive the speculations of doctors, and councils of doctors upon their authority, and thus enslave our free and rational thought; and, instead of walking in the open field of truth, with the light of Heaven shining upon us, hide our heads in affright beneath the clumps of brambles and briers, which have sprung up here and there, and which, frowning at each other, claim authority in the whole domain.

There are manifest evils, as well as absurdities, in requiring of the student of theology to study philosophy, and then commanding him to study according to the order of certain doctors, and to mould himself according to certain formularies. In this way the so-called great, and learned, and titled theologian becomes one, who, with a large capacity of dogmatical deglutition, swallows down the prescribed doctrines, and acquires great facility in technical words and forms, while his soul, still dwelling in darkness, attains no clear, philosophical perception. On the other hand, the simple-hearted child of truth, who is toiling up the hill manfully in the way of God's appointment, and who reaches eminences from which he obtains celestial visions, often becomes the mark of theological odium, has his good name cast out as evil, and is decried as a heretic, because, like Galileo, he knows more than the cardinals.

Men generally think there is but one pope in the world; but, in reality, there are two. There is the pope of the polity, who orders the outward forms and rituals; and he will let you believe any thing, or be any thing, that will accord with kissing his toe, and acknowledging the apostolical succession. And there is the pope of the dogma, who will give you great freedom as to outward forms, and will laugh with you at the apostolical succession; but wo be to you, if you differ from his formularies of belief. These two popes sometimes make friends, like Pilate and Herod; and sometimes they are warring against each other. But one thing is certain, that as yet the Christian world, to a great extent, is governed by one or the other. Like Scylla and Charybdis, they stand frowning and roaring on either hand. The path of freedom and truth lies midway between them, but the navigation is dangerous.

AN EYE FOR A PIN.

Two boys, named Abel and Asa, were at the same school in New York, each about ten years old; not brothers, but schoolmates and classmates. Both of them had irritable tempers, and had been taught to think they must resent injuries and defend their rights at all hazards. Playing pin was a common amusement in the school. They played in this way: Two boys would take a hat and set it down between them, crown upward. Then each boy would lay a pin on top of the crown, and then knock it—first one, and then the other. The one that could knock the pins, so that they would lie across each other, had them both. During recess, one day, Abel and Asa were playing pin. They knocked the pins about some time. Both became much excited in the game. Finally, Abel knocked the pins so that (as he said) one lay across the point of the other. Asa denied it. Abel declared they did, and snatched up both pins. Asa's anger flashed in a moment—and he struck Abel in the face with his fist. This excited Abel's wrath. They began to fight—the other boys clustering around, not to part them, but to urge them on. Some cried, "Hit him, Abel!" and some, "Give it to him, Asa!" thus stimulating them to quarrel. The boys seized each other, and finally came tumbling to the ground, Abel on top. Then Abel, in his fury, went to beating Asa in his face, till the blood spouted from his nose and mouth, and till Asa lay like one dead.

Then the boys pulled Abel off. But Asa could not get up. The boys began to be alarmed. They were afraid Abel had killed him. The teacher was called. He carried Asa in, washed the blood from his face, and recovered him from his stupor. He examined his face and head, and found them bruised in a shocking manner. One of his eyes was so hurt and swollen, he could not open it. And from that day the sight of it grew more and more dim, till it went out in total darkness. So Asa lost an eye, and Abel put it out, merely for a pin!

MERCY OF MISSIONARIES.

The following account of a member of a missionary church in South Africa, is given in a report to the American Board:—

The widow who is enrolled among our communicants, presented herself at my door about three years ago, with a little daughter of two years old, saying, "Teacher, hear my complaint. Night before last, my husband being away, some of my neighbors came to my house, and endeavored to persuade me to go with them to the place where he was to be tried for witchcraft. But feeling quite sure that they had determined to murder him, and that if they did they would murder me with him, I contrived to send them away from the house; when I took my children and went to the bush. There I spent the night with them. The next morning I saw from the bush several men enter the kraal, and take away all our cows and goats, as well as every thing valuable from the huts. This, of course, made it certain that I was a widow, and that my children were fatherless. What to do I knew not; for, according to our custom, if a man is condemned for witchcraft, no one may receive his wife or children into his house. They must go to the hills and bush, and live or die, as they can, with the wild beasts. And so for that day and the following night I sat there with my two children, who increased the pain of my heart by their cries for food, of which I had none. This morning it occurred to me that I had heard people say, that missionaries were men of mercy to those who could find no mercy elsewhere; and, my heart leaping within me at the thought, I said, 'I will arise and go to the missionary.' And here, teacher, you see I am, with this little girl. It is now about two days since we have eaten any thing; and my other child, who was too weak to walk, I have left in the bush. Will you have mercy on a poor outcast widow and her fatherless children?"

I need not say, that such a request was complied with. The widow and her two children, since that morning, have not wanted bread. They have lived to see the murderers brought to punishment. The poor outcast widow has found it true, that Christ's missionaries are men of mercy to the needy; and, what is infinitely more important, she has also found that they point to the great Fountain of all mercy, the Saviour of lost sinners. She now says, "Teacher, you have saved me. I shall never leave you; I will die with you. As for my children, let them be taught and educated, as you think best; and in the mean time let them serve you as they best can."

RELIGIOUS EFFORTS FOR IRELAND.

The extent of Protestant efforts to educate and evangelize the Irish, is not generally known and appreciated. Nearly every denomination of Christians in Great Britain is doing something for them, in the way of supporting either teachers or preachers. The following list embraces some of the principal societies, to which several others might be added:—

1. "The Irish Evangelical Society," a small body of the Congregational denomination, having 18 ministers and 13 scripture readers, actively employed in various parts of the country. 2. "The Lady Huntingdon's Connexion," employing a number of scripture readers of evangelical sentiments, under the superintendence of ministers of different denominations. 3. "The Ladies' Hibernian Female School Society," which has been in existence for 21 years, expends annually about £2,000 in supporting female schools, and teaches the Scriptures, geography, writing, knitting, sewing, &c. 4. "The Irish Society," for promoting the education of the native Irish, through the medium of their own tongue, established in the year 1826, supported by the members of the Episcopal Church, having an annual income of £5,000, and employing at present 58 readers, and 521 teachers. There is a Ladies' Auxiliary to this society, employing 3 missionary agents, 51 readers, 2 schoolmasters, and 1 schoolmistress. 5. "The Scripture Reader's Society for Ireland," instituted in 1822, in connection with the Episcopal Church, employs 68 scripture readers, and annually expends about £2,300. 6. "The Irish Island Society," in connection with the Episcopal Church, whose labors are confined to the coast regions and islands, which employs 23 scripture readers and teachers, and has been the means of bringing the Gospel within the reach of about 12,000 individuals. 7. "The Sunday School Society for Ireland," which numbers at present about 3,000 schools, and 244,000 scholars, and which has, since its formation, circulated upwards of 784,000 Bibles and Testaments, and more than 1,270,000 portions of the Scriptures and spelling books.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, April 26, 1849.

BAPTIST AND PEDOBAPTIST POPERY.

A controversy has been going on for a while past relative to infant sprinkling and Romish traditions, in which the Rev. Dr. Cote, of the Grand Ligne Mission, Canada, has figured quite largely. It seems that Dr. Cote was originally a Roman Catholic; but having become a Protestant, he connected himself with the mission to the Catholics in Canada. In that capacity he was for some time sustained mainly by the contributions of Pedobaptists. Subsequently, however, he adopted the views of the Baptists, and was turned over to them for sympathy and support. Nearly a year ago, he attended a Baptist Anniversary at Rochester, and delivered an address, in the course of which he alluded to his change of views on the subject of baptism, and expressed his opinion that "infant sprinkling is a Romish tradition." For this expression he was taken in hand by the editor of the N. Y. Observer, who accused him of base ingratitude, and a want of regard for the feelings of those who had formerly been his warmest friends and most liberal supporters. Dr. Cote replied to the accusation in a very mild and gentlemanly manner, and fully sustained the position he had assumed. But in doing so, he was obliged to take Sabbatarian ground, and to quote from the very authors by whose testimony Sabbatarians prove the Romish and traditional character of the Sunday festival, sometimes denominated the Christian Sabbath. We called his attention to this fact at the time, and gave him an extract upon the subject from each of his favorite authors, expressing the hope that since he had begun to throw off the shackles of Romish tradition, he would not stop until he found himself entirely free. And there that matter ended.

But Dr. Cote was not to be let off with the castigation he had received from the editor of the N. Y. Observer. There lives at Elizabethtown, N. J., a Rev. Dr. Murray, originally a Roman Catholic, but now a Presbyterian minister, somewhat noted for his series of letters to the Catholic Bishop of New York, over the signature of "Kirwan." He must needs have something to say about the matter. Accordingly he writes a long letter, and sends it to all the world through the columns of the N. Y. Observer, in which, after expressing his regret that "so large and pious a body of Christians, and in the main so truly excellent and orthodox as the Baptists," should make of immersion "the one thing needful," he gives to the Baptists generally, and to Dr. Cote in particular, a pretty thorough going over. To this Dr. Cote replies, giving it as his opinion, that such an attempt to defend infant-sprinkling is not only lame, but "opens the door to nearly the whole host of superstitious practices which are to be found at the present day in the Romish Church."

There the controversy ends, so far as the two Doctors are concerned. But the comments of cotemporary papers will doubtless keep the subject before the people for some time to come. In the "Freeman's Journal and Catholic Register," (the organ of Bishop Hughes,) for the 21st of the present month, we find remarks upon the subject, which so directly confirm the opinions we have often expressed as to the inconsistency of both Baptists and Pedobaptists, in denying the authority of Romish traditions, and yet keeping the first day of the week for the Sabbath, that we can not refrain from copying them. What can Protestants reasonably expect to do to check the progress of Popery, while they continue to symbolize with it in this matter of the Sabbath? All they do in the way of promoting the better observance of what they call the Sabbath, and all they do directly to unmask the Papacy, only serves to make more apparent their own inconsistency. If they would see good result from their labors, let them come out from her and be separate. Otherwise they should expect, what they will certainly realize, that all their reproofs will be rendered powerless by the simple reply, "Physician, heal thyself."

Here is the extract from the Catholic paper:

Dr. Cote and Dr. Murray.

"These gentlemen are both apostates from the Catholic religion, if we are to believe themselves. The former passed over to the Baptists; the latter to the Presbyterians. They are now engaged in controversy. It seems that in his letters to Bishop Hughes, Mr. Murray attacked popery with weapons which Baptists alone have a right to use. Dr. Cote reminds him of this, and charges him with inconsistency. He proceeds to prove that Presbyterians are guided, not by Scripture, but by Catholic tradition, when they baptize infants. We have no great respect for either of the combatants, but we are compelled to say, that in this instance, the argument is altogether in favor of Dr. Cote. We do not know what answer the man of our village in Elizabethtown has made, or can make, in reply to the logic of his Baptist opponent—for in regard to the question, as between the Baptists and Presbyterians, the facts and the reasoning, according to the general Protestant principle, are with the Baptists, against all other Protestant sects.

"Let the account be settled by all means. We have no objection to see the whole matter amicably adjusted. But we would not close our brief notice of the pending controversy without whispering in the ear of the Canadian champion, that every argument he employs against his brother of Elizabethtown, in regard to infant baptism, may be turned against himself by the Seventh-day Baptists in reference to what he calls the Sabbath, which is not the Sabbath of Scripture at all, but the 'first day of the week.'

"Thus it is, that whilst the enemy of truth raises up heretics and heresies, God Almighty will not allow them to say the same thing, nor to understand each other; but He confounds their speech and hearing, as was done to the builders of Babel."

Affairs in Europe.—The European news received by the last steamer confirms opinions previously entertained, that the year 1849 is to witness extensive revolutions and blood-shed—perhaps more extensive than were witnessed in 1848. The two sanguinary battles which have been fought in India, the two desperate and disastrous struggles in Italy, and the numerous encounters in Hungary, show that the war-spirit is abroad, and lead us to expect sad evidences of its power. An early renewal of hostilities between Denmark and Prussia, and also between Sicily and Naples, is talked of and expected. Rome and Venice will undoubtedly be soon attacked, and probably overcome. Meanwhile the hosts of Russia stand ready to engage in the conflict, and will in all probability find some pretext for doing so. Indeed, it is said that they are already at the service of Austria, and only waiting the order of its aristocracy. In such circumstances, what else can be expected than a desperate and bloody campaign for Europe in 1849?

CENTRAL ASSOCIATION.

The Annual Meeting of the Seventh day Baptist Central Association will be holden with the First Church in Brookfield, N. Y., on the fourth day of the week before the second Sabbath in June, at 10 o'clock, A. M.

At the last Semi-Annual Meeting of said Association, it was proposed, that in conducting our future domestic missionary operations, the plan of aiding feeble churches to sustain a pastor among them, be adopted, instead of the former one, of granting a supply for a limited time; and that the Corresponding Secretary address a Circular to the several churches composing said Association, urging them to make liberal contributions to sustain such missionary operations.

It was thought that this plan would be far more useful than the old plan; that assistance thus rendered would result in the enlargement of said churches, so that in a short time they would be able to sustain themselves. This would encourage such feeble churches to make efforts to help themselves, and would afford encouragement to persons favorably disposed to our sentiments, to unite with said churches, as there would be a prospect of their enjoying the stated means of instruction, and the regular administration of the ordinances of the gospel; whereas, under the former plan, no such hope could be indulged, as the missionary, after spending a few weeks, or months at most, would leave them, and the results of his labors would be blighted from the want of proper cultivation.

The plan proposed has been adopted by other denomination with decided advantage. Many flourishing churches in the western part of New York, and in Ohio, Indiana, and other new States, have been raised from small beginnings to their present prosperous condition by the adoption of the plan proposed by the Central Association.

It is confidently believed, that had the money expended by the Seventh-day Baptists in sending transient missionaries over a wide waste, been spent in concentrated efforts upon particular sections; and, after planting churches in such places, had they aided them in establishing a regular administration of the word and ordinances, we should have seen ere this time prosperous churches where we now behold desolation and ruin.

We might multiply arguments in favor of the proposed plan, to almost any extent; but we forbear, as we believe it will commend itself to the favorable acceptance of every discerning mind.

We would farther state, that the Central Association, at its last semi-annual session, did vote such supplies to a limited extent, and there will be a necessity for the churches to send forward their contributions, in order to meet the claims of those who have labored in the service of the Association. Some of the churches recommended by letter that the Association extend its labors, and that they would pay their proportion of the expense. We would suggest to such churches, that no such apportionment could be made until after the labor is performed, and that the laborer could not well afford to wait as long as this plan would render necessary. We would therefore respectfully and affectionately urge every church in the Association to send to the Annual Meeting of the Association a liberal contribution to meet the expenses already accrued, and to state the probable amount they will contribute for the ensuing year.

In conclusion, we propose to those churches which expect aid from the Association, to transmit to the Corresponding Secretary immediately, or as soon as practicable, a statement of what they will do to sustain a minister among them. This need not be in money, but may be in such articles as the minister who labors among them would need in his family. This Circular will supersede the necessity of writing to particular churches on the subject last named as directed by the Association.

ELI S. BAILEY, Cor. Sec.

TURNING THE TABLES.

It is very common for those who maintain the sabbatic character of the first day of the week, to attempt to make capital for their theory out of the accidents which happen to the desecrators of that day. The danger of establishing such a precedent, is apparent to every one who considers, that calamities are liable to overtake the good as well as the bad on Sunday, and that both classes are exposed to accidents on all other days of the week as well as on Sunday. From the following articles, which we find in the Liberator, it seems that the anti-Sabbath people have learned the lesson, and are using their learning to sustain their theory. Perhaps there is no better way to set people thinking upon the subject and we therefore copy the article.

A Minister struck down by God in the Pulpit, on the Sabbath, for opposing the Anti-Sabbath movement.

Boston, March 31, 1849.

Dear Garrison:—Shall we regard the following as a judgment of God upon those who, in the name of God, are urging upon men the first-day Sabbath as of divine appointment and authority, and who wickedly denounce those as sinners who are vindicating the truth of God in opposition to that falsehood? Mr. Burgess has ever been a bitter reviler and persecutor of abolitionists and non-resistants, who are sacrificing their property and reputation on the altar of justice and humanity, of freedom, and of God. He was struck down in his pulpit, on Sunday, while urging upon his people the stupendous falsehood, that God, in the Bible, has set apart the first day of the week to be observed as a Sabbath. What shall we think of it?

Henry C. Wright.

Hancock, March 29, 1849.

I would state a fact in regard to those Anti-Sabbath books. By some means, one found its way to Archibald Burgess, Congregational minister in this place, member of the A. B. C. F. M., very zealous for the Sabbath and the gallows, &c., &c.; who, fearing its influence on the people of his charge, undertook, some five months since, to urge a stricter observance of the day he calls Sabbath upon his people; was zealous in the extreme; was apparently somewhat excited; and at the close of the services, fell down in the pulpit, was carried home, and has not been able to write a sermon since. His place has been supplied by his brethren. Physicians say he had a paralytic shock.

Yours, fraternally.

Loss of another Missionary to China.—The recent mysterious dealings of Providence with missionaries to China, is a subject of frequent remark. Of those sent out within two or three years, one died soon after reaching Canton; another, Dr. James, with his wife, was drowned near Hong Kong; and a third, Mr. Tobey, has been compelled to leave his station on account of the illness of his wife. Of the older missionaries, Mr. Lowry was murdered by pirates in passing from Shanghai to Amoy; and now we learn of the death of the Rev. Wm. J. Pohlman, missionary to the American Board at Amoy. He was lost at sea, January 5th, in attempting to leave a schooner in which he had taken passage for Hong Kong, and which was wrecked two days from the point of his destination. Mr. Pohlman was a most excellent laborer, in connection with the Reformed Dutch Church.

◆

Unitarian Missionary Movements.—On Sunday evening, April 8th, a sort of Convention was held in one of the Unitarian churches of Boston, to consider what should be done to extend the missionary operations of the Unitarians. From the statements made, it appears that the contributions of Unitarians for missionary purposes are very small in proportion to the amount of property they hold. Of the $175,000,000 taxable property in Boston, it is estimated that $100,000,000 is in the hands of Unitarians; yet they can not obtain for missionary purposes the decimal part of one per cent. Allusion was made to a recent effort in New York and Brooklyn, by which pledges were secured to the amount of $10,000 for the enlargement of the Unitarian paper. The conclusion of the whole matter was, that a committee should be appointed to report some plan for enlarged missionary operations.

◆

Temperance Movement.—A grand convention of the friends of temperance, and especially of members of the various permanent organizations of pledged total abstinents, will assemble in Cincinnati on the 15th of May, at which it is expected that fifty thousand people, other than Cincinnatians, will be collected. Its object is the infusion of increased energy and efficiency into the general movement for the promotion of abstinence from all intoxicating liquors. Prominent advocates of temperance from all parts of the Union have been invited, and many of them will doubtless attend.

Webster's Quarto Dictionary.—The Board of Public Instruction of St. Louis, Mo., recently voted that a copy of Webster's Unabridged Quarto Dictionary be placed upon the desk of each teacher in the Grammar department of the St. Louis Public Schools, as a book of reference for teachers and pupils. The people of the town of North Brookfield, Mass., noted for thrift and public spirit, have voted to place a copy in the school-house of each of their nine districts. Thomas H. Benton, Jr., Superintendent of Public Instruction in Iowa, says of this Dictionary: "As an American, I am proud of the work. It is gratifying to see that it gives such universal satisfaction. I shall recommend it as the standard in the public schools of this State."

Sound Doctrine.—In a controversy between the editor of the Freeman's Journal and the editor of the N. Y. Tribune, relative to treating all religions alike in Mexico, the latter expresses his views upon the general subject of legislating about religion, as follows:—

We hold, then—

1. That Civil Government has no right to intermeddle at all with any citizen's religious convictions of faith—these being not only out of but entirely above its sphere—consequently, that all disabilities or penalties inflicted by the State because of alledged errors of faith can only be inflicted through gross usurpation and flagrant wrong.
2. That the duty of worshiping our Creator and Preserver is of universal obligation, so that no human power can intermeddle with such privilege, much less obstruct it, without irreverence and Heaven-daring presumption. For, surely, we need not argue that to forbid any to worship God in accordance with their own convictions of truth and right, is really forbidding them to worship him at all.
3. That all restraints, penalties, disabilities, or injuries inflicted by a civil government upon any portion of the people subject to its sway because of the conscientious dissent of that portion from the creed of the majority or governing power, are violations of sound polity, natural justice, and divine sovereignty, and should be instantly abrogated and desisted from.

A Minister in California.—The Newark Daily Advertiser publishes a letter from Rev. T. Dwight Hunt, dated at San Francisco, March 1, 1849. He says that although there is no church organization, he has a full congregation on Sundays. A Temperance Society had just been organized with 40 members. The monthly concert for missions was regularly observed. The steamer California, which arrived on the day previous, brought three additional laborers—Rev. Messrs. Douglass, Woodbridge, and Wheeler. In conclusion, he says:—"The country is likely to fill up rapidly. Probably 1,000 passengers have arrived within a fortnight. We hear the excitement in the States is very great, and that both across the Continent, by the Isthmus, and around the Cape, great numbers are flocking hither. But, O! the worldliness—the moral desolation—this gold fever creates!"

◆

Missionaries for California.—The Presbyterian Herald says that the Assembly's Board of Missions have commissioned Rev. F. S. Hart, of Columbia, Mo., as a Missionary to California. He goes out with a company embracing four elders and fifteen or twenty members of the Presbyterian Church. He is the fourth missionary to that Territory sent out by the Board, and applications from a number of others have been received and laid over for the present. It is stated that already there are more ministers in Oregon and California, or on their way, than Virginia had after being settled a hundred years.

◆

Missionaries for the West.—A member of the Senior Class of the Princeton Theological Seminary, writes to the editor of the Presbyterian Herald, that "a goodly number of the first in the class, in point of talents and piety, are now looking to the West and South-west as the field of their future labors. There seems to be more of the 'domestic missionary spirit' in this class, than in any other that has graduated for several years. I think there are from fifteen to twenty who intend going West, if a field is opened for them by the Board."

◆

Removal of Madison University.—The question of removing Madison University from Hamilton to Rochester, N. Y., seems not yet decided. Chancellor Walworth has reported to the Boards of the University and the Education Society, that in his opinion there are no obstacles in the way of removal. The report is to be published, and other measures have been taken looking to a removal. There is to be a meeting at Albany, June 5th, to act upon the question.

◆

Cholera in New Orleans.—The editor of one of the New Orleans papers says he is informed by W. B. Lindsay, M. D., a physician of eminent practice in that city, that cholera yields as readily as any other disease to timely aid, and that he has not had a case during the entire cholera season which was not easily managed, unless he was called in during the last stages of the disease.

New Work on Agriculture.—We see it announced, that L. Scott & Co. are about to republish a work on Scientific and Practical Agriculture, edited by Professor Norton, of Yale College. They propose to issue it in 25-cent numbers, of which there will be some 16 or 18. It will make in the aggregate two volumes of 700 pages each, with more than 600 wood engravings in the highest style of the art. The whole will be sent for $4 in advance.

◆

Blackwood's Magazine for April is the best number we have read for a long time. It opens with a Review of Macauley's History of England, after which we have a notice of "Johnston's Physical Geography," "The Caxtons," "Ancient Practice of Painting," "Tennyson's Poems," "Aristocratic Annals," "The Life of the Sea" and "London Cries" by B. Simmons, "Claudia and Pudens," "Sir Astley Cooper." Published by L. Scott & Co., 79 Fulton-st., corner of Gold, N. Y.

A Venerable Minister dead.—The N. Y. Recorder informs us that Rev. Francis Wayland, Sen., died at Saratoga Springs, on the 9th inst., in ripe old age, and remarkably sustained and cheered by his faith in the Redeemer.

New Supervisor Law.—The Legislature of New York, at its last session, passed an Act to vest in the Boards of Supervisors certain legislative powers, and to prescribe their fees for certain services. They are now authorized to divide or alter the bounds of towns, or to erect new towns; to change the location of court-houses, jails, clerks', surrogates', or treasurers' offices, or other public buildings; to purchase any real estate necessary for the site of public buildings, and the support of the poor; to cause to be erected necessary buildings for poor-houses, jails, and other county buildings; to sell or lease any real estate belonging to the county; to make regulations for the destruction of wild beasts, thistles, and any noxious weeds, to prevent the destruction of sheep by dogs, to tax dogs, to protect all kinds of game and fish, &c. The fees of supervisors are fixed as follows:—

"Each Supervisor shall receive, over and above the per diem compensation now allowed by law, eight cents per mile for all necessary travel in the discharge of his official duties, and three cents for each name (for making a copy of the assessment roll of his town, and making out the tax-bill to be delivered to the collector) for the first hundred names, two cents per name for the second hundred names, and one cent per name for each name over two hundred. But no per diem allowance shall be made to any Supervisor while employed in making out such copy or tax."

Emancipation in Kentucky.—A large and respectable meeting of mechanics and working-men was held at Louisville on the 10th inst., when the following, among other resolutions, was adopted:—

Resolved, That the institution of Slavery is prejudicial to every interest of the State, and is alike injurious to the slaveholder and non-slaveholder; that it degrades labor, enervates industry, interferes with the occupations of free laboring citizens, separates too widely the poor and the rich, shuts out the laboring classes from the blessings of education, and tends to drive from the State all who depend upon personal labor for support; that, while we recognize the right of property in slaves under existing laws, we hold that the laboring man has as full right to his occupation and the profits of his labor, as the master to his slave; and as Slavery tends to the monopoly of, as well as the degradation of labor, public and private right require its ultimate extinction.

At a meeting at Georgetown, on the 7th, resolutions in favor of gradual emancipation were passed, and it was also determined to run Emancipation candidates for the approaching Constitutional Convention.

◆

Union College.—A detailed statement of all the receipts and expenditures of Union College, going back more than fifty years, was recently made to the Legislature. The balance of its various schedules shows that the College now possesses property exceeding in value (reckoned at cost) by more than $240,000, all the grants made to it by the State; and that the excess of its expenditures over all the grants of the State is $425,000—all exclusive of interest. In view of the fact that 'one thousand eight hundred and fifty-nine young men, who must otherwise have been excluded from the advantages of a public education, have, by the joint aid of the State and the Trustees, been furnished with the same,' the authorities of the College think 'it will appear, both to the Legislature and to the public, (as it has always heretofore on examination appeared,) that the grants made to Union College have been managed with commendable care.'

Revivals at the West.—A correspondent of "The Independent," writing from Galena, Ill., under date of March 15th, says:—

"A glorious work of grace is pervading this entire region of country. In many respects it is very different from any previous reviving of religion with which the North-west has been visited. It is more calm, deliberate, thoughtful. It is accompanied with much less excitement of feeling. The Rock River country, both in Wisconsin and Illinois, has been richly refreshed from on high. At Beloit the work of grace has been peculiarly powerful and thorough. A number of the students of the College are among the subjects. From a great proportion of the towns between Galena and Chicago we hear reports of conversions and of the reviving of Christians. In this vicinity, a delightful work of grace has been going on for some time at Lyndon, Whiteside Co. Savannah and Sabula have also been visited by the Spirit, and conversions are taking place."

Munificent Bequests.—The late John Hoff, who recently died in Philadelphia, leaves by his will to his widow the interest of $15,000 worth of stock, during the term of her life. After her death he gives $3,000 of this stock to the Pennsylvania Bible Society, located at Philadelphia; $3,000 to the Methodist Bible Society, South, located at Charleston, S. C.; $3,000 to the Baptist Bible Society of Charleston, S. C.; and $3,000 to the Bible Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church, located at Charleston; from the interest of which sums, each of these associations is to annually distribute Bibles. To the Princeton Theological Seminary he bequeaths $25,000 "in perpetuity." The testator also leaves to the Marine Church of Charleston, S. C., the sum of $10,000. He has also left $10,000 to the Pennsylvania or other Colonization Societies that shall succeed in establishing a colony of free colored persons in Africa, for the purchase of a tract of land, and prescribes that the site, location, and territory so purchased and settled upon, shall be designated the State or District of "Hoff."

FOURTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Europa, from Liverpool, has arrived at New York since our last, bringing fourteen days later European news.

From England there is but little to note. Business has improved under more favorable advices from India, and the momentary lull of excitement on the Continent. The principal topics of discussion in Parliament are the Navigation Laws and the Relief of Ireland.

In France, M. Proudhon has been condemned by a jury for libeling the President of the Republic, but has escaped from the country. M. Duchesne has shared the same fate as to conviction, and is to suffer one year's imprisonment. Barbes, Blanqui, Flocon, Sobrier, Raspail, and Quintin, have been convicted at Bourges; and Barbes and Albert are sentenced to transportation for life, Blanqui and others to ten years' imprisonment each. Causidiére, Louis Blanc, Hencrere, Lavison, Napoleon Chancel, and Zigneuret, not having appeared, have been condemened par contumace, and have been sentenced to transportation.

The last accounts from Italy represented war as impending in the North, and it was anticipated that either the Austrians or the Piedmontese would immediately cross the Ticino. In a brief fortnight Charles Albert has fought and has been conquered, and is now an abdicated King and exile in Madrid or Lisbon. The Austrians passed the Ticino simultaneously with the Piedmontese, who speedily fell back. Three successive battles ensued. In the two latter, on the plains of Vercelli, the Austrians were completely victorious. In the last battle, on the 24th ult., the main army of the Austrians, some 50,000 strong, encountered Charles Albert at Olango, near Novara. The Piedmontese appeared to have been of more than equal force. The battle was fought with terrible obstinacy, and certain it is that Charles Albert behaved with the most distinguished bravery. Finding the day going against him, he seems to have sought every opportunity to meet his death in the battle-field. The Austrians having completely routed the Piedmontese, and driven them to the mountains, Charles Albert abdicated the throne in favor of his son, Victor Emanuel, and a flag of truce being sent to the Austrian tent, Marshal Radetzky at one acceeded to an armistice.

It is generally believed that the Pope will be able to return to Rome.

The Frankfort Parliament has finally elected the King of Prussia Emperor of Germany, and a powerful deputation has proceeded to Berlin to tender him the Crown of Charlemagne. At first no one believed that the King would accept the proffered honor, but now it is believed that he will, with certain conditions, so as to avoid giving offense to the other Potentates of Germany. Should he do so, it is generally believed that it will involve Prussia in a war with Austria and Russia. The latter power seems now resolved to put down the revolutionary spirit in Europe, and only wants the opportunity to "let slip the dogs of war."

Of the Hungarian war, very little authentic information is received, except that it rages fiercely. Bem had gained some advantage over a body of Russians, but soon found himself overwhelmed with their numbers, and the Emperor will gladly seize upon any pretext to interfere farther. We shall not be at all surprised to hear that the Emperor of Russia, upon the solicitation of the Austrians, brings down a large force to crush the Hungarians. At present there seems no probable termination of this deadly struggle, carried on by both parties in the most barbarous manner.

Advices from Hamburg of the 3d inst. state that there is no chance now of the differences between Schleswig Holstein and Denmark being amicably settled, and, no doubt, hostilities will commence immediately. Troops, principally Prussians, are passing continually to the seat of war. The port of Kiel is blockaded.

Dates from Bombay to the 4th of March state that another battle had been fought near Guzerat, India, between the British and Sikhs forces, in which the latter were defeated. From the 6th to the 12th of February, various skirmishes took place, but without any serious encounter. On the 12th the Sikhs retreated toward the Chenaub, which they were prevented from crossing by the Bombay Division under Gen. Whish. On the following day, the British divisions having effected a junction, Lord Gough succeeded in bringing the enemy to battle in the open field near the city of Guzerat, in which the Sikhs were completely routed, leaving a great portion of their guns and ammunition, as well as their standing camp, in the possession of the conquerors.

Desperate Courage of a Slave.—The Republican (published at Houston, Chickasaw Co., Miss.) of the 31st ult., gives the following details of a shocking occurrence in that county, derived from the testimony: "Mr. J. Heggerson attempted to correct a negro man in his employ, who resisted, drew a knife, and stabbed him (Mr. H.) in several places. Mr. J. C. Hobbs (a Tennesseean) ran to his assistance. Mr. Hobbs stooped to pick up a stick to strike the negro, and while in that position the negro rushed upon him, and caused his immediate death. The negro then fled to the woods, but was pursued with dogs and soon overtaken. He had stopped in a swamp to fight the dogs, when the party who were pursuing came upon him and commanded him to give up, which he refused to do; he then made several efforts to stab them. Mr. Robertson, one of the party, gave him several blows on the head with a rifle gun; but this, instead of subduing, only increased his desperate revenge. Mr. R. then discharged his gun at the negro, and missing him, the ball struck Mr. Boon in the face, and felled him to the ground. The negro, seeing Mr. Boon prostrated, attempted to rush up and stab him, but was prevented by the interference of some one of the party. He was then shot three times with a revolving pistol, and once with a rifle, and after having his throat cut, he still kept the knife firmly grasped in his hand, and tried to cut their legs, when they approached to put an end to his life."

Daring and Extensive Robbery.—One of the most daring and extensive robberies we have lately heard of, was committed about 9 o'clock in the morning of April 7th, at the commercial house of T. Bailly Blanchard & Co., New Orleans. The house transacts the business of several wealthy people, including Madame De Pontalbá; and Mr. Blanchard was in the habit of keeping moneys, notes, &c., to a large amount, in a "bank box," which he deposited in bank. For some business purpose Mr. B. sent to the bank for the box about the time above mentioned, and when it was brought in by a young man, a nephew of Mr. Blanchard, it was by him placed upon the counter. The young man, at the moment, had occasion to step outside the door, and the box was not observed by Mr. B. Immediately after the young man stepped out, three men entered the store, and two of them stepping back to Mr. Blanchard, asked him about some brandy, stating that they wished to purchase a considerable quantity. The two men engaged the attention of Mr. B. in sampling brandy, while the third, who remained behind, is supposed to have walked off with the box. The two customers soon came to the conclusion that the brandy would not suit them, and they went away. When the young man came into the store again, he was asked by Mr. B. about the box, and the fact of the enormous loss then came out. The robbers must, we think, have seen the box carried to and from the bank on previous occcasions, and watched its entrance into the store on this occasion. It contained in gold and silver, bank-notes, notes of hand, checks, drafts, &c., over $300,000. Altogether, this is one of the most daring robberies ever committed, and, considering the time of day when it took place, it is almost a miracle that the scoundrels got off unnoticed.

Dishonoring his own Traffick—In the Supreme Court, says the Boston Post, in the case of Meserve, bar-keeper, vs. Norris, proprietor of a refreshment establishment, for services performed. The main ground upon which the defendant resisted the claim was, that the services were assisting to sell liquor, which was an illegal traffick, and therefore the plaintiff could not recover. The Court remarked upon the singularity of the defense, that a man should take the ground that his employee could not recover for services because he, the defendant, was engaged in selling liquor. Defense promptly overruled, and judgment given for the plaintiff.

---

Heavy Verdict.—In Philadelphia, recently, a jury returned a verdict convicting Edward Ritchie, Samuel Ritchie, John M. Whital, Elizabeth R. Shoemaker, George R. Elkinton, John Lippincott, and John Rite, of conspiracy, and gave damages to the amount of $10,000. The plaintiff in the suit is a wealthy man, a member of the Society of Friends, (as are all the defendants,) who was committed to an insane asylum on the charge of lunacy. The object seems to have been to get possession and control of the property belonging to Mr. Hinchman.

SUMMARY.

Mr. W. Frœhlich, engineer in the navy-yard at Washington, has invented an apparatus, which is radically self-acting, to prevent railroad collisions. He has executed an operative model, which demonstrates that even in the event of two trains meeting at full speed, it will operate without the help of engineer and fireman, and prevent a dangerous collision.

It is estimated by the Nantucket Inquirer, that during the next two or three months the importations of oil into the different whaling ports of this country will reach to 50,000 bbls. sperm, and 160,000 do. of whale. After that period, however, the supply will be small.

M. Debay of Paris has published a precious treatise on the Hygiene of the Hair and Beard, in which the secret of premature gray hair and the true remedy for it are revealed; the remedy consisting, not in dangerous dyes, but in a certain regimen and diet which change the coloring matter of the hair.

The flood at Chicago was less destructive than was at first supposed. The Citizen, of March 27th, makes an apology for its exaggerations, from the consternation of the moment. It now says that most of the vessels will be repaired and ready for business by the time navigation is clear in the Mackinaw.

The Boston Republican urges the sheriff to use ether at the execution of Washington Goode, a negro who is sentenced, on the plea that it is lawful for him to use anything to alleviate pain in the execution, as the law merely requires him to hang the prisoner by the neck until he is dead.

Miss Emeline Newton, aged 20, daughter of Mr. O. S. Newton, of East Bennington, Vt., left her room in a fit of somnambulism, and was found the next day, dead, under the dam near the foundry of Messrs. Brown & Gage. She was subject to somnambulic attacks.

A Cincinnati paper says that nearly 3,000 persons have passed through that city on their way to El Dorado since the fever broke out.

Last week, at Cleveland, a canal-boat broke away from her moorings in the river, and went out into the lake. There was but one man on board, but he having acquired much skill in the perils of the "raging canawl," was equal to the fearful crisis. Of course his poles were not adequate in that depth of water, so quickly splicing the sum total of ropes and tow-lines, he shouldered the cook-stove, brought it on deck, made fast, and cast anchor! Next morning he was discovered securely riding at anchor, and was brought into port.

The Mirawichi (Canada) Gleaner says: "Accounts of distress and destitution reach us from all parts. We have heard the names of several parties mentioned, who, to save their children from starvation, were compelled to kill their domestic animals, and many families have been subsisting for some time on the fish they catch in the rivers. The principal cause of this distress has been the repeated failures in the wheat and potato crops."

A negro woman named Eliza Boyle, and her eight children, were recently arrested and lodged in Elkton (Md.) Jail. They are claimed as slaves, and were arrested at the instance of Mrs. Ann Rutter, administratrix of Thos. Rutter, deceased, of Elk Neck. These persons have enjoyed their freedom for a number of years past, and were supposed to be free, until arrested.

The magnificent new ship Constellation, Capt. Luce, sailed recently from New York for Liverpool. She is larger than any of our frigates, being 1,960 tons burden. She can carry 22,000 barrels of flour, and can bring 900 passengers.

DIED,

In DeRuyter, N. Y., on the 14th inst., after a short illness, Joseph D. Titsworth, son of John D. and Jane D. Titsworth, aged 15 years and 3 months. He was a member of DeRuyter Institute, and during the late term made a profession of religion and joined the Seventh-day Baptist Church of DeRuyter. Since that time his prevailing desire seems to have been "to witness for Christ." This he was enabled to do, in his last illness, in a way to soothe the pangs which affection feels at an unexpected separation. Though far from home, and the tender offices of parental love, in full view of death, he awaited the change with calm resignation, praising the Saviour for the consolations of his grace. After his earthly vision had failed, and he had assured those around that all would soon be over, he paused, and then, in a sweet voice, exclaimed, "Beautiful! O how beautiful!" In answer to an inquiry what was beautiful, he replied, "Those forms—those beautiful forms!" Thus his testimony ended, and he fell asleep in Jesus.

His remains were removed to New Jersey, and laid in the burial-place of his fathers, in the presence of a large concourse of weeping friends.

Oh! son belov'd, farewell, farewell!
Thy form hath pass'd away;
Thy spirit dwells amid the light
Of God's eternal day.

Companion of the myriad forms
That cluster round his throne,
Thou dwellest in a healthful clime,
Where sickness is unknown.

In Waterford, Ct., March 25th, of a scrofulous affection, which terminated in dropsy on the brain James Lester, only child of Lester T. Rogers, 2d, and Elizabeth Rogers, aged 2 years, 4 months, and 25 days. About one year since, his mother was taken from the church militant to join the church triumphant. By these dispensations of God's providence, the afflicted companion and father is led to mourn, though not as those without hope.

"In heaven the Saviour now appears—
Your child is in his arms;
Will you not wipe away your tears?
He's safe from all that harms.
O, could you see him, as he stands
Amid the heavenly throng!
'Father,' he says, 'I'm happy here—
Our parting is not long.'"

In Lincklaen, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13th, of pulmonary consumption, Mrs. Elizabeth Burdick, wife of Perry Burdick, Esq., aged 64 years. Sister Burdick experienced the power of saving grace in early life, and united with the 1st Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton, R. I. She has since been a member of the 1st Church in Brookfield, and of the Church in DeRuyter. With the last she retained membership until death dissolved her connection with the church militant. She is now, doubtless, in union with the church triumphant. During her illness, she was patient and submissive; in death, resigned and happy. She has left to mourn her loss, but not without hope, an affectionate and aged companion, and a large circle of relatives and friends. Sermon from Prov. 14: 32. J. C.

In Westerly, R. I., on first-day morning, March 18th, Frances Ann, daughter of widow Caroline Sisson, aged 6 years and 6 months. Sermon by Eld. J. Ayers, from Jeremiah 31: 16—"Thus saith the Lord, Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears, for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord, and they shall come again from the land of the enemy." B. F. B.

In Piscataway, N. J., April 4th, Margaret Randolph, aged seventy-eight years. Near New Market, N. J., April 3d, Mercy Dunn, widow of Hugh Dunn, aged about fifty-five years. Both of the above were members of the Seventh-day Baptist Church, and they were both buried the same day.

In Elizabethtown, Essex Co., N. Y., on the 6th of January, 1849, Mrs. Wise, wife of Roswell Wise, leaving good evidence that for her "to die was gain."

At Unadilla Forks, N. Y., April 15th, Catharine Babcock, wife of Henry H. Babcock, aged 26 years.

In Brookfield, N. Y., April 7th, Warren Delancey, Jr., only son of Warren Delancey, aged 23 years and 7 months.

In Watertown, N. Y., on the 13th instant, Mr. Archibald Whitford, for many years Professor of Mathematics in the Jefferson County Institute, in his 56th year.

In Boston, Mass., April 8th, after a week's illness of brain fever, Charles Follen, son of William Lloyd and Helen Eliza Garrison, aged six years and seven months.

Missionary Association—Executive Board.

A Quaaterly Meeting of the Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association, will be held in New York, on the evening of third-day, May 22, 1849.

By order of the Board, GEO. B. UTTER, Rec. Sec.

The Publishing Society.

A meeting for the organization of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society will be held in the city of New York on the fourth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, (23d day of the month,) commencing at 9 o'clock A. M. It is hoped that a large number of those who have subscribed to the Constitution, and pledged funds to the Society, will be present.

Eastern Association.

The Annual Meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist Eastern Association will be held with the Church in Pawcatuck, R. I., on the fifth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, at 10½ o'clock, A. M. Introductory Discourse by Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J.; alternate, Samuel Davison, of Farmington, Illinois. S. S. GRISWOLD, Cor. Sec.

Executive Committee.—The Executive Committee of the Eastern Association will hold its annual session on the fourth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, in the lecture-room of the Seventh-day Baptist Church at Pawcatuck, R. I., at 10½ o'clock, A. M. S. S. Griswold.

P. S. Churches are requested to specify in their associational letters the amount they will raise for missionary purposes within the limits of the Association for the ensuing year.

Central Association.

The Annual Meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist Central Association, will be holden with the First Church in Brookfield, N. Y., commencing on the fourth day of the week before the second Sabbath in June, 1849.

Notice—Western Association.

The attention of the churches of the Seventh-day Baptist Western Association is particularly directed to the Report of a Committee appointed at the last annual session to revise the Constitution. That Report was received and referred to the churches for individual action; and is, together with the Constitution as it now stands, published in the Minutes of the last session. It is very desirable that the matter should be brought before every church, where it has not already been done, and the result of the action forwarded to the approaching Anniversary of the Association. That the Constitution needs revision, must be evident to all who give it even a passing notice; and in all matters of constitutional reform a full voice should be heard. Will the churches speak out? T. E. BABCOCK, Cor. Sec.

To Clergymen and their People.

All Clergymen who will send their address to Messrs. Comstock & Company, No. 21 Courtland-street—(after the 1st of May No. 57 John-street)—New York, shall be furnished gratuitously, for their family use, with a Salve of most extraordinary merit for external sores or inflammations of long or short standing. In burns, or pains and swellings of nearly all descriptions, its effects are charming, and almost beyond belief. This Salve has already been used by quite a number of the clergy, for themselves or sufferers to whom they have given it; and they have called on or written to the proprietors to express their delight at its action, and a desire to have their names used in making known its virtues. The proprietors having realized a handsome sum by its sale, feel called upon by a sense of duty to their fellow-men to disseminate the knowledge of the existence of such a thing far and near, and to give it without charge to the reverend clergy without limitation. It is called CONNEL'S PAIN EXTRACTOR, and is owned solely by Messrs. C. & Co. All religious papers that will publish this a few times will be furnished with the Salve free, and they may also thereby relieve many suffering poor brethren from agonizing pain, and save them much expense. The names of nearly fifty clergymen recommending it, are to be seen at the office of C. & Co.

You will please observe, it is no "sovereign remedy for all complaints," but only intended for external applications in the following:—Burns, Scalds, Frosted parts, Chilblains, Chafe or Galls, Chaps, Tetter, Pimple, Blotch, Felon, Ulcer, Sprains, Erysipelas, Cuts, Bruises, Ear and Toothache, Mumps, Sore Throat, Whitlows, Piles, Ringworm, Salt Rheum, Barber's Itch, Carbuncle, Eruption, Sore Eyes and Lids, Weak Sight, Sore Lips, Punctures, Biles and Warts, Fever Pains, Tender Feet, Inflammatory Rheumatism, Tic Doloureux, Ague in Face and Breast, Fever Sores, Old Burn Scars, Prickly Heat, Inflamed Skin, Broken Breast, Sore Nipples, Rough Hands, Blistered Surfaces, Dressing for Blisters, White Swellings, Cold in Wounds, Sore Corns, General Sores, Smallpox Marks, &c.

Though we have named numerous affections, experience has taught us that they are not too many. It will be necessary to know that this article is the only one we can recommend; but must caution against some imitation by like name. We will present it to the poor who have actual need of it.

THE RETURN OF THE ROBIN.

BY WM. OLAND BOURNE.

Thou art back from the sunny Southern land,
With a song of the flowery Spring,
And thou bringest the zephyrs soft and bland
On the plume of thy lightning wing;
'Mid the flowers, where they steal for a trancing kiss,
And the spray of the waving tree,
Thou art piping a song of thy life's sweet bliss—
The song of the gay and free.

Hast thou aught to declare of the Southern land—
The land of the fruitful vine?
Hast thou fared always well at the bounteous Hand
That giveth thy blessings and mine?
Were the flowers for thee in their gorgeous bloom
Where the proud Magnolia waves?
Did Myrtle-trees give thee their richest perfume
In lands of the lost Indian braves?

Did the Mocking-Bird perch on a swaying limb
Of the tall old pine near thy nest?
Did he puzzle thy strain as thou viedst with him
While he mocked and thou didst thy best?
And then, as he sung in his conscious might,
And the forest-band heard his choir,
Didst thou in the flood, as of musical light,
Fill up to thy heart's desire?

Didst thou sit on the limb of the olden tree,
Where oft thou hast been of yore,
And warble to them of the land of the free,
And sing of thy garnered lore?
Was the blue-eyed maid with the flowing curl
At the door of thy homestead seen?
Or had death in his train led the lovely girl?
Has thy home in the cypress been?

I know not—sweet bird from the Southern land!
Thy notes are the notes of Spring!
Thou hast cheer from the vales and the forests grand,
Thou hast come to the North to bring!
And my heart responds to thy cherished strain,
'Mid the cares of my sterner way,
And it wakes in a song of my love's refrain
And the hope of a brighter day!

So to me, when my Winter of care is past—
For its winds blow sad and chill—
I will think of the song of delight thou hast
From the clime where the dews distill;
And the Spring shall come, and my heart shall tell
Of the birds and the holy flowers,
While the strains from the deepest founts shall swell,
Restoring my peaceful hours. [Tribune.

LOWVILLE, March 31, 1849.

SUFFERINGS OF COL. FREMONT'S PARTY.

The leading facts connected with the disaster to Col. Fremont's Expedition, have already been given to the readers of the Recorder. But we are sure they will feel an interest, though it be mournful, in the following account of the sufferings of those who were left in the mountains. The remains of the party reached Taos, New Mexico, on the 6th of February, and this account was written by Col. Fremont on the following day:—

You will remember that I had left the camp (twenty-three men) when I set off with Godey, Preuss, and my servant, in search of King and succor, with directions about the baggage, and with occupation sufficient about it to employ them for three or four days; after which they were to follow me to the river. Within that time I expected relief from King's party, if it came at all. They remained seven days, and then started, their scant provisions about exhausted, and the dead mules on the western side of the great Sierra buried under snow.

Manuel—(you will remember Manuel—a Christian Indian of the Cosumné tribe, in the valley of the San Joaquin)—gave way to a feeling of despair after they had moved about two miles, and begged Vincent Haler, whom I had left in command, to shoot him. Failing to find death in that form, he turned and made his way back to the camp, intending to die there; which he doubtless soon did.

The party moved on, and at ten miles Wise gave out—threw away his gun and blanket—and, a few hundred yards farther, fell over into the snow, and died. Two Indian boys—countrymen of Manuel—were behind. They came upon him—rolled him up in his blanket, and buried him in the snow, on the bank of the river.

No other died that day. None the next.

Carver raved during the night—his imagination wholly occupied with images of many things which he fancied himself to be eating. In the morning he wandered off, and probably soon died. He was not seen again.

Sorel on this day (the fourth from the camp) laid down to die. They built him a fire, and Morin, who was in a dying condition, and snow-blind, remained with him. These two did not probably last till the next morning. That evening (I think it was) Hubbard killed a deer.

They traveled on, getting here and there a grouse, but nothing else, the deep snow in the valley having driven off the game.

The state of the party became desperate, and brought Haler to the determination of breaking it up, in order to prevent them from living upon each other. He told them that he had done all he could for them—that they had no other hope remaining than the expected relief—and that the best plan was to scatter, and make the best of their way, each as he could, down the river; that, for himself, if he was to be eaten, he would, at all events, be found traveling when he did die. This address had its effect. They accordingly separated.

With Haler continued five others—Scott, Hubbard, Martin, Bauon, one other, and two Cosumné Indian boys.

Rohrer now became despondent, and stopped. Haler reminded him of his family, and urged him to try and hold out for their sake. Roused by this appeal to his tenderest affections, the unfortunate man moved forward, but feebly, and soon began to fall behind. On a farther appeal, he promised to follow and to overtake them at evening.

Haler, Scott, Hubbard, and Martin now agreed that if any one of them should give out the others were not to wait for him to die, but to push on and try and save themselves. Soon this mournful covenant had to be kept. But let me not anticipate events. Sufficient for each day is the sorrow thereof.

At night Kerne's party encamped a few hundred yards from Haler's, with the intention, according to Taplin, to remain where they were until the relief should come, and in the mean time to live upon those who had died, and upon the weaker ones as they should die. With this party were three brothers Kerne, Capt. Cathcart, McKie, Andrews, Stepporfeldt, and Taplin. I do not know that I have got all the names of this party.

Ferguson and Beadle had remained together behind. In the evening Rohrer came up and remained in Kerne's party. Haler learned afterward from some of the party that Rohrer and Andrews wandered off the next morning and died. They saw their bodies.

Haler's party continued on. After a few hours Hubbard gave out. According to the agreement he was left to die, but with such comfort as could be given him. They built him a fire and gathered him some wood, and then left him—without turning their heads, as Haler says, to look at him as they went off.

About two miles farther, Scott—you remember him; he used to shoot birds for you on the frontier—he gave out. He was another of the four who had covenanted against waiting for each other. The survivors did for him as they had done for Hubbard, and passed on.

In the afternoon the two Indian boys went ahead—blessed be these boys!—and before nightfall met Godey with the relief. He had gone on with all speed. The boys gave him the news. He fired signal guns to notify his approach. Haler heard the guns, and knew the crack of our rifles, and felt that relief had come. This night was the first of hope and joy. Early in the morning, with the first gray light, Godey was in the trail, and soon met Haler and the wreck of his party slowly advancing. I hear that they all cried together like children—the men of iron nerves and lion hearts, when dangers were to be faced or hardships to be conquered. Succor was soon dealt out to these few first met; and Godey with his relief, and accompanied by Haler, who turned back, hurriedly followed the back trail in search of the living and the dead, scattered in the rear. They came to Scott first. He was yet alive, and is saved! They came to Hubbard next; he was dead, but still warm. These were the only ones of Haler's party that had been left.

From Kerne's party, next met, they learned the deaths of Andrews and Rohrer; and, a little farther on, met Ferguson, who told them that Beadle had died the night before. All the living were found—and saved—Manuel among them—which looked like a resurrection—and reduces the number of the dead to TEN—one-third of the whole party which a few days before were scaling the mountain with me, and battling with the elements 12,000 feet in the air.

THE LION'S LEAP.

Once, when I was traveling in Nemaqua Land, I observed a spot which was imprinted with at least twenty spoors or marks of the lion's paw; as I pointed them out, a Nemaqua chief told me that a lion had been practicing his leaps. On demanding an explanation, he said, that if a lion sprang at an animal, and missed it by leaping short, he would always go back to where he sprang from, and practice the leap so as to be successful on another occasion, and he then related to me the following anecdote, stating that he was an eye-witness to the incident.

I was passing near the end of a craggy hill, from which jutted out a smooth rock, of from ten to twelve feet high, when I perceived a number of zebras galloping round it, which they were obliged to do, as the rock beyond was quite steep. A lion was creeping towards the rock to catch the male zebra which brought up the rear of the herd. The lion sprang, and missed his mark; he fell short, with only his head over the edge of the rock, and the zebra galloped away switching his tail in the air. Although the object of his pursuit was gone, the lion tried the leap on the rocks a second and a third time, till he succeeded. During this two more lions came up and joined the first lion. They seemed to be talking, for they roared a great deal to each other; and then the first lion led them round the rock again and again. He then made another grand leap, to show what he and they must do another time. The chief added, they evidently were talking to each other, although they talked loud enough, but I thought it was as well to be off, or they might have some talk about me. [Capt. Maryatt.

GARDENS IN THE VICINITY OF LONDON.

"Rockaway," one of the London correspondents of the New York Commercial Advertiser, gives the following account of the kitchen and fruit gardens in the vicinity of the great metropolis: "The kitchen gardens for the supply of vegetables, in the immediate vicinity of the metropolis, are estimated at twelve thousand acres, about three thousand of which are wholly cultivated by the spade. Shortly after Christmas, radish, spinach, onions, and all other seed crops are sown; and in February the same ground is planted with cauliflowers from the frame, as thick as if no other crop then had possession of the ground. The radishes, &c., are sent very early to market, and when the cauliflowers are sufficiently advanced to be earthed up, sugar-loaf cabbages are planted. When these are marketed, the stalks are taken up, and the ground cleared and planted with endive and celery. The average produce of these gardens is supposed to amount to about £200 annually per acre. The annual produce of all the vegetable markets is at least £650,000. The fruit gardens of Middlesex, exclusive of those attached to private houses, are presumed to occupy from three to four thousand acres, principally situated in the vicinity of Kensington, Hammersmith, Brentford, Isleworth, and Twickenham. They furnish partial employment, according to the advancement of the season, to about forty persons per acre—the produce of whose labor amounts to about £300,000 annually; and to this another £100,000 may be added for the purchase of the fruit sent to the metropolis from the sorrounding counties. The fruit gardens have what is termed an upper and under crop growing on the same ground at one time. The upper crop consists of apples, pears, cherries, plums, walnuts, &c., and the under crop of raspberries, gooseberries, currents, strawberries, and all such fruits as are known to sustain the shade and drip of the trees above them with the least injury. Many of these gardens have walls completely covered with wall-fruit, such as nectarines, peaches, apricots, plums, &c. In order to increase the quantity of shelter and warmth in the autumn, they raise earthen banks about three feet high, laid to a slope of about forty-five degrees to the sun; on these slopes they plant endive in September; and near the bottom of them, from October to Christmas, they drill a row of peas. Besides the quantity of fruits raised from these gardens, the London markets receive additional supplies from those of Surry, and much is also brought from Kent, Essex, Berks, and other counties."

FENCE-BARS AND GATES.

The taking down and putting up of fence-bars is about the meanest and most provoking employment on a farm. It is a necessary one, however, as long as farmers are indifferent and heedless of their true interest enough to "put up" bars, instead of putting up good, substantial, yet light gates, which are at the same time handsomer, more convenient and time-saving than bars. A writer in an old agricultural periodical, estimates the difference of time between passing through gates and bars, where a man and team pass but once a day for half a year, to be equal to three days and a quarter, and goes into a calculation of the amount on which this time would pay interest. Indeed, a moment's reflection will convince any one that there is a great saving of time, and, as "time is money," a saving of money also, in using gates instead of bars.

The following is a good plan to make gates: For the top rail, take a tree eighteen or twenty feet long, and about twelve inches at the butt, diameter; hew the small end for eleven feet, beginning three by four inches at the end, leaving it six by four, at the distance of eleven feet. Now a mortice, six inches from the small end, a hole four inches long and one inch wide; also another mortice, eleven feet from the end, six inches long and one inch wide; and a third, midway between the two, five inches long and one inch wide; into these mortices insert slats of good white oak, of a size to fill the mortice, and extending to a depth of four feet and two inches, which will form the height of the gate, and on these lay boards, either four, six, or eight, inches wide, and as wide apart as suits your convenience or taste; then take three slats, similar to the first, only thinner, place them on the boards opposite to those morticed through the top rail, and rivet them together, one rivet in each end of each board, and your gate is ready for hanging.

The post on which the gate is made to swing must be strong, and either round or octagon; insert into the top of this post a cast-iron gudgeon, having the end oval, such as is technically called a step-gudgeon; let it project above the top of the post two and a half or three inches, and insert the box, for this gudgeon to run in, into the top rail so deep as that it will but just clear easily the top of the post on which it rests, as not to sag when opened, and, if hung right, it will turn as easily as if suspended on hinges. If the end of the top rail is too light, weight must be added; if too heavy, hew some from the sides. The best fastening is a sliding bar, to enter a mortice in the post, so that the gate can not be raised, nor the bottom shoved through either way.

WONDERFUL ESCAPE OF A SLAVE.—A few weeks ago, a slave in a southern city managed to open a correspondence with a gentleman in a northern city, with a view of effecting an escape from bondage. Having arranged the preliminaries, he paid some body $40 to box him up, and mark him, "This side up, with care," and take him to the express office, consigned to his friend at the North. On the passage, being on board of a steamboat, he was accidentally turned head downwards, and almost died with a rush of blood to the head. At the next change of transportation, however, he was turned right side up again, and after 26 hours' confinement, arrived safely at his destination. On receiving the box, the gentleman had doubts whether he should find a corpse or a free man. He tapped lightly on the box, with the question, "All right?" and was delighted to hear the response, "All right, sir." The poor fellow was immediately liberated from his place of living burial, and forwarded to a wealthy Abolitionist in a city in New England, where he now is. When did Spartan interpidity show greater firmness and fortitude under bodily suffering, than did this poor slave, when animated by the inspiring hope of freedom? We are glad to have assurance that this story is no flight of fancy, but is absolutely true. The fugitive, upon whose track the two-legged blood-hounds are coursing, will never go back to slavery, if the whole South should come after him. [Burlington (Vt.) Courier.

PROPERTY EXEMPT FROM TAXATION.—The following law has just come into force in Michigan:—

SEC. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Michigan, That the following property shall be exempt from assessment and taxation:

1st. Household furniture, including stoves put up and kept for use in any dwelling-houses, not exceeding in value one hundred dollars.

2d. All spinning-wheels and weaving looms, and apparatus not exceeding in value fifty dollars.

3d. A seat, pew or slip, occupied by any person or family in any house or place of public worship.

4th. All cemeteries, tombs, and rights of burial while in use as repositories of the dead.

5th. All arms and accoutrements required by law to be kept by any person; all wearing apparel of every person or family.

6th. The library and school books of every individual and family, not exceeding one hundred and fifty dollars, and all family pictures.

7th. To each householder, ten sheep with their fleeces, and the yarn or cloth manufactured from the same, two cows, five swine, and provisions and fuel for the comfortable subsistence of such householder and family for six months.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Approved, March 16, 1849.

AMERICAN CITIES.—The growth of American cities is unparalleled in the history of the world. Already half a million are embraced within the suburbs of New York; and more than half that number within those of Philadelphia. New Orleans contains about a hundred and fifty, Boston one hundred and thirty, and Baltimore one hundred and five thousand inhabitants. The second child born in Cincinnati, it is said, is still living, and has not reached the middle age of life, while the city has a population of a hundred thousand. The population of St. Louis was about 1,600 in 1810; 16,000 in 1840; 40,000 in 1845; and is probably now not less than 60,000. Buffalo contained 2,412 in 1825; in 1846, 29,773; and now contains about 45,000. In 1828, the population of Lowell was 3,532; it is now more than 30,000. Chicago, a place scarcely known on the latest maps, has already reached a population of 18,000; and Milwaukie, of still more recent origin, is rivaling it in its growth and population.

TELEGRAPHIC MUSIC.—A person recently traveling on a highway, along which telegraph wires were mounted on posts, thus describes what he heard:—

"I distinctly heard these musical sounds in the middle of the highway, at least thirty feet from the wires which skirt this road, when there was not a breath of air stirring; and, upon applying my ears to one of the posts supporting the telegraph wires, the vibrations perceptible were of such a character as could not by any possibility be supposed to be produced by atmospheric influence, and, from their analogy to those produced by the passage of electrical currents through conducting substances, I was still farther confirmed in the opinion which I have already stated. Who will be the inventor of an electrical piano-forte?"

The Scientific American says that such an invention has already been produced. Mr. A. Bain took out a patent last year in London for playing musical instruments by electro-magnetic apparatus. The London Patent Journal calls it an exceedingly ingenious invention. One part of the invention consists in arranging the apparatus, so that by playing on one instrument, another or several instruments will be actuated to produce similar sounds.

WARNING TO SMOKERS.—A singular case of asphyxia is related in one of the French journals. A youth of the name of Lemoine paid a visit to an uncle, who is a farm laborer in the neighborhood of Havre. This man occupied a small and ill-ventilated apartment. The nephew, at eight o'clock in the evening, went to bed in the room. Soon after the uncle and two companions entered the room, and all fell to smoking. The youth was asleep. At midnight the visiters withdrew, and the uncle went to bed. Laying his hand upon his nephew, he found him unnaturally cold, and endeavored to awake him, but without effect. Help was called; some faint indications of life appeared, and a physician directed operations for the recovery of the patient. All proved vain, and the next day he expired. A post mortem examination was made, and the physician pronounced that he had died of congestion of the brain, caused by the respiration of tobacco smoke during sleep.

VARIETY.

Minesota is bounded, north by the British Dominions, east by Wisconsin, south by Iowa, and extends west, for the present, to the Missouri River, but it is intended to divide it hereafter at the Mississippi. The salary of the Governor is $1,500, and $1,000 more as Superintendent of Indians. The Legislative Council is elected for two years, and the Assembly annually, by universal suffrage. The laws of the late Wisconsin Territory to be in force until altered by the Legislature. The sum of $20,000 is granted for public buildings, and $5,000 for a library.

The New York Legislature don't like the French and Latin law terms; they go in for the genuine English, and have lately passed an act which says, "where a defendant is about to leave the State, whereby the rights of the plaintiff may be impaired, an order of 'No Go,' may be granted, and shall be a substitute to the writ heretofore known as the writ of 'ne exeat.'" A very sensible improvement.

Never use bed curtains; for a man requires about a gallon of pure air a minute, and the space within the bed curtains is not capable of containing sufficient for two persons for twelve hours. It is stated that a bird hung up in a cage within the curtains of a bed where a person is sleeping, would be found dead in the morning.

The people in Shelby Co., Tenn., held a meeting some days since, and passed strong resolutions against the farther introduction of slaves into that State from Kentucky. One of the resolutions brings the subject to the notice of the ensuing Legislature, and urges upon that body the passage of a law making it a penal offense to introduce a slave into that State for the purpose of selling him.

Kitto's Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature.

TO CLERGYMEN AND OTHER STUDENTS OF THE BIBLE.—The undersigned beg leave to ask your attention to the following Work, which they now offer for sale. Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature, in two thick volumes of 1,878 pages royal octavo, beautifully and substantially bound, by JOHN KITTO, D. D., F. S. A., &c., published by MARK H. NEWMAN & Co., 199 Broadway, New York.

This Work contains such information as is indispensable for the right understanding of the Bible and its historical interpretation. It comprehends Criticism, Geography, Natural History, and Antiquities, in all their branches, religious, political, social, and domestic.

The Works of Horne, Calmet, and others, are now found to be wholly inadequate to the wants of the student. Theological science is progressive, as well as every other, and the "old learning" of the "Bible Dictionaries" which have for so long a time been in use, is felt to be unequal to the advancement of mankind at the present time.

The efforts of the German Rationalists, of the Strauss school, to resolve all the facts of Bible History into myths and fables, has awakened a corresponding spirit of research among sound and Christian scholars; a determination to place the Scriptures upon a basis of indisputable evidence. The result has been, the discovery and accumulation of a mass of information from every portion of the field of biblical learning. A multitude of new, striking, and most useful facts have thus been placed at the disposal of the editor of this work. He has accordingly availed himself of all the latest discoveries down to the very year of its publication.

Nor is the Cyclopedia compiled by one man alone. Dr. Kitto distributed the subjects discussed to more than forth different individuals, of the first eminence in those departments. Their names are attached to their articles, and they are thus individually responsible for them. The Natural History of the Bible was written expressly for this work, by two distinguished Naturalists. The Botany of Scripture, by Dr. Royle, of King's College, London. The articles on Scriptural Zoology, by Hamilton Smith, President of the Devon and Cornwall Natural History Society. The articles in the department of Criticism, by Dr. Davidson, Professor of Biblical Literature in the Lancashire Independent College. Those on the Books of the Old and New Testament, by Havernich, Hengstenberg, Dr. Wright, of Dublin, and others.

The articles on the New Testament were furnished by Dr. Tholuck, Dr. Alexander, and others.

Various subjects are discussed, by Dr. John Pye Smith, Dr. Woods, of Andover, and others.

The Scriptural Geography exhibits the results of Dr. Robinson's biblical researches in Palestine.

It will be seen, therefore, that the work is a compilation of biblical learning, by the ablest biblical scholars of the age.

The undersigned ask the attention of students of the Bible to the Cyclopedia, in full confidence that no one acquainted with its character will suffer himself to be without a copy. The low price at which it is offered, (less than half the price of the English edition,) places it within the reach of all.

NOTICES OF THE CYCLOPEDIA.

From Horne, Author of "Horne's Introduction to the Study of the Scriptures," last edition.

"This Cyclopedia surpasses every Biblical Dictionary which has preceded it, and leaves nothing to be desired in such a work which can throw light on the criticism, interpretation, history, geography, archeology, and physical science of the Bible."

From the Biblical Repertory and Princeton Review.

"Dr. Kitto comes recommended even to those not acquainted with his other writings, by the well-known general facts of his experience and success as a book-maker, and of his long familiarity, in this capacity at least, with Biblical subjects.

"He has boldly and faithfully acted on the principle that such a plan can be worthily executed, in the present state of learning, only by distributing its parts among many hands, and such hands too as have been fitted by anterior experience to perform them most successfully."

From the Biblical Repository.

"The limits of a notice like the present forbid such a description of this learned work as its merits deserve, or sufficient to give the reader a just idea of its plan. We regard it as a most important and practically-useful contribution to the cause of sound Biblical learning, and have no doubt that it will soon take the place, in the estimate of scholars, of every compilation of the kind.

"The enlistment of so many scholars in the production of a single work, each one presenting in a brief compass the results of a life-time of research, in precisely the matters where he is most at home, could not fail of enriching it with an amount of learning and scholarship to which, of course, the work of no single mind, however great, could pretend."

From the Methodist Quarterly Review.

"This work was not compiled in the method hitherto usual with works of similar character, namely, on the basis of Calmet and the old learning of his day, with a few shreds of modern discovery interwoven. All the more important articles are written expressly for their present use, not by one individual, but by an arrangement between not less than forty different scholars in Europe and America, all of whom stand high in their several departments."

The Cyclopedia can be ordered through the local Book sellers in every part of the country.

OBEDIENCE NECESSARY TO SALVATION.

There is in this city a Congregational Church which is distinguished from others of that order mainly by the views its members entertain on the subject of "Holiness," or "Christian Perfection." Several months ago they had occasion to install a pastor, and for this purpose invited a Council of Congregational Ministers. In the course of the examination, the candidate's views of the doctrine of Perfection were very carefully sought, and fully expressed. The result was, that at least one of the ministers withdrew from the Council, or declined to take part in the installation. Soon afterward there appeared in the Congregational paper of this city an article in explanation of his course, which has been followed by several other articles in relation to the subject, pro and con. The last article we have seen, and probably the last that will appear, is from the candidate himself, Rev. S. D. Cochran, and sets forth what he regards as "the scriptural view of holiness, or true religion." We copy from "The Independent" the largest part of the article—the gist of it—to show our readers that Sabbatarians are not alone in maintaining the inviolability of the Moral Law, and the obligation of obedience to it on the part of those who hope for salvation through Jesus Christ. How the writer can, consistently with the principles here laid down, justify a neglect to keep the Sabbath of the Fourth Commandment, is more than we can tell.

I now proceed to set forth what I understand to be the Bible view of holiness. My reasons for maintaining the two following propositions will embrace all I wish to say in this communication:—1. The only true and acceptable obedience to God, is obedience to the Moral Law. 2. Such obedience is a condition of salvation.

1. I presume no one will dispute that, in its preceptive part, the Moral Law is the rule in accordance with which all free moral agents ought, and are required, at every successive point of their moral history, to will and act—that it is the law of nature; the law in accordance with which all moral beings are constituted to act; the law which is demanded by their nature and relations. Hence it is not an arbitrary rule, but necessary and immutable as the Sovereignty of God.

What does this law require? We are told by the Apostle Paul, and of course by the Spirit of inspiration, that "love is the fulfilling of the law," and that "all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this—Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Our Saviour also enunciated the two following precepts as the sum of all obligation on man—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself;" and added, that "upon these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets"—that is, they express the elemental principle of all the legislation, moral precepts, and inculcations of the whole Old Testament. All the commands, the requirements, and prohibitions of the Old Testament, are, therefore, but applications of this one eternal law to mankind in their relations, permanent and transient. Hence, the thing required by the Moral Law is LOVE, or disinterested benevolence towards God and man, according to the measure of each one's actual ability; obligation and ability being, at all times, and in all circumstances, exactly commensurate. Such love, and such only, does the Moral Law require, not only of angels, but of devils; not only of saints, but of sinners. Nor does any kind, degree, or duration of moral depravity, release any moral agent from obligation to comply with this requirement. It is necessarily imperishable and immutable.

And now, I maintain that the Gospel has in no sense repealed or set aside the Moral Law as the rule of moral action. On the contrary, it reproclaims and enforces it, as the only true standard of sacred virtue. If the reader needs any proof of this, I refer him to Matt. 5: 17, 18; 19: 16—19; Mark 12: 28—34; Romans 13: 8—10. Gal. 5: 13, 14; 1 Tim. 1: 5—11; James 2: 8—12. Thus is the law recognized and appealed to, as the abiding and immutable legislation of God.

Nor has the Gospel modified this rule. On the contrary, by shedding greater light upon it, it has increased the obligation to obey it. If any one violates it, the Gospel proffers him pardon for his transgression, on condition of "repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ;" but this is not modifying the holy rigor of the rule; it is simply granting a way of escape from the penalty deserved by its violation. In denying that the Gospel has modified the rule of moral action, I of course deny that it has introduced or set up any different rule. Such a rule could not be different, but by being inferior; and it could not be inferior without being false. Hence, I maintain that every specific command, whether it be a direct requirement, or a prohibition, imposed on mankind under the Gospel, is obligatory on them, just because it is an application of the Moral Law to them in the relations into which they are brought by the atonement; and for no other reason. If this be not true, the commands of the New Testament must be mere arbitrary enactments, inconsistent with our nature and relations, and of no binding force whatever on the conscience. Such are my views of the Moral Law, and of all the Divine Legislation.

Now, I take the position that obedience to God, whenever and as long as it is rendered by any moral agent, is neither more nor less than precisely what the law, for the time being, requires of him; and that any seeming obedience, which is short of, or different from this, is no obedience at all. If the Gospel has neither repealed nor modified the Moral Law, as the rule of moral action, it seems to me absurd to say that anything different from, or short of what it requires, is, or can be, obedience to it; and that which is not obedience to it, is no obedience; for the plain reason that there is no other law, or rule of right moral action. This I understand to be precisely what the Bible teaches. Says the Apostle James (2: 10, 11)—"Whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all. For he that said, Do not commit adultery; said also, Do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law." Now this passage cannot mean (1,) that he that offends in one point, (i. e., breaks one commandment,) is guilty of having always offended; nor (2,) that any given act of sin renders its perpetrator guilty of anything beyond what it actually and essentially involves; nor (3,) that he may not, in appearance, keep some of, or all the other commandments, while he violates one. But it must mean, that, however he may appear to keep all, or any of the other commands of the Decalogue, he is not, in fact, keeping any one of them while he is violating one. The principle is, that the transgression of any one known command of God demonstrates the absence, for the time being, of all real obedience from the heart. And the converse of the proposition must also be true, viz.: that while an individual really keeps the law in one point, he must also, for the time being, keep it in all; so that obedience and sin cannot possibly coëxist in the same mind. The Apostle Paul takes the same position in the Epistle to the Romans, (13: 8—10,) and in that to the Galatians (5: 14.) In both these places, the principle assumed and asserted is, that real love to our neighbor fulfills the law, because it essentially involves universal love—disinterested benevolence toward God and man; and the obvious implication is, that whoever does not love his neighbor as himself, does not truly love any moral being in the universe. And I suppose it was mainly to establish this fundamental principle, that the Apostle John wrote his whole 1st Epistle. In the 2d chapter, 4th and 5th verses, he says—"He that saith, 'I know him,' and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected." That is, there is no middle ground between perfect obedience and no obedience at all. To the same effect is the passage in the 3d chapter, from the 3d to the 10th verse inclusive. Let the reader mark and ponder the assertions in this passage, that "every man that hath this hope in him (Christ,) purifieth himself even as he is pure;" that "whosoever abideth in him, sinneth not;" that "he that doeth righteousness, is righteous, even as he (Christ) is righteous;" that "he that committeth sin is of the devil;" that "whosoever is born of God, doth not commit sin," &c. I have not space to quote the various similar assertions occurring throughout the remainder of this epistle, nor to comment on these. Suffice it to say, that the principle assumed in every one of them is, that while any one continues to abide in Christ, or, in other words, in the born-of-God state, he does not, and cannot sin; and that true Christians do habitually continue in this state. Their sins are exceptions to the current of their history, and when they sin, "they are of the devil."

I waive farther adduction of proof on this point. Either of the passages quoted seems to me sufficient to establish it; for when a principle of the government of God is clearly laid down in any one passage, there can be nothing else in the Bible which contradicts it. Nor is there one single distinct declaration in the Word of God, which appears to me to teach that God either does, or consistently can recognize any love or obedience as genuine in kind, which is less than what is actually demanded of the agent, at the time, by the Moral Law. If there be such a plain, unequivocal declaration, and if any one will point it out to me, I pledge myself to bow to its authority. And I say this, fully assenting to that just and necessary rule of interpretation, that we must understand terms in their literal or primary sense, when there is nothing in their connection, or in the nature of the case, to make a departure from that sense necessary.

2. Having thus shown, as I think, that the Moral Law is the only rule of right moral action, and that all real obedience is necessarily perfect, during its continuance, I am now prepared to consider the question, whether obedience is a condition of salvation under the Gospel. By a condition, I do not of course mean the ground of salvation, or that for the sake of which it is granted; but that, aside from the ground of it, with which it will, and without which it will not be granted; or, as the Latin phrase is, a conditio sine quâ non.

One reason I have for believing that obedience is a condition of salvation under the Gospel, is, that I cannot find a single text in the Bible which asserts or implies the contrary. It is most amply taught that obedience to the laws is not the ground of justification, and that the saints are induced to obey it, not by legal, but by Gospel motives. So much I understand to be meant by the declaration that "we are not under law, but under grace." But it cannot mean that we are released from obligation to act according to the law; for such a release is impossible.

Another reason is, that it must be so in the nature of the case. It is naturally and governmentally impossible that there should be any salvation for sinners.

But my main reason is, that it is positively and impliedly inculcated, in uncounted instances, in the Word of God. In Heb. 12: 14, it is positively affirmed that without holiness no man shall see the Lord. This is setting it forth in so many words, as a conditio sine quâ non—that without which salvation cannot be. This single text, to my mind, decides the point. In connection with it, however, I wish to call attention to a few others. Says our Saviour, (Luke 14: 26, 33,) "If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters; yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple. . . . Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all he hath, he cannot be my disciple." No one is in a state of true discipleship or consecration, except when it is true of him that he actually does, in the true sense of the terms, thus hate all the objects of his dearest earthly relationships and his own life; and that he forsakes all that he hath—in other words, abjures and refrains from all selfishness. How much more does the Moral Law require of him when this is true of him? And is not discipleship a condition of salvation? Again, says Paul, (2 Cor. 5: 19,) "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." If all things have become new, is he not entirely new? But to be in Christ is to be born again; and is not the new birth a condition of salvation? In the 13th chapter of 1st Cor., the apostle most positively teaches that charity (love) is indispensable to being a Christian; and, according to him, "love is the fulfilling of the law." It is certain that no one can be saved without love. It is therefore a condition of salvation. Finally, repentance is uniformly enjoined and insisted on as a condition of salvation. And what is repentance? Whatever else may accompany it, it is ceasing to will and do evil, and beginning to will and do well. By common consent, it involves the commencement of consecration to God. What I have already said will show my reasons for believing repentance is an act of obedience to the Moral Law. If sin does not release those who commit it from obligation to obey the law, then the very first thing it requires of them is to cease from violating it, and commence obeying it; in other words, to repent. On this point—that repentance is an act of obedience to the Moral Law—I find myself fully sustained by the high authority of Pres. Edwards. Says he—"The Moral Law virtually includes all right acts, on all possible occasions, even occasions that the law itself allows not; thus we are obliged by the Moral Law to mortify our lusts, and repent of our sins, though that law allows of no lusts to mortify, or sin to repent of."

THE SAVIOUR'S BAPTISM.

April the 18th annually presents on the banks of the Jordan a scene of most thrilling interest. It is the anniversary of the Saviour's baptism by John. And tens of thousands of pilgrims, many of them from distant countries, are this morning seen hastening from their tents on the plains of Jericho to the spot on the sacred stream, where eighteen centuries ago the baptism took place, and where also, thirty-three centuries ago, the nation of Israel passed over on dry ground, whilst the waters stood in mountains at their side.

In accordance with immemorial usage, great multitudes of oriental Christians continue to resort here at this season, and plunge into the consecrated waters, under the impression that to wash in them on this memorable day will cleanse from sin and enhance immortal blessedness.

The company of the U. S. Exploring Expedition in that quarter, were present at this anniversary the last year; and one of the party, in his recently published journal, under date of April 18, 1848, says:—

"As early as two o'clock this morning we were roused from our short slumbers by the thousands of pilgrims gathering around us. There are probably twenty or twenty-five thousand men, women, and children. Here are all ages and conditions of men, from different countries, brought together by one prevailing motive. The scene on the broad spreading plains increases in interest; the flaming torches, which served as a lamp to their path before sunrise, are extinguished; the banks of the Jordan are lined with the living mass; and now, old, middle-aged, and young, with eagerness jump into the river; the children of several years are thrown in, and the infants carefully handled by the mothers; the poverty stricken and the sumptuously dressed, alike unceremoniously, wash in the stream; while their countenances bespeak the happiness of their souls."

RESIGNATION.

How touchingly beautiful was the parting scene between Cotton Mather and his wife. Observe his own account of it: "The black day arrives. I had never seen so black a day in all the time of my pilgrimage. The desire of my eyes is this day to be taken from me at a stroke. Her death is lingering and painful. All the forenoon of this day, she was in the pangs of death, and sensible till the last minute or two before the final expiration. I cannot remember the discourse that passed between us, only her devout soul was full of satisfaction about her going to a state of blessedness with the Lord Jesus Christ. As far as my distress would permit, I studied to confirm her satisfaction and consolation. When I saw to what a point of resignation I was called of the Lord, I was resolved with his help to glorify him. So, two hours before she expired, I kneeled by her bedside, and took into my hands that dear hand, the dearest in the world, and solemnly and sincerely gave her up to the Lord. I gently put her out of my hands, and laid away her hand, resolved that I would not touch it again. She afterwards told me that she signed and sealed my act of resignation; and though before that, she had called for me continually, after it, she never asked for me any more. She conversed much until near two in the afternoon. The last sensible word that she spoke, was to her weeping father—'Heaven, heaven will make amends for all.'" [Watchman and Reflector.

MILTON ON THE LOSS OF HIS SIGHT.

(FROM THE OXFORD EDITION OF MILTON'S WORKS.)

I am old and blind!
Men point at me as smitten by God's frown;
Afflicted and deserted of my kind,
Yet I am not cast down.

I am weak, yet strong;
I murmur not, that I no longer see;
Poor, old, and helpless, I the more belong,
Father Supreme! to thee.

O merciful One!
When men are farthest, then thou art most near;
When friends pass by, my weaknesses to shun,
Thy chariot I hear.

Thy glorious face
Is leaning towards me, and its holy light
Shines in upon my lonely dwelling-place—
And there is no more night.

On my bended knee,
I recognize thy purpose, clearly shown;
My vision thou hast dimmed, that I may see
Thyself, thyself alone.

I have nought to fear:
This darkness is the shadow of thy wing;
Beneath it I am almost sacred—here
Can come no evil thing.

Oh! I seem to stand
Trembling, where foot of mortal ne'er hath been,
Wrapped in the radiance from thy sinless land,
Which eye hath never seen.

Visions come and go;
Shapes of resplendent beauty round me throng;
From angel lips I seem to hear the flow
Of soft and holy song.

It is nothing now,
When heaven is opening on my sightless eyes,
When airs from Paradise refresh my brow,
The earth in darkness lies.

In a purer clime,
My being fills with rapture—waves of thought
Roll in upon my spirit—strains sublime
Break over me unsought.

Give me now my lyre!
I feel the stirrings of a gift divine;
Within my bosom glows unearthly fire
Lit by no skill of mine.

THE POOR THAT SUFFER FROM POVERTY.

A year or two since, an educated German gentleman called upon the writer, to seek employment as an instructor in the German language. His aid in that direction was not at the time needed, but a very pleasant acquaintance with him was commenced, which was renewed at intervals by casual meetings, and so continued for several months. It was observed, after a time, that his clothes, though scrupulously neat, were literally worn thread-bare; that his cheeks looked sallow and sunken; that his strength had become weakness, and that what remained seemed rapidly wasting; and at last he was induced by friendly art to speak frankly of his condition. He had a wife—an estimable and accomplished lady—and three children. He had been educated as a physician, and was entirely competent to do the duties of that profession. He could get no business, however. The little money that he had on coming to this country had been exhausted, while he was making fruitless attempts to establish himself in his profession. He then endeavored to procure scholars for private tuition in the German literature, and had been partially successful. But the great number of those who were seeking employment in the same department had prevented him from gaining more than a bare subsistence by these efforts; and so, step by step, with his family, he had gone down the gradations of poverty. When the discovery was made of the extent and nature of his wants, he was living with his wife and children in a single room in the vicinity of the Hook; he had but two scholars upon whom to rely for any support, and almost a moiety of what they paid him went weekly for his rent; he had lived for weeks on a little rice, and sometimes, as he said with the tears in his eyes—wrung from him hardly more by the thought of his family's destitution than by his own actual hunger—he had walked the streets all day with nothing to sustain him but the free Croton water, that his children might enjoy his morsel of rice. Of course measures were at once taken to relieve him; and after a time a responsible and important situation was procured for him, which he has since filled with great acceptance.

Another instance of the same general kind is certainly not less striking, in itself and in its end. A beautiful and accomplished girl, the cherished daughter of a wealthy family in one of the largest towns of Ireland, married against her parents' wish an officer in the English army. Her parents at once discarded her. Before she had been married long, her husband sold his commission and retired from the army; and they lived after that at various points on the Continent, in England, and in Scotland. A year or two since they came to this country, and established themselves in Brooklyn. They were poor; but what seemed to them a proper self-respect prevented them from making it known. The husband gave instruction in military exercises; but those whom he instructed were not of a class to be scrupulous about payment, and his receipts were consequently precarious and small. The delicate wife and mother—whose mother and family still live in luxury—more than once sought employment as a washer-woman from house to house, that she might purchase the necessaries of life for herself and her dear ones. For days together they lived upon scarce anything—a small pie, a loaf of bread. And when by accident the real state of the family was discovered, she who had been the heir of so much wealth, and who was still the object of so much solicitude, was too far gone in the weakness and disease occasioned by protracted want to be recovered. Though every attention was shown her that could be shown, the best medical assistance provided, and all the nourishing luxuries appropriate to the sick-room, she sank swiftly and silently into the grave; so much emaciated by want, that in the expressive words of the person who prepared her body for its burial—"Ye never saw the like, sir."

Such facts as these should make us trebly and constantly careful to know who are our neighbors in cities like these, and to minister at once to the want which we discover. It is not the visibly poor that suffer most. But it is those who have seen better days, and who are still unwilling to ask for aid; who cling to the hope that in some way they shall gain employment and relief, but whose spirits as well as their bodies are sinking day by day beneath the terrible crush of poverty and despair. ### A PROVIDENTIAL SHOWER.

A young lady, the daughter of a tradesman in the city, (London,) fell into ill health, and in consequence of this, a lodging was taken for her in Wells street, Hackney. Her parents were very much averse to Methodists and Dissenters; and finding that the people with whom she lodged were Dissenters, cautioned her against their sentiments, fearing that in the weak state of her health, they would render her gloomy. The good people invited her to their family worship, but she steadily refused, saying she belonged to the Church of England. She occasionally, however, overheard the good man in prayer through the wainscot, and could not help thinking he was a good man, though mistaken in forming such precise notions as she conceived him to entertain.

One evening, when taking her walk, a shower suddenly came on, for which she was not prepared, and she ran for shelter to the porch of the chapel of which the late excellent Mr. Collison was the minister; but she determined not to go beyond it. In hastening, however, to the porch, she became exhausted in consequence of her weakness, and would have sunk, had not the pew-opener, who was sitting near the door, caught hold of her, and placed her on a seat which was within the chapel. She felt unwilling to remain when the shower should have ceased, but after the kindness of the pew-opener she did not like to rise in the face of the congregation and leave the place; and by the time the shower had well ended, she had begun to feel interested in the sermon, which appeared, so far as she could judge, to have just commenced when she entered. She returned to her lodging with her mind deeply affected. The result, under the divine blessing, was her conversion. Her parents, who were at first greatly distressed at what had occurred, finding that her new religion, instead of rendering her gloomy, promoted her cheerfulness, were induced to accompany her to the place where she had received this spiritual good, and they also became decidedly pious. She very soon became active in the school for Jewish females, supported by the London Missionary Society, afterwards married Mr. Elliot, a missionary to the East, where she became a widow, and after her return became an inmate in the Retreat for Ministers' Widows, at Hackney, where she died about seven years ago. ### KINDNESS THE BEST PUNISHMENT.

A Quaker of most exemplary character, was disturbed one night by footsteps around his dwelling; and he rose from his bed, and cautiously opened a back door to reconnoitre. Close by was an out-house, and under it a cellar, near a window of which was a man busily engaged in receiving the contents of his pork-barrel from another within the cellar. The old man approached, and the man outside fled. He stepped up to the cellar window and received the pieces of pork from the thief within, who, after a little while, asked his supposed accomplice, in a whisper, "Shall we take it all?" The owner of the pork said, softly, "Yes, take it all," and the thief industriously handed up the balance through the window, and then came up himself. Imagine his consternation when, instead of greeting his companion in crime, he was confronted by the Quaker. Both were astonished, for the thief proved to be a near neighbor, of whom none would have suspected such conduct. He plead for mercy, begged the old man not to expose him, spoke of the necessities of poverty, and promised faithfully never to steal again.

"If thou hadst asked me for meat," said the old man, "it would have been given thee. I pity thy poverty and thy weakness, and esteem thy family. Thou art forgiven."

The thief was greatly rejoiced, and was about to depart, when the old man said, "Take the pork, neighbor."

"No, no," said the thief, "I don't want the pork."

"Thy necessity was so great that it led thee to steal. One half of the pork thou must take with thee."

The thief insisted he could never eat a morsel of it. The thoughts of the crime would make it choke him. He begged the privilege of letting it alone. But the old man was incorrigible, and, furnishing the thief with a bag, had half the pork put therein, and laying it upon his back, sent him home with it. He met his neighbor daily for many years afterward, and their families visited together, but the matter was kept a secret; and though in after time the circumstance was mentioned, the name of the delinquent was never known. The punishment was severe and effectual. It was probably his first, it was certainly his last attempt to steal.

EDUCATE THE ARMY.—The Duke of Wellington says, and his saying deseves to be written in the largest letters over the Horse Guards, and round every canon's mouth:—"It is time that ignorance should cease in the British army." And it is high time; but we hope none of our military readers will have their vanity wounded, if we venture to put the question—"When the aforesaid ignorance ceases, how long will the British army last?" Is it to be expected, that some 40,000 men will quietly walk into a field to kill, or to be killed, when they are in a state to reason? Depend upon it, they will not do so to please any body. But still we cry, as loudly as the Duke, "Educate the army."

EDITORIAL ADVISERS.

It is now nearly five years since we undertook to edit a religious newspaper. During that time we have been favored with volunteer advice from only four or five individuals as to the proper manner of discharging the duties of our responsible station. This has sufficed, however, to convince us, that there is a variety of tastes among newspaper readers, and that an attempt to please every body would very likely result in pleasing nobody. For the benefit of those who have already given us their opinions, as well as of any others who may be troubled with a sense of duty to do so, we are inclined to note the substance of the advice we have received.

The first of our advisers—being anxious, no doubt, that we should start right—gave us his opinion soon after our paper appeared; and it was to the effect, that a newspaper should never contain a long article, and should always be well spiced with anecdotes and puns. Our second adviser waited till we had been some six months under way, when he wrote to inform us, that he was much pleased with the general character of the paper, especially with our custom of giving in each number at le[illegible] thoroughly-studied and well-written article; but that he thought the paper would be improved by one slight change, which was to exclude from the variety column all anecdotes and puns as things unworthy of a place in a religious newspaper. Our third adviser, in the order of time, was a man of refined tastes, who had an interesting family of children growing up around him, and he thought the paper would be improved by giving in each number a larger amount of poetry, and two or three colums of strictly juvenile matter. Our fourth adviser was a matter-of-fact sort of man, who desired to know all about what was going on in the world and he was of the opinion, that "there is no necessity for a weekly paper on morality, and an expose of principles," but that "three-fourths of its columns, at least, should be given to the general news of the day."

Such is the substance of the advice we have received upon the subject of editing in general. Perhaps we ought to add, that we have occasionally received a suggestion as to the manner of treating the subject of the Sabbath in particular. We just now remember, that some three months after entering upon our editorial duties, we attended a General Conference, where we had the pleasure of meeting many of our ministerial brethren, from two of whom we are happy to acknowledge the receipt of valuable suggestions. One of them expressed his deep interest in the paper, and his general satisfaction with the course it had pursued; but he thought it should not contain quite so much matter directly upon the subject of the Sabbath, because that might be objectionable to those who do not keep the Sabbath, and so hinder our obtaining that general circulation which the paper deserved. The other was equally well satisfied with the general features of the paper, but he thought each number should contain a good supply of Sabbath matter, because it was useful and welcome to Sabbath-keepers, while those who might subscribe for the paper from other denominations would do so to obtain information upon that subject, and would be disappointed if they did not find it.

Now, it is easy to see, from the above specimens, that an editor who should attempt strictly to follow all his advisers, would very soon find himself in a fix. Straightened and perplexed to decide what to print and what not to print, he might be as bad off as the fabled ass, that starved to death between two hay-stacks while debating upon which to begin. Most people would probably regard it as a calamity, if an editor, from anxiety to publish nothing objectionable to any body, should send each of his subscribers a sheet of blank paper, leaving them to select and print for themselves. But such a course occasionally might be a good joke, and instructive withal, to some subscribers. For our part, we long ago learned not to be over-anxious about advice like that to which we have alluded. It was given gratuitously, and no doubt good-naturedly. Instead of fretting about it, we think best to receive it thankfully, improve upon it if we can, and still go on, printing and omitting to print, according to the dictates of our own judgment and conscience.

—In this connection, we take the liberty of copying and calling particular attention to the following sensible article, on a kindred subject, from the Oxford Herald:—

Selections for Newspapers.

Most people think the selection of suitable matter for a newspaper the easiest part of the business. How great an error! It is, by all means, the most difficult. To look over and over hundreds of exchange papers every week, from which to select enough for one, especially when the question is, not what shall, but what shall not be selected, is "no easy task." If every person who reads a newspaper could have edited it, we should hear less complaints. Not unfrequently is it the case, that an editor looks over all his exchange papers for something interesting, and can absolutely find nothing. Every paper is drier than a contribution-box; and yet something must be had—his paper must come out with something in it, and he does the best he can. To an editor who has the least care about what he selects, the writing that he does is the easiest part of his labor. A paper, when completed, should be one that the editor would be willing to read aloud to his wife, his mother, his sister, or his daughter; and if he do that, if he get out such a paper, he will find his labor a most difficult one. Every subscriber thinks the paper printed for his especial benefit, and, if there is nothing in it that suits him, it must be stopped, it is good for nothing. Some people look over the deaths and marriages, and actually complain of the editor, if but few people in the vicinity have been so unfortunate as to die, or so fortunate as to get married, the previous week! An editor should have such things in his paper, whether they occur or not. Just as many subscribers as an editor may have, so many different tastes he has to consult. One wants stories and poetry, another abhors all this. The politician wants nothing but politics. One must have something smart; another, something sound. One likes anecdotes, fun, and frolic, and his next-door neighbor wonders that a man of sense will put such stuff in his paper. Something spicy comes out, and the editor is a blackguard. Next comes something argumentative, and the editor is a dull fool. And so, between them all, you see, the poor fellow gets roughly handled. And yet, ninety-nine out of a hundred, never think of these things. They never reflect that what does not please them, may please the next man, but they insist that if the paper does not suit them, it is good for nothing.

AN AFRICAN KING.

A mission was recently undertaken by a Mr. Cruickshank, under the direction of the English Government, for the purpose of suppressing the slave-trade in Africa. It seems that the King of Dahomy is the most extensive negro-catcher in Africa, and sells some twenty-five thousand annually, besides supplying himself and his chiefs with domestics. To obtain them he makes regular slave-hunts, in the dangers of which he always shares. Mr. Cruickshank was authorized to visit him, and to offer him an equivalent, amounting to four thousand pounds, should he succeed in making a treaty with him for the suppression of the trade in negroes, by which he would use his influence in putting it down, and more particularly not participate in it himself. The mission was kindly received, and treated with great hospitality. But the specific object of it was not secured, although the King promised to turn the attention of his people to agriculture. The following sketch will give some idea of the character of the King and the customs of the country:—

"He is the absolute sovereign of the nation, and the people are all solely under his control, to whom they look up as to a master; no person can hold any property except by his permission, even during life, and at death all reverts to him; he is protected by an immense army of women, numbered at many thousands. These amazons are his body guard; they never leave him, and are answerable for the safety of his person. In his talks with the agent of the British Government, he evinced a shrewdness in diplomatic affairs seldom met with in the negro. He conceded to all the arguments in favor of the treaty, on the score of humanity, &c., &c.; but placed the affair strictly in a pecuniary view, along with the custom of his country. He had received the crown from his father, to whom, like him, all his people looked up as their supporter; that it required between £200 and £300 a year for the support of his government, of which he derived at least £200 by the slave-trade; that this was the great source of his revenue, and support of his crown and country. How, then, could those of England expect that he should give up his country to ruin, by accepting the paltry sum now offered. He would, however, endeavor to turn the minds of his people to agricultural pursuits, offered lands to the British Government, on the sea shore, to establish factories, and to aid, assist, and protect them in their interior trade, throughout the several territories."

THE TRACT SOCIETY.

Since the Anniversary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, in September last, the attention of the Board has been directed mainly to the printing of such tracts as had been previously stereotyped, and the distribution of them by means of colporteurs and missionaries. Three colporteurs have been employed during a portion of the time, and tracts to a large amount have been furnished for gratuitous distribution in different parts of the country. In carrying forward these operations, the funds of the treasury have been nearly exhausted, and it has become necessary to appeal to the friends of the Society for additional contributions. The Board has no other source of income than the voluntary contributions of individuals and churches. Heretofore these have sufficed to support its limited operations. But for a few months past they have been unusually small—entirely inadequate to meet the demands of the case. We trust that it is only necessary to state this fact, to secure liberal and prompt aid. Will the churches that have been accustomed to do something each year, in their church capacity, for tract operations, make haste to gather up their offerings for the present year? Will the auxiliary societies that have pledged an annual donation, see to it that their pledge is redeemed? Will the individuals who desire the continuance and extension of our efforts, give proof of that desire by lending their aid? Will the members of the Society, whose membership is conditional upon a yearly contribution, forward that contribution soon, without putting the agent to the trouble of sending them bills? Will those who desire the prosperity of the Tract Society, all and singular, inquire what are their obligations to it, and act accordingly? Now is the time to decide what you ought to do, while the subject is before you. May you come to such a decision as will satisfy your own conscience and the claims of the truth.

Contributions may be forwarded to the Treasurer, Thomas B. Stillman, or to the Corresponding Secretary, Geo. B. Utter, New York.

By order of the Board,
GEO. B. UTTER, Cor. Sec.

FAITH AND WORKS.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I beg leave to trouble you with a few words about some remarks in Eld. Griswold's Report respecting the State of Religion among the Eastern Churches, which Report was published in the Recorder of Jan. 4, 1849. After stating that in some instances a perplexity of mind existed in regard to their acceptance, he says, "As one of the Committee, I am of the opinion, that the doctrine of justification by faith alone, ought to be made more prominent in the teaching among these churches." Now some of us about here have an impression, that faith alone is dead; and we cannot conceive what benefit can arise from preaching up a dead faith among these churches. Dead? Yes. "For, as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also, being alone." And though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing. Pray tell us, then, what good faith alone could do us. I presume that not a single instance can be produced from all the Bible, where any one was ever justified by faith alone; that is, justified by a faith not accompanied with a corresponding obedience, so far, at least, as he knew what was required of him.

Eld. Griswold farther says, that good works are consecutive, and not causative of justification. By which I understand him to mean, that good works are a kind of necessary consequence, rather than a voluntary obedience, that follows faith in the natural order of things, just as I have heard the case represented by others, who say that good works are the fruit of faith; as if they thought that good works were involuntarily produced by faith, just as the apple-tree involuntarily produces apples; or else, that those good works were some how involuntarily rendered voluntary by the mysterious operation of regenerating grace. I confess I do not understand it; and I very much doubt whether they understand themselves, when they say that good works are the fruit of faith, or that they are consecutive. I understand faith to be a belief of the record and testimony that God has given us of himself, and of his son Jesus Christ. And now let me ask how many thousands upon thousands are there in Christian lands, who believe all this as firmly as ever Abraham did, and yet, for want of that obedience or those good works which such a faith demands, they remain in an unjustified state for years; but, as soon as such obedience or good works are voluntarily yielded, or performed, they are pardoned and justified? Who then will say that good works are no cause or not causative of justification, seeing that they could not be justified without them. They were not justified, because they did not add to their faith virtue. I would not be understood to believe, that our good works are the first procuring cause of pardon and justification; that, I understand to be the sufferings and death of Christ. Neither do I suppose that the industry of the husbandman is the original procuring cause that the earth produces food for man and beast; that, I understand to have been implanted in the nature of things by the hand of the Creator. Yet no man, in his senses, will pretend that the labor of the farmer, in cultivating the earth and putting in the seed, is no cause or not causative of a good crop. Nor should I any more have thought, that a man acquainted with the Bible would ever have questioned that repentance from dead works, and obedience to God, (which are as good works, I believe, as can be performed,) are not causative of pardon and justification. It certainly must be admitted, that they are a secondary cause, at least; and if they are as much as that, then they are causative.

Brother Griswold farther says, "There is danger, in these days of 'do this and thou shalt live;'" whereas, the Bible is full of just such language, (i. e., do this and thou shalt live,) from beginning to end; and I apprehend that there is much greater danger in believing that we can be justified by faith alone, than there is in believing as the Bible teaches. The Bible says, that if the wicked turn from his wickedness, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall live. The Bible says, Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and enter through the gate into the city. The Bible says, If ye do these things, ye shall never fall, for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom. I know that the Bible says we are justified by faith, but I should suppose that common sense would teach us that it must be a living, and not a dead faith. And I understand by the Scriptures, that instead of good works being the fruit of faith, they are the very life of it. And every one knows there must be life in the tree before it can bear fruit. We should think it a miracle indeed, if we should find a dead tree bearing apples.

If brother Griswold does not mean what we understand his language to signify, he would do us a kindness if he would give us his meaning in language that we could understand.

WM. STILLMAN.

REVIVAL AT SHERBURNE, N. Y.—A correspondent of the Syracuse Recorder says that a very extensive and powerful work of grace has been experienced in Sherburne during several months past. It is estimated that more than two hundred in that town have passed from death unto life, and, including those in the contiguous parts of other towns, the number is estimated at more than three hundred.

SUNDAY IN FRANCE.—In France, for a long time past, the workmen employed by the State have been required to continue their labors on Sunday, but allowed to spend a great part of the following day in amusement. Recently, however, the Minister of Public Works has issued a Circular to the effect that "in future no work shall be carried on in the work-shops connected with the public works on the Sabbath and holy-days, by workmen employed by the day on account of Government." This act of the Minister is extensively noticed and commented upon by the papers, and represented as an indication of growing regard for the Sunday. But we confess ourselves unable to see in it any great significance. By the new Government of France the Sunday has been treated from the first as a sort of holiday. Two important elections have taken place on that day, and on it the new Constitution was proclaimed, with attendant ceremonies not particularly devotional, one would think. This movement of forbidding work in the public shops on Sunday, is doubtless prompted more by a desire to increase the holidays of the people than to promote the religious observance of the Sabbath.

NO CATHOLIC COLLEGE IN MASSACHUSETTS.—The House of Representatives of Massachusetts has had under discussion the question of granting an act of incorporation to the Roman Catholic College at Worcester. The debate upon it was quite protracted, and awakened a deep interest in the community. The principal arguments against the bill were based on the ground that the College was intended exclusively for Roman Catholics, all Protestant students being excluded. In the course of the debate, it was stated, that this principle had always been opposed in the Commonwealth; and that when Amherst College was chartered, and there was a fear in the minds of many that it was designed to be an institution exclusively for a particular sect of Christians, for this reason a section was introduced to obviate the objection. After a thorough sifting of the matter, the bill was rejected by a vote of 117 to 84.

THE LEAVEN WORKING.—The London Patriot announces the secession of Rev. John Dodson, M. A., Vicar of Cockerham, Lancashire, from the Established Church of England. It seems that the facts and arguments brought out in Mr. Noel's book on Church and State, convinced him of the unscriptural character of the establishment, and led him to abandon it. He leaves a living worth some three thousand dollars a year, which, after all, is a small sacrifice in comparison with incurring the displeasure of those with whom he formerly coöperated.

MONUMENT-BUILDING.—Projects are on foot in England for erecting monuments to the memory of Oliver Cromwell and the poet Cowper. The former it is proposed to erect for two thousand pounds, on the site of "Slepe Hall," Cromwell's old residence, which has been secured for the purpose. The latter is to be placed in Westminster Abbey. Contributions for it are restricted to five shillings sterling. Wordsworth is a warm patron of the scheme, and has written several letters on the subject.

POPERY AND MOHAMMEDANISM.—A letter from Constantinople says that the Austrian Government, backed by Russia, has applied to the Sultan of Turkey to lend his fleet to aid the Austrians in the Adriatic. The London News thinks it would be a "delicious idea" if the Pope should owe his restoration to a Mohammedan fleet. Herod and Pilate united to crucify the Saviour. What wonder if the representatives of Romanism and Mohammedanism should unite to put down the Liberals of Italy.

KITTO'S CYCLOPEDIA OF BIBLICAL LITERATURE.—This work, an advertisement of which will be found in another column, has attained an enviable reputation among the biblical students of this country and of Europe. The editor himself is a ripe scholar and an experienced book-maker; he has had the assistance of scholars highly distinguished in their several departments of research; and between them a work is produced of inestimable value. We do not know of a better help to understand the history, geography, and interpretation of the Bible.

DISSOLVING THE UNION.—Speaking of the frequent threats made by southern members during the last session of Congress, that they would go for a dissolution of the Union unless their wishes were granted, the editor of the National Era says: "The truth is, people here understand the philosophy of the matter. The raw-head-and-bloody-bones of disunion is like the terrible apparition the farmer raises to save his corn, and answers a similar purpose. The one scares the crows, and the other—the dough-faces."

THE QUAKER POET DEAD.—Bernard Barton, the Quaker Poet, died at Ipswich, England, about the first of April, and was buried amid the affecting silence of the Quaker ceremonial, "broken only by the warning voice of one reverend elder."

RELIGIOUS ANNIVERSARIES.—The various benevolent societies centering in New York hold their Anniversaries next week. The Boston Anniversaries, of a similar character, will commence on the 28th day of May, and continue about one week.

WISCONSIN ON RUMSELLING.

We stated last week, that a very stringent bill in regard to intoxicating liquors was passed by the Wisconsin Legislature at its recent session. The bill consists of ten sections, and requires all persons who would vend or retail "spiritous liquors" to give bond to the town authorities, with three sureties in $1,000, "conditioned to pay all damages the community or individuals may sustain by reason of such a traffick; to support all paupers, widows and orphans; pay the expenses of all civil and criminal prosecutions made, growing out of, or justly attributable to such traffick." And it is made the duty of the officer holding the bond to deliver it to "any person who may claim to be injured by such traffick." We quote the remaining provisions entire:—

SECTION 4. It shall be lawful for any married woman to institute, in her own name, a suit on any such bond, for all damages sustained by herself or children on account of such traffick; and the money, when collected, shall be paid over to her, for the use of herself and children.

SEC. 5. No suits for liquor bills shall be entertained by any of the Courts of this State, and whenever it shall be made to appear before any Court before which a suit may be pending, on a promissory note, that such note was given in whole or in part for liquor bills, such Court shall immediately dismiss such suit at the cost of the plaintiff.

SEC. 6. On the trial of any suit under the provisions of this act, the cause or foundation of which shall be the act of an individual under the influence of liquor, it shall only be necessary, in order to sustain the action, to prove that the principal in the bond sold or gave liquor to the person (so intoxicated or in liquor) whose acts are complained of, on the day previous to the commission of the same offense.

SEC. 7. Whenever a person shall become a county, city, or village charge, by reason of intemperance, a suit may be instituted by the proper authorities, on the bond of any person who may have been in the habit of selling or giving liquor to such person or pauper so becoming a public charge.

SEC. 8. Any person against whom a judgment may be obtained, under the provisions of this act, shall be entitled to maintain a suit to compel a contribution towards paying the judgment against him, against all persons engaged in such traffick in such county, city, town, or village, who may have sold or given liquor to such person committing an offense or becoming a public charge.

SEC. 9. Any person who shall vend or retail, or, for the purpose of avoiding the provisions of this act, give away, spiritous liquors, without first giving the bond required by the first section of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum of not less than fifty, nor more than five hundred dollars, and be imprisoned in the county jail not less than ten days, nor more than six months, and shall be liable in all respects to the public, and to individuals, the same as he would have been had he given the bond required in the first section of this act.

This remarkable expression of public opinion in Wisconsin on the subject of "spiritous liquors," passed the Senate by a vote of 10 to 3, and the Assembly 29 to 21. It goes some steps beyond any legislation on the subject in this country.

AMERICAN BAPTIST PUBLICATION SOCIETY.—The Tenth Anniversary of the American Baptist Publication Society was held in Philadelphia on the fourth day of last week. During the year, 15 new publications have been issued, making the whole number on the Society's list 260, of which 68 are volumes; new editions of 75 tracts have been issued; 1,300 pages of stereotype plates have been added; 18 colporteurs have been employed, of whom 5 are German. The $10,000 plan has been completed. 11 Ministers' libraries, and 12 Sunday School libraries, have been distributed; 32 life members and 4 life managers have been added. Grants have been made to Burmah, Siam, Assam, China, St. Helena, France, Germany, Canada, &c. The Treasurer's Report was read, showing the receipts for eleven months, ending March 15, 1849, to be $26,470 76, being nearly $6,000 more than the preceding twelve months.

CHARITABLE BEQUESTS IN MASSACHUSETTS.—The late Henry Todd, of Boston, left by his will, after amply providing for his family connections, $5,000 to the "Massachusetts General Hospital," the interest of which is forever to go toward furnishing free beds for those whose circumstances may require them. To the "Boston Asylum and Farm School" for indigent boys, he left a legacy of $3,000—to the "Boston Children Friend Society" $2,000. The remainder of his estate, amounting, probably, to some $10,000, he bequeathed to the "Board of Education," for the benefit of the Massachusetts Normal Schools.

THE OVERLAND EMIGRATION TO CALIFORNIA.—One of the St. Louis papers says that the number of emigrants to California, through Missouri, before the 1st of June, is estimated at 20,000 persons, 11,000 wagons, and 30,000 mules. Where the forage for such a number of beasts can be obtained, is a serious question. There will no doubt be unprecedanted suffering on that route.

WESTERN TRAVEL.—By reference to an advertisement in another column, it will be seen that on and after the 1st inst., there are to be six trains of cars daily, Sundays excepted, from Albany westward. On most of the roads between Albany and Buffalo, important improvements have recently been made, the time has been shortened, and the fare reduced, rendering this a very convenient and economical route to the Far West.

GREAT RIOT AT MONTREAL.

Montreal, Canada, was the scene of a riot and conflagration on the night of Wednesday, April 25. It seems that for some time past a bill for the payment of losses incurred during the Canada Rebellion has been under discussion, and created considerable excitement. Having been passed by the Legislature, it was on that day signed by the Governor-General, Lord Elgin. A mob of tories immediately assembled, surrounded the Parliament Buildings, and after breaking the windows and committing other depredations, they set fire to the Buldings, which were burnt down. The Legislative Records of Upper and Lower Canada, with one of the most valuable and extensive libraries on this continent, and the furniture, pictures, &c., were entirely consumed. On the following night, the mob burnt the house of La Fontaine, the leader of the French party in the Legislative Council, and then broke the windows of Dr. Nelson's house, and some others. Numerous arrests have been made, and farther outbreaks are feared.

SEVEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Cambria arrived at Boston on sixth-day last, bringing seven days later news from Europe.

In England all is quiet, but the prospect of improvement in trade is not good. Breadstuffs had risen, in consequence of the supplies of grain from the Baltic having been cut off by the renewal of hostilities between Denmark and Prussia.

From Ireland we continue to receive accounts of suffering and starvation. Cholera has also broken out in several places, to add to the distress. The Rev. Dr. Crolly, a Roman Catholic priest, expired on the 6th ult. in Drogheda, after an attack of cholera of 9 hours' duration.

In the vicinity of Paris, France, the cholera is making sad ravages among the troops who are quartered in the temporary barracks. It is believed that the dampness of the weather has much contributed to the development of the disease. Measures have been adopted for their removal into more healthy quarters. There are 30 vacant seats in the National Assembly in consequence of death or resignation. There are more than 60 members confined by indisposition to their apartments. A gentleman usher of the Assembly had died of cholera.

Hostilities have recommenced between Denmark and Prussia. A Danish fleet, in attempting to capture the fortress of Eckernford, on the 5th of April, was utterly defeated, and a line-of-battle ship and a frigate fell into the hands of the former commander. The line-of-battle ship grounded, and taking fire exploded, by which about 350 persons were killed or wounded.

There has been a sanguinary battle in Spain, near Catalonia, between the Royalist chief, Pons Quesdelsli, and Cabrera, in which the two Generals were killed. Other accounts say that Cabrera, who had been wounded in the action, took refuge in a tavern, where he was discovered and put to death by the Emiguilep.

The Hungarians have gained a signal victory over the Austrians, the latter losing 1,300 men, 24 pieces of cannon, and 21 wagons.

In Italy matters are not improving. The Austrians have taken Bresica, after a bombardment of six hours, and terrible courage; the streets were carried at the point of the bayonet, and the inhabitants driven into the houses where they were burned alive. Genoa had been bombarded 24 hours, and set on fire in several places, but not taken at last advices. Venice is blockaded. Rome is very unsettled. The Pope is still at Gaeta.

The news by this arrival is summed up as follows by one of the daily papers :—

"There is war in almost every quarter of Europe. In Italy the Austrians have destroyed Brescia, the blood of her inhabitants staining the ruins of their churches and their homes. Genoa has been bombarded for twenty-four hours by the Piedmontese troops for revolt and Republicanism. In Spain the old quarrel has resulted in a new battle, with its horrors of dead and wounded, and no great principle to shed luster on the gloom. Denmark is defeated by Germany, and defeated where she has hitherto been the victor—on the sea. In Hungary the Austrians are more decidedly losers than ever. Thirteen hundred of their dead strew a single field; Puchner has fled to Russian protection in Wallachia, and Bem is master of Transylvania. The King of Prussia refuses the German Crown, and all there is uncertainty. France still plays the part of a spectator."

Customs at Panama.—A correspondent of the N. Y. Recorder, writing from Panama, under date of March 12, gives the following account of the way in which the Padres and the Yankees at Panama spend their time, particularly on Sundays :—

"The Padres are the most respectable in personal appearance of any of the population, and are generally well educated and well mannered. But many of them have very dissolute habits, and prefer the excitement of the cock-pit and the monte-bank to the severer offices of the church. There is one in particular, who may be seen on every Sunday, after service, in the cock-pit, betting with los Yankeros, and often losing considerable money. Last Sunday week, the old fellow lost some twenty dollars on a fight between his chicken and one which Capt. ——, of our army, had purchased and pitted against him. There is a gambling-house on the main street, near the hotel, where the fathers may be seen in a semi-disguise every evening playing monte, and staking sometimes hundreds of dollars. I went up to the cock-pit last Saturday, in company with Mr. Williams, the missionary, to show him how the thing was done, and happened to find two of the Padres in the ring, as excited, nearly, with anxiety to know the result of the fight, as the chickens were mad with the cruel blows and wounds which they inflicted upon each other."

EXTRAORDINARY SURGICAL OPERATION.

Week before last an invalid girl, named Margaret Shields, aged 14, was sent up from Deer Island to the Massachusetts General Hospital, at the suggestion of Dr. Moriarty, to submit her mysterious and painful case to the professional judgment of the eminent surgeons and physicians of that excellent institution. It appears from the statement she made, that about half the time during the last four years she has experienced very curious sensations in her stomach, such as, at one time, a leaden, choking obstruction, at another a sickening feeling, which seemed to absorb the vigor of all her physical powers, producing fainting fits, spasms, and at others, a sort of inward life, a squirming, indefinable something, all of which were daily becoming more serious in their nature. She stated that her only brother in England was strangled to death, about two years ago, by a tape-worm. This piece of information, taken in connection with the symptoms above described, soon convinced Drs. Warren, Channing, Stevens, and Bowditch, that her complaint was the same as her brother's, and that unless the worm was extracted, she also must inevitably fall its victim. After deliberate consultation, these eminent physicians decided to make a direct incision into Margaret's stomach, and seize the reptile, if possible, with a pair of hooked tweezers—a matter of life or death to the patient. She was, with great reluctance, induced to inhale the ether; when fully insensible, Dr. Warren applied the knife with wonderful precision and skill; and within the space of sixty seconds, he inserted his instruments and brought out, to the astonishment of all, a coil of living tape-worm, forty-one feet eleven inches in length! It was of a blueish color, of about the size of a coarse thread. So completely was the patient under the influence of the ether, that she observed, on coming to her senses: "O! I have had a pleasant dream, and feel relieved!" The wound was dressed with great care, and she has scarcely complained of pain since the operation. This, we are told, is the only case on record where the tape-worm has been literally cut from the human stomach; and for this operation humanity and the scientific world are indebted to the extraordinary skill of Dr. Warren. All honor be his! We are informed that out of a company of some thirty practitioners witnessing the operation, there was not a face unvisited by tears of joy and gratitude as they beheld this triumph of modern surgical science. Another Missionary Fallen.—The Journal of Commerce learns by letters received in this city from Rev. John Leighton Wilson, that Mrs. Mary H. Griswold, who sailed hence about a year since for the Gaboon mission, on the western coast of Africa, died at that station on the 31st of January last, of a malignant fever. She was formerly the consort of Dr. Wilson, also of Rev. Mr. Griswold, both of whom have died on the western coast within a few years, of diseases contracted in that climate, while engaged in their philanthropic and self-denying labors. In a religious view, the aspect of the mission at the Gaboon station is highly encouraging. A revival of considerable power has occurred, and a goodly number of conversions have taken place.

Mail Robbery in Pennsylvania.—For some time past, letters containing money, mailed at Montrose, Pa., to go East, having been abstracted from the mail, an investigation was commenced under the direction of one of the P. M. General's special agents, when the trial-letters were finally opened at Great Bend, by George Baldwin, Postmaster of the place. Mr. B. was immediately arrested; $20 in money and an opened letter were found upon him, together with 22 other letters addressed to different persons. He was lodged in Montrose jail to await his trial.

SUMMARY.

The Supreme Court of Louisiana, in the case of the State vs. Slave Dick, accused of murder, has decided that the provision of the Constitution guaranteeing trial by jury to accused persons, does not extend to slaves. At the same time it decides that "so far as crimes, misdemeanors and offenses are concerned, slaves are considered as persons."

A portable post office of wood, the Washington Whig says, has been constructed, containing pigeon-holes for letters and places for books, &c., to be conveyed to California. It is not probably more than ten feet in length and five in height. This office is to be set up wherever it may be convenient, and shifted as circumstances may require.

Mrs. Miller, residing in Harrisburg, Pa., recently gave birth to five boys, all of which are alive and doing well. What makes this case singular is, that at her first confinement she gave birth to two, and at her second to three, and at this, her third, to five, making in all ten children in four years, and all living.

The New Orleans Picayune of the 15th inst., contains a letter from Mexico, dated the 31st of March, through which we learn that the cholera was making terrible ravages in the neighborhood of the Rio Grande. Some of the towns are said to be nearly depopulated from the effects of this awful scourge, and in Camargo upward of 250 have already died.

Bishop Doane, of New Jersey, has failed for $250,000, and is said to be able to pay only a trifling portion of his vast liabilities. Most of this money is said to have been spent in building churches and chapels. The fortune of Mrs. Doane, formerly Mrs. Perkins, of Boston, is not involved in this crash. Her income is said to be $12,000 per annum.

The steamboats on the Stonington and Providence line to Boston removed to Pier No. 2, North River, on Tuesday last, whence they will continue to leave, as heretofore, at 5 P. M.

It is said that Charles Albert, the Ex-King of Sardinia, following the example of Louis Philippe, and other monarchs who have lost their crowns in Europe, is about to take refuge in the United States of America.

Considerable excitement has recently been created in the border counties South of the Missouri River, in consequence of the preaching of some Abolitionists, professedly in the discharge of the duties of the Methodist Episcopal Church North, on the subject of Slavery. A large number of colored persons had become dissatisfied with their old religious organization, and had gone over to the "North" division of that Church.

The last steamer brings intelligence that Mr. Albert Brisbane, correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, has been ordered to quit France in 48 hours. The Presse says that Mr. B., the American Socialist, who has received notice to quit France in 48 hours, has been to the Prefect of Police, and told him that he would not leave France without being compelled by force.

Our readers will remember the attempt to poison the family of Benjamin Blaisdell, at New Boston, N. H., made on the 16th of February last, by the administration of morphine, resulting in the death of one child. Letitia Blaisdell, the poisoner, a young girl adopted as a daughter by Mr. B., when brought up for trial, plead guilty. She was thereupon sentenced to be hung on the 30th of next August.

The great suit of Van Vechten vs. Clute, involving the great question of the validity of Stephen Van Rensselaer, Esq., the Patroon's title to the Manor of Rensselaerwyck, will be urgued in Schenectady, on the first Monday in May, before the Supreme Court Judges of the Fourth District. Van Vechten, Spencer, and Cady, appearing for the plaintiff, and Gov. Seward and Rufus W. Peckham for the defendant. By the consent of both parties, this is made the test suit.

State Agricultural Fair in September next, at Syracuse. Prof. Johnston is one of the most distinguished agricultural chemists in Great Britain.

California adventurers, in considerable numbers, are returning, some from Panama, some from the Rio Grande, and some from the neighborhood of Independence, Mo. The cholera has carried off many who went by way of the Rio Grande.

An arrival, last week, from St. Domingo, brings information that President Soulouque had, after a severe battle, taken from the Dominicans the towns of Las Matas and St. John, in which a great many of the Dominicans were killed and taken prisoners. Many of them escaped, abandoning five large pieces of artillery and a 6-pounder.

The ship Mount Wollaston has arrived at New Bedford from the Sandwich Islands, and brings $20,000 in gold dust, the property of Mr. D. B. Washburn, a passenger, who obtained the same at the dry diggings in California.

Died, in Upton, Nov. 10, Mr. Silas Warren, aged ninety-five years. He was among the soldiers over whom Gen. Washington received command at Cambridge; he was also present at Dorchester Heights when the Americans compelled the British to evacuate Boston.

Capt. Daniel Gano died at his residence in Scott Co., Ky., on the 8th ult., aged 91. He was an officer in the Revolutionary war, and served with great credit to its close. He was of the Order of the Cincinnati, (and believed to be the last,) having a diploma signed by George Washington.

The Detroit Free Press understands that it is the intention of the Central Railroad Company, in connection with the eastern companies, to transport emigrants from New York to any port on Lake Michigan, for $3 each, and 50 cents per hundred lbs. for all extra baggage over fifty lbs.

A work on the "History of the Precious Metals," recently published in Hartford, Conn., says the value of the silver tea-spoons in the United States, is estimated at $36,000,000, of silver table-spoons $27,000,000, of silver forks $4,500,000, and of plate and dining service $5,500,000.

A private telegraphic dispatch received in New York, dated New Orleans, April 16th, says: "Capt. Albert Bliven, of the ship Republic, of New York, was attacked by cholera and died. He was a native of Westerly, R. I., and was highly esteemed by all who knew him."

The Burlington (Iowa) Gazette says that 100 emigrants from a single county, Des Moines, are leaving for California. This is a heavy emigration on a sparse population. Iowa and Wisconsin have more of the California fever than any other States in the Union.

The New Orleans Delta publishes a letter dated Acapulco, Mexico, March 9, which says that all accounts from San Francisco concur that thousands of persons in the vicinity of the placer have perished from cold and hunger during the past winter.

The Illinois Daily Journal says that the cholera is really in Peoria, and that considerable fatality attends the disease. The premonitory symptoms are said to be different from what they were in its former visit to this country.

Missionary Association—Executive Board.

A Quaterly Meeting of the Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association, will be held in New York, on the evening of third-day, May 22, 1849.

By order of the Board, GEO. B. UTTER, Rec. Sec.

The Publishing Society.

A meeting for the organization of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society will be held in the city of New York on the fourth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, (23d day of the month,) commencing at 9 o'clock A. M. It is hoped that a large number of those who have subscribed to the Constitution, and pledged funds to the Society, will be present.

Eastern Association.

The Annual Meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist Eastern Association will be held with the Church in Pawcatuck, R. I., on the fifth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, at 10½ o'clock, A. M. Introductory Discourse by Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J.; alternate, Samuel Davison, of Farmington, Illinois. S. S. GRISWOLD, Cor. Sec.

Executive Committee.—The Executive Committee of the Eastern Association will hold its annual session on the fourth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, in the lecture-room of the Seventh-day Baptist Church at Pawcatuck, R I. at 10½ o'clock, A. M. S. S. Griswold.

P. S. Churches are requested to specify in their associational letters the amount they will raise for missionary pur poses within the limits of the Association for the ensuing year.

Central Association.

The Annual Meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist Central Association, will be holden with the First Church in Brookfield, N. Y., commencing on the fourth day of the week before the second Sabbath in June, 1849.

Notice—Western Association.

The attention of the churches of the Seventh-day Baptist Western Association is particularly directed to the Report of a Committee appointed at the last annual session to revise the Constitution. That Report was received and referred to the churches for individual action; and is, together with the Constitution as it now stands, published in the Minutes of the last session. It is very desirable that the matter should be brought before every church, where it has not already been done, and the result of the action forwarded to the approaching Anniversary of the Association. That the Constitution needs revision, must be evident to all who give it even a passing notice; and in all matters of constitutional reform a full voice should be heard. Will the churches speak out? T. E. BABCOCK, Cor. Sec.

Christian Psalmody.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office. It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Albany, April 30, 1849. E. FOSTER, Jr.,
Secretary Albany and Schenectady R. R. Co.

To Clergymen and their People.

All Clergymen who will send their address to Messrs. Comstock & Company, No. 21 Courtland-street—(after the 1st of May No. 57 John-street)—New York, shall be furnished gratuitously, for their family use, with a Salve of most extraordinary merit for external sores or inflammations of long or short standing. In burns, or pains and swellings of nearly all descriptions, its effects are charming, and almost beyond belief. This Salve has already been used by quite a number of the clergy, for themselves or sufferers to whom they have given it; and they have called on or written to the proprietors to express their delight at its action, and a desire to have their names used in making known its virtues. The proprietors having realized a handsome sum by its sale, feel called upon by a sense of duty to their fellow-men to disseminate the knowledge of the existence of such a thing far and near, and to give it without charge to the reverend clergy without limitation. It is called CONNEL'S PAIN EXTRACTOR, and is owned solely by Messrs. C. & Co. All religious papers that will publish this a few times will be furnished with the Salve free, and they may also thereby relieve many suffering poor brethren from agonizing pain, and save them much expense. The names of nearly fifty clergymen recommending it, are to be seen at the office of C. & Co.

You will please observe, it is no "sovereign remedy for all complaints," but only intended for external applications in the following:—Burns, Scalds, Frosted parts, Chilblains, Chafe or Galls, Chaps, Tetter, Pimple, Blotch, Felon, Ulcer Sprains, Erysipelas, Cuts, Bruises, Ear and Toothache, Mumps, Sore Throat, Whitlows, Piles, Ringworm, Salt Rheum, Barber's Itch, Carbuncle, Eruption, Sore Eyes and Lids, Weak Sight, Sore Lips, Punctures, Biles and Warts, Fever Pains, Tender Feet, Inflammatory Rheumatism, Tic Doloureux, Ague in Face and Breast, Fever Sores, Old Burn Scars, Prickly Heat, Inflamed Skin, Broken Breast, Sore Nipples, Rough Hands, Blistered Surfaces, Dressing for Blisters, White Swellings, Cold in Wounds, Sore Corns, General Sores, Smallpox Marks, &c.

Though we have named numerous affections, experience has taught us that they are not too many. It will be necessary to know that this article is the only one we can recommend; but must caution against some imitation by like name. We will present it to the poor who have actual need of it.

38—mo 3.

OUR HOMESTEAD.

BY MISS PHEBE CAREY.

Our old brown homestead reared its walls
From the wayside dust aloof,
Where the apple boughs could almost cast
Their fruitage on its roof;
And the cherry trees so near it grew
That, when awake I've lain
In the lonesome nights, I've heard the limbs
As they cracked against the pane;
And those orchard trees—O those orchard trees!
I've seen my little brothers rocked
In their tops by the summer breeze.

The sweet briar under the window sill,
Which the early birds made glad,
And the damask rose by the garden fence,
Were all the flowers we had.
I've looked at many a flower since then,
Exotics rich and rare,
That in other eyes were lovelier,
But not to me so fair;
For those roses bright—those roses bright—
I've twined them with my sister's locks,
That are lain in the dust from sight.

We had a well—a deep, old well—
Where the spring was never dry,
And the cool drops down from the mossy stones
Were falling constantly;
And there never was water half so sweet
As that in my little cup,
Drawn from the curb by the rude old sweep
Which my father's hand set up;
And that deep old well—O that deep old well!
I remember yet the plashing sound
Of the bucket as it fell.

Our homestead had an ample hearth,
Where at night we loved to meet;
Where my mother's voice was always kind,
And her smile was always sweet;
And there I've sat on my father's knee,
And watched his thought brow,
With my childish hand in his raven hair—
That hair is silver now!
But that broad hearth's light—O that broad hearth's light!
And my father's look, and my mother's smile,
They are in my heart to-night. [Tribune.

DEATH OF REV. WILLIAM J. POHLMAN.

By the Europa we have received the particulars of the sad accident by which this devoted missionary was deprived of his life. He was on his return from Hong Kong to Amoy, in the schooner Omega, having accompanied his sister to the former place for the benefit of her health. On the night of the 5th of January, about 2 P. M., off Breakers' Point, about half-way between Hong Kong and Amoy, distant from the shore about a quarter of a mile, the vessel struck upon rocks.

The wind was blowing fresh and the sea running high. By the advice of Mr. Pohlman they all remained upon the vessel until daylight, for the weather was thick and hazy, when they attempted to get a rope on shore by one of the men who was a good swimmer, but owing to the high and strong waves, and the breakers on the beach, they could not succeed. As soon as it was light, the wreck was discovered by some Chinamen on shore. They gave the alarm, and it was not long before there were hundreds collected on the beach.

The vessel was fast going to pieces and filling with water. Some of the Chinamen, to the number of twelve or more, swam from the shore to the wreck, and commenced pilfering whatever they could lay their hands upon. In this dreadful situation, the waves breaking over the vessel, the cabin having filled with water, and the trunks and boxes having floated out, the hatches being washed open, and the decks cleared of every thing, Mr. Pohlman told the Chinese, with the consent of the captain, that they could have every thing. The only thing they, the crew, wished for, was to preserve their lives. In this situation they remained until the captain judged it to be low tide, which was about 12 M., when they lowered the boat, (in doing which it was slightly stove.) The captain, first and second mates, Mr. Pohlman, and about a dozen of the crew, who said they could not swim, got into it; leaving all who could swim, except the gunner and steward, upon the wreck. When the boat shoved off from the vessel the captain ordered those left behind to jump into the water and swim ashore. They did jump into the water, but instead of swimming to the shore, they caught hold of the sides of the boat in such numbers as to swamp her, and she immediately went down. Of all that were in her, Capt. Anderson, the second mate, the gunner, and the steward, were the only ones who succeded in getting to shore. All the rest were drowned.

The crew consisted of 37. 12 were drowned and 25 were saved. 6 of the crew were Chinamen; 3 of these were drowned. As soon as the boat sunk and they were all thrown into the water, Mr. Hutchinson, the first mate, caught hold of the legs of the gunner, who was a good swimmer. The gunner disengaged himself and turned round to look after Mr. H. when he saw him sinking. At the same moment he saw Mr. Pohlman, with his face under the water, and struggling with his hands above the surface. This was the last that was seen of Mr. Pohlman. Every thing in the vessel was lost. The Chinese from the shore waded up to their waists in water to meet those who were struggling to get on shore.

As soon as they could lay their hands upon them, they stripped them of their clothing; in doing which, they murdered Capt. Anderson, by holding his head under water until he was drowned. Those who reached the shore alive had to make their escape without clothes, and so travel to Cup-Chee, a village about 12 or 15 miles distant from the wreck, where the people were kind enough to give them a few rags to cover themselves with, and something to eat.

From this village they traveled on by slow stages, as well as they could, subsisting upon the charity of the Chinese Mandarins in the different villages through which they passed, until they reached Canton, on the 8th of January. On one occasion, they were all locked up in jail during the night without food. The next morning the Mandarin released them, and gave them each forty cash (about three cents) and sent them on their way.

The motive for Capt. Anderson's murder was doubtless that he had more and better clothing on than any of his crew. It is altogether likely that had Mr. Pohlman succeeded in getting to shore, the cupidity of the Chinese and their anxiety and haste to possess his clothing would have led them to lay violent hands on him also. Mr. Thompson, the second mate, from whom these particulars were obtained, and who was in the boat with Mr. Pohlman, says that he was quite calm and self-possessed. He was prepared for any event. Death to him was but the entrance into life. The Chinamen, in contending for the property of the wreck, killed each other to the number of fifty or sixty.

The above particulars were derived from a letter of Rev. Richard Cole, missionary at Hong Kong, under date of January 26, 1849.

THE LOST-LUGGAGE OFFICE.

From the Quarterly Review.

Without describing in detail this property, we will at once proceed to a large, pitch-dark, subterranean, vaulted chamber, warmed by hot-air iron pipes, in which are deposited the flock of lost sheep, or, without metaphor, the lost luggage of the last two years. Suspended from the roof, there hangs, horizontally, in this chamber, a gas-pipe about eight feet long, and as soon as the brilliant burners at each end were lighted, the scene was really astounding. It would be infinitely easier to say what there is not, than what there is, in the forty compartments, like great wine-bins, in which all this lost property is arranged. One is choke-full of men's hats, another of parasols, umbrellas, and sticks of every description. One would think that all the ladies' reticules on earth were deposited in a third. How many little smelling bottles—how many little embroidered pocket-handkerchiefs—how many little musty eatables and comfortable drinkables—how many little bills, important little notes, and other very small secrets, each may have contained, we felt that we would not for the world have ascertained; but when we gazed at the enormous quantity of red cloaks, red shawls, red tartainplaid, and red scarfs, piled up in one corner, it was, we own, impossible to help reflecting that surely English ladies of all ages, who wear red cloaks, &c., must in some mysterious way or other be powerfully affected by the whine of compressed air, by the sudden ringing of a bell, by the sight of their friends—in short, by the various conflicting emotions that disturb the human heart on arriving at the up terminus of the Euston station—for how else, we gravely asked ourselves, could we possibly account for the extraordinary red heap before us?

Of course, in this Rolando-looking cave there were plenty of carpet-bags, gun-cases, portmanteaus, writing-desks, books, Bibles, cigar-cases, &c., but there were a few articles that certainly we were not prepared to meet with, and which but too clearly proved that the extraordinary terminus excitement which had suddenly caused so many ladies to elope from their red shawls, had equally affected men of all sorts. One gentleman had left behind him a pair of leather hunting breeches! Another his boot-jack! A soldier of the 22d regiment had left his knapsack, containing his kit! Another soldier had left his scarlet regimental coat! Some cripple, probably overjoyed at the sight of his family, had left behind him his crutches! But what astonished us above all was, that some honest Scotchman, probably in the ecs'acy of suddenly seeing among the crowd, the face of his faithful Jeanie, had actually left behind the best portion of his bagpipes! Some little time ago, the superintendent, on breaking open, previous to a general sale, a locked leather hat-box, which had lain in this dungeon two years, found in it, under the hat, £65 in Bank of England notes, with one or two private letters, which enabled him to restore the money to the owner, who, it turned out, had been so positive that he had left his hat-box at a hotel at Birmingham, that he had made no inquiry for it at the railway-office.

THE "OLD OAKEN BUCKET."

We came in possession last week, says the Sunday Age, of an anecdote respecting the origin of Samuel F. Woodworth's famous ballad of that name, which appears to us to possess so much interest, that we can not withhold it from our readers—especially as it has not before been in print.

Several years ago, when Woodworth, the printer, and several other "old New Yorkers," were brother typos in a printing office, situated at the corner of Chatham and Chambers streets, there were very few places in the city where one could enjoy the luxury of a really "good drink." Among the few places much patronized, was an establishment kept by Mallory, in Frankfort-street, on or about the same spot where St. John's Hall recently stood. Woodworth, in company with several particular friends, had "dropped in" at this place one afternoon, for the purpose of partaking of some brandy and water, which Mallory was famous for keeping. The liquor was super-excellent, and Woodworth seemed inspired by it; for, after taking a draught, he set his glass upon the table, (remember, reader, if you please, that in those "rare old times," a man rarely met with a friend without inviting him to imbibe;) and, smacking his lips, declared that Mallory's eau de vie was superior to any thing he had ever tasted. "No," said Mallory, "you are mistaken; there was one thing which, in both our estimations, far surpassed this, in the way of drinking." "What was that?" asked Woodworth, dubiously. "The draught of pure, fresh, spring water, that we used to drink from the old oaken bucket that hung in the well, after our return from the labors of the field on a sultry day in the summer." The tear-drop glistened for a moment in Woodworth's eye. "True—true!" he replied, and shortly after quitted the place. He immediately returned to the office, threw down his stick, grasped a pen, and, in half an hour, "The Old Oaken Bucket,"—one of the most delightful compositions in our language—was ready in manuscript, to be embalmed in the memories of succeeding generations.

New Mode of Washing.—A Mr. Tibbets advertises in the Mobile papers, that he has made a discovery of a chemical nature, by which a large washing of clothes—say five hundred pieces—may be done by one person in twenty-five minutes, without any machine, or any rubbing, and without injury to the clothes. The editor of the Register says, that the experiment was tested at the American Hotel in that city, in the presence of a number of persons, and with the most complete success; and adds, that a knowledge of the ingredients employed in preparing the water enables him to say that their use can work not the slightest injury to the clothing.

HOW TO MAKE SLEEP REFRESHING.

1. Take sufficient exercise in the open air during the day.
2. Eat light suppers, always two or three hours before retiring.
3. Avoid tea and coffee, and all unnatural stimulants.
4. Retire early. All animals, except those that prowl all night, retire to rest soon after the sun goes down. The early hours of sleep are the most sweet and refreshing.
5. Eschew feather beds; sleep on hair or cotton mattrasses, with a light covering of bed clothes.
6. Be sure and have your room well ventilated.

It is well known that the Duke of Wellington, now a hale man, is accustomed to sleep on a hard narrow pallet; and we believe the couch of her Majesty is also of the simplest possible construction. It is reported that the Duke justifies the narrowness of his resting-place, on the plea that when a man wishes to turn, it is then high time to turn out. We seldom hear the laborious peasant complain of restless nights. The indolent, pampered epicure, or the man who overtasks his brain and denies himself bodily exercise, is liable to sleeplessness.

THE POET CAMPBELL.

An American gentleman, while on a visit to the author of Gertrude of Wyoming, told him of a pilgrimage which he and others had made to Wyoming, from their admiration of the author's genius. "It was autumn, and the quiet shores of the Susquehanna were bathed in the yellow light of Indian summer. Every day we wandered through the primeval forest, and when tired would sit down under their solemn shade, among the falling leaves, and read Gertrude. It was in these thick woods, where we could hear no sound but the song of the birds, or the squirrel cracking his nuts, away from the busy world, that I felt the power of Campbell's genius."

Campbell took his hand, pressed it, and said, "God bless you, sir; you make me happy, although you make me weep. This is more than I can bear. It is dearer to me than all the praise I have had before, to think that in that wild American scenery, I have had such readers."

Campbell was never in the United States, and of course never saw the scenery of the valley; yet he could not have described it better had he seen it.

The Horse.—Like his master, he is of a complicated structure, and needs care, kindness, good air, and variety of food. Mr. Pell, of Pelham, gives the following directions:—

"Feed them in winter on a variety of food, such as oats, ground and whole, bran, ship-stuff, beans, peas, turnips, occasionally steamed, separately or together. In summer, keep them always confined in airy stables, and feed them on clover, bruised grains, green corn-stalks, cider pomace, oil cake, hay, &c. Be particular to give them three-fourths of a pound of salt per week; occasionally 2 oz. of sulphur, and frequently 2 oz. of wood ashes. I have a pair of horses," he observes, "on my farm, that are now twenty years old, during which time they have never been at pasture, and have worked daily; they have never been incapacitated for work by lameness, or disease of any kind, and have always been perfectly healthy."

He also adds, that he has another pair of sorrels that are eighteen years old, which labor daily, and will do as much as any pair of six years old.

Shoe Pegs.—The following interesting sketch of a factory where 1,000 bushels of pegs are made annually, at Vienna Village, Kennebec County, is from the Maine Farmer: The logs are sawed into blocks of suitable length for the pegs, and the ends are planed smooth. Grooves are then cut on the ends of these blocks, crossing each other at right angles, and these form the points of the pegs. They are then separated by splitting the blocks, a knife being introduced between each row of points, corresponding with the grooving. All these operations are performed by the machinery with the utmost precision and celerity. The pegs are then bleached, dried, and prepared for market. We do not know what farther improvements can be made in the manufacture of shoe-pegs. Mr. Thomas C. Norris, the proprietor of this factory, informed us, that since September last, he had sent 127 barrels of shoe-pegs, and pins for cabinet work, to Manchester, England. He has farther orders from the same place, which he is unable to supply at present, in consequence of the water being so low in the stream that he could not keep his works in operation through the Winter.

Slavery in Brazil.—The Journal of Commerce says that upwards of fifty thousand slaves are annually imported into Brazil, and sold for $200 each, about ten times their cost in Africa; and although one-third of the vessels engaged in the trade, and a like proportion of the slaves embarked, are annually captured, the trade is said to be unprecedently flourishing. The combined efforts of Great Britain and the United States have failed to effect its suppression; but by rendering its prosecution difficult and dangerous, they have subserved the cause of humanity, as none but the fastest vessels, in most instances steamers, are now employed in the trade, and the suffering and mortality incident to the voyage have been materially diminished by shortening its duration. Perhaps those efforts have prevented the extension of the slave-trade; though it is believed that the supply keeps nearly even pace with the demand. But it is clearly by other means than those heretofore adopted, that the Brazilian slave-trade is to be suppressed, if at all.

Love for the Horse.—"You do justice," said my friend Christopher Hughes, "to my opinions on the horse! They are more than opinions; with me it is instinct to love that noble animal! I consider the horse as the creature in animated nature next in importance and in dignity to man. And I know no animal more base than the man who undervalues or overworks the horse. Nor are there many subjects more worthy of a human care and enlightened legislation, for improvement and protection, than is this gallant, and generous, and useful animal, which most men admire, all use, and many, alas! many abuse." [Skinner.

Origin of Fogs.—The very common, but mistaken idea, that the fog which we see of an evening hanging over low meadows, and by the sides of streams, is caused by the dampness of those regions, arises very naturally from our first observing it in low places, and, as the cool of the evening advances, remarking that it ascends to higher land; the fact is, however, not that the damp is ascending, but that from the coldness of those situations they are the first places which condense the before invisible vapor, and as the cold of the evening advances, the condensation takes place at a higher level. A large portion of the vapor ascends to the upper region of the atmosphere, where it cools and becomes visible to us in the form of clouds; and increasing in density by cooling, they gradually descend nearer the earth, until at last, becoming too condensed by the loss of heat, they fall in rain, to be again returned in endless succession. [Scientific Phenomena.

London Milk.—Milk in London is not quite what it is in the country; the chalk-pit and the pump have sometimes more to do with it than the cow. The number of cows kept for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants of London and its environs with milk, remarks Youatt, is about 12,000. The quantity of milk yielded by all these cows, at 9 quarts per day, amounts to 39,420,000 quarts, or 27 quarts of genuine milk for each individual. The retail dealers usually sell the milk for 4d. per quart, after the cream is separated from it, and then obtain 3s. per quart for the cream; beside this a great deal of water is mixed with the skimmed milk, so that we far underrate the price when we calculate that the genuine milk sells at 6d. per quart, which makes the money expended on milk in the British metropolis amount to £985,500, or nearly a million of pounds per annum. If we again divide the £985,500 by 12,000, the number of cows, we shall have the strange and almost incredible sum of £82, as the money produced by the milk of each cow.

Railway Accidents in Great Britain.—An analysis of the returns from all the railways in operation in Great Britain and Ireland for the last six months of 1848, shows this result: 112 persons killed, 120 injured; thirty-one millions five hundred thousand persons conveyed on the roads, or about one accident to every 140,000 persons—in other words, making the chances of safety 140,000 to 1 for every passenger. The proportion of safety becomes still larger when, on farther analysis, we find that of actual passengers there were killed only 15, and injured 73. Of these only three were killed and 68 injured from causes beyond their own control; the others suffering by reason of their own misconduct or incaution. Twenty-three persons were killed and five injured by crossing, standing, or otherwise trespassing on the railway.

Raise more Fruit.—When Dr. Dwight first removed to New Haven, there was but little fruit raised there. He urged his neighbors to plant fruit trees, but they said it was of no use, for the boys would steal all the fruit. "Plant more fruit," was the answer. "Make good fruit plenty, and it will not be plundered." Fifteen years afterwards, he pointed to the abundance of fruit and the absence of pillage then enjoyed, in proof of his principle.

VARIETY.

Dr. Johnson, once hearing a bishop say what is called grace before meat, in some such words as these, "For what we are about to receive, the Lord make us thankful," addressed him, "My lord, do you think that God will hear that prayer?" "I hope so," replied the prelate. "Then be assured," said the Doctor, "that he will not; for he will reject every prayer which is not presented to him in the name of his Son."

That world-renowned chemist, Liebig, says that a single pound of bone dust, contains as much phosphoric acid as one hundred pounds of wheat. From this we can easily perceive, that there are bones wasted on every farm in this State sufficient to manure the entire wheat crop.

A sportsman of Gloucester, a short time since, brought home seven young foxes, and put four with a kitten which was in the house. The old cat has since taken care of and nursed them the same as her own kitten, and they are now fat and hearty.

An Indian having been found frozen to death, an inquest of his countrymen was convened to determine by what means he came to such a death. Their verdict was, "Death from the freezing of a great quantity of water inside of him, which they were of opinion he had drunk for rum."

We once heard of a preacher who was called upon by some of his congregation to pray for rain, of which the crops stood greatly in need. His reply was, that he would pray if his congregation desired it, but he was very sure it would not rain until the wind shifted.

R. Manning, of Salem, by cutting off all the blossoms from a Baldwin apple-tree, in the spring of its bearing year, changed the fruitful year to the next season. The unfruitful seasons have become bearing years, and vice versa.

Some one, looking at a rich man, said, "Poor man, he toiled day and night until he was forty, to gain his wealth, and he has been watching it day and night, ever since, for his victuals and clothes."

The most worthless of all family treasures are indolent females. If a wife knows nothing of domestic duties beyond the parlor or the boudoir, she is not a helpmate, but an incumbrance.

It is a truth well established among cultivators, that land planted with fruit trees of good varieties will yield to the acre more food for man and beast than any other crops, with less labor.

Professor Mulder, who has been thoroughly investigating the potato, solemnly denounces it as an article of food, and says it is the "cause of the moral and physical degradation of the nations that use it."

Lord Brougham once, in the House of Peers, "thanked God" that the English people were "under recognizance of £800,000,000 to keep the peace under any circumstances."

Garrick said he would give a hundred guineas if he could say "O!" as Whitfield did.

TERMS AND VACATIONS.

The Academic Year for 1848–9, is divided into Three Terms of Fourteen Weeks each.

First, commencing Wednesday, Aug. 23, ending Nov. 29.
Second, " " Dec. 13, " March 21.
Third, " April 4, " July 11.

COURSE OF STUDY.

The classic course gives full facilities to Students for an advanced standing in College. The Ornamental and Scientific Departments are such as to meet the advancing demands of this educating age. Each member of the school will be required to write compositions, and read or speak select pieces, at stated intervals.

EXPENSES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Tuition, according to studies, | | $3, $4, or $5 0 |
| Extras— | Drawing, | 1 00 |
| | Painting, | $2 00 or 4 00 |
| | Tuition on Piano, | 8 00 |
| | Use of Piano, | 2 00 |
| | Chemical Lectures, and Experiments, | 1 00 |
| | Writing, including Stationery, | 50 |
| Study rooms, with stove, chairs, table, and bedstead, | | 1 50 |
| Board in private families, per week, | | $1 00 to 1 50 |

TEACHERS' CLASSES.

Classes will be formed at the opening of the First Term and middle of the Second Term, to continue seven weeks, with daily lectures and instructions in relation to the duties of those intending to teach, accompanied by a thorough review of the Common English branches. Tuition, $2 50.

AGRICULTURAL AND ANALYTIC CHEMISTRY.

Instructions in this Department, will be equal to any that can be obtained in the State, but will not be fully opened until about the first of January. A circular explaining more fully this Department, will be forwarded to any wishing it, by applying to the Principal, at DeRuyter; or Gurdon Evans, Analytic Laboratory, Yale College, New Haven, Ct.

Text books furnished at the lowest prices.

Kitto's Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature.

TO CLERGYMEN AND OTHER STUDENTS OF THE BIBLE.—The undersigned beg leave to ask your attention to the following Work, which they now offer for sale. Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature, in two thick volumes of 1,878 pages royal octavo, beautifully and substantially bound, by JOHN KITTO, D. D., F. S. A., &c., published by MARK H. NEWMAN & Co., 199 Broadway, New York.

This Work contains such information as is indispensable for the right understanding of the Bible and its historical interpretation. It comprehends Criticism, Geography, Natural History, and Antiquities, in all their branches, religious, political, social, and domestic.

The Works of Horne, Calmet, and others, are now found to be wholly inadequate to the wants of the student. Theological science is progressive, as well as every other, and the "old learning" of the "Bible Dictionaries" which have for so long a time been in use, is felt to be unequal to the advancement of mankind at the present time.

The efforts of the German Rationalists, of the Strauss school, to resolve all the facts of Bible History into myths and fables, has awakened a corresponding spirit of research among sound and Christian scholars; a determination to place the Scriptures upon a basis of indisputable evidence. The result has been, the discovery and accumulation of a mass of information from every portion of the field of biblical learning. A multitude of new, striking, and most useful facts have thus been placed at the disposal of the editor of this work. He has accordingly availed himself of all the latest discoveries down to the very year of its publication.

Nor is the Cyclopedia compiled by one man alone. Dr. Kitto distributed the subjects discussed to more than forth different individuals, of the first eminence in those departments. Their names are attached to their articles, and they are thus individually responsible for them. The Natural History of the Bible was written expressly for this work, by two distinguished Naturalists. The Botany of Scripture, by Dr. Royle, of King's College, London. The articles on Scriptural Zoology, by Hamilton Smith, President of the Devon and Cornwall Natural History Society. The articles in the department of Criticism, by Dr. Davidson, Professor of Biblical Literature in the Lancashire Independent College. Those on the Books of the Old and New Testament, by Havernich, Hengstenberg, Dr. Wright, of Dublin, and others.

The articles on the New Testament were furnished by Dr. Tholuck, Dr. Alexander, and others.

Various subjects are discussed, by Dr. John Pye Smith, Dr. Woods, of Andover, and others.

The Scriptural Geography exhibits the results of Dr. Robinson's biblical researches in Palestine.

It will be seen, therefore, that the work is a compilation of biblical learning, by the ablest biblical scholars of the age.

The undersigned ask the attention of students of the Bible to the Cyclopedia, in full confidence that no one acquainted with its character will suffer himself to be without a copy. The low price at which it is offered, (less than half the price of the English edition,) places it within the reach of all.

MARK H. NEWMAN & Co.

NOTICES OF THE CYCLOPEDIA.

From Horne, Author of "Horne's Introduction to the Study of the Scriptures," last edition.

"This Cyclopedia surpasses every Biblical Dictionary which has preceded it, and leaves nothing to be desired in such a work which can throw light on the criticism, interpretation, history, geography, archeology, and physical science of the Bible."

From the Biblical Repertory and Princeton Review.

"Dr. Kitto comes recommended even to those not acquainted with his other writings, by the well-known general facts of his experience and success as a book-maker, and of his long familiarity, in this capacity at least, with Biblical subjects.

"He has boldly and faithfully acted on the principle that such a plan can be worthily executed, in the present state of learning, only by distributing its parts among many hands, and such hands too as have been fitted by anterior experience to perform them most successfully."

From the Biblical Repository.

"The limits of a notice like the present forbid such a description of this learned work as its merits deserve, or sufficient to give the reader a just idea of its plan. We regard it as a most important and practically useful contribution to the cause of sound Biblical learning, and have no doubt that it will soon take the place, in the estimate of scholars, of every compilation of the kind.

"The enlistment of so many scholars in the production of a single work, each one presenting in a brief compass the results of a life-time of research, in precisely the matters where he is most at home, could not fail of enriching it with an amount of learning and scholarship to which, of course, the work of no single mind, however great, could pretend."

From the Methodist Quarterly Review.

"This work was not compiled in the method hitherto usual with works of similar character, namely, on the basis of Calmet and the old learning of his day, with a few shreds of modern discovery interwoven. All the more important articles are written expressly for their present use, not by one individual, but by an arrangement between not less than forty different scholars in Europe and America, all of whom stand high in their several departments."

The Cyclopedia can be ordered through the local Booksellers in every part of the country.

CHRIST'S KINGDOM—WHEN IS IT? AND WHAT IS IT?

Being the substance of a Lecture delivered before the Bible Class of the Seventh-day Baptist Church of Scott, N. Y. By a Member of the Class. Published by request of the class and the congregation who heard the lecture.

Luke 1: 32, 33—He shall be great, and shall be called the son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end.

In the remarks I am about to make, it will be my purpose to give an answer to the question, In what sense was the subject of this declaration to possess the throne of David, and reign over the house of Jacob? In examining this question, (as well as all other subjects of religious belief,) it is necessary that the numerous texts having a bearing on it should be applied in such a manner as to give their original meaning, and that the legitimate meaning of the passages should be scrupulously adhered to. In my opinion, all the predictions in relation to Christ, his conception, his birth, his life, his sufferings, his death and resurrection, his glorious appearing and kingly authority, and, finally, all his offices and attributes, are to be interpreted by the same rule; otherwise, we are liable to produce confusion, all our theories will be conflicting, and whatever views of Scripture revelation we may adopt will very likely be confuted by some other portion of Scripture, in accordance with the rule we ourselves have laid down.

Having thus premised, I would ask, How did Mary, the mother of our Lord, to whom the words of our text were spoken, understand the declaration that her son was to possess the throne of David, and reign over the house of Jacob? I frankly admit, that her understanding, if that could be definitely ascertained, is not an infallible guide to the truth. But what would be the construction she would naturally place on the message she received from the heavenly messenger? For what was the message sent? Was it that she might know what would take place? Or, was it partly for that, and partly to deceive her, so that she might expect some things to take place that never would take place? What could she understand the throne of David to be? She knew that David was the first of a kingly line, to whom it was said, in 2 Sam. 7: 16, "Thine house and thy throne shall be established forever before thee; thy throne shall be established forever;" and in Ps. 89: 4, "Thy seed will I establish forever, and build up thy throne to all generations." She knew that it had been said, (Gen. 49: 10,) "The scepter shall not depart from Judah, nor a law-giver from between his feet, until Shiloh come; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be." She knew, that the God of heaven and earth, "who cannot lie," had sworn with an oath, (Ps. 132 and Acts 2: 39,) "Of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne." She knew that David was a civil ruler—that he was the monarch of the nation to which she belonged—and that David did not simply "reign in the hearts of his people" or subjects, but was a king, exercising the functions of civil authority. She knew that she was of the tribe of Judah, of the lineage of David; and, in addition to all this previous knowledge, she was here told by the angel Gabriel, sent from God, that to her first-born son the Lord God would give the throne of his father David, and that he should reign over the house of Jacob forever. She knew that the prophecies of Moses, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Daniel, &c., relating to the political history of her own nation and others, though given in bold and unequivocal language, so far as they had been fulfilled, were literally fulfilled; and in view of all these facts, together with the quite prevalent opinion that the Messiah was about to come, and the opinion of the Jews that Christ, when he came, would abide forever, (John 12: 34;) in view of all this, I say, did or could Mary understand the reign spoken of by the angel to be a mere mystical or moral reign?—that her son never should administer civil government?—that he never should wield the scepter over the nation to whose kingly line he belonged?

Without stopping in this place to answer these questions, I will proceed to say, that the prophecies of the Old Testament speak of the Redeemer in a two-fold character, the one greatly in contrast with the other. He is represented, to use the words of a well-known writer on the prophecies, "as weak, and as powerful; as humble, and as exalted; as degraded and outcast, and as triumphant and glorious; as a mean man, of no form and comeliness, and numbered with the vile of the earth, and as a victorious and irresistible conqueror and mighty king." The first part of each of these predictions has been fulfilled to the letter. But the common idea that the latter part, viz. of his power, his exaltation, his glory, and his kingly authority, &c., is in progress of being fulfilled, is doubted, from the fact that if such be the case, the fulfillment is of an entirely different character from the former. The former were fulfilled in the literal sense of the terms employed. The latter, if they are being fulfilled, according to the common idea, are being fulfilled in a spiritual sense. To me there appears to be an impropriety in applying one mode of interpretation to a class of prophecies which the Scriptures inform us are fulfilled, and another mode to a class which was to be fulfilled after the Scriptures had been written. There is a curious contrast between some Christians and some of the Jews in interpreting those prophecies; for, while the Christian literalizes the former and spiritualizes the latter, the Jew spiritualizes the former and literalizes the latter. Indeed, by the Jew the former is almost entirely overlooked. Since each class of predictions is couched in the same kind of language, what good reason have we for saying or thinking, that Christ will not yet appear in his glory, and "restore the kingdom to Israel," and sit on the throne of David, and subdue the kingdoms of the earth to his righteous reign, and, in the infinitude of his perfections, execute justice and equality in the earth? If this latter class of prophecies are not fulfilled in their literal sense, how are we certain that literal events, though similar to those described by the prophets, are the ones to which the prophets allude? For my own part, I conceive that there is no certainty about it, for there is no criterion by which to judge what events the prophets have reference to.

Let us now examine some of those passages of the prophets that have reference to Christ's humiliation and sufferings.

Isaiah 1: 14.—"Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son." This, though considered as allegorical by the Jews, is generally, by Christians, considered as meant to be literally understood, and its fulfillment recorded in Matt. 1: 18, and also in the first chapter of Luke.

Micah 5: 2.—"Thou Bethlehem Ephrata, . . out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel." This passage gives a literal indication of the birth-place of the Messiah, as is generally admitted by the Christian world, and was also pointed out by the chief priest and scribes of the people, (Matt. 2: 5,) before they knew that the Saviour was born, as indicating the place of his birth. So firmly was this opinion fixed in the minds of the Jews, that they attempted to confute the idea of Jesus being the Messiah, by saying, (John 7: 41, 42,) "Shall Christ come out of Galilee? Hath not the Scripture said that Christ cometh of the seed of David, and out of the town of Bethlehem where David was?"

Zechariah 9: 9.—"Behold, thy king cometh unto thee; he is just, having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass." We are informed in the 21st chapter of Matthew, that Christ rode into Jerusalem in the manner described, and that it was done "that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet;" and, in John 12: 16, we are assured that "these things understood not his disciples at first, but when Jesus was glorified, then remembered they that these things were written of him, and that they had done these things unto him."

Isaiah 53: 3.—"We hid as it were our faces from him." John says, chap. 1, v. 11—"He came to his own, and his own received him not."

Psalm 22: 18.—It was said of him, "They part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture." In Matt. 27: 35, it is said, that "they crucified him, and parted his garments, casting lots, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet," which was a literal fulfillment.

Isaiah 53: 7.—"He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth; he is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth." This prophesy very graphically describes the transactions recorded in Matt. 27: 12, 13. "And when he was accused of the chief priests and elders, he answered nothing. Then said Pilate unto him, Hearest thou not how many things they witness against thee? And he answered him to never a word."

Zechariah 11: 12.—"So they weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver." Fulfillment—"And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver." Matt. 26: 15.

Zechariah 11: 13.—"And the Lord said unto me, Cast it unto the potter; a goodly price that I was prized of them. And I took the thirty pieces of silver, and cast them to the potter in the house of the Lord." Fulfillment—"And he cast down the thirty pieces of silver, and departed;" (Matt. 27: 5,) "and they took counsel, and brought with them the potter's field to bury strangers in;" (verse 7,) "then was fulfilled that which was spoken by the prophet," (verse 9.)

Isaiah 53: 12.—"And he was numbered with the transgressors." Fulfillment—"And with him they crucified two thieves." Mark 15: 27.

Psalm 34: 20.—"He keepeth all his bones; not one of them is broken." Fulfillment—"But when they came to Jesus, and saw that he was dead already, they break not his legs." John 19: 33. We are farther informed, that in this the Scriptures were fulfilled.

Zechariah 12: 10.—"Whom they have pierced." Fulfillment—"But one of the soldiers, with a spear, pierced his side." John 19: 34.

Texts of like character might be multiplied indefinitely; but sufficient has been quoted to answer my purpose. It will be seen, that the life of Christ, during his incarnation, was a life of suffering; and it is said of him, in Acts 3: 18, "But those things which God before had showed by the mouth of all the prophets, that Christ should suffer, he hath so fulfilled." But how were they fulfilled? From the texts already adduced, and others that might be adduced, it will be seen that they were literally fulfilled, the New Testament writers themselves being judges. I think, then, it is clear, that the prophets, in foretelling Christ's incarnation, his sufferings, and death, spoke the very things that should take place, and that they descended even to the minute particulars of what would and did come to pass, without spiritualizing or allegory. Not only so, but other prophecies relating to the political changes that have transpired in the world—(and would it be too much to say all the prophecies that have been fulfilled?)—have been fulfilled in the same literal manner. Inasmuch as this is so, what good reason can be rendered why the other class of predictions, viz. those relating to his glorious appearing, and which represent him as a mighty king, EXECUTING JUSTICE AND EQUITY IN THE EARTH, will not be fulfilled in the same manner?

But it is objected, that the prophecies having reference to the Messiah are not all of that character to admit of a literal interpretation. The same kind of language being used to depict Christ's humiliation that is used in depicting his glory; the latter is not a whit more figurative than the former; both are uttered in the same lofty poetic strain, and in some instances both are contained in the same sentence, as in Isaiah 52: 13, 15—"Behold, my servant shall deal prudently; he shall be exalted, and extolled, and be very high. As many were astonished at thee, (his visage was marred more than any man, and his form than the sons of men,) so shall he sprinkle many nations; the kings shall shut their mouths at him, for that which had not been told them shall they see, and that which they had not heard shall they consider." If the "marring of his visage" was literally fulfilled, why may he not literally be exalted above the kings of the earth? Micah 5: 2—"But thou, Bethlehem Ephrata, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel." If Christ was born in literal Bethlehem, in literal Judah, in accordance with this prophesy, why may he not, by the same prophesy, interpreted by the same rule, be literal ruler of literal Israel? Compare this with Isaiah 9: 7. [To be continued.

RECIPROCITY OF RELIGIOUS RIGHTS.

BY OLIVER CROMWELL.

So long as there is liberty of conscience for the Supreme Magistrate to exercise his conscience in erecting what form of church government he is satisfied he should set up, why should he not give the like liberty to others? Liberty of conscience is a natural right, and he that would have it ought to give it. Indeed, that hath been one of the vanities of our contest. Every sect saith: "O give me liberty." But give it him into his power—he will not give it to any else. Where is your ingenuousness? Liberty of conscience is a thing that ought to be very reciprocal. I may say it to you, I can say it: All the money of this nation would not have tempted men to fight upon such an account as they have been engaged in, if they had not had hopes of liberty of conscience, better than Episcopalians granted them, or than would have been afforded by a Scot's Presbytery, or an English either. This, I say, is fundamental. It ought to be so. It is for us and for generations to come. And if there be an absoluteness in the imposer, without fitting allowances and exceptions from the rule, we shall have the people driven into the wilderness, as were those poor and afflicted people, who forsook their estates and inheritances, here, where they lived plentifully and comfortably, were necessitated, for enjoyment of their liberty, to go into a waste, howling wilderness in New England, where they have, for liberty's sake, stripped themselves of all their comfort, embracing rather loss of friends and want, than to be ensnared in bondage!

Men who believe in the remission of sins through the blood of Jesus Christ, who live upon the grace of God, are members of Jesus Christ, and are to Him the apple of his eye. Whoever hath this faith, let his form be what it will, he walking peaceably, without prejudice to others under other forms—it is a debt due to God, and Christ, and He will require it, if that Christian may not enjoy his liberty.

THE MOHAMMEDAN COMMANDMENTS.—There are six commandments in the Mohammedan religion, viz: I. There is no deity but God. II. There is no prophet but Mohammed—he is God's Apostle. III. To fast during Ramadan every day. IV. To pray and practice ablutions five times a day. V. To apply two-and-a-half per cent of their property to the poor. VI. To make a pilgrimage to Mecca and Mount Ararat. This religion is so general that it has nearly one-fifth of the population of the globe as its followers. Its most important duties are prayer, alms-giving, fasting and pilgrimage. The hours of prayer are five, viz: 1st, at sunset; 2d, when the evening has closed, and it is quite dark; 3d, at day-break, on the first appearance of light in the east; 4th. at noon; 5th, about mid-time, between noon and nightfall.

"For behold the Kingdom of God is within you."

BY HARRIET WINSLOW.

Pilgrim to the heavenly city,
  Groping wildering on thy way—
Look not to the outward landmark,
  List not what the blind guides say.

For long years thou hast been seeking
  Some new idol found each day;
All that dazzled, all that glittered,
  Lured thee from the path away.

On the outward world relying,
  Earthly treasures thou wouldst keep;
Titled friends and lofty honors
  Lull thy higher hopes to sleep.

Thou art stored with worldly wisdom,
  All the lore of books is thine;
And within thy stately mansion,
  Brightly sparkle wit and wine.

Richly drop the silken curtains,
  Round those high and mirrored halls;
And on mossy Persian carpets,
  Silently thy proud steps fall.

Yet, midst all these outward riches,
  Has thy heart no void confessed—
Whispering, though each wish be granted,
  Still, Oh, still I am not blessed?

Thou art heir to vast possessions,
  Up, and boldly claim thine own;
Seize the crown, that waits thy wearing,
  Leap at once into thy throne.

Look not to some cloudy mansion,
  'Mong the planets far away;
Trust not to the distant future,
  Let thy heaven begin to-day.

When thy struggling soul hath conquered,
  When the path lies fair and clear,
When thou art prepared for heaven,
  Thou wilt find that heaven is here.

DEVIL WORSHIPERS.

Mr. Layard, in his recently published work on the Antiquities of Nineveh, gives a very interesting account of a strange people, who have been little known to the rest of the world, but who have inhabited Mesopotamia and the neighboring countries, time out of mind. These are the Yezidis, or Worshipers of the Devil. We extract the following account from the London Quarterly Review:—

The third expedition of Mr. Layard led him among a still more remarkable people, perhaps in their origin not only much older than the Nestorian form of Christianity, but even than Christianty itself. He is admitted into the rites, almost into the inmost sanctuary of that singular race, who bear the ill-omened name of Devil-worshipers. He is the first European, we believe, who has received almost unreserved communication as to the nature of their tenets; though, probably from the ignorance of the Yezidis themselves, he has by no means solved the problem either of the date or the primal source of their curious doctrines. How extraordinary the vitality even of the wildest and strangest forms of religious belief! Here are tribes proscribed for centuries, almost, perhaps, for thousands of years, under the name most odious to all other religious creeds—hated and persecuted by the Christians, as, if not guilty of an older and more wicked belief, at least infected by the most detested heresy, Manicheism—trampled upon, hunted down, driven from place to place by the Mussulmen, as being of those idolaters, the people without a book, towards whom the Koran itself justifies or commands implacable enmity. Against the Yezidis, even in the present day, the Moslem rulers most religiously fulfill the precepts of their Scripture—making razzias among them, massacreing the males, and carrying off the women, especially the female children, into their harems. That fanatic persecution, which accidental circumstances suddenly and fatally kindled against the Chaldean Christians, has been the wretched lot, time out of mind, of the Yezidis. Towards the Christians, the Koran contained more merciful texts—towards the Devil-worshipers none. Yet here are they subsisting in the nineteenth century—flourishing tribes, industrious tribes, cleanly beyond most Asiatics—not found in one district alone, but scattered over a wide circuit, (some have lately taken refuge from Mohammedan persecution under the Russian Government in Georgia,) celebrating publicly their religious rites—with their sacred places and sacred orders—and with the unviolated tombs of their sheikhs, their groves and their temples. The manners of these tribes are full of the frank, courteous, hospitable freedom of Asiatics—they are resolute soldiers in self-defense—and at least, not more given, in their best days, to marauding habits than their neighbors, and only goaded to them by the most cruel and unprovoked persecution. Their morals, as far as transpires in Mr. Layard's trustworthy account, are much above those of the tribes around them—they are grateful for kindness, and by no means, at least as far as Mr. Layard experienced, and we may add some earlier travelers, jealously uncommunicative with Franks.

* * * * *

It is this strange and awful reverence for the Evil Principle which is the peculiar tenet in their creed, and has given its odious name to this ancient and singular people. With them and old Lear alone, the "Prince of Darkness is a gentleman." They will not endure the profane use of any word which sounds like Sheitan, or Satan; and they have the same aversion—some slight touch of which might, perhaps, not be unbecoming in the followers of a more true and holy faith—to the Arabic words for accurse and accursed. Satan, in their theory, which approaches that of Origen, is the chief of the angelic host, now suffering punishment for rebellion against the Divine will—but to be hereafter admitted to pardon, and restored to his high estate. He is called Melek Taous, King Peacock, or Melek el Kout, the mighty angel. The peacock, according to one account, is the symbol as well as the appellative of this ineffable being—no unfitting emblem of pride. They reverence the Old Testament almost with Jewish zeal, (a tenet absolutely inconsistent with Manicheism;) they receive, but with less reverence, the Gospel and the Koran. Their notion of our Saviour is the Mohammedan, except that he was an angel, not a prophet.

TRUE IDEA OF A RELIGIOUS LIFE.

The Rev. Mr. Carter, one of the most learned and pious ministers of a former age, on calling to see a religious acquaintance, learned that he was at work in his shop. Not wishing to interrupt his industry, he repaired thither. The man was busily employed in some part of the process of tanning a hide. Mr. Carter came up softly behind him, and gave him a pleasant tap on the shoulder. The man turned suddenly, and seeing who it was, blushed deeply, and said, "Sir, I am ashamed that you should find me thus."

"Let Christ, when he cometh, find me so doing," said Mr. Carter.

"What do you mean, sir; do you wish to be found in this employment?"

"Yes, I wish to be found faithfully performing the duties of my calling."

The remark of Mr. Carter suggests the true idea of a religious life. There are those who seem to think that a religious life consists mainly, if not entirely, in acts of devotion, of self-denial, and of specific efforts for the salvation of souls. They do not seem to be aware of the truth, that they can serve God in their daily employments as truly as in the sanctuary. They come far short of apprehending the idea contained in the injunction of the Apostle, "Whether therefore ye eat or drink, do all to the glory of God."

The consequence is, the lack of a steady and symmetrical growth in Christian character. Their path is not "as the shining light, which shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

The true idea of a religious life embraces all the actions of our lives. It requires us to employ every moment of our time in a manner acceptable to God. It teaches us that we have but one thing to do, viz., the will of God. It assures us that, at a proper season, we are diligently laboring in our calling, whatever that calling may be, we are as really doing his will, as when we are listening to his truth in the sanctuary, or praying in our closet. [N. Y. Obs.

REASONS FOR COMMUNION.—I do not go to the Lord's table to give, but to receive; not to tell Christ how good I am, but to think how good he is. I have a great many sins and wants to tell him of, more than would take up the whole day; and when I have told him all that I know of myself, it is not the half, but a very little, of what he knows of me. I bring myself, that is sin, to him, believing that he will be all to me, and do all for me, that is in his heart; and I know it is a very compassionate one. I go as a sinner to the Saviour. To whom else should I go, with my blind eyes, foul leprosy, hard heart, and rebellious will? You tell me I must have, I know not how many graces and qualifications to go to the sacrament with; but I cannot stay for them; my wants are urgent; I am a dying man. My Lord with his known kindness says, "Come; do this; remember me." His invitation is qualification enough; and I long to feed on him, to thank God for him, to take him into my heart. I will go to behold him crucified, and his blood poured out for me in spite of all my sins and fears; and though all the saints on earth stood up with one mouth to forbid me, I go to put myself under Christ's wings, and to fly to him for my refuge from the monster sin, ready to devour me. [Adams' Thoughts.

LINING OUT.—An aged minister was officiating for the first time at a public service of a congregation in Georgia, who had been accustomed to having the "hymns lined," as it is termed. The venerable man could not see distinctly, and designed to dispense with singing. To announce his purpose, he arose and said:

"My eyes are dim, I cannot see,"

And immediately the chorister commenced singing the line to the tune of "Old Hundred." Surprise and mortification rendered the minister almost speechless, but he managed to stammer out:

"I meant but an apology."

This line was immediately sung by the congregation, and the minister, now quite excited, exclaimed:

"Forbear! I pray. My sight is dim."

But the singing proceeded, and the couplet was finished by his troubled and beseeching explanation.

"I do not mean to read a hymn!"

Strange as it may seem, this was also sung with much energy, and the worthy old gentleman actually sat down in despair. [Boston Bee.

THE ENGLISH CHURCH.—The Rev. Baptist Noel, in his late work, says that of the churches of the Establishment, 13,000 are generally without evangelical activity, without brotherly fellowship, without discipline, without spirituality, without faith. Like Laodicea, they are lukewarm; like Sardis, they have a name to live and are dead. Of its 16,000 ministers, about 1,568 do nothing; about 6,681 limit their thoughts and labor to small parishes, which contain from 150 to 300 souls; while others in cities and towns profess to take charge of 8,000 or 9,000 souls. "And of the 12,923 working pastors of churches," he says, "I fear, from various concurrent symptoms, that about 10,000 are unconverted men, who neither preach nor know the Gospel."

WHITEFIELD.—When this great man was in the zenith of his popularity, Lord Clare, who knew that his influence was considerable, applied to him by letter, requesting his interest at Bristol at the ensuing general election. To this request, Mr. Whitfield replied, that in general elections he never interfered; but he would earnestly exhort his lordship to use diligence to make his own particular calling and election sure!

"A HIRED AND PAID MINISTRY."

A desire to treat all our correspondents fairly, and to give our readers the benefit of what can be said on both sides of every important question, induces us to print the article in another column on the "Progress of the Age." The object of the writer is, evidently, to oppose what he calls "a hired and paid ministry." In doing this, he gives a very questionable account of the aims of ministers, and overlooks very important distinctions concerning them. To represent the ministers as seeking to create of themselves a sort of aristocracy—and then to make no distinction between an ignorant, State-established, tax-supported priesthood, and a ministry characterized by intelligence, chosen by the people, and supported by voluntary contributions—is, to say the least, hardly in accordance with our notions of propriety or justice in the case. What a pity, that persons who feel in duty bound to combat somebody or something, should so often do battle with the men-of-straw they have set up, instead of the real men whose overthrow they profess to desire. Our acquaintance with ministers has not been as extensive, perhaps, as that of some others; still we have known a good many, old and young, educated and uneducated, "hired" and self-supporting; and we must say, that we have received a very different impression of them from that given by our correspondent—so different, that we cannot help regarding them, as a class, as distinguished for humility, a readiness to serve others, and a desire to see the whole human family raised to the highest attainable standing. If our impression of them be correct, of course one of our correspondent's main objections to hired ministers is built upon a misconception of their character, and falls to the ground with its correction.

The principal remaining objection of our correspondent to what he calls the "hireling system," is, that it is unscriptural. Does he mean by this, that it is contrary to Scripture to pay ministers for their services? Thinking that such might be his meaning, we have searched for passages of Scripture which teach that those who labor in the gospel should not live by the gospel—that those who minister to us in spiritual things should not be partakers of our carnal things—but we cannot find a text in our Bible which teaches such a doctrine. Perhaps, however, he only means, that the Scriptures do not require us to support ministers. Very well; let us look at that point. It is not doubted, probably, even by our correspondent, that under the Jewish economy provision was made for the support of the priesthood, and that, too, on a very liberal scale. But did the coming of Christ introduce a different order of things? Did He who enjoined doing to others as we would be done by, countenance doctrines which would justify us in refusing to support a man whom we had called to labor among us as a minister? We could not believe such a thing, even if Christ had said nothing directly upon the subject;—much less can we believe it in view of what he has said. We find him, soon after the commencement of his public ministry, sending forth his disciples to preach the gospel, with instructions to take with them neither scrip nor purse, but to eat and drink such things as the people should give them. And why? Because, said he, "the laborer is worthy of his hire." This notion, therefore, that a man should labor for a community without receiving from them the means of sustaining life, is not countenanced by Jesus Christ. Nor did his apostles propagate any such view. St. Paul, in the ninth chapter of his first Epistle to the Corinthians, argues at length, that those who, like himself, were engaged as pioneers in the Christian warfare, were not under obligation to go forth at their own charges, but had a right to be partakers with their brethren; and then, to clench the nail, he says, "If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing that we shall reap your carnal things? Do ye not know, that they which minister about holy things, live of the things of the temple? and they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar? Even so hath the Lord ordained, that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel." In his second Epistle to the same people, he justifies himself for having preached the gospel to them freely, on the ground that in their case it was necessary to cut off occasions of accusation; still he acknowledges, "I robbed other churches, taking wages of them, to do you service." How any one who has read these and kindred passages, in the spirit of candid inquiry, can make the sweeping assertion that it is unscriptural to hire and pay a minister, is more than we can tell. No doubt there are many instances in which those who are recognized as ministers, take advantage of their name and position to fleece the flock instead of feeding them. But this is no reason why the flock should undertake to fleece those whom they acknowledge to be good shepherds. One wrong never justifies another. If the doctrine that ministers are entitled to a temporal support has been abused, and is constantly liable to abuse, it may be necessary for the people and the ministry to be more on their guard; but it certainly cannot be necessary for them, on that account, to reject a wholesome and scriptural doctrine. Those who reject such a doctrine, because it has been abused, are as far from the right position as those who abuse the doctrine because it is not generally rejected. So do not "true reformers."

The Anniversaries.—This is "Anniversary Week." The exercises commenced on Sunday evening, with a Discourse before the American Bible Society, by Edward Beecher, D. D., of Boston; a Discourse before the Dutch Reformed Board of Missions, by Rev. Mr. Janeway; a Sermon before the Foreign Evangelical Society, by Rev. Ray Palmer; and a Sermon before the American Home Missionary Society, by Rev. Dr. Barnes. We shall give the statistics of the principal Societies next week.

PROGRESS OF THE AGE.

It is interesting to observe the progress of any enterprise, either good or bad. Whether the progressive movements of men indicate a return from Anti-christian to Christian principles, from error to truth, or vice versa, they can not be looked upon with indifference by those who appreciate true happiness. It is one thing to "keep pace with the age" in intelligence, and another thing to live and radiate in the prevailing spirit of the times. It is one thing to keep pace with the world, and another thing to overcome the world. Much as we may admire the progressive spirit of the age in a religious sphere, and extol moral and religious enterprise as worthy of commendation, in the absence of wise discrimination between progress and direction, we show little evidence of the characteristics of a true reformer. To know that his vessel moves, is insufficient for a wise mariner. He requires to know in what direction it moves—whether it is progressing from or towards the desired haven. Nor is he satisfied to take his observation from the direction of other vessels, however numerous. His chart and his compass are more reliable directors than the breeze in which he is driven.

It is much easier to recognize progression in the literary than in the moral field. The moral department seems to be unfortunately subjected to the controlling influence of religious factions, whose main business is to outdo each other. This religious competition is not the guardian of Christian morality; it is not the foster-father of the truth as it is in Jesus Christ. Other interests are to be promoted; other objects are to be secured, by these contending parties. These churches militant are ever watchful for opportunities to impair the strength of their rivals, and increase their own. As in the political, so in the religious sphere, the end sanctifies the means. Like contending armies, they improve the successful manœuvres of their opponents to their own advantage.

Among all the means employed to secure a permanent and respectable existence, the system of a hired ministry appears to be regarded as the most efficient. Although, to establish this hireling system, the Bible, reason, experience, economy, common-sense, must all be set aside, while the most extravagant and dogmatical representations of the superiority of ministers are given to the public, it is received with tacit acknowledgment of its expediency. This, then, is to be regarded as the spirit of the age—the spirit in which many an aspiring genius lives, as in his appropriate element. The establishment of the claims of ministers to all that superiority and preëminence among all the distinctions in the classification of human society—the greatest of the great—is attempted with an apparent recklessness of the fate of those truthful principles of Christian equality, the existence of which is so essential to the establishment of Christ's kingdom—without which Christianity can not prevail. Is it not to be supposed, that those who advocate the divine right of kings, think themselves quite liable, under kingly authority, to sit on or near the throne? Also, those who represent the minister as entitled to an elevation above the throne, do they not think much of the occupancy of some pulpit? Notwithstanding interested men exhaust all their powers of argument, and put in requisition the most ingenious sophistry, to establish their claims to favor and attention, in the absence of any divine authority, all this effort will produce the same effect upon the intelligent mind that the advocacy of the divine authority of Sunday-keeping does upon a Sabbatarian mind. Whether the hireling's claims are to be determined upon the principles of expediency merely, or upon the authority of a divine warrant, we can hardly avoid taking a view of the workings of the system wherever it has been established. This order of priesthood flourishes best under the existence of moral darkness, as the history of the religious world abundantly shows. Amidst a general diffusion of useful knowledge, it is not called for; it can not live. The teachings of Jesus Christ warrant us in regarding the hireling as unworthy of Christian confidence. All this seeming necessity for a hired, paid ministry, has its origin in an erroneous arrangement of our social relations. Correct this arrangement, and this order of nobility need not, will not be known. Let primative order prevail; let churches exist as the embodiment of the divine principles of Christ's kingdom; let them labor to establesh equality instead of the spirit of caste; let them inculcate equal liberty, and cease to build up a system of religious aristocracy, and preaching monopoly; let brotherly affection be fully developed; and the present darkness, which shrouds the moral horizon as with the pall of death, will soon be removed, and the bride of Christ will appear, "clear as the sun, fair as the moon, and terrible as an army with banners." ## RESOLUTIONS AND LETTER OF CONDOLENCE.

The following resolutions were unanimously passed by the members of DeRuyter Institute, April 16, 1849, expressing their grief occasioned by the death of Joseph D. Titsworth:—

Resolved, That we feel deeply afflicted by the decease of our talented and amiable associate and friend, whose example, while he was with us, has been so salutary, and whose life so worthy; and with heart-felt sympathy, we anxiously desire to join his relations and friends in mourning his departure.

Resolved, That we wear crape upon the left arm twenty days, and on all public occasions of the school during the term.

Resolved, That a Committee of six be appointed to write a letter of condolence to his parents, expressing our sorrow and sympathy.

DeRuyter Institute, April 16, 1849.

Dear Friends:—Called, as you are, through an inscrutable Providence, to lament the decease of a child, cherished and beloved by us all, we should fail to do justice to our own feelings, did we not, as a school, express to you in some way, our deep and heart-felt grief at his loss, and our sympathy with his mourning friends. Deplorable, indeed, would be our lot, had we no arm but that of flesh to rely upon when the dark hour of affliction comes. But how precious to the bereaved Christian, is the promise of our Saviour, "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted."

Do you ask, then, where is our comfort, our consolation? We can point you to but little of a temporal nature. If we speak of his amiable life, his loving heart, and correct demeanor on all occasions, these only rise up as reasons why we could wish him to stay a long time with us. Do we refer to his early piety, the salutary influences which followed his daily walk, his cheerful and forgiving spirit? These all beckon him to tarry, and, clad in his armor of Christian faith, fight with us the battles of the Lord.

With what joy we saw his intellect expand under the genial influences of learning! How our souls rejoiced as his heart was made glad in the love of our Saviour! What serenity of mind he exhibited, as he was buried in the baptismal waters! With what engaging sweetness did he talk of the charms of Heaven and the merits of our crucified Redeemer! How earnestly he prayed! How affectionately he entreated his associates to obtain the consolations of the Christian religion!

These, dear friends, are your consolations; these take hold on Heaven. Christ had prepared for him a mansion in the realms of immortal glory. There he rests from his toils; and there let us contemplate him, beckoning us to join him in that world of bliss.

It may be consoling to you to reflect that, though his disease was of the most painful character, he endured it to the last with Christian fortitude. "Tell my father and mother," he said, a short time before his final dissolution, "to have no uneasiness for me, for I feel sure that I am going to a land of endless bliss." He retained his consciousness to the last, and conversed much and most satisfactorily of his approaching change. A few minutes before he breathed his last, after his eyes were closed on this world forever, he triumphantly exclaimed, "O, how delightful!" and, on being asked what was delightful, said, "These beautiful forms." These were the last words of your child. Thus he died, and his spirit was escorted to the realms of bliss by "beautiful forms."

We feel it a duty, in conformity with the divine injunction, "to weep with those that weep;" and, as we knew Joseph but to love him, we esteem it a great privilege to extend to you the hand of kindly sympathy, imploring our Heavenly Father to administer to all our wounded spirits, the healing balm of his consoling grace.

Your friends in affliction,

Persecution in Madagascar.—The London Evangelical Magazine for March, has a letter from Madagascar relative to the persecutions in that Island, written by "a female Christian, in the name of her fellow sufferers." It is supposed to have been written about the 6th of May, 1847. Among other things, it says that notwithstanding the Queen's hostility to the Christians, some of her family have joined them. The following paragraph will give some idea of the state of things when the letter was written:

"On the 15th day of the first month, persecution broke out, and twenty-one were caught; the Tangena Ordeal was given to nine—eight lived and one died; five were condemned to pay half the value of their persons; five were imprisoned; and two concealed themselves; but these two have made their appearance again, though their judgment has not yet been passed. But the persecution has not prevented the spreading of God's word, but, rather, has caused it to spread much more—nay, far and wide. The bonds of the prisoners, the preservation of those tried by the Tangena Ordeal, the hiding places of the concealed, and the blood of the martyrs, have facilitated the growth of God's word in the hearts of men. The hidings of those who conceal themselves bespeak God's power, for they abide under the shadow of the Almighty, not discovered by their enemies, while quite close to them. Why? Because the Lord hides them under the shadow of his wings. When any are condemned to be sold as slaves, none will buy them, because the Lord has softened their hearts; and when any of those that conceal themselves make their appearance, none has strength to accuse and imprison them, for the Lord restraineth the wrath of man."

A Close Question for a Christian.—A pastor puts it in the Herald of the Prairies, thus: "Do you take a religious newspaper? If not, then you can not be an intelligent Christian. You can not know the present aspect and moral prospects of our race, and can not be informed of the progress that is making in the work of evangelizing the world, nor of the demands of the cause of benevolence upon you."

Slavery and the Slave-trade in Brazil.—A letter to the New York Evening Post, dated at Rio Janeiro, March 29, says that there is an extraordinary awakening of public opinion in Brazil upon the subject of slavery. The writer thinks that in a few months the Government will seriously undertake to put a stop to the slave-trade, which, though long declared contraband, has never been actively opposed. He farther expresses the opinion, that slavery will, either by force or by law, cease in Brazil within twenty years. A paper is about being started to advocate the abolition and anti slave-trade interests.

Peace Meeting in England.—The English papers give full accounts of a great Peace Meeting recently held in Manchester. "Five or six thousand people were present. Among the names published are those of many distinguished statesmen of Great Britain. The Chairman, in opening the proceedings, stated that, since the present century commenced, from twelve to thriteen hundred millions have been expended in support of the war system! The whole speech of the Chairman was a most stinging rebuke of the present order of things in England. Other speakers followed, each exposing some new and startling fact in the annals of war. Elihu Burritt made a speech that was received with enthusiastic applause. Several appropriate resolutions were eloquently spoken to and adopted. The last thing done was the unanimous adoption of a petition to Parliament, asking that body to adopt, without delay, efficient measures for effecting the formation between the British Government and other Governments, of arbitration treaties, binding the parties, in case of any future misunderstanding, to refer the subject matter of dispute to arbitrators."

The President and the Bible.—One day last week a delegation from the American Bible Society called upon the President of the United States, by whom they were received with great cordiality. Mr. Prime, Secretary of the Society, and one of the delegates, remarked to him, that the friends of the Bible had been exceedingly grateful to know that he held the Word of God in high esteem, that he had publicly expressed his reverence for its truths, and they cherished the hope that the Government of this country would always be administered consistently with its principles. Gen. Taylor replied:—

"The Bible is the best of books, and I wish it were in the hands of every one. It is indispensable to the safety and permanence of our institutions; a free Government can not exist without religion and morals; and there can not be morals without religion, nor religion without the Bible. Especially should the Bible be placed in the hands of the young. It is the best school-book in the world. I can remember what I learned when a child, far better than what I read now, and I would that all of our people were brought up under the influence of that holy book. You are engaged in a good cause, and I wish you great success."

Temperance among the Methodists.—We learn from the Springfield Republican, that at the recent meeting of the Massachusetts Methodist Conference, a pointed report on Temperance was adopted. It declared that the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage is an immorality, and that it ought to be so regarded by the Christian Church; that the making and selling of them, to be used as a beverage, is a crime of the highest order, and should be so considered by the civil and ecclesiastical law; and that to secure the complete triumph of temperance, its friends should unite their efforts, in their social and political capacities, and in no case consider themselves at liberty to support in business, or promote to office, men who are opposed to the temperance enterprise. It concluded with the following charge of grape for the tobacco chewers:—

Whereas, true temperance implies a total abstinence from all things injurious to health, and only a moderate use of those things which promote it, therefore

Resolved, That while we advocate and practice total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors, we will also every where, by example, and on all proper occasions, by precept, discountenance the vulgar use of tobacco.

Adam Clarke.—The Hartford Republican has an extract of a letter from Mrs. Smith, of London, the daughter and biographer of the celebrated Adam Clarke, LL. D. Mrs. Smith relates the following anecdote concerning her father:—

"My honored father received, many years ago, an invitation to attend the Methodist Episcopal Conference in America; but it came all too late for such a journey at his age. I was with him when he received the official letter. As he read, I saw his soul was stirred within him. When he had finished reading the letter, he handed it to me, saying, 'Mary, dear, read that—but it comes too late. Had it come earlier, your old father would have buckled on his armor, and in God's strength crossed the Atlantic, and traversed what he could of American ground. The very invitation seems to renew my missionary spirit; but I am deeply pledged in England, and besides'—and then, extending his arms and dropping them again, he added, 'I wish it had come earlier, when Adam Clarke was not your old father, which he now is; my spirit goes to them, but this of me cannot'—and he seemed to look upon himself regretfully. We were walking up and down a western room, and the sun was sinking in the West; he pointed to it emphatically—his eyes filled with tears, while mine ran over."

Back Numbers of the Recorder.—We want a few copies each of numbers 1 and 42 of volume 3. Who of our friends that do not care to keep their papers will forward these numbers to us?

PRACTICE WITH PREACHING.

Gerrit Smith, of Peterboro', N. Y., has for some time past advocated a Land Reform. More than once he has given proof of his readiness to act as well as to talk upon the subject. From the following Circular, it appears that he is determined to carry his theory into practice so far as his means will allow. We commend his example to all who, like him, are the nominal owners of more land than they can cultivate.

Circular.

Peterboro', May 1, 1849.

To John Cochrane, Wm. L. Kemeys, Isaac T. Hopper, George H. Evans, Daniel C. Eaton, of the County of New York:

Dear Sirs,—I still have village and city property; but on the larger share of it there remains, and must long remain, a very great debt. The debt due to the State of New York on my other land, will, I hope, be paid within the coming year. All, or nearly all, such of this land as shall, then, remain upon my hands, I shall wish to give away. There will, perhaps, be enough of it to enable me to give to a thousand persons. These persons must be white inhabitants of the State of New York; must be between the ages of 21 and 60; must be virtuous, landless, and poor; and must be entirely clear of the vice of drinking intoxicating liquors. Moreover, they must, in each county, be taken from the sexes in equal numbers.

Along with each gift of land, there will be a gift of $10 in money. Where the land is worth removing to, and where there is a disposition to remove to it, this money will help defray the expenses of removal. In, perhaps, every case, it will be sufficient to pay the two or three years' taxes now due, and also the taxes for a number of years to come.

Each county, except Madison, is to share in the proposed gifts, and each according to the amount of its population. I shall not be blamed for making this exception, by any who are aware that, in some 250 instances, I have given to inhabitants of the County of Madison either land, or money to enable them to buy land. Nor shall I be blamed for distributing the thousand parcels of land among white persons exclusively, by any who are informed that 3,000 colored persons have received deeds of land from me entirely free of all charge either for the land or for the expense of the perfected deeds thereof. I will remark here, that the deeds of the 1,000 parcels will be made, acknowledged, and prepared for record, at my own expense.

The number of beneficiaries in each county will be as follows:—

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Albany | 30 | Herkimer | 14 | Rockland | 4 |
| Allegany | 16 | Jefferson | 26 | Saratoga | 16 |
| Broome | 10 | Kings | 32 | Schenectady | 6 |
| Cattaraugus | 12 | Lewis | 8 | Schoharie | 12 |
| Cayuga | 20 | Livingston | 12 | Seneca | 10 |
| Chautauque | 18 | Monroe | 28 | St. Lawrence | 26 |
| Chemung | 8 | Montgomery | 12 | Steuben | 20 |
| Chenango | 16 | New York | 150 | Suffolk | 12 |
| Clinton | 12 | Niagara | 14 | Sullivan | 6 |
| Columbia | 16 | Oneida | 34 | Tioga | 8 |
| Cortland | 10 | Onondaga | 28 | Tompkins | 14 |
| Delaware | 14 | Ontario | 16 | Ulster | 18 |
| Dutchess | 22 | Orange | 20 | Warren | 6 |
| Erie | 32 | Orleans | 10 | Washington | 16 |
| Essex | 10 | Oswego | 22 | Wayne | 16 |
| Franklin | 8 | Otsego | 20 | Westchester | 18 |
| Fulton | 6 | Putnam | 4 | Wyoming | 10 |
| Genesee | 10 | Queens | 12 | Yates | 8 |
| Greene | 12 | Rensselaer | 24 | | |
| Hamilton | 2 | Richmond | 4 | Total | 1,000 |

The next thing in this letter is to say, that I have a great favor to ask of you. It is, that you go to the pains of selecting the beneficiaries in your County; and that you do, by the 1st of March next, let me know their names and residence.

To guard the beneficiaries of your County against disappointment, I wish you would inform them, that most of the land is of an inferior quality; that it is probable, that, in some instances, it will prove to be unfit for farming; in some of little or no value either for farming or timber; and that it is possible (I trust, but barely possible) that, in some instances, my title will fail. You will, moreover, inform them, that in the event of my not having land enough to give each of the thousand a parcel, some of those chosen in your County may be unsupplied. You are, however, authorized to say to them, that whoever of the thousand shall fail to get a parcel of land from me, shall get, instead thereof, $40, in money—and this, too, in addition to the $10. The $50 will enable its possessor to buy forty acres of Government land. I hope that it will be expended in some land or other; for one of my deepest convictions is, that every person, who can, should make himself the acknowledged owner of a piece of land. His doing so would hasten the day when the right to the soil shall be every where acknowledged to be as absolute, universal, and equal, as the right to the light and the air. May that blessed day come quickly!—for, until it does come, our world will be one of disorder, oppression, poverty, vice; and, let me add, that it never will come, until the religion and politics, the churches and governments of the world, shall be so imbued with the spirit of justice and brotherly love, as to call for the coming of that day.

The parcel for each beneficiary will, probably, vary from 30 to 60 acres. In a few instances, it may exceed 60; and, in a few, where its value may be far above the average of the parcels, it may be less than half of 30.

All the land is in the State of New York.

Respectfully, your friend, Gerrit Smith.

Cholera in New Orleans.—The Albany Evening Journal publishes the following extract from a letter dated New Orleans, April 21:—

"New Orleans is a perfect charnel-house. People are dying like flies in the winter time. When I first came it was bad; afterward got better; but within the last two or three days it has began again worse than ever. In a boarding-house close by, 8 out of 20 boarders died last night. I saw two men die on the Levee this morning before they could be carried to the Hospital. I am just off my back with a severe attack, the third since I came, but I am very careful and prudent in my diet. I drank half a pint of brandy, laudanum, and camphor in 20 minutes. I shall get out of this as soon as I can, for the yellow fever will be along soon, and I think between the cholera and fever, New Orleans will be depopulated. I was told there were 222 funerals yesterday."

General Intelligence.

SEVEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship America arrived at New York on Sabbath last, with seven days later news from Europe.

From England, we find nothing important, except that it has been distinctly announced, in the House of Lords, that the British Government will take no part in the movement for the restoration of the Pope.

In Ireland, misery and crime seem to be on the increase. Mr. Duffy, of the Nation, one of the State prisoners, has been set at liberty on bail for his appearance at the next Commissions.

The French Government has come to the important resolution of an armed intervention to reinstate the Pope at Rome. A force adequate to the emergency has already sailed for Civita Vecchia. The President of the Council says that care will be taken to secure a free and liberal Government to the Roman people. The cholera is largely on the increase in Paris, and many persons of opulence have become its victims. Up to the 19th, there had been 1,762 cases, of which 1,022 had proved fatal.

The warlike contest between the several States of the Continent continues with unabated fury, and with the most disastrous results to all the parties engaged.

The Danish entrenchments near Dupell has been attacked and carried by the Saxon and Bavarian troops. The loss of the Germans in this affair is calculated at 150 to 200 men. Several additional captures have been made by the Danish vessels. The Danes are now enforcing a strict blockade of all the German ports, and it is stated that emigrant vessels will not hereafter be allowed to pass unmolested.

A great struggle has been going on for the position of the Hungarian fortress of Comorn on the Danube, which the Austrians have besieged for several weeks, and which the Hungarians have endeavored to relieve. Vienna papers of the 14th furnish positive information of the occupation of the important position taken by the Hungarians. The details of this action are given by the German papers, and are to the effect that Windischgrätz at the head of his best regiment opposed the progress of the Hungarians in the direction of Comorn. A fierce engagement ensued, in which the superior tactics of the Magyars proved irresistible.

Italy is still in indescribable confusion. The Republicans have been put down in Genoa, after having had the command of that beautiful city for nine days. In Sicily the struggle has commenced with dreadful ferocity, and a desperate battle took place on Good Friday, between the Neapolitan and the Swiss troops and the people of Catania, which continued all night, and ended in the defeat of the Catanians. A great number of them were killed, and the city was afterward sacked and plundered. The city was fired in three places. The most beautiful edifices are a heap of ruins, and the renowned Library and Museum of Natural History were entirely destroyed.

Emancipation in Kentucky.—We learn from the Louisville Journal, that a Convention, composed of citizens of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, and representing the opinions and wishes of a large number of their fellow-citizens throughout the Commonwealth, met in the Capitol on the 25th of April, 1849, to consider what course it becomes those who are opposed to the increase and to the perpetuity of Slavery in that State to pursue in the approaching canvass for members of the Convention, called to amend the Constitution. They adopted the propositions which follow, as expressing their judgment in the premises:

I. Believing that involuntary hereditary slavery, as it exists by law in this State, is injurious to the prosperity of the Commonwealth, inconsistent with the fundamental principles of free Government, contrary to the natural rights of mankind, and adverse to a pure state of morals—we are of opinion that it ought not to be increased, and that it ought not to be perpetuated in the Commonwealth.

II. That any scheme of emancipation ought to be prospective, operating exclusively upon negroes born after the adoption of the scheme, and connected with colonization.

III. That we recommend the following points as those to be insisted on in the new Constitution, and that candidates be run in every county in the State, favorable to these or similar constitutional provisions: 1. The absolute prohibition of the importation of any more slaves to Kentucky. 2. The complete power in the people of Kentucky, to enforce and perfect in or under the new Constitution, a system of gradual prospective emancipation of slaves.

Emigration of English Mormons.—The St. Louis Reville says that large numbers of Mormons are coming to this country from England during the present year, with a view of congregating at their city in the Great Salt Lake Valley of California. From conversation with one of their leaders, recently arrived, the editor learns the following facts relative to their condition and prospects in England:—

"The tide of public opinion in England, which some years back had been strongly set against the Mormons, is now turning gradually in their favor. Their doctrines are being industriously and successfully disseminated; and in some places, where four years ago they could scarcely gain a foot-hold, they have built churches, and established themselves on a permanent and firm footing. In the City of London they have five churches, four of which were erected since the year 1847. In Manchester, as also in Liverpool, they have meeting-houses. Their creed is daily gaining proselytes, not from the lower orders only, but among the wealthiest and most influential classes. They have also gained many converts in Wales, where they form a very large and respectable portion of the population. One of their apostles is the editor of the Millennium Star, a paper published semi-monthly in Liverpool. He interests himself in facilitating emigration to this country, employing a portion of his time in chartering vessels, purchasing provisions, &c., &c., for the emigrants. They have long since sent missionaries to France and Ireland, and are now contemplating to send one to Russia."

Diabolical Attempt to Destroy a Family.—About 10 o'clock on Thursday night of last week, a man disguised as a negro, called at the house of lawyer Warner, and handed a package to the servant, at the same time stating that it was for Massa Warner, addressed to Thomas Warner, Esq., (confidential.) Mr. W. being absent from the city at the time, the package remained untouched by the members of the family, until the next day, when Mr. Warner returned from Philadelphia, and, while the family were at dinner in the basement, he ordered his son to bring the package to him. Mrs. Warner having described the appearance of the man and his manner to her husband, led Mr. Warner to open the package, which was wrapped in a copy of the N. Y. Herald of March 26, with some care. The newspaper inclosed a strong mahogany box, with a slide lid. Mr. Warner proceeded to draw off the lid with great caution and very slowly, and discovered a faint blue light and immediately warned his family to fly for their lives. All instantly left the room and closed the door, and they had but just passed into the hall leading into the rear yard when a tremendous explosion took place, after which they passed around the house and discovered the front basement to be on fire and the windows shattered to pieces and blown out of place. Mr. Warner, with some persons who had stopped at the house, then entered the room and extinguished the flames, and as soon as the smoke had subsided, it was discovered that the basement door was completely shattered, the partition wall broken and very much displaced, the dining-table, at which they were a few minutes before sitting, very much broken, and a picture of Gen. Washington and the door perforated with slung-shots. The box in question was about the size of a small cigar-box, and contained a cannister filled with powder and slungs, and several bundles of friction matches, which were so placed that on withdrawing the lid, on the inside of which a piece of sand-paper was glued, they would instantly take fire and cause an immediate explosion.

Mail Robbery.—The Auburn Advertiser says that, for some time past, rumors have been in circulation, that a series of robberies had been perpetrated at the Weedsport post-office; several letters, containing money, that must necessarily pass through that office, having never reached their destination. To test the justice of these suspicions, a letter containing $20 was mailed at Port Byron, and private marks placed upon the bills by the Deputy Postmaster, so that they could readily be identified. When the mail-bag, which should have contained this letter, reached Sennett, it was examined, and the package containing the money was missing. The Port Byron Postmaster proceeded at once to Weedsport, and searched the pockets of the Deputy Postmaster, A. M. Boulier, and found on his person the $20—two $10 bills—and a $1 bill, which had also been mailed at Port Byron. He was committed by Judge Conkling, but will probably be admitted to bail, which is fixed at $2,000 each for two securities, and his own recognizance of $4,000.

Fire on Long Island.—The N. Y. Sun of May 4th, says that on Wednesday morning last a fire, originating in the carelessness of some charcoal burners, broke out in the woods about forty miles from Brooklyn, on the Long Island Railroad, and notwithstanding the exertions of all the men that could be collected, it spread with the greatest rapidity. The wind varied many times, and, as the fire was conquered at one point, it broke forth with renewed violence at another. Retreating in a number of places from cultivated farms, it destroyed all the timber and shrubs between Deerpark and Thompson. The width of the burnt district is six or seven miles, and it extends from a half to three quarters of a mile north, and from two to three miles south of the Railroad. 11,000 acres of land have been burnt over, the timber destroyed being some of the finest on Long Island. The loss, amounting to over $250,000, will fall on fifty or sixty persons.

Duels in France.—The last steamer brought intelligence of two duels in France, between parties pretty well known to the world.

A hostile meeting took place, on the 14th, at 5 in the evening, between M. Ledru-Rollin and M. Deujoy, near the Pont de Neuilly. The parties were placed at twenty paces distance. M. Ledru-Rollin fired, but the pistol of M. Deujoy hung fire. The seconds then interposed.

M. Charles Blanc, having considered that an article in L'Asemblée Nationale contained an insult to his brother, Louis Blanc, wrote a letter to M. Francis Lacombe, writer of the article, which provoked a challenge. A meeting took place between the parties at Vincennes, when M. Lacombe having received a ball in his left thigh, the seconds declared that the honor of all concerned was satisfied, and put an end to the combat.

Melancholy Accident.—The Charleston Mercury mentions an accident which occurred in the neighborhood of Swallow Savannah, Barawell District, on the 23d ult. It appears that Mr. Franklin Kerce was felling a tree near his house, when his wife coming near, he requested her to take a prop and push it against the tree, so that it might fall in the proper direction. In doing so, she remarked, playfully, "Suppose the tree should fall on me;" to which the husband, in a similar spirit, replied, "You must try and get out of the way." Unfortunately, when the tree commenced falling, Mrs. K. ran directly in its track, and was instantaneously crushed to death.

A Family Gathering.—On Tuesday of last week, sixty-five of the eighty-five children and their families who trace their genealogy to widow Catharine Woods of New Braintree, Mass., assembled at her house to pay their parting respects to her grandson, Rev. James Woods, of Alabama, who contemplates embarking soon for California, by the appointment and under the patronage of the Presbyterian Board of Missions, as a missionary to that new and interesting portion of our country.

The Southern Baptist Convention, which was to have met in Nashville, Tenn., on the 2d of May, has been changed, in consequence of the reported prevalence of cholera there. The meeting will be held in Charleston, S. C., on the 23d of May. The ensuing Convention, which will take place in 1852, will be held at Nashville.

SUMMARY.

The colored people of the State of New Jersey assembled in convention at Salem on the 26th of April, to consider the propriety of holding a State Convention, to devise the best mode of securing to them the rights of suffrage. Among the resolutions passed was one to hold a State Convention in Trenton, and Rev. C. W. Gardner and Dr. J. L. Rock were appointed lecturers to canvass the State before the Convention.

The Vermont Chronicle records the death, at East Rupert in that State, of Capt. Moses Sheldon, aged 67. He had lived upon his homestead 65 years. He emigrated thither from Connecticut, and on his way looked at the ground on which the City of Troy now stands, and deliberated for a time whether he should not purchase it for a farm. The only building then upon it was a tavern, and the only population, the few inmates of that tavern.

The St. Martinsville, (La.) Gazette ascribes the prevalence of cholera in Attakapas to the vast number of dead cattle lying unburied in the prairies. This mortality is attributed to the drouth, by which the ponds are dried up, and the cattle, thus deprived of water, die in great numbers. It is no uncommon sight to see from fifty to a hundred dead cattle on the road to Opelousas.

The "Albany Manual Labor Academy," in Athens Co., Ohio, has now been two years in operation, on the principle of requiring three hours' manual labor per day of every pupil of suitable age. Terms for tuition $1 50 to $5 per quarter. No distinction of creed or color is known, beyond a requisition of the Christian faith and morals. Rev. Wm. S. Lewis, Principal, Albany, Ohio.

On Sunday, April 29th, a party of 15 persons, all foreigners, went from Fall River, Mass., in a sail-boat across the harbor to "Sparr Island," where a drinking-house has recently been established. They soon became intoxicated, and while in that condition, got into the boat and started upon their return. They had proceeded but a short distance when the boat capsized, and five of the number were drowned. A sixth is not expected to recover. The remainder clung to the boat and were saved.

The Chicago Journal of the 26th ult., learns that the schooner John Lillie, Captain Keaho, capsized during the recent blow, when between Great Traverse and the North Manitou, and it is feared all on board are lost. The Indians first brought the news over to the Manitous, who reported that they had found eight dead bodies.

Richard Dillingham, a Quaker, from Ohio, who was arrested in December last, for having in his possession three slaves, whom he intended to carry to a free State, was convicted of the offense at Nashville, Tennessee, on the 12th ult., and sentenced to three years' imprisonment in the penitentiary. He confessed his guilt, saying he alone was responsible for the error into which his education and feelings of philanthropy led him.

Alexander Jones, the black man found guilty of arson in the first degree, in having set fire to house 85 Mulberry street, in March last, in the night time, was sentenced to be hung on Friday, June 22nd, the same day as that appointed for the execution of Wood, for the murder of his wife.

The New Orleans papers of April 21, publish nearly two columns of the foreign news by the Europa, received at St. John's, New Brunswick, on the 19th, transmitted by Mr. O'Reilly's Western line. This is the greatest feat on record. It is not less than 3,000 miles from St. John's to New Orleans.

Missionary Association—Executive Board.

A Quaterly Meeting of the Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association, will be held in New York, on the evening of third-day, May 22, 1849.

By order of the Board, GEO. B. UTTER, Rec. Sec.

The Publishing Society.

A meeting for the organization of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society will be held in the city of New York on the fourth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, (23d day of the month,) commencing at 9 o'clock A. M. It is hoped that a large number of those who have subscribed to the Constitution, and pledged funds to the Society, will be present.

Eastern Association.

The Annual Meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist Eastern Association will be held with the Church in Pawcatuck, R. I., on the fifth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, at 10½ o'clock, A. M. Introductory Discourse by Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J.; alternate, Samuel Davison, of Farmington, Illinois. S. S. GRISWOLD, Cor. Sec.

Executive Committee.—The Executive Committee of the Eastern Association will hold its annual session on the fourth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, in the lecture-room of the Seventh-day Baptist Church at Pawcatuck, R I. at 10½ o'clock, A. M. S. S. Griswold.

P. S. Churches are requested to specify in their associational letters the amount they will raise for missionary purposes within the limits of the Association for the ensuing year.

Central Association.

The Annual Meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist Central Association, will be holden with the First Church in Brookfield, N. Y., commencing on the fourth day of the week before the second Sabbath in June, 1849.

Notice—Western Association.

The attention of the churches of the Seventh-day Baptist Western Association is particularly directed to the Report of a Committee appointed at the last annual session to revise the Constitution. That Report was received and referred to the churches for individual action; and is, together with the Constitution as it now stands, published in the Minutes of the last session. It is very desirable that the matter should be brought before every church, where it has not already been done, and the result of the action forwarded to the approaching Anniversary of the Association. That the Constitution needs revision, must be evident to all who give it even a passing notice; and in all matters of constitutional reform a full voice should be heard. Will the churches speak out? T. E. BABCOCK, Cor. Sec.

Christian Psalmody.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office. It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation moroccо, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Railroad from Albany West.

Passengers for Saratoga Springs and Whitehall can take any of the trains for Schenectady and Railroad or Stages by Plank Road route to Saratoga. Baggage cars and through baggage men run the whole distance between Albany and Buffalo. Baggage taken free by Railroad wagons between steamboats and Railroad.

Albany, April 30, 1849. E. FOSTER, Jr.,
Secretary Albany and Schenectady R. R. Co.

To Clergymen and their People.

All Clergymen who will send their address to Messrs. Comstock & Company, No. 21 Courtland-street—(after the 1st of May No. 57 John-street)—New York, shall be furnished gratuitously, for their family use, with a Salve of most extraordinary merit for external sores or inflammations of long or short standing. In burns, or pains and swellings of nearly all descriptions, its effects are charming, and almost beyond belief. This Salve has already been used by quite a number of the clergy, for themselves or sufferers to whom they have given it; and they have called on or written to the proprietors to express their delight at its action, and a desire to have their names used in making known its virtues. The proprietors having realized a handsome sum by its sale, feel called upon by a sense of duty to their fellow-men to disseminate the knowledge of the existence of such a thing far and near, and to give it without charge to the reverend clergy without limitation. It is called CONNEL'S PAIN EXTRACTOR, and is owned solely by Messrs. C. & Co. All religious papers that will publish this a few times will be furnished with the Salve free, and they may also thereby relieve many suffering poor brethren from agonizing pain, and save them much expense. The names of nearly fifty clergymen recommending it, are to be seen at the office of C. & Co.

You will please observe, it is no "sovereign remedy for all complaints," but only intended for external applications in the following:—Burns, Scalds, Frosted parts, Chilblains, Chafe or Galls, Chaps, Tetter, Pimple, Blotch, Felon, Ulcer Sprains, Erysipelas, Cuts, Bruises, Ear and Toothache, Mumps, Sore Throat, Whitlows, Piles, Ringworm, Salt Rheum, Barber's Itch, Carbuncle, Eruption, Sore Eyes and Lids, Weak Sight, Sore Lips, Punctures, Biles and Warts, Fever Pains, Tender Feet, Inflammatory Rheumatism, Tic Doloureux, Ague in Face and Breast, Fever Sores, Old Burn Scars, Prickly Heat, Inflamed Skin, Broken Breast, Sore Nipples, Rough Hands, Blistered Surfaces, Dressing for Blisters, White Swellings, Cold in Wounds, Sore Corns, General Sores, Smallpox Marks, &c.

Though we have named numerous affections, experience has taught us that they are not too many. It will be necessary to know that this article is the only one we can recommend; but must caution against some imitation by like name. We will present it to the poor who have actual need of it.

38—mo 3.

Miscellaneous.

MY FATHER.

The weight of many a weary year
  Rests on my father now,
And none but silver hairs appear
  Above his furrowed brow;
His quiet life has not been spent
  In luxury and ease,
But humble scenes, with sweet content,
  Have power his heart to please.

His hands are hard with honest toil,
  But they were never stained
With aught of the unholy spoil
  By dark opression gained;
For kindly thoughts have ever dwelt
  Within his open soul,
And his warm heart has never felt
  Stern Avarice's dark control.

I never from my father heard,
  Through all my happy life,
A single false, deceitful word,
  Or one of angry strife;
For power or place he has not sought,
  But for his country's weal.
His heart has always had a thought
  Of patriotic zeal.

The world would call him poor indeed,
  And pass him proudly by,
But his calm soul will little heed
  The glance of haughty eye;
He may be poor, but at his side
  Whene'er I take my place,
I feel that I can gaze with pride,
  Upon my father's face.

THE ORANG OUTANG.

The female Orang Outang, Nancy, imported in the ship Liberty, Captain Davis, by Thomas Richards, Esq., was remarkable as being the largest living specimen of this most manlike species, the simia satyrus, or true wild man of the woods, which has as yet reached either America or Europe. She arrived at Philadelphia in the latter part of May, 1835. After a few days, having passed into the hands of new owners, she was sent to New York. She was unfortunately much exposed to the influence of cold and damp weather during her transportation, and on the evening of her arrival, was first observed to be unwell; on the succeeding morning, her disease had assumed the character of an irregular intermittent fever, and medical advice was resorted to. After lingering for some weeks, alternately better and worse, during which time recourse was had to every expedient which art or ingenuity could devise for her comfort and recovery, much to the regret of the few who saw her, she died at the village of Harlem, near New York, on the nineteenth of July following. The death-bed scene, as represented by those who were present, must have been singularly affecting. The account of it as given by her keeper is as follows: Early in the evening her extremities began to grow cold, and at ten o'clock, P. M., pulsation at the wrists had ceased. She appeared conscious of her approaching end, and dreaded it. She shivered and groaned very much, and appeared to supplicate those around for assistance, often extending her arms to them and embracing them around the neck. She would awake from a doze in great trepidation, and cling to the neck of her keeper, where she would hang until sleep or exhaustion caused her to loosen her hold. This was frequently repeated as long as her strength remained. After violent struggles and much groaning, at three o'clock, A. M., she had ceased to breathe.

Some idea of her superiority in "reasoning power," if we may so apply the phrase, over the ordinary specimens of the monkey tribe, may be gathered from a few facts, which fell under the writer's immediate notice.

During the five weeks which he had an opportunity of observing her, notwithstanding she was constantly in the habit of using and handling vessels of glass and china, she never broke, nor suffered any of them to fall. Every article was handled with extreme care, and generally returned by her to its place. She was also very curious in the examination of articles which were newly presented to her sight. After attentively looking at them, instead of carelessly throwing them down, as might have been expected, she invariably returned them, and generally into the hands of the individuals from whom she received them.

Upon a single occasion, a circumstance occurred, which evinced a judgment almost human. She was very fond of descending to the kitchen, and appeared much interested in observing the process of the culinary operations, and when unwatched, embraced every opportunity of stealing off to it. In the instance to which we allude, after looking about, she finally unbuttoned and opened the door of a closet, in which a basin of milk had been placed for the separation of the cream. After attentively looking at it, and on the several shelves, as if in search of something, she carefully closed the door, and presently taking a tea-cup from the table, she returned to the closet, and after helping herself to a cupful of the milk, again closed the door, and replaced the cup whence she had taken it. A vial of medicine was carried into the room, and placed upon the mantle-piece. The attendants then left the rooom, but kept an eye upon her. On finding herself alone, she arose from the corner where she had been sitting wrapped in her blanket, took a chair and carried it to the fire-place, mounted on it, took down the vial of medicine, uncorked it, poured the physic over the floor, recorked the vial, and replaced the chair, and then resumed her former seat.

In height, when standing erect, and with the arms extended upward, this animal measured three feet six inches, and at the period of her death, although much emaciated, was supposed to weigh between forty-five and fifty pounds. The arms were very long, and when hanging down reached nearly to the ankles.

Power of the Soil to Absorb Odors.—It is well known that onions, if buried in the earth for a few days previous to being cooked, will have lost much of their rank flavor. Wild ducks, which are often too fishy in flavor to be good, may be rendered much more palatable by being wrapped in absorbent paper and buried in the ground for a few hours. Dried codfish loses much of its austerity of flavor (if we may coin a term) by similar treatment. During the plague in Europe, clothing was often buried for a time, to disinfect it. This absorbent property of the soil is due to the presence of carbonaceous matters; for clean sea beach sand will produce no such results, while pulverized charcoal will act with much greater energy than common soil. On this principle, animal matters coated with unleached ashes, and then buried in pulverulent peat or muck, will not only decompose without giving off offensive odors, but the muck will also, by absorbing the resulting gases arising from decomposition, be rendered highly valuable as a fertilizer. Dr. Dana says that a dead horse, if cut in pieces and treated as above, will render twenty loads of muck equal in quality to the best stable manure.

PARISIAN CLEANLINESS.

In Paris every species of refuse is husbanded in the most careful manner. No refuse is allowed to be thrown into the streets after a very early hour in the morning, nor until after 10 o'clock at night. The refuse consists of what may be called the house dirt, and is laid in heaps in front of houses near the gutters. A very numerous class of people, chiffoniers, consisting of as many women as men, with deep baskets on their backs and a small stick with a hook at the end, carefully turn over every one of these heaps, selecting from them every article of leather, bone, iron, paper, and glass, which are thrown at once into their baskets, and being carried to their places of general deposit, are there again examined and assorted, and appropriated to any specific application for which they may be suited. These persons appear like a most degraded class; they inhabit particular quarters of the city, and the interior of their habitations is such as might be expected from their occupation. The profession descends from father to son, and from mother to daughter. They are a most industrious race of people, and many of them may be seen even at midnight with their lanterns, taking advantage of the first pickings, and anticipating the labors of the coming morning, and with the earliest dawn they are to be found at their tasks. No article of food escapes them, and they call the street their mother, because she often thus literally gives them bread. Though their occupation is necessarily dirty, yet they are almost always comfortably clad, and are never ragged. They never beg, and disdain to be considered objects of charity. They are licensed by the city authorities, for which some trifling sum is paid, and for which they must be recommended for their sobriety and good conduct. They have their particular districts assigned them, and are very careful to prevent all foreign intrusion.

The chiffoniers having done their work, next come the sweepers and collectors of dirt. Every inhabitant of Paris is required, under a penalty, to have the side-walks in front of his place of business or residence carefully swept every morning. The sweepers of the streets of Paris are almost uniformly women, who, with long twigs or birch brooms, sweep the streets thoroughly, and all the accumulations are taken in carts to the great places of deposit. The women assist as much in loading the carts as the men. These women appear to work extremely hard, carrying always a long broom in their hands, and a shovel fastened to their backs to be used as occasion may require. The gutters in Paris are washed out every morning, by fountains which are placed in every street, and what these sweepers are not able to collect for the carts, they are careful to sweep into the drains leading into the common sewers. I have looked at these people and the chiffoniers with great interest; and, filthy and disgusting as their occupation necessarily is, I have always felt in my heart a sincere respect for persons who, poor as they are, would be ashamed to beg, and who, by the severest and most useful labor, are proud to obtain for themselves and their families, though a very humble, an honest living. All this refuse is transported to places appropriated for its deposit, where it remains until it is decomposed, and is then sold to the farmers for manure. [Coleman.

THE GREAT MEDITERRANEAN TURTLE.

This is the largest of the turtle kind with which we are acquainted. It is found from five to eight feet long, and from six to nine hundred pounds in weight. But, unluckily, its utility bears no proportion to its size; as it is unfit for food, and sometimes poisons those who eat it. The shell, also, which is a tough, strong integument, resembling a hide, is unfit for all serviceable purposes. One of these animals was taken in the year 1729, at the mouth of the Loire, in France, in nets that were not designed for so large a capture. This turtle, which was of enormous strength, by its own struggles involved itself in the nets in such a manner as to be incapable of doing mischief; yet, even thus shackled, it appeared terrible to the fishermen, who, at first, were for flying; but finding it impotent, they gathered courage to drag it on shore, where it made a most horrible bellowing; and when they began to knock it on the head with their gaffs, it was heard at a mile distant. They were still further intimidated with its nauseous and pestilential breath, which so powerfully affected them that they were near fainting. This animal wanted but four inches of being eight feet long; and was about two feet wide. Its shell more resembled leather than the shell of a tortoise,—and unlike all other animals of this kind, it was furnished with teeth in each jaw, one rank behind another, like those of a shark. Its feet, also, differing from the rest of this kind, wanted claws; and the tail was quite disengaged from the shell, and fifteen inches long, more resembling that of a quadruped than a tortoise.

These are a formidable and useless kind, compared with the turtle caught in the South Seas and the Indian Ocean. These latter are of different kinds; not only unlike each other in form, but furnishing man with different advantages. They are usually distinguished by sailors into four kinds—the trunk turtle, the loggerhead, the hawksbill, and the green turtle.

A Remedy for the Calafornia Fever.—A friend who has seen some service in camp life, offers to those afflicted with the prevailing epidemic the following prescription:

1st. Sleep three nights in your wood-house with the door open and swinging in the wind—during which time let your diet be pork cooked by yourself at a smoky fire in the garden.

2d. Improve all the rainy nights in sleeping bteween your currant-bushes and garden-fence.

3d. On the fourth day of your regime, let your diet be mule-steak.

4th. Thereafter dispense with all kinds of food save dog-meat.

If this be followed resolutely, it is confidently believed a permanent cure will be effected.

HURRY AND HASTE.

"Never do anything in a hurry," is the advice given to attorneys and solicitors by Mr. Warren. "No one in a hurry can possibly have his wits about him; and remember that in the law there is ever an opponent watching to find you off your guard. You may occasionally be in haste, but you need never be in a hurry; take care—resolve—never to be so. Remember always that others' interests are occupying your attention, and suffer by your inadvertance,—by that negligence which generally occasions hurry. A man of firstrate business talents—one who always looks so calm and tranquil, that it makes one's self feel cool on a hot summer's day to look at him—once told me that he had never been in a hurry but once, and that was for an entire fortnight, at the commencement of his career. It nearly killed him: he spoiled everything he touched; he was always breathless, and harrassed, and miserable; but it did him good for life; he resolved never again to be in a hurry, and never was, no, not once, that he could remember during twenty-five years' practice! Observe, I speak of being hurried and fluttered—not of being in haste, for that is often inevitable; but then is always seen the superiority and inferiority of different men.—You may indeed almost define hurry as the condition to which an inferior man is reduced by haste. I one day observed, in a committee of the House of Commons, sitting on a railway bill the chief secretary of the company, during several hours, while great interests were in jeopardy, preserve a truly amiable coolness, tranquility and temper, conferring on him immense advantages. His suggestions to counsel were masterly, and exquisitely well-timed; and by the close of the day he had triumphed.—"How is it that one never sees you in a hurry?" said I, as we were pacing the long corridor, on our way from the committee-room. "Because it's so expensive," he replied with a significant smile. I shall never forget that observation, and don't you. [Warren on Attorneys.

Chinese Love of Money.—Of all the men on the face of the globe, (and I have sojourned among several nations in my life, says a Canton correspondent of the Journal of Commerce,) I have never seen any equal to the Chinese in love of money. It is said this people have many idols, and so they have; but they are all worshiped as a means to an end; and their worship appears to be narrowed down to that one grand end—riches and the enjoyment of riches. Every city, and every street; nay, every house of every street, is dedicated to the god who brings riches. And impious would that man be esteemed, who neglected to light a taper, and burn three incense sticks every evening before that all-adored idol. Even now, how do my ears ring with the exclamation of horror which burst from my landlord, some few evenings ago, when, on taking possession of his premises his incense pot was thrown into the street. The landlord now, on his own accord, comes almost every evening to my study to join in reading the Bible, and uniting his prayer to the true God with the disciples.

The Value of Cold Water.—The Louisville Courier of the 24th of April says: "We are much gratified in being able to state that Judge McKinley, the distinguished jurist of the Supreme Court of the United States, after having his vision so seriously impaired for fifty-two years that he could not see without glasses, has recovered his sight so perfectly that he is now able to read without the aid of glasses. For half a century this faculty was so seriously impaired that without glasses he was almost blind, and the recovery of his constitutional health, by which the sight has been reïnvigorated, Judge McKinley very properly ascribes to the daily use of cold water on the head and surface of the body. Of the importance of cold water in maintaining and restoring health, no one who has ever tried it can entertain a doubt, and we refer to Judge McKinley's gratifying success in the restoration of his vision from its long sleep, for the purpose of encouraging other invalids to resort to this cheap and powerful mode of medication."

Burial at Panama.—A correspondent of the N. Y. Recorder, writing from Panama, says:—"One of the most ludicrous sights that I have seen among this strange and peculiar people, was a negro funeral procession, which passed our hotel a few evenings since. A small child was to be buried, and it seemed to be necessary to make as much noise as possible about it. There were no mourners, but the crowd of half-naked boys who made up the procession were continually making all sorts of fun, and a dozen fiddles and banjos discoursed in the loudest tones the most favorite dancing tunes of the negroes. It made up, altogether, one of the most serio-comical farces that was ever seen. The child was carried to the grave in a coffin, but buried without any, and in the same manner as we would bury a dog, the coffin being returned to the care of the Padre of the parish, who will let it again for the same use when occasion shall require.

A Good Invention.—Mr. William Snell, of Easton, Pa., has invented a machine to form ladies' and gentlemen's gaiters, half gaiters, and short gaiters, without seams, at the same time producing any size required, in all their proportions, so as to fit with the greatest nicety and exactness. The machine will form any of the materials in general use, such as patent leather, calf, kid, men's morocco, split leather, or anything woolen. It dispenses with the operation of boot cutting and more than half the binding. Such is its simplicity, that any person unacquainted with the business can use it. It will reduce patent leather boots to one third their usual cost.

Size of Locust Trees in Brazil.—The Locust Tree grows much larger in Brazil than with us. Martin represents them as occurring of such dimensions, "that fifteen Indians with outstretched arms could just embrace one of them." At the bottom they were eighty-four feet in circumference, and sixty feet where the boles became cylindrical. He concluded, by counting the rings, that they must belong to the age of Homer; at the most moderate estimate, they must date as far back as the time of our Saviour.

A hen which had been covered eight weeks under a load of hay in Nashua, without food or water, was found alive and is doing well.

THE PRESS AND THE PULPIT.

The Press and the Pulpit, ought to be, if they are not, co-laborers. Not that the pulpit has properly anything to do with the minuter labors of the press farther than to reprehend any falsehood or laxity, but because both aim at the elevation of society, and both profess to be guided by the spirit of christianity, which, over and above all other influences, shapes and colors the ideas, sentiments and habits of the age. The pulpit-teacher and the newspaper-teacher, though in different spheres, are the popular teachers of society; both are positioned to speak as widely as civilization extends, and in whatever tends to affect the morals, peace and happiness of man, both are alike guilty, in failing to exert their full strength and best influences.

The press unquestionably stands foremost in forming public opinion; in shaping and guiding the impulses of society but the pulpit, exercising its influence upon the press and upon society, tempers and refines both opinion and impulse. The press has ever been more radical than the pulpit, because more intimately connected with the practical life of society, and more keenly alive to its capacity and wants; but radicalism, however seemingly dangerous for the moment, has had the effect of arousing the pulpit from its conservatism, and awakening it to a closer servey of the condition of society, and the result is a more earnest and harmonious co-working of the two.

Christianity, as manifested by its founder, is precept and practice for every exigency of life. It is not an insolate thing, affecting insolate sympathies and affections, but a general principle, adapted to man in all his ideas and habits, and the pulpit has taken a narrow and unjust view, whenever it failed to apply it to every moral want in every condition of society. Until of late, the pulpit has had little to do with every day life; it has left the outward organizations of society and the functions of Government to material theorists and political philosophers, forgetting that Christanity was given to man as a basis for society and government. We would not have the pulpit descend in the least from its spirituality—we would not have it forget the great concern of the soul in the future, but we would have it keenly alive to the temporal manifestations of society, for therein the spirituality of society is for ever working and taking its hues, even like the ores molten in a fiery furnace.

The pulpit should never be a political forum, but the voice of christian advice and admonition should never be found wanting when the interests of society and government are at stake. It is the business and duty of the pulpit to watch over societies and nations; to commend virtue and condemn vice and wrong, in whatever shape they may exist. To watch over his flock, and to point them on each Sabbath to the gates of heaven, is but a part of the christian teacher's work. There is the present life, in all its varieties of action, for which he is in a measure responsible. If society is loose and disorganized—if government is wicked and tyrannous, his is the tongue that should first and most loudly reprove them. We are rejoiced to see the pulpit awakening to this broader duty. If the press has been instrumental in this awakening, it has at the same time taken much of its own inspiration from the pulpit.

VARIETY.

According to the report made by Mr. Burke, Commissioner of Patents, to the Senate, the whole number of steamboat explosions last year was thirty-three. Two thousand, six hundred and thirty-three lives have been lost thereby; three millions, ninety-nine thousand, three hundred and sixty-six dollars have been destroyed in property, and two thousand and ninety-seven persons distroyed.

An ingenious Frenchman has calculated that the space which a young Parisian belle, who is fond of dancing, traverses in the saloons of Paris, when only performing contra dances, amounts in one season to four hundred miles! He also estimated that a French lady fond of waltzing, will spin round in one night as often as the wheels of a steamboat revolve in going from Calais to Dover!

The ten hour law in Maine went into effect Friday week. The law provides that ten hours shall be a legal day's work, and no man shall be compelled to perform more, except by special contract; from this provision monthly labor and agricultural employments are excepted. No corporation or manufacturer is allowed to employ a minor under 16 more than 10 hours a day, under the penalty of a fine not exceeding $100.

The Unitarians of this City and Brooklyn have raised $10,000 to place their organ, the Christian Inquirer, on a higher footing. Rev. H. W. Mr. Farley, of Brooklyn.

The Supreme Court at Rochester, Judge Selden presiding, has decided that a man divorced from his wife, upon application of the latter charging him with adultery, is not liable under the statute against bigamy if he marries again. He is liable to punishment, however, under the Act 2 Rev. Stat. Sec. 45, and the last marriage being void in law, its issue will be illegitimate

Two Irishmen, discharged by the Lawrence and Manchester Railroad Company, Mass., sought revenge by exploding a magazine of forty-six kegs of powder, which blew the building to atoms, and one of the incendiaries with it. The other was badly scorched.

He who is most industrious has really the most of leisure; for his time is marked out into distinct portions, to each of which something is assigned; and when the thing is done, the man is at leisure; but a dead calm settles over him who lives an idle life.

An old count paid his addresses to one of the richest heiresses of Paris. In asking her hand in marriage, he frankly said to her: 'Miss B., I am very old, and you are very young; will you do me the honor to become my widow?'

Dr. Warren, of Boston, recently took from the stomach of an Irish girl at the Massachusetts General Hospital, by means of an incision, a tape-worm forty-one feet and eleven inches in length, while the sufferer was under the influence of ether.

Kitto's Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature.

TO CLERGYMEN AND OTHER STUDENTS OF THE BIBLE.—The undersigned beg leave to ask your attention to the following Work, which they now offer for sale. Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature, in two thick volumes of 1,878 pages royal octavo, beautifully and substantially bound, by JOHN KITTO. D. D., F. S. A., &c., published by MARK H. NEWMAN & Co., 199 Broadway, New York.

This Work contains such information as is indispensable for the right understanding of the Bible and its historical interpretation. It comprehends Criticism, Geography, Natural History, and Antiquities, in all their branches, religious, political, social, and domestic.

The Works of Horne, Calmet, and others, are now found to be wholly inadequate to the wants of the student. Theological science is progressive, as well as every other, and the "old learning" of the "Bible Dictionaries" which have for so long a time been in use, is felt to be unequal to the advancement of mankind at the present time.

The efforts of the German Rationalists, of the Strauss school, to resolve all the facts of Bible History into myths and fables, has awakened a corresponding spirit of research among sound and Christian scholars; a determination to place the Scriptures upon a basis of indisputable evidence. The result has been. the discovery and accumulation of a mass of information from every portion of the field of biblical learning. A multitude of new, striking, and most useful facts have thus been placed at the disposal of the editor of this work. He has accordingly availed himself of all the latest discoveries down to the very year of its publication.

Nor is the Cyclopedia compiled by one man alone. Dr. Kitto distributed the subjects discussed to more than forth different individuals, of the first eminence in those departments. Their names are attached to their articles, and they are thus individually responsible for them. The Natural History of the Bible was written expressly for this work, by two distinguished Naturalists. The Botany of Scripture, by Dr. Royle, of King's College, London. The articles on Scriptural Zoology, by Hamilton Smith, President of the Devon and Cornwall Natural History Society. The articles in the department of Criticism, by Dr. Davidson, Professor of Biblical Literature in the Lancashire Independent College. Those on the Books of the Old and New Testament, by Havernich, Hengstenberg, Dr. Wright, of Dublin, and others.

The articles on the New Testament were furnished by Dr. Tholuck, Dr. Alexander, and others.

Various subjects are discussed, by Dr. John Pye Smith, Dr. Woods, of Andover, and others.

The Scriptural Geography exhibits the results of Dr. Robinson's biblical researches in Palestine.

It will be seen, therefore, that the work is a compilation of biblical learning, by the ablest biblical scholars of the age.

The undersigned ask the attention of students of the Bible to the Cyclopedia, in full confidence that no one acquainted with its character will suffer himself to be without a copy. The low price at which it is offered, (less than half the price of the English edition,) places it within the reach of all.

MARK H. NEWMAN & Co.

NOTICES OF THE CYCLOPEDIA.

From Horne, Author of "Horne's Introduction to the Study of the Scriptures," last edition.

"This Cyclopedia surpasses every Biblical Dictionary which has preceded it, and leaves nothing to be desired in such a work which can throw light on the criticism, interpretation, history, geography, archeology, and physical science of the Bible."

From the Biblical Repertory and Princeton Review.

"Dr. Kitto comes recommended even to those not acquainted with his other writings, by the well-known general facts of his experience and success as a book-maker, and of his long familiarity, in this capacity at least, with Biblical subjects.

"He has boldly and faithfully acted on the principle that such a plan can be worthily executed, in the present state of learning, only by distributing its parts among many hands, and such hands too as have been fitted by anterior experience to perform them most successfully."

From the Biblical Repository.

"The limits of a notice like the present forbid such a description of this learned work as its merits deserve, or sufficient to give the reader a just idea of its plan. We regard it as a most important and practically useful contribution to the cause of sound Biblical learning, and have no doubt that it will soon take the place, in the estimate of scholars, of every compilation of the kind.

"The enlistment of so many scholars in the production of a single work, each one presenting in a brief compass the results of a life-time of research, in precisely the matters where he is most at home, could not fail of enriching it with an amount of learning and scholarship to which, of course, the work of no single mind, however great, could pretend.'

From the Methodist Quarterly Review.

"This work was not compiled in the method hitherto usual with works of similar character, namely, on the basis of Calmet and the old learning of his day, with a few shreds of modern discovery interwoven. All the more important articles are written expressly for their present use, not by one individual, but by an arrangement between not less than forty different scholars in Europe and America, all of whom stand high in their several departments."

The Cyclopedia can be ordered through the local Book sellers in every part of the country.

CHRIST'S KINGDOM—WHEN IS IT? AND WHAT IS IT?

Being the substance of a Lecture delivered before the Bible Class of the Seventh-day Baptist Church of Scott, N. Y. By a Member of the Class. Published by request of the class and the congregation who heard the lecture. [Concluded.

Having established, as I think, that the prophesies relating to the Messiah are to be literally interpreted, I will next quote a few texts to show that David's kingdom, by a regular succession of his own lineage, is to last forever, and that the succession is to include Christ.

Psalm 9: 3, 4.—"I have made a covenant with my chosen; I have sworn to David my servant, Thy seed will I establish forever, and build up thy throne to all generations." The 27th and 37th verses, inclusive, say, "Also I will make him, my first born, higher than the kings of the earth. My mercy will I keep for him forevermore, and my covenant shall stand fast with him. His seed also will I make to endure forever, and his throne as the days of heaven. If his children forsake my law and walk not in my judgments, if they break my statutes and keep not my commandments, then will I visit their transgressions with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes. Nevertheless my loving kindness will I not utterly take from him, nor suffer my faithfulness to fail. My covenant will I not break, nor alter the things that is gone out of my lips. Once have I SWORN in my HOLINESS that I will not LIE to David; His SEED shall endure forever, and his throne as the sun before me. It shall be established forever as the moon and as a faithful witness in heaven!" Mark the expression in the 29th, 36th, and 37th verses, "His seed will I make to endure forever, and his throne as the days of heaven! His seed shall endure forever and his throne as the sun before me!" What expressions stronger than these could be used to imply the unending duration of the throne of David? Besides, this comes to us with the verity of an oath, "Once have I sworn in my holiness," &c.

Isaiah 9: 7.—"Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David and upon his kingdom, to order it and establish it with judgment and justice forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this."

Although much more, of like character, might be quoted, to the same effect, yet as it is generally conceded, (and especially by those who would differ from me on other points,) that the last of David's hereditary successors was Christ, I shall consider this sufficient.

Now, in view of all this, when it is said, (Jer. 23: 5,) "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth," why are we not to believe that he will actually and literally do so? Where it is foretold of him, (Isa. 16: 5,) "In mercy shall the throne be established, and he shall sit upon it in truth, in the tabernacle of David, judging and seeking judgment, and hasting righteousness;" why should we explain it away as something figurative, and disbelieve that he will fulfill it to the letter as he has always done before?

Read, in this connection, Zechariah 14: 4—11, inclusive.

Isaiah 24: 23.—"When the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem and before his ancients gloriously." 32: 1—"Behold, a King shall reign in righteousness." Micah 4: 7—"And I will make her that halted a remnant, and her that was cast far off a strong nation; and the Lord shall reign over them in Mount Zion, from henceforth even forever." Zech 8: 3—"Thus saith the Lord, I am returned to Zion, and will dwell in the midst of Jerusalem, and Jerusalem shall be called a City of Truth."

When these and similar passages are found in almost every page of the prophets, why should we explain them away by spiritualizing them, and interpreting them as metaphors and allegories, and apply them to a thousand things the imagination may devise, and thereby destroy their force and beauty? Why should we not receive them as indicating events that will come to pass in the same literal manner as the other portion of the prophecies which have been quoted? For my own part, I can see no valid reason why we should not.

After quoting a few texts to show the extent of this kingdom and reign, I will dismiss this part of the subject.

Psalm 2: 8.—"Ask of me, and I will give the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." Dan. 7: 14—"And there was given him dominion and glory and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away; and his kingdom, that which shall not be destroyed." 27th verse—"And the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom, under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom and all dominions shall serve and obey him." 1 Cor. 15: 25—"For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet."

From what has been said, I am led to the following conclusions, which I shall state as an answer to the question instituted on the text, viz., In what sense was the subject of the text to possess the throne of David, and reign over the house of Jacob?

1st. That the sovereignty of the nation of Israel, which commenced with David as its head and progenitor, by the appointment of God should continue forever.

2d. That the last of that line, which was Christ, although he should appear in weakness, a poor and despised outcast, and suffer an ignominious death, should be more powerful than any who preceded him.

3d. That that kingdom, like those that preceded it, will be a literal kingdom; that his reign will be a personal reign; that Christ himself will be the Executive, "executing justice and judgment in the earth."

4th. That the location of that government will be in Jerusalem as its capital city.

5th. That his authority will be universal; all kingdoms and nations will be subject to him.

I will now anticipate and endeavor to answer some objections to the conclusions to which I have arrived. I find it difficult to state those objections so as to do justice to the persons who dissent from the opinion I entertain. But I will endeavor to do them justice. There is a class of texts in the New Testament, which represent Christ as now having the "power," from which the conclusion is drawn that his reign of righteousness commenced here before his death, and that he now exercises all the kingly attributes he ever will exercise on the earth. I will refer to some of them.

Matt. 11: 21—"All things are delivered unto me of my Father." Matt. 28: 18—"And Jesus came and spoke unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and on earth." John 3: 35—"The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hands." John 5: 22—"For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son." John 13: 3—"Jesus, knowing that the Father had given all things into his hands, and that he was come from God and went to God." John 17: 2—"As thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him." 1st Cor. 15: 27—"For he hath put all things under his feet." 1st Pet. 3: 22—"Who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God, angels and authorities and powers being made subject to him."

These texts go to show his heavenly attributes, or attributes pertaining to the Deity. "All power is given to me in heaven and on earth." Very true; all power is of God, whether in heaven or on earth. "In him we live and move;" and no act can be performed without his permission or his sufferance. But he does not exercise that power in such a way as to affect the volitions of his creatures. He has given us his law, to which we are amenable, and for the violation of which we are held accountable, and will have to answer in a future day. In all this we are left free to act as we choose, our obedience or disobedience being voluntary. In the texts quoted, although they are proof conclusive, when taken in connection with other passages of Scripture, that Christ was clothed with the attributes of Deity, yet I see nothing in them which disproves his glorious personal reign on the earth, as was announced to Mary. Nor do they go to show that his having the power referred to is a fulfillment of the prediction that he should possess the "throne of David, and reign over the house of Jacob." They go to prove, I think, that Christ is restored to his original state of exaltation, which he had before his incarnation. They go to show, that in this his prayer was answered when he said, "I have glorified thee on the earth; I have finished the work thou gavest me to do; and now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was."

Another objection is, that Christ has come and set up his kingdom on the earth, and died as was predicted of him; that he now "reigns in the hearts of his people;" and that we are now enjoying the blessings described in the 72d Psalm, which we have had under consideration, or at least that those great blessings are being bestowed.

Let us look at this objection. Christ has come and set up his kingdom. What do we understand by a kingdom? A kingdom is a certain territory or jurisdiction, under subjection or amenable to one ruler, called a King. What is a king? A king is a monarch, a supreme magistrate. Governments having a king at their head are called monarchies. Monarchies are of different characters—some limited, some absolute. An absolute monarchy is one in which the legislative, executive, and judicial authority, are united in a sovereign head, called a King. The subjects of such a king are the persons who owe allegience to him, whether they are willing to acknowledge that allegiance or not. Now Christ, as king, is an absolute monarch. United as he is in the Godhead, he is the legislator of the divine law. Only such a being as he can execute it, and perfectly and impartially adjudicate the violation of it. His kingdom is the world. The human family are his subjects. All owe allegiance to him; his laws are binding equally upon all; and all will be held to answer for any breach of his requirements, or any want of respect to him as sovereign ruler of the universe.

Has Christ set up his kingdom on the earth? Surely not, if we are to suppose that his reign is to be characterized by the holy principles of the gospel. On the other hand, if we are allowed to judge by the character of the reign under which we do live, we should be likely to conclude that the world is under the despotic sway of the Prince of Darkness. Notwithstanding Christ came into the world clothed with the attributes of Infinity, yet he exercised no control over the acts of men, farther than the voluntary acquiescence of his disciples in the truths which fell from his lips. So far from exercising any other control, both he and his followers have ever been the especial objects of the hatred and insults of the ruling influences of this world. It would certainly appear strange, that in a kingdom of righteousness, the righteous should be persecuted and oppressed, and that the ruling motive for so doing should be to insult the king.

But, says the objector, "His reign is over his disciples; they are his subjects; we do not pretend that he reigns over the unconverted or unregenerate portion of mankind, for they are not his subjects." This same objector will say, at another time, or, perhaps, at the same time, that "it is the privilege and duty of all to become subjects, and it is at their peril that they neglect this duty to become so, as they will surely be punished for such neglect." But what right has a government to impose its laws on any but subjects? None whatever. The fact that any government requires obedience to its laws from any portion of the people, is a virtual assertion that those people are subjects of the government. Would it be just, to leave a person to exercise his choice as to whether he will become a subject or not, and then punish that person for not choosing to be a subject—for choosing to withhold his allegiance? I think all would say it would not. Yet into the affirmative of this position the sentiment forces all who advocate it. To show its absurdity, it only needs to be stated. The truth is, we are all creatures of God; and, in view of the fact that we are his by creation, we are all his subjects. But in the fall we all became rebels, and the mission of Christ here on the earth was not to set up a kingdom, but, as Captain of our Salvation, to subdue us to God—to subdue us by his love.

It may be thought, however, that I have evaded the issue, inasmuch as the objector says that "Christ reigns in the hearts of his people." But I have been endeavoring to show the impropriety of supposing his kingdom is set up, and he exercising a partial reign. Even his "reigning in the heart" has a variety of objections. What is it to reign? Webster says it is to rule as king or emperor. Kings have tribunals among their subjects, and judgment is executed within their jurisdiction. Does Christ reign as king "in the hearts of his people" on earth? Where is his tribunal of justice? Surely that must be in "the heart" too. Neither does his jurisdiction extend beyond it. But how is the subject arraigned for a violation of the king's commands? How is justice executed on the offender? To be consistent with the sentiment, the arraigning, trial, and execution, must be in the heart too, because this is the limit of the king's jurisdiction, which embraces another absurdity. If, by the expression, "Christ reigns in the hearts of his people," is meant that Christ's followers are influenced by a consideration of their obligations to obey him as their Creator and Redeemer, and this obedience a voluntary compliance with all that is required in the gospel, out of love to him, and in view of the judgment to which they are approaching, and the retributions pertaining to a future state of existence, (in which sense, I think, it is generally used;) if, I say, this is the sentiment they would convey, I have no objection to it, but my objection would be to the manner of its expression. But there is nothing in this analogous to the ruling of a king. By a misapplication of the prophecies, this influence has been substituted for the glorious reign of Christ on the earth. If in any sense it is proper to use the terms "to rule" and "to reign" with this meaning, it is not, I think, the sense in which the terms are used by the prophets in the texts quoted. They imply something in the future. But is the influence which impels us to follow and act out our convictions of truth and duty of a more potent character since Christ came into this world than before? Or, is it of a different character from what it ever was? The affirmative of these questions, no one, to my knowledge, has ever taken. And if the affirmative is not tenable, and "Christ reigns in the heart of his people," then he always has so reigned, ever since the fall of our first parents—which is also absurd, and makes the prophecies of no effect—a mere imaginary, poetic effusion, of no worth except to display the ingenuity of those who wrote them.

This answer to the objection under consideration accords with the view given by our Saviour in the parable of the nobleman who "went into a far country, to receive a kingdom, and return again." Read that parable as recorded in Luke 19: 11—27.

The third and last objection which I shall consider, is predicated in the words of our Saviour, "My kingdom is not of this world." All arguments in favor of Christ's assuming regal authority, and that he is yet to sit on the "throne of David, and reign over the house of Jacob," are rebutted by quoting these words. But it should be recollected, that on the same occasion when he spoke these words he also said that he was king, and king of the Jews. From what has been said it will be seen, that Christ does not now exercise any different authority, or kingly prerogative, from what he did previous to his incarnation; this text, therefore, nullifies the idea that he "reigns in the heart" now, so as to be a fulfillment of the announcement to Mary, that he should "reign over the house of Jacob," &c. The interpretation generally given to this text is, that it teaches the spiritual character of Christ's kingdom, in opposition to a worldly character. With this interpretation, so far as it goes, I agree. But the objector goes farther, and infers, from its being a spiritual kingdom, that it therefore is not a literal one. To this I object, believing that it is no more necessary that a spiritual kingdom should not also be a literal one, than that a regenerated and consequently a spiritual man should not also be a literal man.

We read in the Scriptures of three worlds. 1st. We are informed in 2d Pet. 3: 5, 6, "By the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth, standing out of the water and in the water, whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished." This was the antediluvian world. 2d. "But the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." Verse 7. This is the world of which Christ's kingdom is not. 3d. "The new heavens and new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness," or the world to come, of which Christ will be king. From these texts we learn that, in opposition to "this world," of which Christ's kingdom is not, the "old world" or antediluvian world, was destroyed by a deluge, and the present world is reserved to be destroyed by fire. But in this destruction by fire we are not to suppose that the earth will lose its identity, any more than in the former destruction by water. Neither will particular locations lose their identity, but the wonderful changes will be such that it may subsequently, with propriety, be called a new earth; and this, together with the different character of its population and government, as contrasted with the present, will make it a new world, of which will be Christ's kingdom. Previous to the coming of Christ, as well as subsequent to that period, this world has been under the dominion of what Paul calls, (2d Cor 4: 4,) "the god of this world, who blindeth the minds of those who believe not;" whom Christ calls "the prince of this world." John 14: 30, and 16: 11. The divine arrangement seems incompatible with the idea that Christ should reign in this world, since it is to be destroyed, with the works therein. It seems incompatible also with Christ's mission here on the earth, which was to reclaim this world from the dominion of sin and Satan, not by the assumption of regal authority, (which always implies physical power or force,) but by an infinite exhibition of divine love, to pay the debt due to the majesty of the divine law, that as many as will, by a voluntary renunciation of allegiance to the prince of this world, and a cessation of rebellion against God, may be made heirs of a kingdom in the world to come, which shall never be destroyed. Under this reign will the earth be renewed, purified, and restored to its paradisical state of perfection, and will cease to be cursed for the sake of man, which has been the case ever since the fall. This is the kingdom, in which the promise to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, that they should have the Land of Canaan for a possession, will be fulfilled. In this kingdom will be consummated the promise to Abraham, that in his seed all the nations of the earth shall be blessed.

I will close these remarks with an extract from an article on the text, "My kingdom is not of this world," written by Rev. Isaac P. Labagh, adopting the sentiment as my own—

> "The world that now is, this present evil world, lying under the dominion of the prince of the power of the air, must, with all its present order of things, civil, political, ecclesiastical, terrestrial and aerial, pass away, and a new order of things be introduced—a new heaven and a new earth—(which make a new world, although consisting of the same materials, and revolving in the same orbit.) In that shall righteousness dwell, not as a foreign plant in an unnatural soil, but as the native fruit, because the Lord our Righteousness shall be its King. This connection between the coming of Christ and the prevalence of Holiness, is intimated in the Lord's Prayer. We pray, 'Thy kingdom come.' Then, and then first, and then only, will His will be done on the earth as it is in Heaven."

AN AUSTRALIAN FLOOD.

The rivers of Australia are often dry, and great sufferings are caused by the want of water. But, when the torrents pour from the mountains, the river banks are filled so suddenly as often to overwhelm men and cattle. Sir T.L. Mitchell, Surveyor-General of New South Wales, in his lately-published "Travels in Tropical Australia," gives the following graphic account of a flood in the river Macquarie, coming upon him at a time when his company were almost perishing with drought:—

"FEBRUARY 13th.—I was again laid up with the maladie du pays—sore eyes. Mr. Stephenson took a ride for me to the summit of Mount Foster, and to various cattle-stations about its base, with some questions, to which I required answers, about the river and stations on it lower down. But no one could tell what the western side of the marshes was like, as no person had passed that way; the country being more open on the eastern side, where only the stations were situated, Mr. Kinghorne's, at Graway, about five miles from our camp, being the lowest down on the west bank. Mr. Stephenson returned early, having met two of the mounted police. To my most important question, What water was to be found lower down in the river? the reply was very satisfactory, namely, 'Plenty, and a flood coming down from the Turon mountains.' The two policemen said they had traveled twenty miles with it on the day previous, and that it would still take some time to arrive near our camp.

"About noon, the drays arrived in good order, having been encamped where there was no water, about six miles short of our camp; the whole distance traveled, from Canonba to the Macquarie, having been about nineteen miles. In the afternoon, two of the men, taking a walk up the river, reported on their return that the flood poured in upon them, when in the river-bed, so suddenly, that they narrowly escaped it. Still the bed of the Macquarie, before our camp, continued so dry and silent, that I could scarcely believe the flood coming to be real, and so near to us, who had been put to so many shifts for want of water.

"Towards evening, I stationed a man with a gun a little way up the river, with orders to fire on the flood's appearance, that I might have time to run to the part of the channel nearest to our camp, and witness what I had so much wished to see, as well from curiosity as urgent need. The shades of evening came, however, but no flood; and the man on the look-out returned to the camp. Some hours later, and after the moon had risen, a murmuring sound, like that of a distant waterfall, mingled with occasional cracks, as of breaking timber, drew our attention, and I hastened to the river bank. By very slow degrees, the sounds grew louder, and at length so audible as to draw various persons beside from the camp to the river-side. Still no flood appeared, though its approach was indicated by the occasional rending of trees with a loud noise. Such a phenomenon, in a most serene moonlight night, was quite new to us all.

"At length, the rushing sound of waters, and loud cracking of timber, announced that the flood was in the next bend. It rushed into our sight, glittering in the moonbeams, a moving cataract, tossing before it ancient trees, and snapping them against its banks. It was preceded by a point of meandering water, picking its way, like a thing of life, through the deepest parts of the dark, dry and shady bed of what thus again became a flowing river. By my party, situated as we were at the time, beating about the country, and impeded in our journey, solely by the almost total absence of water, suffering excessively from thirst and extreme heat, I am convinced the scene can never be forgotten. Here came at once abundance, the product of storms in the far-off mountains that overlooked our homes.

"My first impulse was to have welcomed this flood on our knees; for the scene was sublime in itself, while the subject—an abundance of water sent to us in the desert—greatly heightened the effect to our eyes. Suffice it to say, I had witnessed nothing of such interest in all my Australian travels. Even the heavens presented something new, at least uncommon, and, therefore, in harmony with this scene; the variable star Argus had increased to the first magnitude, just above the beautiful constellation of the Southern Cross, which slightly inclined over the river, in the only portion of the sky seen through the trees. That very red star, thus rapidly increasing in magnitude, might, as characteristic of her rivers, be recognized as the star of Australia, when Europeans cross the line.

"The river gradually filled up the channel nearly bank high, while the living cataract traveled onward much slower than I had expected to see it; so slowly, indeed, that more than an hour after its first arrival, the sweet music of the head of the flood was distinctly audible from my tent, as the murmur of waters and the diapason crash of logs traveled slowly through the tortuous windings of the river bed. I was finally lulled to sleep by that melody of living waters, so grateful to my ear, and evidently so unwonted in the dry bed of the thirsty Macquarie."

CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

President Edwards describes the experience of the love of God in his own soul, in the following very delightful strain:—

"Once, as I rode out into the woods, for my health, in 1737, having alighted from my horse in a retired place, as my manner commonly has been, to walk for divine contemplation and prayer, I had a view that for me was extraordinary, of the glory of the Son of God, as Mediator between God and man, and his wonderful, great, full, pure and sweet grace and love, and meek and gentle condescension. This grace, that appeared so calm and sweet, appeared also great above the heavens. The person of Christ appeared ineffably excellent, with an excellency great enough to swallow up all thought and conception, which continued, as near as I can judge, about an hour: which kept me the greater part of the time in a flood of tears and weeping aloud. I felt an ardency of soul to be, what I know not otherwise how to express, emptied and annihilated: to lie in the dust, and to be full of Christ alone; to love him with a holy and pure love—to trust in him, to live upon him, to serve and follow him, and to be perfectly sanctified and made pure, with a divine and heavenly purity. I have several other times had views very much of the same nature, and which have had the same effects."

In another place, he says: "God, in the communication of his Holy Spirit, has appeared as an infinite fountain of divine glory and sweetness; being full, sufficient to fill and satisfy the soul; pouring forth itself in sweet communions, like the sun in its glory, sweetly and pleasantly diffusing light and life."

LAST MOMENTS OF GREAT PERSONAGES.

Sir T. More remarked to the executioner by whose hand he was to perish, that the scaffold was extremely weak. "I pray you, friends, see me up safe," said he, "and for coming down, let me shift for myself."

Chaucer breathed his last while composing a ballad. His last production is called, "A ballad made by Geoffrey Chaucer on his death-bed, lying in great pain."

"I could wish this tragic scene was over," said Quin, the actor, "but I hope to go through it with becoming dignity."

Petrarch was found dead in his library, leaning over a book.

Pope tells us, he found Sir Godfrey Kneller (when he visited him a few days prior to his end) sitting up, and forming plans for his monument. His vanity was conspicuous even in death.

Warren has remarked, that Chesterfield's good breeding only left him with death. "Give Drysdale a chair," said he to his valet, when that person was announced.

Bayle, when dying, pointed to the place where his proof-sheet was deposited.

Clarendon's pen dropped from his hand when he was seized with palsy, which put an end to his existence.

Roscommon, when expiring, quoted from his own translation of "Dies Iræ."

Haller, feeling his pulse, said, "The artery ceases to beat!" and immediately died.

STATISTICS OF BENEVOLENCE AND REFORM.

Nearly all of the great benevolent and reformatory societies which center in New York, held their anniversary meetings last week. Presuming that our readers want to know what they are doing, we have gathered up and placed on record the principal facts connected with each. It will be seen, that contributions for the support of the various societies are steadily increasing. Would that the spirit of genuine piety might increase in the same ratio. Perhaps it does, and if so there is much in the following statistics to cheer the hearts of Christians. May a consideration of the facts not only cheer them, but awaken in them a sense of obligation to imitate every good example.

MAGDALEN FEMALE BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.

The object of this Society, as indicated by its name, is to shelter and reform abandoned females. Its 16th annual meeting was held on the evening of May 4, at which the reports of the officers were read. The receipts for the year just closed, have been $1,917 12, and the expenditures $1,922 40. During the past year forty-nine persons have been received to its care, of whom eight were sent to friends, five are living in respectable families, three have been sent to the Hospital, one has died, and eleven have withdrawn from the Institution. After the reports were read, the Rev. Messrs. De Witt, Lansing, and Storrs made addresses.

PRESBYTERIAN BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

On the evening of May 6, a sermon was preached before this body by Rev. Mr. Janeway. Previous to it, however, an abstract of the Annual Report was read, from which the following statistics are taken:—

Receipts of the year, $110,081—being greater than in any former year. Expenditures, $110,207. Publications—Missionary Chronicle, 8,150; Foreign Missionary, 14,750; Annual Report, 7,850; Letters to Children and to Sunday-schools, 12,000. New Missionaries, 22—of whom 5 are ordained ministers, 2 licentiates, 1 physician, 1 printer. The Board has missions among the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, Seminole, Iowa, Otoe, Omaha, and Chippewa Indians, eight ministers of the Gospel, one physician, one native licentiate preacher, five male and five female teachers, one farmer, one carpenter, and the wives of the missionaries; about 300 scholars, of whom 200 are in boarding-schools; 63 native preachers reported in connection with the churches. In West Africa, three ministers of the Gospel and two teachers; schools at three of the stations; church at Monrovia. In North India, three missions—with nine stations; twenty-five ministers of the Gospel, one of them a native, and most of them married; and seventeen native converts employed as catechists and teachers; two printing-presses, with book-binderies, and fonts of type in four languages, from which upwards of 10,000,000 pages of the Holy Scriptures and religious tracts were sent forth during the year ending November 1, 1848; scholars, about 1,200—of whom 150 are supported by the missions, and about 600 more are in schools of a higher order; churches at several stations, and 112 native church members reported. In Siam, two ministers of the Gospel, both of them married, and a physician. In China, three missions, one of them unoccupied at present; nine ministers of the Gospel, one physician, one superintendent of the press; about 100 scholars—of whom 60 are supported by the missions; church at Ningpo; printing-press, with movable metallic types, from which about 4,000,000 pages of the Sacred Scriptures and religious tracts were issued. Among the Jews, two ministers of the Gospel. In Papal Europe, efforts made to promote the spread of the Gospel, by sending moneys to approved persons in France and Geneva, to be expended for that purpose.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY.

This Society celebrated its 21st Anniversary at the Broadway Tabernacle on the evening of May 7. After the preliminary exercises of singing and prayer, Rev. J. Spaulding, one of the Secretaries, presented an abstract of the Annual Report, from which it appears that the Society extends its beneficent operations for the welfare of Seamen to Gottenburg, Stockholm, and Gottland, Sweden; Havre, Bordeaux, and Marseilles in France; to Canton and other sea-ports of China; to Havana and St. Thomas in the West Indies; Valparaiso, Chili; Honolulu and Lahaina, Sandwich Islands; and San Francisco, California; where its chaplains and sailor-missionaries are stationed. In several other foreign ports it is also doing much through the agency of pious seamen and the missionaries of other societies. In addition to this, it is acting in harmonious and efficient concert with numerous societies, which at home employ more than four score laborers for the spiritual and temporal good of those who spread the truths of the Holy Cross over the waters.

The receipts of the Society for the past year, without including a considerable amount raised by its officers, and expended in the places where raised, were $18,582; and the expenditures, $18,497. Those institutions called sailors' homes, so essential in protecting seamen and promoting their social and moral improvement, are happily accomplishing the object in view—the one in New York, owned by the Society, having had 3,635 sailor boarders the last year, and in seven years, ending May 1, 25,554.

The New York Marine Temperance Society now numbers over 23,000 members. Both at sea and on shore, seamen are cultivating habits of sobriety. Hence the increase of their deposits in savings banks; of their personal comfort; their self-respect; their manly bearing; their attendance on the means of grace; their fear of God, and obedience both to divine and human laws. The aspects of the seamen's cause are such as to fill every benevolent mind with the purest satisfaction, and every grateful heart with thanksgiving to the Author of all good.

Addresses were delivered by Rev. Dr. Scott of Newark, N. J., Rev. R. S. Storrs of Brooklyn, Rev. Dr. E. Beecher of Boston, and a sailor named W. G. Baker.

METHODIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The Methodist E. Church Missionary Society held its anniversary meeting on the evening of May 7, at which the usual reports were made, addresses delivered, and a large collection taken up. The receipts for the year ending May 1st, at the offices in New York and Cincinnati, have been $84,045; disbursements $102,940, being $18,896 more than the receipts; now in the treasury $3,256. This Society has missions in China, Africa, South America, Oregon, California, among the Indians, and also among the Germans and Swedes in this country. Addresses were delivered by Rev. Mr. Nadal, Dr. Durbin, and Mr. Lane.

SOCIETY FOR THE ABOLITION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

This Society held its fifth Anniversary on the evening of May 7, at which a report of last year's doings was read, and several spirited addresses were made. The report represents the cause for which the Society was organized as having made great progress during the past year. The speakers on the occasion were Wendell Phillips of Boston, Dr. Elder of Philadelphia, and Horace Greeley of N. Y.

AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY.

The Anniversary Meeting of this Society was held at the Tabernacle on the morning of May 8, and was attended by a large audience. The President, W. L. Garrison, on taking the chair, said that they might be sure of the blessing of Almighty God on account of the goodness of the cause which had brought them together, but if any felt disposed to address the Throne of Grace, an opportunity was now presented. After a pause of a few minutes, Samuel May came forward and offered an appropriate prayer. The President then read select portions of Scripture, and followed with a statement of the objects of the Society. It brands Slavery as a sin of the darkest and deepest dye, and maintains that no man can be a Christian who holds his brother man in bondage—that that church is no Christian church which cherishes this evil within its bosom. When Mr. Garrison had concluded his remarks, the Treasurer read his report, showing total receipts from donations, publications, and subscriptions to the Anti-Slavery Standard, $6,992 57, and total expenditures for the Standard and agents, and support of the office in New York, $6,975 13. A series of resolutions was then offered by Edmund Quincy, upon which addresses were delivered by Parker Pillsbury, Wendell Phillips, and Frederick Douglass.

AMERICAN AND FOREIGN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY.

This Society held its Annual Meeting at the Tabernacle in the afternoon of May 9—Arthur Tappan in the chair. After the usual introductory exercises, an abstract of the Annual Report was read, setting forth many encouraging evidences of the progress of the anti-slavery cause—especially the increasing interest manifested in it by the newspaper press. The National Era, the report states, has been quite successful, and has refunded to the Society the advances made to defray the expense of its establishment at Washington. The reading of the report was followed by a spirited song, "The Car of Emancipation," sung by the Luca Family. Henry Bibb, a fugitive slave from Kentucky, then took the stand, and addressed the audience on the importance of supplying the slaves with the Bible. He drew a picture of the evils of slavery and the sufferings of the slave, of the universal licentiousness that made the semblance of marriage a mockery, of the violent disruption of the dearest ties, and the misery and degradation of being sold in the market like a beast of burden—evils which he thought the general dissemination of the Bible would speedily bring to an end. Mr. Bibb was followed by Rev. Joshua Leavitt, and Samuel R. Ward, a colored preacher.

NEW YORK STATE COLONIZATION SOCIETY.

This auxiliary of the American Colonization Society, held a meeting in the Tabernacle on the evening of May 8, at which the usual reports were presented. The receipts of this branch for the year, have been $12,516; while the total receipts of the parent Society for the year exceed $58,000. Under the auspices of the Society, nine vessels, with 870 emigrants, have sailed for Liberia. Of these, more than 100 were Christian communicants of various denominations; 7 were preachers of the Gospel; more than 30 had purchased their own freedom by extra industry, at a cost of over $20,000; and 103 in one vessel had learned to write a decent hand, while upward of 600 had been voluntarily emancipated by their owners.

FOREIGN EVANGELICAL SOCIETY.

The tenth, and probably the last, Anniversary of this Society was held on the evening of May 8. The Corresponding Secretary stated, in the course of the meeting, that a union was about to be consummated between this Society, the American Protestant Society, and the Christian Alliance, the new organization to be called the American and Foreign Christian Union. These societies all have in view nearly the same object, and it is thought that by their consolidation expenses will be reduced and efficiency increased. The Treasurer's Report showed that the receipts of the Society during the year just closed were nearly $25,000, being $4,000 more than has been received in any previous year. Upwards of $100,000 have been expended during the year, by various societies, for the conversion of papists. The Evangelical Society has laborers in Texas and Mexico, in the island of St. Domingo, in New Orleans and New York, and at several places in Europe.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

The 24th Anniversary of the American Tract Society was held at the Tabernacle on the morning of May 9. After prayer by Albert Barnes, the President of the Society made some very appropriate remarks in relation to the social and political changes of the past year, and the demand for increased effort on the part of Christians to occupy the opening fields. The Reports of the Treasurer and Managers were then read, after which resolutions were offered and speeches made by Bishop Meade of Va., Prof. Raymond of Madison University, Rev. J. M. Stevenson of Ohio, Rev. Dr. Poor of Ceylon, and Rev. Dr. Tyng of N. Y. The following abstract of the 24th Annual Report will give an idea of the Society's labors:—

The number of new publications, in English, German, French, Italian, Danish, and Welsh, of which 23 are books, is 145—total publications, 1,458, including 254 volumes—besides 2,387 in more than 100 foreign languages and dialects. The new volumes comprise several narratives for the young, all of which are simple records of fact. The series of tracts has been reïssued, chiefly from new stereotype plates and engravings, in twelve volumes of 500 pages each.

Circulation during the year, including 734,664 volumes, 7,203,682 publications, or 234,409,300 pages. Total since the formation of the Society, 4,803,592 volumes; 104,153,674 publications, or 2,268,400,626 pages.

Receipts of the year, in donations, $94,080 43; for sales, $164,218 73; balance in the Treasury last year, $140 09; total, $258,440 25.

Expenditures for paper printing, binding, engraving, translating, and copy-right, $148,677 46; for presses, $2,723 56; for colportage, $58,106 42; remitted for foreign and pagan lands, $14,000; total, $258,283 91; leaving balance in the Treasury, $157 06.

Colportage.—Including 106 students from 23 different colleges or seminaries, for their vacations, and 52 for the foreign immigrant population, colporteurs have been employed for the whole or part of the year, as follows: Vt., 4; R. I., 2; Conn., 4; N. Y., 75; N. J., 9; Pa., 43; Del., 1; Md., 15; Va., 38; N. C., 13; S. C., 3; Geo., 24; Fla., 1; Ala., 14; La., 11; Texas, 9; Ark., 2; Mi., 5; Tenn., 32; Ken., 23; Ohio, 59; Ind., 29; Ill., 19; Mo., 16; Wis., 4; Iowa, 7; Mich., 13; Canada, 3; Mexico, 2; total, 480. The whole number in commission, April 1, was 268.

Statistical Results.—The statistical tables show that the colporteurs have visited 241,071 families; conversed on personal religion or prayed with 129,657 families; addressed public meetings or held prayer-meetings to the number of 12,623; sold 377,258 books; granted to the destitute 98,819 books; and distributed 13,274 Bibles and Testaments, furnished by Bible Societies.

The spiritual condition of the districts thus visited, and the necessity of such efforts, may be inferred from the fact, that 52,536 of the families, or more than a quarter of a million of people, were habitual neglecters of evangelical preaching; 45,575 families were destitute of all religious books except the Bible; 27,474 families were Roman Catholics.

Foreign and Pagan Lands.—The waking minds of millions in France, Germany, Austria, Hungary, and Italy; their struggles for freedom, and their success in securing the liberty of the press, have laid claims upon the Society greater than ever before; and at foreign mission stations, connected with our various Boards, the press is unusually prosperous and active. The evidences of conversions, and of the permanent diffusion of gospel light, by tracts and books and the labors of colporteurs, missionaries, and native converts, in foreign and pagan lands, are greater than in any previous year. Many very striking facts have occurred. In view of the wants of the foreign stations, grants of money have been transmitted, and distributed among them to the amount of $14,000.

AMERICAN HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

This Society held its 23d Annual Meeting at the Tabernacle on the evening of May 8, at which the usual reports were presented, and addresses were delivered by Rev. Henry Little of Indiana, Rev. Dr. Allen of Lane Seminary, Rev. R. S. Storrs Jr. of Brooklyn, and Rev. J. C. Styles of N. Y. From the reports of the Treasurer and the Executive Committee, the following facts are gathered:—

The Society has had in service the last year, 1,019 ministers of the gospel, in 26 different States and Territories: In the New England States, 302; the Middle States, 239; the Southern States, 15; the Western States and Territories, 463.

Of these, 698 have been the pastors or stated supplies of single congregations; and 321 have occupied larger fields. Eight have preached to congregations of colored people, 13 to Welsh, and 25 to German congregations; and two to congregations of Norwegians—one of them through an interpreter.

The congregations supplied, in whole or part, are 1,510; and the aggregate of ministerial service performed, is equal to 808 years.

The pupils in Sunday-schools are nearly 83,500; and subscribers to the temperance pledge, 105,000.

There have been added to the churches, 5,550, viz: 2,706, by profession; 2,844, by letter. Many of the western churches particularly, have within a few months been visited with special effusions of the Spirit. Sixty-five missionaries, in their recent communications, speak of revivals of religion, and report 1,194 hopeful conversions.

The receipts of the year exceed those of the last by $5,728 81. The number of missionaries is 13 greater; and the years of labor performed 35 more. 63 congregations more have been blessed with the preaching of the Gospel; 530 more added to the churches; and 6,500 more instructed in Sunday-schools. This year the Society has also found the Far West! and has now two missionaries in Oregon and two in California.

During the last ten years the advance on the receipts has been $63,631, or more than 76 per cent. The number of missionaries has increased from 665 to 1,019. This advance has given 303 additional laborers—or six-sevenths of the increase on the whole field—to our Western States and Territories.

AMERICAN FEMALE GUARDIAN SOCIETY.

This Society held its 15th Anniversary on the evening of May 9, at the Church of the Puritans. After the usual introductory exercises, the Treasurer's Report was read, from which we learn that there was on hand at the last meeting $6,809 66 toward erecting the House of Industry and Home for the Friendless, and that $12,944 73 has been recived since, making in all $19,754 39. There has been paid out during the year, for the erection of the Home, current expenses, &c., $19,754 39. The labors of the Society may be classed under five heads. 1st. Publishing, which includes the Advocate and Guardian, and the Walks of Usefulness; of the former about 12,000 copies are printed monthly, and of the latter 1,000 copies have been printed during the year. 2d. The Registry, which is kept at the Publishing Office of the Society, where the names of applicants for employment are recorded, and where employers can at any time be supplied with domestics; about 2,000 have been registered during the year. 3d. Auxiliary Societies, of which there are some hundreds located in different sections, which have during the past year furnished large quantities of clothing and provisions for the inmates of the Home, and for the disposal of the Missionary Committee. 4th. The Missionary Department, by whose instrumentality many poor families have been visited, and supplied with needed articles. 5th. The House of Industry and Home for the Friendless, which has been erected since the last meeting, at a cost of about $25,000, and the object of which is sufficiently indicated by its name.

JEWISH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The American Society for Meliorating the Condition of the Jews held its 26th Anniversary on the 10th of May. The Annual Report states that the distracted condition of Europe has increased the emigration of Jews to this country—that there is a manifest disposition on the part of those who come here to investigate the claims of Christianity—and that a large number of tracts have been printed for their benefit. The Jewish Chronicle, a monthly periodical, the organ of the Society, is still published to the amount of 2,000 copies per month. The receipts of the year were $3,221, and the expenditures $3,208. Addresses were delivered by a converted Jew named Bernard Stinehal, Rev. Mr. Thompson, and Rev. Dr. Bacon.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

This Society held its 33d Anniversary on the 10th of May, at which addresses were delivered by Dr. Snodgrass, E. S. Porter, Dr. Adams, Gov. Bradish, and Drs. Cox, Bacon, Durbin, and Poor. From the Annual Report, we learn the following facts:—

The Receipts of the Society have been, from all sources, $251,870 16.

The Issues of Bibles, 205,307; of Testaments, 359,419—total for the year, 564,726.

During the 33 years of its existence, the Society has issued 2,510,610 Bibles, and 3,836,530 Testaments, making a total of 6,347,140 copies.

Twenty Agents have been employed the whole year, and seven for a part of it, collecting funds, and promoting the circulation of the Scriptures. Actual examination shows that in some of the oldest settled portions of the country, where explorations and supplies have been effected once, twice, and even thrice, in the course of the past twenty years, there is again found an alarming destitution. Instances have recently come to light, where one family in eight was without the Bible, and some cases, where one in five was in that condition. Every auxiliary which has not made a survey within four years should enter on this work at once.

Seventy-eight auxiliary Societies have been formed, forty-four persons have been made Life Directors, and seven hundred and thirty-six Life Members.

A Choctaw New Testament has been printed at the Society's House, and the Gospel of Luke in the Grebo tongue—the latter for Western Africa.

AMERICAN BAPTIST HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The 16th Annual Meeting of this Society was held in the evening of May 10. After singing and prayer, the Report of the Officers was read, from which the following information was gathered:—

The amount received from all sources for the year ending March 31, 1849, is $29,105 90; the total amount of disbursements from said period, $25,180 35; balance in the Treasurer's hands $3,925 55. The liabilities of the Society at the same time were $18,734 27, and its available resources $8,425 55, showing a balance against the Society of $10,308 72.

During the year, 134 agents and missionaries have labored under the commission of the Society. They have been distributed as follows: In New Hampshire and Vermont, 2; New York, 6; New Jersey, 2; Delaware, 1; Texas, 1; Arkansas, 2; Kentucky, 2; Missouri, 1; Illinois, 24; Indiana, 14; Ohio, 4; Michigan, 28; Wisconsin, 12; Iowa, 13; Oregon, 3; California, 1; and Canada, 12.

The whole number of States and Territories occupied is 18; in which they supplied 453 stations and out-stations, and bestowed an aggregate amount of time in their labors equal to that of one man for ninety-two and a half years.

They report the baptism of 774 persons, the organization of 45 churches, and the ordination of 27 ministers.

In the course of the meeting, a report was read from a Committee appointed to investigate the alledged relation of the Society to Slavery. After examining the books, and interrogating the Secretaries, they came to the following conclusions:—

First. That no funds known or suspected to be the avails of Slavery have been received into the Treasury of the Society since the adoption of the new Constitution in 1846.

Second. Since that time no Slaveholder has been employed by the Board as a Missionary.

Third. No Missionary employed by the Society since the adoption of the new Constitution has been known to administer the ordinances of the Gospel in a slave-holding Church.

At the present time there is no Missionary in any Slave State, under the appointment of the Board of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, except one in Delaware, and he is mainly supported by the Church in Wilmington.

The Committee, in conclusion, say, that in so far as they are able to ascertain, there is no relation or action of the Society which involves directly or indirectly the countenance and fellowship of Slavery.

AMERICAN AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY.

This Society held its 12th Anniversary at the Baptist Church in Oliver street, on the 11th of May. After prayer, and an address by the President, Spencer H. Cone, the Reports of the Treasurer and the Board were read. The receipts of the year have been $39,840 86, being nearly five thousand dollars greater than in any former year. The foreign appropriations have amounted to about $16,000, of which $2,000 was for Chinese Scriptures, and over $6,000 for Scripture distribution in Germany. 15,540 Bibles and Testaments, valued at $2,825, have been gratuitously appropriated. 324 Life Members, and 22 Directors, have been added to the list.

The number and pressing urgency of the demands for the present year require, that the income of the Society should be raised to at least $50,000. At this sum the Report aims, and all the friends of the Society are earnestly exhorted to exert themselves for the attainment of this object.

THE AMERICAN BOARD.

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions held a meeting on the 11th of May. From the Reports presented on that occasion, the following statistics are taken:

Missions of the American Board are in operation among the Indians in Lower Canada, in Western New York, among the Ojibwas, the Sioux, the Cherokees, Choctaws, and Pawnees, in the Oregon Territory; the Sandwich Islands; at Fou-Chau, Amoy, and Canton, in China; in the Island of Borneo, at Madras, Madura, Ceylon, Bombay, Ahmednugger, Oroomiah, in Persia; at Erzroom, Trebizond, Constantinople, Broosa, Smyrna and Salonica; at Athens, Beyroot, Mount Lebanon; in South Africa, and on the Gaboon River, just under the Equator, on the Western side of that dark continent. The missions thus encircling the globe are shedding, it is believed, some light upon the benighted nations.

In September last, the number of missionaries, assistant missionaries, and native helpers, in the employ of the Board, was 557. Since that time, 15 missionaries and assistant missionaries, with their wives—making 30 persons—have been sent into the field; some to India, some to Africa, and some to the Turkish Empire.

The Board has now under its care 75 churches, with 26,000 members. There are 12 seminaries for training native preachers and teachers—18 other boarding-schools—302 free schools; whole number of pupils under instruction, about 12,000. The schools at the Sandwich Islands do not come into this account, being provided for by the Government of the Islands. It has 11 printing establishments, with facilities for printing in nearly 30 languages.

The financial condition of the Board is not in all respects what might be desired. At the last meeting of the Board, there was a debt of $60,000. Toward the liquidation of this debt, $46,000 have been pledged, of which $39,000 have been paid in. The ordinary receipts, irrespective of the debt, for the nine months of the financial year ending April 30, amounted to $178,287—making the total receipts for nine months $217,000.

AMERICAN PROTESTANT SOCIETY.

This Society held its 6th Anniversary at the Presbyterian Church in Mercer street. After prayer by Dr. Patton, and singing by a company of Portuguese from the Island of Madeira, the Treasurer read his report. $18,411 has been received for the general purposes of the Society, and about that amount expended, during the year. Collections have also been made for the benefit of the persecuted Portuguese from Madeira, who are about to settle in Illinois, amounting to $5,576. The Annual Report was read by the Secretary, Mr. Norton, from which we learn that this Society, like two others before mentioned, is soon to be absorbed by the Am. and For. Christian Union. Among the results of past labors, the Report mentions "the conversion of fifteen hundred Roman Catholics in this country, and the turning from Romanism of double that number."

AMERICAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

The 13th Anniversary of this organization was held at the Tabernacle—Chancellor Walworth in the chair. A Report of last year's operations was read by the Cor. Sec., Rev. John Marsh, after which several resolutions were introduced and discussed. The report speaks of the painful apathy upon the subject of temperance in this country, and the manifest increase of drinking. It expresses the opinion, however, that substantial progress has been made within a year past, particularly in Canada, Great Britain, France, Bombay, Madras, and the Sandwich Islands. The receipts of the Society, in the way of donations, have amounted to only $1,350, while the patronage of its publications has diminished. Better things are hoped for in the coming year, and the expected visit of Father Mathew is mentioned as encouraging this hope.

The Church of the Pilgrims in Brooklyn made their annual collection on a recent Sunday morning, in aid of the American Home Missionary Society. The amount taken up was one thousand dollars.

RIOT IN NEW YORK—TWENTY PERSONS KILLED.

New York was last week the scene of a most disgraceful and fatal riot. It seems that, some time ago, a controversy arose between an American play-actor named Forrest, and an English play-actor named Macready—the former charging the latter with having caused him to be disparaged and hissed when playing in England. This newspaper war had pretty much died away, however, and the parties to it were both announced to play in New York on Monday evening of last week—Forrest at the Broadway Theater, and Macready at the Astor Opera-House. On that evening Macready was interrupted, pelted, hooted and driven from the house by a gang of rowdies, who had obtained admittance to the play. On the following day, several prominent citizens, learning that Macready had determined to give up his engagement and leave the city, addressed him a note, requesting that he would not persist in that purpose, but that he would play at the same place on Thursday night—a request to which he acceded.

In the course of Thursday, placards were posted up throughout the city, denouncing what was called the "English Aristocratic Opera-House," and calling on all working men to "stand by their rights."

Thursday night came, and with it a great rush to the Opera-House. The tickets were all taken, and an immense crowd gathered around the house. In anticipation of a riot, the windows had been boarded up, a large body of police employed, and a portion of the military was instructed to be in readiness, if needed. The play procced quietly, until Macready appeared, whereupon the rioters who had obtained access to the theater began an uproar which lasted ten or fifteen minutes, rendering it impossible to hear a word. At length, the police, who had been watching movements, interfered, took most of the rioters into custody, and conveyed them to rooms in the building prepared for their reception. Meanwhile, the crowd without began to pelt the building with stones, breaking the windows, and knocking off the boards which had been nailed over them for the protection of the audience. A large body of the rioters without made an attack upon the doors, but a body of policemen, armed with their clubs, sallied forth and captured some of the leaders, who were brought in and confined.

About the time the play was over, the military arrived, and attempted to disperse the crowd; but they were assailed with stones and other missiles, by which several of them were severely injured. The Mayor remonstrated with the crowd, and they were warned by the sheriff and other officers to disperse. But, instead of doing so, they continued to pelt the building and the troops with paving stones. General Hall was struck on the arm and back with stones, and disabled, and Gen. Sanford was knocked down and severely injured. At this juncture, the troops were ordered to fire upon the mob. They obeyed orders, and the result was that a large number were wounded or killed, the crowd dispersed, and the streets were left in possession of the military.

On the day following the riot, threats to burn the Opera-House were extensively circulated, and a meeting was held in the Park of those disposed to encourage such an act. In the evening, a large crowd gathered in the vicinity of the House, but the presence of a strong body of well-equipped soldiers and policemen sufficed to prevent any outbreak. On the subsequent evening there was a similar gathering, but no depredations. Up to the present time, (Monday noon,) the whole neighborhood of Broadway, Eighth-st., Astor Place and Bowery, has been strictly guarded by the police and military. Farther outrages are not expected, although threats continue to be made, and it is said that 150 of the Philadelphia rowdies, called "Killers," are in the city, ready to assist the rioters.

The number of killed and wounded cannot be definitely stated at present. The names of more than twenty of the killed have been published. Some of the wounded are considered in a dangerous condition. In giving testimony before the Coroners' Jury, Gen. Sanford stated, that upwards of 50 men, out of a detachment of infantry amounting to 210, were injured by stones and other missiles, before the firing commenced.

Mr. Macready left the city in disguise, during the night of the riot, and is now in Boston, whence he expects to sail for England next week.

Mendi Mission, West Africa.—Letters have been received at the office of the American Missionary Association, containing the painful intelligence of the death of Mr. A. J. Carter, the assistant of Rev. George Thompson. He was taken sick the day after his arrival at his post in Kaw Mendi, July 17, and died the 26th. Mr. Thompson was taken sick August 4th, and had suffered greatly from the fever, but was a good deal better at the date of his last letter, Nov. 3d. The Oberlin Evangelist remarks on this state of things:

"Many thoughtful readers will ask—Must the Mendi Mission be given up, because its climate is so fatal to American constitutions? Under the painful pressure of this question, it has been a sort of relief to our mind to learn, that the dangerous sickness of Brethren Carter and Thompson seems to have been occasioned, or at least aggravated by mistakes, which greater prudence might have avoided. We have no heart to impute fault to brethren we so much love, and who are breasting such a storm of actual dangers; but it agonizes us to read, that one of them totters from his sick bed wrapped in a blanket, and goes out and preaches three-quarters of an hour—an effort followed by a terrible relapse!"

The export of Tea to the United States from China, from Jan. 1 to February 18, 1849, was 6,137,400 lbs., of which quantity 1,521,000 lbs. were black, and 4,615,400 lbs. were green. Of the green tea, 3,022,600 lbs. were Young Hyson.

ONE WEEK LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Hibernia arrived at Boston on the 12th inst., bringing English papers to the 28th of April.

In England, the prospect of a repeal of the Navigation Laws is considered to be good, a majority of 61 having been obtained upon the third reading of the Bill in the House of Commons. It is said that Father Mathew, the Irish Apostle of Temperance, will positively sail for New York on the 22d of May.

In the Assembly of France, a bill for indemnifying the proprietors of slaves in the French Colonies, has passed to its second reading. An Envoy of the Roman Government has presented a protest from that Government against the French expedition in favor of the Pope, in reply to which he was told that France interposed simply to prevent too violent a Revolution. Cholera is thought to be decreasing in France. During the last six months it has attacked 4,500 persons, of whom 2,500 have died. Business is improving throughout the country.

The Danish town of Roling, which lies about a mile and a half from the frontier of Schleswig, and ten from the frontier of Frederika, was taken by the Schleswig troops under Gen. Bonin on the 20th ult., after fighting continually for many hours in the streets before the town was evacuated by the Danes.

The Austrians have been again defeated by the Magyars, in a general battle in the neighborhood of Ofen. The accounts state that the Austrians were driven back with the loss of 20 guns and 2,000 prisoners, and that they had been compelled to raise the siege of Comorn. Later reports say that a murderous engagement had taken place under the walls of Comorn, in which Gorgey had defeated the Austrians, that they had evacuated Pesth, and that the Hungarians were under the walls of Vienna.

Forty thousand Russians have entered Gallicia, and offered to the Austrian Government their services on condition of the abandonment by Austria of all influence in the Danubian principalities.

The negotiations between Austria and Sardinia are likely to be broken off, and hostilities resumed. The conditions of peace proposed by Austria are such as Sardinia cannot agree to. Among the conditions is the payment of about $20,000,000, and the modification of the laws relating to elections and the liberty of the press.

Mansion and Library Burnt.—The Broome Republican says that on the 30th ult., the beautiful residence of the late Dr. R. H. Rose, of Silver Lake, Susquehannah Co., Pa., with the adjacent barns, offices, &c., was entirely destroyed by fire, which communicated by a stove-pipe to the roof. The dwelling house, embracing a range of 200 feet, included one of the most extensive private libraries in the United States, containing several thousand volumes, and had been for many years receiving continual embellishments from the scientific taste of its late gifted proprietor, whose liberality made its volumes a source of instruction and entertainment throughout the whole county in which he resided. Beside the value and beauty of the buildings destroyed, they contained many things that cannot be replaced, and may well be considered a general loss. Statues, of exquisite Italian workmanship, a number of paintings, a cabinet of Chinese curiosities, and a collection from Rome, Pompeii, Herculaneum, &c, which the late Dr. Rose had made while in Europe. The museum contained also a fine collection of minerals, shells, &c., and some interesting Indian remains. Among the mementoes of the Revolution, we remember autograph letters of Washington and La Fayette; and, among the works of Art, a portfolio of colored sketches by Sully, presented to Doctor Rose by the distinguished artist himself, and a valuable portrait of Washington, painted on glass, and executed in China. The fire communicated with so much rapidity, under the violent wind, that little was saved beside the papers of the estate.

Police Doings in New York.—The report of the Chief of Police, for the quarter ending with April, gives some idea of the amount of business done by that branch of the city authorities. It appears that during the quarter 6,395, and during the whole year 25,760 arrests were made for violation of law and order; and that, during the quarter, 267, and, during the year, 3,715 complaints for violations of Corporation ordinances, were sent to the Corporation Attorney. Lodgings were furnished in the station-house, during the quarter, to 16,909 persons; and during the year to 46,712. During the quarter 592, and during the year 3,539 lost children were restored to their parents; and during the year 98 persons were rescued from drowning, and 151 fires discovered and extinguished by Policemen—while 756 stores and dwellings found open at night were taken in charge by members of the Department. The number of places licensed to sell intoxicating liquors is reported to be 3,814, of which 3,574 are kept open on Sunday.

Education in Wisconsin.—A series of educational meetings was held at Milwaukie, Wis., in the latter part of April, by invitation of the State Superintendent of Public Instruction, at which statements were made of the present condition of schools in Wisconsin, and the importance of a general movement on the subject. At a public meeting, several resolutions were advocated and adopted, providing that in the system of common school education in the State, the principle of the gradation of schools should be incorporated—urging the importancs of the formation of a Teachers' Institute at Milwaukie—and that a Common School Journal should be established for the diffusion of correct information on the subject of schools and education, and that it be furnished to every school district of the State, at the public expense. The introduction of vocal music, as a branch of instruction, was also recommended, whenever practicable.

The steamship Crescent City, which left Chagres on the 30th of April, arrived at New York on the 12th inst. She reports 2,500 California adventurers on the Isthmus—neither of the two steamers expected at Panama from San Francisco had arrived—over 1,000 had engaged passages in ships, and the remainder had very poor prospects ahead.

Boxing Negroes.—Several weeks ago, we mentioned the safe arrival of a slave, who had hired a man to box him up and take him to the Express office, directed to a distinguished abolitionist in one of the Northern cities. The Richmond Republican says, that on the morning of May 9th, two boxes were brought to Adams & Co.'s Express Office, in that city, directed to B. Williamson, 32 Buttonwood st., Philadelphia. Suspicion having been aroused as to their contents, they were opened, and found to contain two live negroes. The boxes were about four feet long, by 18 inches wide, and 2 feet deep. Each one had a small hole intended for ventilation. Each negro had a bladder of water and some clothing in the box with him. Of course the negroes were returned to those who claim to own them. A Mr. Samuel A. Smith has been arrested on the charge of having induced the slaves to leave their masters, and assisted in boxing them up. Who can doubt, after this, that the slaves at the South are contented and happy?

SUMMARY.

The Beaver (Pa.) Argus says, that the period for the appearance of the locusts in that region is at hand—the plough and spade turning up numbers of the "advance guard." In woodland ranges, the hogs seek for them with avidity. After slumbering seventeen years, they will give a serenade that connoisseurs would dispense with, commencing near the end of May, and continuing about two months. The district in which they will now appear, embraces most of the counties in West Pennsylvania and in North-Eastern Ohio.

E. H. Howard, late postmaster at Sheboygan, Wisconsin, has started for California in a boat-wagon of his own construction. The box of the wagon is a boat, set on steel springs, the whole of which is covered with oilcloth, making a very comfortable house. The establishment is so arranged, that upon reaching a river, the running gear of the wagon can be unshipped in a few minutes and taken aboard the boat while crossing the stream.

Messrs. J. W. Howe and H. M. Butler, natives of Connecticut, but now residents of New York city, have invented a machine for cutting clothing of every description, which entirely supersedes the use of shears. With the assistance of two men, it is said to perform as much work in one day as fifty men could accomplish in the ordinary way.

A telegraphic dispatch from Pittsburg, dated May 7th, says that the late rains have caused another frightful flood in the Alleghany river. So rapid was the rise, that large quantities of lumber, wood and boats, were carried away and destroyed. The lower part of the city of Alleghany was completely overflowed, and the inhabitants were compelled to take to flight by boats, from the upper stories of their dwellings.

A foreign correspondent of the Commercial says that the Russian Emperor has granted a new charter to the Russian Fur Company of North America, but on condition that the company shall establish a line of transatlantic steamships. He has given four million rubles to assist in this project.

A Dr. Cross, a steam-doctor, has been arrested at Stroudsburg, Pa., for manslaughter, charged with causing the death of a patient by subjecting him to a severe course of treatment, by which he was confined for a length of time in blankets, &c., over a steaming apparatus, till he expired of apoplexy.

The "gold dollar" has been issued at length from the Mint. It is smaller than a half-dime. The head of Liberty with stars is on one side, and on the reverse, on the margin, the words "United States of America," with a wreath enclosing the words "1 dollar, 1849."

There is no longer need to send abroad for Turquoise Oil Stone. A quarry has been discovered in Derby, Vt., which is said to be in all respects equal to the Eastern. It is now wrought successfully, and has been introduced into market. It is designated by the name of the "Gibralter Oil Stone."

The St. Louis Reveille says that Mr. Sanford J. Smith is about to leave that city for the West, on a trip preparatory to the erection of a Telegraph to Fort Leavenworth. So the lightning runs westward.

The editor of the National Whig has a dispatch announcing the death of Judge Meeds, of Minesota, by drowning, while crossing a swollen stream in Kentucky on horseback, on his way to Cincinnati.

The distinguished American engineer, Major Whistler, died at St. Petersburg, Russia, on the 7th of April, of an illness consequent upon an attack of the Cholera. Major W. built the railroad from Boston to New York, and was sent for to Russia to superintend that from St. Petersburg to Moscow.

The following is a judgment in the Recorder's Court of St. Louis, recently rendered:—"Geo. Crysup, a free negro, for being in the State without a license, was fined $10, failing to pay which, he was sent to the county jail, to be dealt with as the law directs."

Sundry meetings have been held in Florida, threatening to dissolve the Union, and pledging support to South Carolina, as leader of the enterprise, if Congress should legislate on the subject of Slavery. Florida contains seven thousand grown up white men!

There are 65,000 proprietors of real estate in Upper Canada; they occupy 8,613,591 acres or about 133 acres each on the average. In Ireland, there are not 15,000 landed proprietors.

The steamer Louisiana collapsed her flue on the 6th of May, off Ashtabula, Ohio, killing three firemen, and severely scalding two others and one passenger.

An Artesian well, at Charleston, S. C., has been carried down more than 750 feet, nearly 700 of which have been through marl. Nobody knows how deep they must go to find water.

The ship Sophia Walker has arrived at Boston from Valparaiso, with dates to March 2d. She brings $80,000 in California gold.

The State of Missouri is about erecting a Lunatic Asylum at Fulton, St. Charles County, at a cost of $44,950.

In New York, on Thursday of last week, a woman named Mary Mahony threw herself off the dock and was drowned. It appears that, about three weeks since, a son of the deceased, about 21 years of age, left for California, at which the mind of Mrs. Mahony became very much excited, and has since gradually grown worse, until she committed suicide, as above stated.

At Cincinnati, on the 10th instant, Judge Brough, Presiding Judge of the Hamilton Co. Court of Common Pleas, and late editor of the Enquirer, was attacked with cholera in the morning, and died in the afternoon.

A letter dated at Stonington, Ct., May 5, says that, on that day, the whale-ship Caravan, Capt. Manchester, from Sandwich Islands, struck on Watch Hill Reef. She was got off by assistance from Stonington, and carried into that port. Previous to getting off, threw over try-works, started water, &c.

The whale-ship Ladoga, of New Bedford, Mass., was lost last winter near the port of Decima, in Japan. The Captain and first officer were lost in landing, but the remainder of the ship's crew were saved, and are now in confinement. The U. S. ship Preble, Capt. Glynn, will proceed immediately to that port, to demand the release of the men.

The New Haven Register announces that in the first week of the Legislative Session there, some dozens of petitions for divorce had been received.

The injury to crops at the South, caused by the recent frost, extended into Texas. At Matagorda and thereabout, the cane, sugar and corn crops were either destroyed or nearly so.

The Newport Daily News announces the decease of Dutee J. Pearce, long and widely known as an active and prominent politician. The offices he has held are, Attorney General of Rhode Island, U. S. District Attorney for the same, member of Congress, and member of the Convention to frame a new Constitution for Rhode Island.

Daniel Drayton, of the schooner Pearl, who has been on trial at Washington, for abducting slaves from their owners, in the District of Columbia, was last week acquitted in the Criminal Court. There are other indictments still pending against him.

The Common Council of Auburn have decided, with only one dissenting vote, not to grant licenses for the sale of intoxicating drinks for the ensuing year.

On the 9th of May, there were in Cincinnati, 24 cases of cholera, 6 of which proved fatal. The Board of Health in that city make daily reports.

Governor Ramsey of Minesota began life as a cabinet-maker, then attended a manual-labor school, next studied law, and was afterward sent to Congress.

Thos. Ewbank, Esq., of this city, well known by his great work on Hydraulics, and by others evincing profound research, has been appointed Commissioner of Patents by the President.

Four members of the National Assembly of France, and several distinguished citizens, had died of cholera, in Paris, previous to April 15.

Alvan Stewart, Esq., formerly of Utica, died at his residence in New York City, on the 1st day of May.

Mr. Sheridan Knowles has announced a new work, the object of which is to prove that the Church of Rome is Antichrist.

The Report of the City Inspector shows that 1,869 persons died of consumption, in the city of New York, in 1848.

MARRIED,

In Amity, N. Y., Feb. 24th, by Eld. Rowse Babcock, Mr. James S. Flint and Miss Meranda Youngs, both of the above place.

In Scio, N. Y., March 18th, by the same, Mr. Campbell A. Parker, of Independence, and Miss Mary M. Hayward, of Scio.

DIED,

In Almond, on the 1st inst., Mr. Isaiah Crandall, aged eighty-nine years and eleven months. Mr. Crandall was for some years a soldier of the Revolution.

In Piscataway, N. J., April 29th, after a short illness, Mrs. Rachel Drake, consort of Francis Drake, aged seventy-six years. She and her husband were the oldest members of the Seventh day Baptist Church in that place, having been in its fellowship near fifty-five years, during which time she has been an ornament to her profession, and a mother in Israel. But her days on earth are ended. When dying, she looked at those standing by her bed-side, and said, "Do you think I am dying?" They replied that they thought she was. She then said, "If this be death, how sweet, how pleasant—all is peace and happiness—no fear, no pain—all is pleasant;" and added, "it is like reposing in a sweet sleep," and her spirit departed to dwell in regions of light and glory. She has left an aged and feeble companion to mourn his loss, though not without hope. W. B. G.

Missionary Association—Executive Board.

A Quaterly Meeting of the Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association, will be held in New York, on the evening of third-day, May 22, 1849.

By order of the Board, GEO. B. UTTER, Rec. Sec.

The Publishing Society.

A meeting for the organization of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society will be held in the city of New York on the fourth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, (23d day of the month,) commencing at 9 o'clock A. M. It is hoped that a large number of those who have subscribed to the Constitution, and pledged funds to the Society, will be present.

Eastern Association.

The Annual Meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist Eastern Association will be held with the Church in Pawcatuck, R. I., on the fifth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, at 10½ o'clock, A. M. Introductory Discourse by Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J.; alternate, Samuel Davison, of Farmington, Illinois. S. S. GRISWOLD, Cor. Sec.

Central Association.

The Annual Meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist Central Association, will be holden with the First Church in Brookfield, N. Y., commencing on the fourth day of the week before the second Sabbath in June, 1849.

Notice—Western Association.

The attention of the churches of the Seventh-day Baptist Western Association is particularly directed to the Report of a Committee appointed at the last annual session to revise the Constitution. That Report was received and referred to the churches for individual action; and is, together with the Constitution as it now stands, published in the Minutes of the last session. It is very desirable that the matter should be brought before every church, where it has not already been done, and the result of the action forwarded to the approaching Anniversary of the Association. That the Constitution needs revision, must be evident to all who give it even a passing notice; and in all matters of constitutional reform a full voice should be heard. Will the churches speak out? T. E. BABCOCK, Cor. Sec.

Christian Psalmody.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office. It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding, is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Mail Line from New York to Boston.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN NEW YORK AND BOSTON, via Stonington and Providence.—Inland Route, without ferry, change of cars, or baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and MASSACHUSETTS, Capt. ——, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 5 o'clock, P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock, P. M., or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities.

The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday.

The MASSACHUSETTS will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

N. B.—Passengers, on the arrival of the steamers at Stonington, proceed immediately in the splendid Railroad cars to Providence and Boston. A baggage-master accompanies the steamboat trains to and from Boston, to take charge of the baggage.

To Clergymen and their People.

All Clergymen who will send their address to Messrs. Comstock & Company, No. 21 Courtland-street—(after the 1st of May No. 57 John-street)—New York, shall be furnished gratuitously, for their family use, with a Salve of most extraordinary merit for external sores or inflammations of long or short standing. In burns, or pains and swellings of nearly all descriptions, its effects are charming, and almost beyond belief. This Salve has already been used by quite a number of the clergy, for themselves or sufferers to whom they have given it; and they have called on or written to the proprietors to express their delight at its action, and a desire to have their names used in making known its virtues. The proprietors having realized a handsome sum by its sale, feel called upon by a sense of duty to their fellow-men to disseminate the knowledge of the existence of such a thing far and near, and to give it without charge to the reverend clergy without limitation. It is called CONNEL'S PAIN EXTRACTOR, and is owned solely by Messrs. C. & Co. All religious papers that will publish this a few times will be furnished with the Salve free, and they may also thereby relieve many suffering poor brethren from agonizing pain, and save them much expense. The names of nearly fifty clergymen recommending it, are to be seen at the office of C. & Co.

You will please observe, it is no "sovereign remedy for all complaints," but only intended for external applications in the following:—Burns, Scalds, Frosted parts, Chilblains, Chafe or Galls, Chaps, Tetter, Pimple, Blotch, Felon, Ulcer Sprains, Erysipelas, Cuts, Bruises, Ear and Toothache, Mumps, Sore Throat, Whitlows, Piles, Ringworm, Salt Rheum, Barber's Itch, Carbuncle, Eruption, Sore Eyes and Lids, Weak Sight, Sore Lips, Punctures, Biles and Warts, Fever Pains, Tender Feet, Inflammatory Rheumatism, Tic Dolouroux, Ague in Face and Breast, Fever Sores, Old Burn Scars, Prickly Heat, Inflamed Skin, Broken Breast, Sore Nipples, Rough Hands, Blistered Surfaces, Dressing for Blisters, White Swellings, Cold in Wounds, Sore Corns, General Sores, Smallpox Marks, &c.

Though we have named numerous affections, experience has taught us that they are not too many. It will be necessary to know that this article is the only one we can recommend; but must caution against some imitation by like name. We will present it to the poor who have actual need of it.

38—mo 3.

Miscellaneous.

"DON'T YOU REMEMBER?"

BY ELIZA COOK.

Oh! those are the words that eternally utter
The spell that is seldom cast o'er us in vain;
With the wings and the wand of a fairy they flutter,
And draw a charmed circle around us again.
We return to the spot where our Infancy gamboled:
We linger once more in the haunts of our Youth;
We retreat where young Passion stealthily rambled,
And whispers are heard full of Nature and Truth,
Saying, "Don't you remember?"

We treasure the picture where color seems breathing,
In lineaments mocking, a long-worshiped face;
We are proud of some trees in a chain of close wreathing,
And gold links of Ophir are poor in its place.
Oh! what is the secret that giveth them power
To fling out a star on our darkest of waves?
'Tis the tone of Affection—life's holiest power—
That murmurs about them, and blissfully says,
"Don't you remember?"

The voice of Old Age, while it tells some old story,
Exults o'er the tale with fresh warmth in the breast,
As the haze of the twilight e'er deepens the glory
Of beams that are fast going down in the west.
When the friends of our boyhood are gathered around us,
The Spirit retraces its wild-flower track;
The Heart is still held by the strings that first bound us,
And Feeling keeps singing, while wandering back,
"Don't you remember?"

When those whom we prize have departed forever,
Yet, perfume is shed o'er the cypress we twine;
Yet, fond recollection refuses to sever,
And turns to the Past, like a saint to the shrine.
Praise carved on the marble is often deceiving,
The gaze of the stranger is all it may claim;
But the strongest of love and the purest of grieving
Are heard, when lips dwell on the missing one's name,
Saying, "Don't you remember?"

VALUE OF A SINGLE PENNY.

Thirty years ago there was seen to enter the city of London, a lad about fourteen years of age. He was dressed in a dark smock frock that hid all his under apparel, and which appeared to have been made for a person evidently taller than the wearer. His boots were smothered with dust from the high road. He had on an old hat with a black band, which contrasted strangely with the color of the covering of his head. A small bundle, fastened to the end of a stick and thrown over the shoulder, was the whole of his equipment. As he approached the Mansion House, he paused to look at the building, and seating himself on the steps of one of the doors, he was about to rest awhile; but the coming in and going out of half a dozen persons, before he had time to finish untying his bundle, made him leave that spot for the next open space, where the doors were in part closed.

Having taken from his bundle a large quantity of bread and cheese, which he seemed to eat with a ravenous appetite, he amused himself by looking at the building before him, with all the eager curiosity of one unaccustomed to see similar objects.

The appearance of the youth soon attracted my curiosity, and, gently opening the door, I stood behind him without his being in the least conscious of my presence. He now began rummaging his pockets, and after a great deal of trouble brought out a roll of paper, which he carefully opened. After satisfying himself that a large copper coin was safe, he carefully put it back again, saying to himself, in a low voice, "Mother, I will remember your last words: 'A penny saved is two pence earned.' It shall go hard with me before I part with you, old friend."

Pleased with this remark, I gently touched the lad on the shoulder. He started, and was about to move away, when I said:

"My good lad, you seem tired, and likewise a stranger in this city."

"Yes, sir," he answered, putting his hand to his hat. He was again about to move forward.

"You need not hurry away, my boy," I observed. "Indeed, if you are a stranger, and willing to work, I can perhaps help to find what you require."

The boy stood mute with astonishment; and coloring to such an extent as to show all the freckles of a sun-burnt face, stammered out,

"Yes, sir!"

"I wish to know," I added, with all the kindness of manner I could assume, "whether you are anxious to find work, for I am in want of a youth to assist my coachman."

The poor lad twisted and twirled his bundle about, and after having duly placed his hand to his head, managed to utter an awkward kind of answer, that he would be very thankful.

I mentioned not a word about what I had overheard with regard to the penny, but inviting him into the house, I sent for the coachman, to whose care I intrusted the new comer.

Nearly a month had passed after this meeting and conversation occurred, when I resolved to make inquiries of the coachman regarding the conduct of the lad.

"A better boy never came into the house, sir; and as for wasting any thing, bless me, sir! I know not where he has been brought up, but I really believe he would consider it a sin if he did not give the crumbs of bread to the poor birds every morning."

"I am glad to hear so good an account," I replied.

"And as for his good nature, sir, there is not a servant among us that does n't speak well of Joseph. He reads to us while we sup, and he writes all our letters for us. Oh, sir, he has got more larning than all of us put together; and what's more, he does n't mind work, and never talks about our secrets after he writes our letters."

Determined to see Joseph myself, I requested the coachman to send him to the parlor.

"I understand, Joseph, that you can read and write."

"Yes, sir, thanks to my poor dear mother."

"You have lately lost your mother, then?"

"A month that very day when you were kind enough to take me into your house, an unprotected orphan!" answered Joseph.

"Where did you go to school?"

"Sir, my mother had been a widow ever since I can remember. She was a daughter of the village schoolmaster, and having to maintain me and herself with her needle, she took the opportunity of her leisure moments to teach me not only how to read and write, but to cast up accounts."

"And did she give you that penny, which was in the paper that I saw you unroll so carefully at the door?"

Joseph stood amazed, but at length replied with emotion, and a tear started from his eye—

"Yes, sir, it was the very last penny she gave me."

"Well, Joseph, so satisfied am I with your conduct, that not only do I pay you a month's wages willingly for the time you have been here, but I must beg of you to fulfill the duties of collecting clerk to our firm, which situation has become vacant by the death of a very old and faithful assistant."

Joseph thanked me in the most unassuming manner, and I was asked to take care of his money, since I had promised to provide him with suitable clothing for his new occupation.

It will be unnecessary to relate how, step by step, this poor country lad proceeded to win the confidence of myself and partner. The accounts were always correct to a penny; and whenever his salary became due, he drew out of my hands no more than he absolutely wanted, even to a penny. At length he had saved a sufficient sum of money to be deposited in the bank.

It so happened, that one of our chief customers, who had carried on a successful business, required an active partner. This person was of eccentric habits, and considerably advanced in years. Scrupulously just, he looked to every penny, and invariably discharged his workmen if they were not equally scrupulous in their dealings with him.

Aware of this peculiarity of temper, there was no person I could recommend but Joseph; and after overcoming the repugnance of my partner, who was unwilling to be deprived of so valuable an assistant, Joseph was duly received into the firm of Richard Fairbrothers and Co. Prosperity attended Joseph in this new undertaking, and never suffering a penny difference to appear in his transactions, he so completely won the confidence of his senior partner, that he left him the whole of his business, as he expressed it in his will, "even to the very last penny." ## A ONE-WHEELED CARRIAGE.

A new and very novel invention, called a one-wheeled coach, has recently been tried out West, and promises to be of much value, especially on prairies, or wherever the surface of the ground is tolerably level. The vehicle consists of a large hollow wooden wheel, fourteen feet in diameter and six feet wide. The horses are placed inside, and propel it along, in the same manner that a caged squirrel makes its wheel revolve. Slats are nailed on the inside floor of the wheel, by which the horses obtain foot-hold. In the center is a small iron shaft, from which suspend hangers which support four comfortable sofas for passengers; the wheel thus revolves freely, the seats remaining in perfect equilibrium. The arrangement for guiding the carriage is very simple and effective; it can make a much shorter turn than a stage coach.

A very successful trial of one of these carriages was recently made on the State road between Canal Dover and Tuscarawas County, Ohio, which perfectly demonstrated their utility in transporting very heavy loads, with ease and rapidity. The carriage was filled by a party of twenty-four ladies and gentlemen, with two heavy draught horses previously trained to propel them. The distance between the two places —five miles—was performed in 28 minutes on the first trip, and 25 minutes on the second. The horses are not confined by harness, and as they travel as it were on an endless plank road, their work is comparatively easy.

SINGULAR CASE OF IMPOSITION.

From the Southern Christian Advocate.

A female, carrying the appearance and manners of a lady, stopped at Wilmington, N. C., a few weeks since. The avowed cause of her detention was illness of a serious kind, hemorrhage of the lungs, spasms of the heart, of a most appalling description, accompanied with fainting and other symptoms of extreme weakness. She brought with her a letter from a lady of Norfolk, giving a sketch of a somewhat romantic and unfortunate history—a tale of having been robbed while ill in a steamboat, on her way to die with a sister in Georgia.

She professed to be a Christian, and exhibited an appearance of patient and submissive gentleness, which, in her extreme sufferings, awakened a general interest and sympathy in her behalf, on the part of the Wilmington ladies, to whom no call of this kind appeals without success. During three weeks, she received the unwearied attentions of ladies of the highest respectability, with the kind and constant attendance of a physician; was cupped almost every day—fell into spasms—fainted till all appearance of life seemed extinct, and the breath appeared to have left the body entirely, yet always kept a calm and placid face, indicative of inward peace. During all this time, she was alone scarcely an hour, day or night, and several being with her during the day, besides the attendance of a hired nurse. Delicacies were sent her from many families, and she had received the visits of several ministers, one of whom, at her request, administered the communion to her. In this way she was closely observed by some fifty or sixty persons at least, upon nearly all of whom the impression she made was entirely favorable. She had received similar attentions at Norfolk and Petersburg. Improving somewhat, a time was set for her departure for the South; but a few hours before the steamer left, she was again seized by a violent paroxysm, so that her departure was delayed another week.

She was on her way to Athens, Ga., knew nobody in Charleston or Augusta, and had provision made for her at a boarding-house in the former city. She finally left Wilmington, was taken to the hotel in this city, and was recognized here as the same person, who, under another name, had several years ago passed through the same illness—received the same attention, and exhibited the additional capacity of throwing her limbs out of joint at pleasure; and confessed to several ladies and a physician who had detected her before, that it was deception, —that nothing ailed her in the world; and of this she gave proof by dressing herself as soon as left alone, and taking her departure in an omnibus to "parts unknown."

In Wilmington, she received aid from the Odd Fellows and Masons, on the ground of her husband having belonged to those fraternities, and also from the churches. Along with a handsome prayer-book, belonging to a young lady, who had left it in her room, she took a letter from the Episcopal clergyman, recommending her to the sympathy and aid of the clergy and laity of South Carolina, and elsewhere.

SECRETS OF THE INQUISITION.

The correspondent of the Daily News describes a visit he had paid to the many small, dark, and damp dungeons of the Inquisition. The building is out of the beaten track, being in a sort of cul de sac, behind St. Peter's. The dungeons, and all their apparatus, are to be thrown open to the inspection of the public, and will furnish a sight not likely to recommend priestly rule to the people. The correspondent says:—

"The officer in charge let me down to where the men were digging in the vaults below; they had cleared a downward flight of steps, which was choked up with old rubbish, and had come to a series of dungeons under the vaults, deeper still, and which immediately brought to my mind the prisons of the Doge, under the canal of the Bridge of Sighs at Venice, only that here there was a surpassing horror. I saw imbedded in old masonry, unsymmetrically arranged, five skeletons, in various recesses, and the clearance had only just begun; the period of their insertion in this spot must have been more than a century and a half ago. From another vault, full of skulls and scattered human remains, there was a shaft about four feet square, ascending perpendicularly to the first floor of the building, and ending in a passage off the hall of the chancery, where a trap-door lay between the tribunal and the way into a suite of rooms destined for one of the officials. The object of this shaft could admit of but one surmise. The ground of the vault was made up of decayed animal matter, a lump of which held imbedded in it a long silken lock of hair, as I found by personal examination as it was shoveled up from below. But that is not all: there are two large subterranean lime-kilns, if I may so call them, shaped like a bee-hive, in masonry, filled with layers of calcined bones, forming the substratum of two other chambers, on the ground-floor in the immediate vicinity of the very mysterious shaft above mentioned."

THE JACQUEY MACHO.

Our young readers need not to be told, that trees usually commence their growth in the earth, and gradually make their way upward into the air. Perhaps they suppose that all trees grow in this way. But I propose to describe a species of tree, that commences growing high in the air, and extends downward into the ground. This tree is called the Jacquey Macho, and abounds in the Island of Cuba.

It makes its first appearance on the topmost branches of the loftiest trees in the forest. At first it is a small shrub, receiving its nourishment from the parent tree. On this account it is called a parasite. After growing for a year or two in this way, it sends out a slender thread which resembles neither a root nor a branch. It increases in length, directing its course downward, till it reaches the earth. It appears like a small string, uniting the top of the tree with the ground. But soon it sends down little roots into the earth, and slowly increases in size, till it is several inches in circumference. Then it begins to send out little arms, at different points of its body, some of them thirty feet, some fifty feet, and some seventy feet from the ground. These arms all point toward the body of the parent tree, which is sometimes twenty or thirty feet distant. But they persevere until they reach it. Then they begin to wind themselves around it, as if in affection and gratitude for its parental care and nurture. As they increase in size and strength, they gradually draw the body which sent them out, toward the parent trunk, till they come in actual contact. Then commences a death struggle between them. These numerous arms, winding round and round the gigantic body of their victim, continue to tighten their grasp upon him, till he actually expires in their fatal embrace. Gradually his lifeless remains decay and perish. But the Jacquey stands with its arms still clasped and grown together, lifting its jagged and hideous form in place of its murdered parent. Thus the Jacquey, though a great curiosity, is a deadly foe to the other trees, for the stoutest of them cannot resist its deadly grasp. [Youth's Cabinet.

STORIES OF ANIMAL INSTINCT.

Written for the Youth's Cabinet, by Dr. Alcott.

A gentleman from Vermont sold a dog to his brother, in Massachusetts, and went immediately back to his native region. The dog was kept tied for nine or ten days, with the exception of a few minutes at a time each day, but was then set at liberty, with the expectation that he would now remain. He was soon missing. The owner wrote to Vermont immediately, and received for answer, that the dog reached his former home, a distance of about eighty miles, at daylight the next morning after he was liberated. He had performed the journey in about ten hours. He was greatly fatigued, as well as wet with perspiration, or water, or both—having swam the Connecticut river.

A cat in Northborough, Mass., with her three kittens, very young, having been removed to Shrewsbury, a distance of about four miles, contrived to elude the vigilance of her new mistress, and, during the hours of sleep, to transport these three kittens to their old residence in Northborough. How was this done? And how many miles did she probably travel in effecting it?

A cat in the same vicinity, lately transported several kittens a mile and a half, in about the same space of time with that which is mentioned in the preceding anecdote. Addison, in the Spectator, at the head of one of his chapters, has the following language: 'God himself the soul of brutes.' One would almost think with Addison, when he finds what wonders brutes can do by mere instinct, without the least glimmering of human reason.

Curious Discovery.—In the great Pyramid of Egypt, is a small opening in the top, the depth of which has never been sounded. Another aperture of the same size exists at the foot of the Pyramid. It was long conjectured, that these two openings communicated with each other, but no means could be devised to establish the fact, till the problem was solved recently by the ingenuity of an Arab. He took a cat and her kittens, placed the old cat in one aperture and the kittens in the other, and stopped up both with stones. The next day he opened them, and found the old cat and her kittens all together at the end of the long passage.

How it Strikes.—A young Northerner, traveling at the South, thus writes to a friend, under date of Feb. 14th, 1849:

"On Monday last, there was a public auction of fifty negroes. A sale of human flesh and blood,—and, as some benighted people think—of souls! The most affecting scene occurred, when it was proposed to take from a mother her four children, the oldest twins, and not more than four years of age, and sell all separately, to enhance the price. The inhuman proposition made my blood boil. The idea of separation was frowned down immediately; voices from all parts of the crowd demanded that they be sold together. Inhuman! barbarous! passed from mouth to mouth. One gentleman proposed to make up a purse on the spot of a hundred or two dollars, to obviate the objection to selling them together. One man was talking with Dr. B—— till he 'got so full,' he could not speak, and turned away. In a moment his grief was turned to wrath, and coming out, he remarked to the Doctor, 'It is a horrid institution, and I hope to live to see it abolished. I have twenty-five negroes, and they constitute all my property, but I would free them to-morrow to get rid of Slavery, and go to work with my own hands to earn my bread.'"

Nothing Lost by Civility.—A gentleman, who has filled the highest municipal offices in one of our cities, owed his education chiefly to a single act of civility. A traveler, in a hot summer's day, wanted some water for his horse, and, perceiving a well near the road side, turned his horse up towards it. Just then, a lad appeared, to whom the stranger addressed himself, saying:

"My young friend, will you do me the favor to draw a bucket of water for my horse, as I find it rather difficult to get off and on?"

The lad promptly seized the bucket, and soon brought a supply of water. Pleased with the cheerful temper and courteous manner of the youth, the traveler inquired his name, and so deep was the impression made on his mind, that the name of the lad and his place of residence were remembered until several years afterwards, when the traveler had occasion for a clerk. He then sent for this young man, and gave him a responsible and profitable place, from which he arose to the chief magistracy of a city.

Marvelous Coincidences.—One of the most remarkable cases of presentiment, or "second sight," (says the Newark Advertiser,) that have occurred at intervals to the confusion of all human speculation in every age of the world, has just been brought to our knowledge in this city. The daughter of a highly respectable family, a child of some twelve years, who has been ill of fever for some days, told her parents, in a paroxysm of delirium on Monday evening, that her brother, who was on board the packet ship Devonshire, coming from London, was within twenty miles of home, and had with him sundry presents for them, specifying, among other things, five books with red covers, gilt edges, &c. The vessel arrived the next morning, and the return of the brother, with the specified presents, verified the truth of her marvelous impression. When the brother entered her chamber, she recognized him at once, and on the instant interrogated him concerning the presents, which she said she had dreamed of, when he confirmed her prediction in every particular. She then immediately relapsed into delirium.

Treasures of Moultan.—After the recent capture of this eastern city, it was reported about among the soldiers, that there were vast treasures in subterranean store-houses. These store-houses were soon discovered, and their treasures awarded to the captors by the Gov. General. They are thus described:—

"Descending into the cavities in which the treasures of the fortress had been accumulated, the inspecting officer is said to have found opium and indigo, and salt, and sulphur, and drugs of every description, heaped together in endless profusion; enormous hoards of wheat on one hand, on the other almost inexhaustible stores of rice; stacks of ghee vessels brimming with their unctuous contents; bales upon bales of costly shawls and gorgeous silks; chest after chest crammed with scabbards, blazing with gold and jewels; tiers of copper canisters filled to the brim with gold mohurs. 'My poor pen,' says a correspondent of the Delhi Gazette, 'cannot describe the variety of wealth displayed to the inquisitive eye. Tumbrils, under strong guards, have been moving to and fro with gold coin all the day. And, in addition to this, three or four crores of specie were still known to be concealed beyond the amount already discovered—one crore of rupees being one million of pounds sterling!'"

Have you a Roller?—The Albany Cultivator says: "There is scarcely a more useful implement of agriculture than the roller. The purposes effected by it are—1st, the breaking of clods and lumps on grounds, preparatory to sowing or planting; 2d, pressing the earth in some cases, around the newly sown seeds, and at the same time giving more compactness to too light soils; 3d, smoothing the surface of grass grounds, by which operation the stools of grass which may have been raised by the frosts are pressed into the earth, the growth of the grass increased, and the surface better fitted for the scythe."

Remedy for Poison.—There is scarce even a cottage in the country that does not contain an invaluable, certain, immediate remedy for poison; nothing more than a dessert spoonful of made mustard, mixed in a tumbler of warm water, and drank immediately. It acts as an instantaneous emetic, is always ready, and may be used with safety, in any case where one is required.

Rousseau, when dying, ordered his attendants to remove him before the window, that he might look upon his garden, and gladden his eyes with the sight of nature. How ardent an admirer he was of nature, is poetically told in Zimmerman's "Solitude."

The substitute of the English word 'station' for the French word 'depot,' in such common use for the stopping places of railways, is recommended in the newspapers, as more expressive and better English.

Kitto's Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature.

TO CLERGYMEN AND OTHER STUDENTS OF THE BIBLE.—The undersigned beg leave to ask your attention to the following Work, which they now offer for sale. Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature, in two thick volumes of 1,878 pages royal octavo, beautifully and substantially bound, by JOHN KITTO, D. D., F. S. A., &c., published by MARK H. NEWMAN & Co., 199 Broadway, New York.

This Work contains such information as is indispensable for the right understanding of the Bible and its historical interpretation. It comprehends Criticism, Geography, Natural History, and Antiquities, in all their branches, religious, political, social, and domestic.

The Works of Horne, Calmet, and others, are now found to be wholly inadequate to the wants of the student. Theological science is progressive, as well as every other, and the "old learning" of the "Bible Dictionaries" which have for so long a time been in use, is felt to be unequal to the advancement of mankind at the present time.

The efforts of the German Rationalists, of the Strauss school, to resolve all the facts of Bible History into myths and fables, has awakened a corresponding spirit of research among sound and Christian scholars; a determination to place the Scriptures upon a basis of indisputable evidence. The result has been, the discovery and accumulation of a mass of information from every portion of the field of biblical learning. A multitude of new, striking, and most useful facts have thus been placed at the disposal of the editor of this work. He has accordingly availed himself of all the latest discoveries down to the very year of its publication.

Nor is the Cyclopedia compiled by one man alone. Dr. Kitto distributed the subjects discussed to more than forth different individuals, of the first eminence in those departments. Their names are attached to their articles, and they are thus individually responsible for them. The Natural History of the Bible was written expressly for this work, by two distinguished Naturalists. The Botany of Scripture, by Dr. Royle, of King's College, London. The articles on Scriptural Zoology, by Hamilton Smith, President of the Devon and Cornwall Natural History Society. The articles in the department of Criticism, by Dr. Davidson, Professor of Biblical Literature in the Lancashire Independent College. Those on the Books of the Old and New Testament, by Havernich, Hengstenberg, Dr. Wright, of Dublin, and others.

The articles on the New Testament were furnished by Dr. Tholuck, Dr. Alexander, and others.

Various subjects are discussed, by Dr. John Pye Smith, Dr. Woods, of Andover, and others.

The Scriptural Geography exhibits the results of Dr. Robinson's biblical researches in Palestine.

It will be seen, therefore, that the work is a compilation of biblical learning, by the ablest biblical scholars of the age.

The undersigned ask the attention of students of the Bible to the Cyclopedia, in full confidence that no one acquainted with its character will suffer himself to be without a copy. The low price at which it is offered, (less than half the price of the English edition,) places it within the reach of all.

MARK H. NEWMAN & Co.

NOTICES OF THE CYCLOPEDIA.

From Horne, Author of "Horne's Introduction to the Study of the Scriptures," last edition.

"This Cyclopedia surpasses every Biblical Dictionary which has preceded it, and leaves nothing to be desired in such a work which can throw light on the criticism, interpretation, history, geography, archeology, and physical science of the Bible."

From the Biblical Repertory and Princeton Review.

"Dr. Kitto comes recommended even to those not acquainted with his other writings, by the well-known general facts of his experience and success as a book-maker, and of his long familiarity, in this capacity at least, with Biblical subjects.

"He has boldly and faithfully acted on the principle that such a plan can be worthily executed, in the present state of learning, only by distributing its parts among many hands, and such hands too as have been fitted by anterior experience to perform them most successfully."

From the Biblical Repository.

"The limits of a notice like the present forbid such a description of this learned work as its merits deserve, or sufficient to give the reader a just idea of its plan. We regard it as a most important and practically useful contribution to the cause of sound Biblical learning, and have no doubt that it will soon take the place, in the estimate of scholars, of every compilation of the kind.

"The enlistment of so many scholars in the production of a single work, each one presenting in a brief compass the results of a life-time of research, in precisely the matters where he is most at home, could not fail of enriching it with an amount of learning and scholarship to which, of course, the work of no single mind, however great, could pretend.'

From the Methodist Quarterly Review.

"This work was not compiled in the method hitherto usual with works of similar character, namely, on the basis of Calmet and the old learning of his day, with a few shreds of modern discovery interwoven. All the more important articles are written expressly for their present use, not by one individual, but by an arrangement between not less than forty different scholars in Europe and America, all of whom stand high in their several departments."

The Cyclopedia can be ordered through the local Book sellers in every part of the country.

AMERICAN BAPTIST FREE MISSION SOCIETY.

This Society held its Sixth Anniversary with the Second Baptist Society in Charlestown, Mass., called the High-street Church, on the 2d, 3d, and 4th days of May. It was called to order by the President, Elder A. L. Post, of Montrose, Pa. Reading of the Scriptures, by Elder W. Tillinghast, of Herkimer, N. Y. Singing by the congregation. Prayer by Elder Smith. Elder Piper was chosen Clerk pro tem.

The Society then proceeded to ballot for officers, and on counting the following persons were found to be elected:—

Pres.—Eld. Harvey Hawes, of Augusta, Me.

Vice Presidents.

A. L. Post, Archibald Campbell,
Samuel Aaron, Asa Caldwell,
Sereno Howe.

Cor. Sec.—Cyrus P. Grosvenor, Utica, N. Y.
Rec. Sec.—Geo. G. Ritchie, Litchfield, N. Y.
Treas.—George Curtiss, Utica, N. Y.
Ass't Treas.—John N. Barbour, Boston, Mass.
Auditors.—Francis Childs, Boston, Mass., and S. Lawrence, Esq., Utica, N. Y.

Eleven Trustees were elected, whose names I did not obtain.

Elder Post, in retiring from the chair, made a most impressive speech. He alluded to the origin of the Society, when, in Tremont Chapel, in the city of Boston, only eighteen signed that memorable pledge, on the 4th day of May, 1843, whereby they forever "separated themselves from all connection with the known avails of slavery, in the support of any of their benevolent operations." He alluded also to the great increase of numbers of those who now advocate this cardinal principle of the Society, and closed with expressing the utmost confidence in the righteousness of their cause.

The President elect, Elder H. Hawes, on being conducted to the chair, introduced himself in a very appropriate address. He expressed his attachment to the objects of the Society, and his willingness to bear his share of its burdens. He hoped that the deliberations of the session would be characterized by Christian kindness and concession—modestly alluded to his want of ability to discharge the duties imposed—and closed by respectfully asking the forbearance of the members for any inadvertencies in the exercise of his duty as Chairman of that body.

Visiting brethren were then invited to a seat in the meeting, and to a participation in the deliberations of the Society; after which, adjourned for one hour.

Afternoon Session.—Prayer by Elder Himes, of Maine. A Committee was appointed to wait on Mr. Treat, Secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, and inquire relative to that Society's admitting slaveholders. Another Committee was appointed to inquire relative to the Government's assisting Baptist churches. A third Committee was appointed to address the Baptists in England. A Committee on business was also appointed.

Elder S. S. Griswold, of Hopkinton, R. I., presented credentials as a Delegate from the American Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association. His credentials, and introductory letter from Eld. T. B. Brown, the Cor. Sec. of that body, being accepted, he was unanimously voted a corresponding member.

Elder Griswold rose, and was requested to come forward upon the platform for the purpose of being more distinctly heard. He expressed his gratification and thanks for the privilege conferred upon him. Referring to the sympathy expressed for the Society in his letter of introduction, he remarked, that the body of Christians which he represented was decidedly opposed to oppression in all its forms—that he could pledge his brethren as willing to eradicate the sin of slavery from the church. For himself, he cordially approved of the general principles for which the Society was organized. He was fully of the opinion, that the church must not only denounce sin in general, but also in particulars—that the Bible specified sins, not only in the aggregate, but separately. He referred to the spirit of reform which marked our age, and expressed his joy that opinions favorable to free discussion were obtaining currency. He then said that he wished it distinctly understood, that if he accepted of the invitation to a seat in that body as a corresponding member, or as a private individual, it must be as a Seventh-day Baptist—that not to be known as such would be inconsistent with the purposes of his delegation. He referred to his brethren as composing a respectable body of Christians, holding the fundamental doctrines of the Bible in unison with other evangelical denominations—that they were laboring to spread the gospel at home and abroad—that they were opposed to civil legislation on religion—that they were distinguished for their conscientious regard of the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath of the Lord, maintaining that the claims of that day to be observed have never been abrogated or set aside by Jehovah—that they held such portions of the Christian church as observed the first day of the week for the Sabbath, to be in error. True to their convictions, this people were under the necessity of urging the claims of that day upon those who differ from them. Believing in the omnipotence of truth, and rejoicing in the great advance that is making in the freedom of religious discussion, his constituents felt called upon now to embrace all proper opportunities of giving this truth to the church and to the world. The speaker earnestly desired, that this Society, that had invited him to a seat among them, would, in their investigation after truth, not everlook the claims of the seventh day of the week to be the Sabbath of the Christian church. He closed his remarks by cordially accepting a seat as a corresponding member, with the distinct understanding that while acting in that capacity he must be known as a Seventh-day Baptist.

The Chairman then, in a short address, cordially welcomed Eld. Griswold as a delegate from the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association, and extended to him the hand of fellowship as a corresponding member. In his remarks, the President adverted to the marked distinction with which that body of Christians had honored the Baptist Free Mission Society, in thus representing themselves here—that he was not ignorant of their views—that he had long respected their conscientious regard for the seventh-day Sabbath—had not a word by way of objection to their views. Although he differed from them in practice, he believed them to be honest in the observance of said day. He too rejoiced in the free investigation of truth which characterizes the present day, and welcomed a free interchange of views on the great points of Christian difference, and closed by freely admitting Eld. G. to a full participation in the deliberations of the session, expressing a hope that the friendly intercourse thus commenced between the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association and the American Baptist Free Mission Society might continue to their mutual benefit.

The Annual Report was then read by the Corresponding Secretary, as far as prepared. It states that only eighteen at first signed the pledge of withdrawal from all connection with slaveholders in their benevolent operations, but that now the Society numbered its thousands. The Society has five missionaries in Hayti, including Elders Judd and Jones, with their families. Elder Jones is able to preach in the French language. It has lost one faithful missionary by death, a Miss Young, who labored in Hayti. The report recommends an increase of itinerant missionary labor. It states that no missionary society for evangelizing Africa was undertaken until the organization of the Baptist Free Mission Society, and that no denomination refused to receive the contributions of slaveholder, unless the Seventh-day Baptists and Free-Will Baptists were an exception. The Society contemplates the regeneration of the African race, which composes one-sixth of the human family. The Report charges the churches with taking sides with slavery—says that slavery confines the religious instruction of slaves to verbal or oral, that no Christian society has ever given the Bible to the colored man, that those societies organized for the purpose of giving the Bible to every inhabitant of the United States or the world do not include the slaves of the South. It recommends aiding the fugitive slaves in Canada, by affording them intellectual and moral instruction.

Upon the adoption of the Report, remarks were made by Elders Matthews, Tillinghast, and Griswold.

A Committee was appointed to write a letter to Mr. and Mrs. Wade, formerly missionaries to the East, inquiring of them the reason of their silence upon the subject of slavery, since their return to this country; also asking them definitely to define their position on that subject. Remarks were made to the effect that while Mr. Wade and wife were in a foreign land, they wrote home their decided disapprobation of slavery, and their wish to withdraw in all ways from aiding or abetting it, but that as soon as they landed in Boston they appear to have changed their course.

May 3—Morning Session.—After prayer, the Business Committee reported the following resolutions:—

1. That the Gospel is the great regenerator of the world.
2. That God sent it into the world to accomplish that mission.
3. That it is perfectly adapted to that work, and that it will surely accomplish it.
4. That, to remove sin from the world, the gospel must be applied specifically to every form of sin; that a general application is not in harmony with its design, and never will work out its glorious ends; and that we regard the infidelity of Christian teachers to this principle, as the chief reason why the gospel, in the lapse of 1800 years, has done so little for the moral purification of the world.
5. That the missionary enterprise, conducted on Bible principles, is as really beneficial to the people from whom missionaries are sent out, as to the people to whom such missionaries are sent.
6. That believing Baptist polity to be the ecclesiastical polity of the Bible, and that the same Bible requires the missionary work, we believe that faithfulness to the cause of missions can never require an organization, the structure of which is anti-Baptist.
7. That when an organization for promoting the cause of missions claims to be Baptist, and yet denies the right of representation in the church, and refuses to give its influence against the heathenism of slavery, its tendency is to undermine Baptist principles, and injure the cause of religion in the country where it is located, whatever be the blessing God may bestow upon the effort of the missionaries in heathen lands.
8. That, as a missionary organization, God requires of us duties, with reference both to our own and heathen lands—to proclaim the gospel, as revealed in the Scriptures, with persevering faithfulness to our own land—to plead for the same gospel, and in the spirit which it enjoins contend for the liberty of the bondman, and the right of the church, now denied by striking down the principle of representation.
9. That the success and prospect of our missions in Hayti, demand of us unfeigned gratitude to God, and encourage us to continue an increased effort; and that the opening field in Canada, and the West, call for enlarged contributions, and persevering prayer.

The report of the Business Committee was received, and the discussion of it deferred until to-morrow. Adjourned for one hour.

Afternoon Session.—After prayer, a discussion arose upon a question relative to the propriety of life membership, or, in fact, any membership, being based upon a monied consideration. This question called forth quite lengthy remarks. It was maintained, that a monied consideration is contrary to the genius of Christianity, and tends to abolish that distinction of Christian character from the world, which was designed ever to constitute the only true basis of such memberships. This question demands the careful consideration of the church.

A Committee was appointed to inquire relative to a bequest, or legacy, supposed to have been given to this Society, but which had been claimed by the Baptist Missionary Union. In appointing this Committee, remarks were made relative to the propriety of Christian bodies appealing to the civil law for redress in case of actual fraud. Some believed it right, others wrong.

The following communication from the Delegate of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association was presented and read:—

To the American Baptist Free Mission Society;—

Dear Brethren,—Availing myself of the privilege granted me as a corresponding member of your body, I beg your acceptance of my thanks for the honor conferred. In behalf of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association, whose representative to this body I am, I tender you its sympathy in, and cordial approval of, the chief object of your organization, viz. the separation of the Church from all connection with the sin of Slavery. I rejoice to see the spirit of reform, and the opposition to sin in high places, manifested in your deliberations. Permit me also to express my approval of the leading thoughts of the discourse last evening, especially those relative to free discussion and Church formulas. As the representative of a body of Christians, who conscientiously believe the seventh day of the week to be the Sabbath of the Lord, and who religiously observe the same, permit me to recommend for the prayerful consideration of the members of this Society, the claims of that ancient and Heaven-ordained institution. Given as it was, a memorial of creation—standing, as it was originally designed ever to stand, a hebdomadal monument of that august event, against Atheism, Infidelity and Idolatry, we feel a deep anxiety for a speedy return of the church, and the world, to the religious observance of its hallowed hours. While we tender you our coöperation to oppose sin in all its forms, and wherever found, we respectfully invite your attention to this subject. But, as a discussion of it would be foreign to the main object of this meeting, and wishing not to infringe or trespass upon the order of your business, I shall not insist upon any inquiry of that nature here.

Permit me, however, to ask liberty for a free and Christian interchange of views relative to it, by our ministers in your pulpits, and through your periodicals, tendering the same privilege to you in our pulpits and papers, upon that subject, as well as that of the distinguishing feature of your Society. Firmly believing that the temple of Christianity will rise only in proportion as its stones are squared by the lines of truth, and that the only spirit of true reform is that of the Bible, I extend to you our Christian coöperation in rearing the sacred edifice, upon the ancient doctrine of the Apostles, Jesus Christ being the chief corner stone. In conclusion, I would respectfully request a farther interchange of kindly regards and of views, relative to the great questions of Apostolic Christianity, through the medium of representatives at our several anniversaries.

Sherman S. Griswold,
Delegate from the A. S. D. B. M. Society.

Charleston, Mass., May 3, 1849.

The above communication was accepted by the unanimous vote of the body. The following brethren were appointed delegates from that Society to the anniversaries of the Seventh-day Baptist Churches:—John N. Barbour, Harvey Hawes, Cyrus P. Grosvenor, A. T. Foss.

Adjourned to 7 o'clock May 4th.

Being under the necessity of leaving this evening, in order to reach home previous to the Sabbath, I was deprived of the privilege of attending on the last day of the Session, when the remarks on the resolutions of the Business Committee were to have been made.

S. S. Griswold.

Hopkinton, May 9, 1849.

RESIGNATION.

BY HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

There is no flock, however watched and tended,
But one dead lamb is there!
There is no fireside, howsoe'er defended,
But has one vacant chair!

The air is full of farewells to the dying,
And mournings for the dead;
The heart of Rachel, for her children crying,
Will not be comforted!

Let us be patient! these severe afflictions
Not from the ground arise,
But oftentimes celestial benedictions
Assume this dark disguise.

We see but dimly through the mists and vapors;
Amid these earthly damps,
What seem to us but dim, funereal tapers,
May be Heaven's distant lamps.

There is no Death! what seems so is transition;
This life of Mortal breath
Is but a surburb of the life Elysian,
Whose portals we call Death.

She is not dead—the child of our affection—
But gone unto that school
Where she no longer needs our poor protection,
And Christ himself doth rule.

In that great Cloister's stillness and seclusion,
By guardian angels led,
Safe from temptations, safe from sin's pollution,
She lives, whom we call dead.

Day after day we think what she is doing
In those bright realms of air;
Year after year her tender steps pursuing,
Behold her grown more fair.

Thus do we walk with her, and keep unbroken
The bond which Nature gives,
Thinking that our remembrance, though unspoken,
May reach her where she lives.

Not as a child shall we again behold her;
For when, with raptures wild,
In our embraces we again enfold her,
She will not be a child;

But a fair maiden, in her Father's mansion,
Clothed with celestial grace;
And beautiful with all the soul's expansion
Shall we behold her face.

And though, at times, impetuous with emotion
And language long suppressed,
The swelling heart heaves moaning like the ocean,
That cannot be at rest;

We will be patient, and assuage the feeling
We cannot wholly stay;
By silence sanctifying, not concealing
The grief that must have way.

POVERTY IN NEW YORK.

The question is assuming a serious practical aspect in New York, What shall be done with the Poor? The number of the poor is increasing among us. There are thousands in this city who are miserably poor, ragged, filthy, sickly, crowded in garrets or cellars, without fire, without a bed, dependent on charity for a scanty and precarious subsistence. There are other thousands whose daily labor yields them so scanty a support, that sickness or loss of employment would render them penniless and dependent on charity for food, medicine, and a home. Yet many of our wealthy citizens have no conception of such a state of things. The merchant, whose daily route lies from the Exchange, through Broadway, to Union Square, or the Fifth Avenue, may be surprised and incredulous at such a statement. He meets, day after day, the same impostors, the same blind and crippled beggars, the same haggard and bloated women, with borrowed, stolen, or tortured children, but he never sees anything like real poverty or suffering. Will such a man believe us, when we tell him, that a slight advance in the price of flour or of fuel causes distress—distress that is felt in hundreds of families where there is an air of comfort to the casual observer; and that sickness reduces such families to the brink of starvation, and renders them liable to ejectment for the non-payment of rent?

Well, neighbor, if you will call at our office to-morrow, we will engage to show you, within a hundred rods of where we write, a family of five persons, who lived last week on fourteen shillings ($1,75); a family who have seen "better days," and who have been reduced not by vice but by misfortune. We will take you to another family of four, where the mother lies sick and helpless on a rude cot, their only apology for a bed, and the father is unable to find employment: they have pawned little keepsakes and necessary articles of clothing for food, and would have been turned out of doors, had we not begged their rent of strangers. We will take you to another—but the stench of the street and court will sicken your stomach, if your heart is not already sick—we were about taking you to a narrow room, six by twelve, occupied by three persons, where honest and frugal industry would pine with hunger and languish under disease, did not the hand of charity furnish employment, food and medicine.

You begin to see some signs of poverty. But we have not yet taken you to the printer or the joiner; both once in prosperous business, now reduced, with families on their hands; good workmen, but having only such employment as the kindness of friends may furnish. And we have not attempted to enter, much less to explore, the recesses of poverty and wretchedness in the very heart of New York. There are multitudes of poor, who are not beggars, and yet are liable at any moment to be reduced to beggary. [Independent.

A BATTLE FIELD.

Mr. Alison gives the following description of the appearance, on the morning afterward, of the ground on which the famous battle of Evlau was fought:—

"Never was spectacle so dreadful as the field of battle presented on the following morning. About fifty thousand men lay in the space of two leagues weltering in blood. The wounds were, for the most part, of the severest kind, from the extraordinary quantity of cannon balls which had been discharged during the action, and the close proximity of the contending masses to the deadly barriers which spread grape at half musket shot through their ranks. Though stretched on the cold snow, and exposed to the severity of the arctic winter, they were burning with thirst, and piteous cries were heard on all sides for water, or assistance to extricate the wounded men from beneath the heaps of slain, or loads of horses by which they were crushed. Six thousand of these noble animals incumbered the field, or, maddened with pain, were shrieking aloud amidst the groans of the wounded. Subdued by the loss of blood, tamed by cold, exhausted by hunger, the foeman lay side by side amidst the general wreck. The Cossack was to be seen beside the Italian; the gay vine-dresser from the smiling banks of the Garonne, lay athwart the stern peasant from the plains of the Urkaine. The extremity of suffering extinguished alike the fiercest and most generous passions. After his usual custom, Napoleon, in the afternoon, rode through the dreadful field, accompanied by his generals and staff, while the still burning piles of serpallen and sauss-graten sent volumes of black smoke over the scene of death; but the men exhibited none of their wonted enthusiasm; no cries of Vive l'Empereur were heard; the bloody surface echoed only with the cries of suffering or the groans of wo."

ST. PETER'S CHAPEL IN THE TOWER, LONDON.

The head and body of Monmouth were placed in a coffin covered with black velvet, and were laid privately under the communion-table of St. Peter's Chapel in the Tower. Within four years, the pavement of that chancel was again disturbed, and hard by the remains of Monmouth were laid the remains of Jeffreys.

In truth, there is no sadder spot on the earth than that little cemetery. Death is there associated, not, as in Westminster Abbey and St. Paul's, with genius and virtue, with public veneration and imperishable renown; not, as in our humblest churches and church-yards, with every thing that is most endearing in social and domestic charities, but with whatever is darkest in human nature and human destiny, with the savage triumph of implacable enemies, with the inconstancy, the ingratitude, the cowardice of friends, with all the miseries of fallen greatness and of blighted fame.

Thither have been carried through successive ages, by the rude hands of jailers, without one mourner following, the bleeding relics of armies, the leaders of parties, the oracles of senates, and the ornaments of courts.

Thither was borne before the window where Jane Gray was praying, the mangled corpse of Guilford Dudley. Edward Seymour, Duke of Somerset, and Protector of the Realm, reposes there by the brother whom he murdered. There has mouldered away the headless trunk of John Fisher, Bishop of Rochester, and Cardinal of St. Vitalis, a man worthy to have lived in a better age, and to have died in a better cause.

There are laid John Dudley, Duke of Northumberland, Lord High Admiral, and Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Essex, Lord High Treasurer.

There, too, is another Essex, on whom nature and fortune had lavished all their bounties in vain, and whom valor, grace, genius, royal favor, popular applause, conducted to an early and ignominious doom.

Not far off sleep two chiefs of the great house of Howard, Thomas, fourth Duke of Norfolk, and Philip, eleventh Earl of Arundel.

Here and there, among the thick graves of unquiet and aspiring statesmen, lie more delicate sufferers, Margaret of Salisbury, the last of the proud name of Plantaganet, and those two fair queens who perished by the jealous rage of Henry.

Such was the dust with which the dust of Monmouth mingled. [Macaulay.

The British Museum.—The receipts of the British Museum, in 1848, were £53,999, ($270,000;) its expenditures £49,845; about $70,000 were appropriated last year for purchases. Parliament are asked this year for £42,915, $215,000. The number of visiters last year was 897,985, against 820,965 in 1847. In 1810, only 1,950 persons visited it for the purpose of study or research; in 1848, 65,867. The number of artists who visited its galleries of sculpture for study was, in 1821, 4,933, in 1848, 3,946; 26,075 volumes of printed books have been added during the past year. Some splendid manuscripts have been added; one of them is a volume of Hours, executed by a Flemish artist, about 1,500 beautifully written and illuminated manuscripts, with full-length portraits of Philip the Fair and of Joanna. The report names the liberality of "the States of America," especially Vermont, which has sent its documents to the Museum. Among the additions made last year is also a collection of Hebrew works, made by the late H. J. Michael, of Hamburg. Among the mass of 3,970 books, are 400 Bibles and Commentaries, and 230 works on the Cabbalah.

During the progress of excavations in Smithfield Market, opposite the entrance to the church of St. Bartholomew the Great, for the formation of a sewer, when about three feet below the surface, the workmen came upon a heap of unhewn stones, blackened as if by fire, and covered with ashes and human bones charred and partially consumed. The remains thus discovered are supposed to be those of martyrs burned at the stake. Many bones were carried away as relics.

EDUCATION—No. 1.

As a denomination, we are evidently putting forth some commendable exertions for sustaining the various benevolent interests of the age. But it is a question well worthy of serious consideration, whether we are not, at the same time, neglecting some of the most efficient means of blessing the world. It is manifestly unwise to lay out our entire strength—to exhaust all our energies—on a few prominent and immediate objects of Christian philanthropy, and neglect the main springs of action—those life-giving sources which supply the energizing, working element in perpetuating and enlarging the sphere of benevolent exertion. Now, it is quite obvious that Education must lie at the foundation of all our present and prospective schemes of doing the world good. The term education is here used in no narrow sense. It embraces all that pertains to a complete and harmonious development of the physical, intellectual, and moral powers of man. No man is educated, in any proper sense of the term, who is not wholly consecrated to the Lord; who has not, as the ultimate end of existence, the glory of God, and the good of Universal Being, constantly in view. This is a prime element in education. This being admitted as the scope, the object and end of education, the proposition, as stated above, becomes a self-evident truth.

Two considerations may serve to illustrate the proposition, stated in another form, viz. that very thoroughly educated men and women are imperiously needed to sustain the benevolent enterprises of the age.

1. In sustaining these interests, mind has to hold communion with mind; and he who expects, by the exertions of his own mind, to arouse, mold, and attune the minds of others to the glorious truths of Heaven, must learn the avenues by which the soul's best affections can be reached. If tracts are to be written, which shall convince the intelligence, and move the deep sympathies of the soul for virtue and for virtue's reward, men must wield the pen whose minds have been thoroughly disciplined. If Bibles are to be translated into the hundreds of languages and dialects spoken in this and other lands, men must be employed to do it who have had a training of many years' hard study in classical learning, as well as in every thing pertaining to biblical science and literature. If men are to "speak with tongues"—preach the gospel to the heathen—they must possess that familiarity with the general structure of language, which can alone be secured by an accurate knowledge of the ancient Latin, Greek, and Hebrew languages. If a denominational literature is to be brought forth for a denomination that has none, or at most but a very scanty one, it will require a vast variety of talent, largely imbued with a literary spirit, and extensively versed in all the mysteries of book-making. So, indeed, in every scheme for aiding to develop, in its full proportion and strength, the spirit of universal brotherhood; men of the very first attainments are required in devising efficient means, adapting them to the ends to be secured, and following them up, with unyielding assiduity, to a successful issue. The time has gone by, if indeed there ever was such a period, when unlettered men may hope to wield an extensive influence. As mere intellectual endowments, without holy devotion, perfect consecration to God, are valueless as instruments in reforming and bringing back a world to its allegience to God, so ignorance, however sanctified and consecrated, is nearly powerless as an instrument in securing victory in the great moral conflicts of the age.

2. The condition of man, individually and socially, intellectually and morally, is one of progress. Society to-day is not what it was one year ago. An advance has been made. That advancement has widened the sphere of thought and action. Problems in political economy, and in moral science, that, one year ago, were admitted only as doubtful theories, have been completely solved, and practically adopted. Compare society with what it was, in this country, at the commencement of the nineteenth century. How has every thing pertaining to the comfort, convenience, and improvement of man's individual and social welfare, been changed by the rapid progress of the sciences and arts. The great agricultural, mechanical, and commercial resources and relations of the country, have advanced beyond a parallel in the history of nations. The successful applications of steam to the purposes of navigation and the propelling of carriages, have made cities, that had else been strangers, near neighbors. "Lands, intercepted by a narrow frith," nay, more, by broad oceans, no longer "abhor each other." Sectional interests and local prejudices no longer have power to bring jarring empires into collision. Citizens at the remotest parts of this broad land, shake hands with each other by telegraph, and send their messages on the "wings of the lightning." The school, the academy, the college, munificently endowed, are busy, waking up, and bringing out, the glorious elements of mind, and reinstating the divine image. The soul is emerging from the long, dreary, chilly night, where she has searched in vain for light. The shackles of ignorance and superstition are falling, and the clarion sounds of liberty are shaking the thrones of old dominions. But what has this progress to do with the proposition now under consideration? Much. The educators—the sustainers of the hopes of humanity for the next generation—require an intellectual training far in advance of that which was required of the educators of the present generation. The masses of the next generation will be more intelligent than the masses of the present; and their leaders, their spiritual or secular guides, their educators, must be more intelligent also, if they hope to gain the confidence, respect, and affections of the people. Better educated men are demanded; and let no man suppose, that qualifications which, this year, may render him a successful and acceptable laborer in the vineyard of the Lord, will render him such ten years hence. Daily observation may be sufficient to convince any one, that men in almost all the professions are crowded out, every year, because they have not kept pace with the spirit of the age. They have not, diligently and faithfully, used the means of mental discipline that rendered them popular five or ten years ago, and they have of necessity been superseded by others.

If these views be correct, let it be asked, in all earnestness, whether, as a denomination, we are doing any thing proportional to the demands of the age, for the interests of education? The answer to this question shall be next sought.

PENNSYLVANIA JUDICATURE.

The "Judges learned in the law," in the Keystone State, are becoming signalized for their harlequin antics. Since the recent decision of the Supreme Court on the Sunday Question, all legal points having any psychological bearing, are, to use a cant expression, "at sixes and sevens"—unhinged—at loose ends. Trying to bolster up a superstition of the populace, yet ashamed to assume the responsibility of deciding the question on the old ground, of the holiness of the first day of the week, and equally afraid to place it on its true merits, and award a just desert, they have opened the door to confusion, and every decision made by an inferior Court, influenced by the decision of the higher, makes the "confusion worse confounded."

The Supreme Court, it will be recollected, affirmed the Sunday law, solely on the ground that it is a "civil regulation." Since then, the President Judge of the Lancaster District has decided, that one "civil" enactment cannot supersede another without express elevation, and adjudged that the hog-law must be equally respected and sustained—that hogs may be impounded on that day, and that the constable or overseer of the highways is entitled to take fees for services performed, for civil purposes, on the "civil rest-day," notwithstanding all labor is prohibited, and all civil acts done on that day are declared null and void.

Well, I have not any thing to complain of all this, but simply wish to put a few things together, as I am apt to do when I find "folly growing romantic." The Bellefonte Democrat of week before last, announces—

"The counsel of Lawrence Allman, who, it will be recollected, was tried and found guilty of the murder of his brother, in Clearfield Co., at the February Court, have succeeded in their application for a new trial. The case will be tried over again at the September term."

To which the editor of the Philadelphia Ledger adds—

"The verdict set aside is that of the jury who, being unable to make up their minds, joined together in a prayer, which produced conviction. The Court, it seems, considers prayer in the jury box as informal, the jury being sworn to try a man by the law and the facts."

Before the decision of the Supreme Bench, on the Sunday Act, (and, indeed, the same principle was contended for by one of the Judges on that occasion,) it was maintained that Christianity is part of the common law of the land. Well, be it so, for a moment, as I wish to give the cripple all the benefit of two crutches, if they can be of any service to him. If, then, Christianity is part of the common law, are not all its prominent features on a like footing? Judge Coulter assumed one institution—a mooted institution—to be so; and why may not another of equal or greater importance—one of unquestioned propriety and of universal acceptance? All Christians—Sunday Christians, Sabbatarians, and Friends—regard prayer as the all-important institution of Christianity. It is its life. It is the life-energy of the whole system, so far as man is concerned in it. If one thing is esteemed more than another by all Christians, it is prayer; and it is, perhaps, the only thing on which all agree. Therefore, if any point is preferred or favored, it should be regarded by the law as its most sacred institution—be protected, encouraged, and shielded. But in the Clearfield case, the Judge has ruled out prayer, and has overset, or set aside, a verdict, because the jury, differing somewhat, and wishing to act conscientiously in the matter, resorted to prayer, to stir up the consciences of all to the point at issue.

What will man next attempt? He has blotted out the Heaven-appointed Sabbath; he will next inhibit the communion of the Spirit with the Father of Spirits—the enlightener and sanctifier of our immortal souls. The verdict, in the above case, was set aside, because it was made the subject of special, soul-searching examination, in the light of eternity, at the throne of the All-wise—for seeking Divine assistance to arrive at a righteous judgment. If the jury had resorted to swearing and denunciation, to convince each other that the culprit deserved to be hanged, and should be hung, and their horrible oaths and imprecations had prevailed, then, we must presume, "the learned judge" would have regarded the verdict as valid and just! But the jury was guilty of the folly of seeking Divine enlightenment, in a matter of conscientious scruples, and in the matter of the life or death of a fellow-being; and the "learned Judge" annulled the verdict, and granted a new trial—forsooth the jury prayed!

Just so is it with our jurists, in regard to the Seventh-day Baptists. Because they resort to the Word of God to discover their religious obligations, and conscientiously take HIM at His Word, the priesthood and human laws to the contrary notwithstanding, they put the truth-loving under ban, fine and imprison them, while the wicked and reckless desecrate all days with impunity!

I do not complain that Sunday has been declared a "civil rest-day"—a "civil regulation"—by the Supreme Court. I simply point to the ludicrous inconsistencies into which it drives the Judiciary of the State. Prayer, I maintain, is as much a part of the common law as Sunday, and as much a "civil regulation" as the first day of the week; and therefore ought to have been respected as such, in the above case, inasmuch as the Legislature appoints chaplains, at each Session, to open their proceedings, every day, with prayer. If, therefore, prayer is essential in the law-making business, why is it not equally so in the execution of the law? As prayer is thus recognized and made a "civil institution," a "civil regulation," by being appointed as part and parcel of legislative action, answer, good sirs, why not equally so in the administration of the law? Every Judge who has pronounced the penalty of the law, in capital cases, has recognized and adopted it; for all finish the sentence with the ejaculation, "And may God have mercy on your soul." If prayer invalidates the verdict of a jury, then prayer likewise invalidates all the laws passed by every Legislature that employs a chaplain, and vitiates the sentence of the Bench in pronouncing the execution of an individual. We trust that this, their folly, will wake up the law-founders and the law-confounders, and induce some wholesome reform—a reformation based on equal rights and reciprocal immunities, ere we become a laughing-stock for all civilized nations.

MISSIONARY LABOR IN CENTRAL NEW-YORK.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

At the Semi-Annual Session of the Central Association, a resolution was passed requesting the Missionaries engaged in our domestic mission, to make known through the Recorder, occasionally, the amount of labor bestowed upon their respective fields, the results of such labor, and the prospects of the mission. In compliance with that resolution, I would respectfully submit the following.

As soon as practicable after my appointment to the Otselic Mission, I entered upon its labors. I commenced on the 19th of January, and spent one week, preaching Sabbath and first-day, and evenings, also visiting from house to house. I found the state of religious feeling very low, and decreasing. Many had abandoned family prayer, and some who three years ago when I labored in that church occasionally were active in the cause of truth and enjoyed communion with their Saviour and the fellowship of saints, had abandoned the cause almost entirely, and were famishing for want of the bread of life. One occasion of this state of apathy has been, I think, a want of the administration of the word, which they have enjoyed but a few times for more than two years until since our Association proposed to aid them. This, in connection with negligence, and unwarrantable omissions of religious duties, had rendered their condition lamentable. I have spent from two to three Sabbaths and first-days in each month, and as much more time as I could render serviceable to them, (in view of the bad traveling and unpleasant weather in the spring of the year,) in this Church and vicinity, making in all thirty-five days. Although we can not report an extensive revival, and the conversion of sinners, as we could wish, yet the Church has been, under the divine blessing, generally awakened and revived, a number of backsliders have been hopefully reclaimed, and are now faithful at the family altar and in Zion. A good degree of union exists in the Church, and there is punctuality in attending upon public worship and the duties of religion, with a growing interest for the prosperity of Zion and the salvation of a perishing world. This, in connection with a manifest willingness and desire to do what they can to aid in sustaining the administration of the gospel as their pecuniary circumstances will admit, and by their prayers, indicate, we trust, the dawning of a brighter day. The Lord hasten it for his name's sake. Brethren, pray for us.

J. CLARK.

DERUYTER, May 16, 1849.

BAPTIST EFFORTS IN GERMANY.—A letter from Rev. Mr. Oncken, dated Feb. 9, gives a good account of a convention which was held in Hamburg in January last. About 60 delegates were present, a spirit of concord prevailed in their deliberations, and plans were formed for much more extended operations in promoting the work of God. The fields are ripe for the harvest, and the Holy Spirit is poured out.

"Millions of our perishing fellow men have heard of the name of Jesus, during the past year, through our feeble and imperfect labors, in Germany, Denmark, Sweden, Poland, Holland, Austria, Hungary, Elsass, (Alsace,) and Switzerland. God has owned our efforts, and many, many precious souls have joined our ranks, and are now fellow-laborers in the Lord's cause.

"Our tract issues amounted, in 1848, to upwards of 600,000 copies; nearly 12,000 copies of the Holy Scriptures were circulated, and our goodly number of preachers, evangelists, colporteurs, and ordinary members, have labored with much zeal and devotedness in bringing sinners to Christ."

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

One of the most horrid circumstances that ever came to my knowledge, happened a few days since in the south part of this county [Cortland.] A very intemperate man compelled his boy, some eight years old, to drink some intoxicating liquor, threatening to cut his head off if he did not drink. After this, he drank himself drunk; and while he lay prostrate in the yard, the boy took the axe, haggled his father's head off, and kicked it through the bars. When asked why he had done this horrid deed, he said that his father would not get drunk any more.

Who is responsible for this horrid deed? If the people have a right to license the sale of liquor as a beverage, the landlord has a right to sell it; if he has this right, the purchaser has a right to drink it; if so, he has a right to fall under its influence; what it influences him to do, he has a right to do. If this is not so, then all is wrong, and it is of no use for us to inquire, "Am I my brother's keeper?" "Our brother's blood will cry to us from the ground," while we are not to "suffer sin upon our neighbor." The people must see to this matter. Our leading politicians dare not, for their party's sake, incur the displeasure of the rum power. It is a matter of great mortification, to know that our popular statesmen bow at the shrine of Bacchus.

THE PORTUGUESE REFUGEES.

We learn from the Journal of Commerce, that a considerable number of the 1,000 persons who fled from the Island of Madeira to Trinidad, on account of religious persecution, (fifty-four in all,) arrived in this port on the 12th inst., in a small schooner chartered for the purpose, from the latter island, and placed themselves under the care of the American Protestant Society. As those who have previously arrived, have been unexpectedly delayed in their contemplated emigration to the State of Illinois, it is now expected that after a few days, the whole party, about 125 in number, will proceed westward together. Mrs. M. J. Alves, one of the passengers by this arrival, is the lady who was condemned to death for renouncing the doctrine of transubstantiation, and refusing to relinquish the privilege of reading the Bible, for herself and family. This sentence of death, by the Court of Madeira, was affirmed by the Supreme Court of Portugal, at Lisbon, to whom an appeal had been taken. Subsequently, however, the English residents at Funchal, having petitioned the Queen of Portugal, the sentence was commuted for imprisonment. After confinement in a loathsome dungeon for near three years, she was released, and with a large company of other persecuted ones, escaped to Trinidad.

ENGLISH FARMERS.—A letter from Elihu Burritt, published in the Christian Citizen, says that thousands of small farmers in England are now turning their eyes to America, who would be a benefit to any agricultural community in which they might settle, from their possession of capital and agricultural skill, with general intelligence and industry. A reason for their proposed removal will be found in the following statement of the exorbitant price at which landed property is held in England, and the impossibility of the farmer owning his farm.

"Whilst the whole agricultural community is resounding with cries of distress and forebodings of utter ruin, in consequence of Free Trade, every acre of arable ground that comes into market is caught up as a prize, almost at any price. Thousands and tens of thousands of acres are bought at $500 per acre, not for building lots, but for grass or grain lots. A small farm of 100 acres might be bought at a bargain for $25,000 not including a plow, cart, or a single implement of husbandry. How is a small farmer to raise a sum sufficient to purchase and own a farm of this size?"

ROMAN CATHOLIC COUNCIL.—The Roman Catholic Bishops of the United States have recently held a Grand Council at Baltimore. Their doings are not yet made public. We learn, however, from a letter published in the Freeman's Journal, that "with the approval of the Holy See, which will without doubt be speedily accorded, New York, Cincinnati, and New Orleans, will be raised to the dignity of Archiepiscopal Sees." "It is said that many new Sees have been erected, and nominees presented to the Sovereign Pontiff." "The Fathers have determined unanimously to pray the Holy Father to define as an article of faith the Immaculate Conception. It is moreover determined that in three years hence another Council shall be held of all the Archbishops and Bishops of the United States."

REVIVAL AT EAST GREENWICH, R. I.—A letter from Eld. John Green, dated at Hopkinton, May 16, says: "I have recently returned from four weeks' labor in the village of East Greenwich, R. I., having been called there by the Baptist Church. I have witnessed a precious revival of God's work, in reclaiming the backslider and renewing the hearts of sinners. This has been a very interesting and refreshing season. Twenty-eight were baptized while I stayed, and joined the Baptist Church, and many more were expected. Besides, a number joined the Methodists. The work was progressing when I left, since which I have not heard."

NEW MEETING-HOUSE.—A letter from Eld. John Green informs us, that "the Sabbath-keeping Church in Richmond, R. I., has nearly completed a beautiful meeting-house, and purpose to commence worship in it on the first Sabbath in June. The size is 40 by 32 feet."

THE TRACT SOCIETY.

Since the Anniversary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, in September last, the attention of the Board has been directed mainly to the printing of such tracts as had been previously stereotyped, and the distribution of them by means of colporteurs and missionaries. Three colporteurs have been employed during a portion of the time, and tracts to a large amount have been furnished for gratuitous distribution in different parts of the country. In carrying forward these operations, the funds of the treasury have been nearly exhausted, and it has become necessary to appeal to the friends of the Society for additional contributions. The Board has no other source of income than the voluntary contributions of individuals and churches. Heretofore these have sufficed to support its limited operations. But for a few months past they have been unusually small—entirely inadequate to meet the demands of the case. We trust that it is only necessary to state this fact, to secure liberal and prompt aid. Will the churches that have been accustomed to do something each year, in their church capacity, for tract operations, make haste to gather up their offerings for the present year? Will the auxiliary societies that have pledged an annual donation, see to it that their pledge is redeemed? Will the individuals who desire the continuance and extension of our efforts, give proof of that desire by lending their aid? Will the members of the Society, whose membership is conditional upon a yearly contribution, forward that contribution soon, without putting the agent to the trouble of sending them bills? Will those who desire the prosperity of the Tract Society, all and singular, inquire what are their obligations to it, and act accordingly? Now is the time to decide what you ought to do, while the subject is before you. May you come to such a decision as will satisfy your own conscience and the claims of the truth.

Contributions may be forwarded to the Treasurer, Thomas B. Stillman, or to the Corresponding Secretary, Geo. B. Utter, New York.

By order of the Board,
GEO. B. UTTER, Cor. Sec.

HAMBURG—THE JEWS.—The Jewish Chronicle says that the city of Hamburg already begins to reap the fruit of the recent emancipation of the Jews. The late philanthropist Salomon Heine had, in the memory of his deceased son, left the sum of 100,000 marks banco, (about 7,000*l*.,) to the founding of an institution which should grant loans of 2,000 marks (about 120*l*.) to Jewish mechanics and young merchants, without interest; with the proviso, that so long only as the Jews of Hamburg should labor under civil disabilities, the charity should be confined to his co-religionists. As soon as the barrier of intolerance should be removed, the benefits of the bequest were to be extended to Christians also. Since, by the recent act of Jewish emancipation, Christians may purtake of the same benefits, the demand upon the funds has consequently greatly increased. Mr. Charles Heine, the son of the benevolent testator, has added 100,000 marks banco of his own to the funds of the charitable institution.

DISTRESS IN JERUSALEM.—In a letter signed by the Rabbis and a very large number of Hebrews in Jerusalem, addressed to Sir M. Montefiore, we find the following passage: "Let our European brethren remember, that there are in this city various religious sects, each having their places of worship, their well-furnished houses, their deres, (castles or palaces,) their courts, and their meeting places—all well regulated and conducted, all adequately supported and supplied; while the houses and establishments of Israel are poor and mean, so that we must struggle hard to keep our faith. Surely our enemies shake their heads and say, 'Is this the nation chosen by God? Is this the people who boast of their wisdom and their laws?' Thus are we despised by our neighbors, and thus do we daily become more dejected. The subscriptions from Europe toward our support from the Society of Holy Offerings have fallen off dreadfully, the allowance per head is a mere nothing, and our condition is deplorable beyond description."

COLLEGE REFORM.—The Trustees of Union College contemplate an extension of the existing course of studies in that institution, so as to include the more useful applications of Science to the Arts, such as civil and mechanical engineering, agriculture, agricultural and mechanical chemistry, &c.; also French and other modern languages. They also propose such a change in the statutes as will allow applicants the privilege of pursuing such branches of study, and such only, as they may consider most useful for their future pursuits. By this plan, each student will obtain such a diploma, and in such studies, as will express his actual attainments; while, to those prosecuting the usual collegiate course, and to those only, the usual collegiate diploma will be given.

BAPTIST THEOLOGICAL INSTITUTION.—At a late meeting of the Rhode Island Baptist Education Society, the subject of Theological Education came up for discussion, and the following resolution was passed:—

"Resolved, That a committee be appointed by this Society, to confer with the authorities of the Newton Theological Institution, the New York Baptist Education Society, the Northern Baptist Education Society, and other Institutions and Societies interested in the cause of Ministerial Education in the Baptist denomination in New York and New England, in reference to the adoption of a plan by which the Baptist denomination in these States may unite in sustaining one general system of Theological Education in connection with one Theological Institution which may be central in its location with respect to these States."

STEAMBOAT ACCIDENT AND LOSS OF LIFE.

On Thursday evening last, May 17th, a frightful and fatal accident occurred on the Hudson River. The steamboat Empire, on her way from New York to Troy, when near Newburg, was run into by the schooner Noah Brown, and so badly injured that she sunk to her state-room deck in five minutes. She had on board about 250 passsengers. As it was between 10 and 11 o'clock when the accident occurred, many of them were in their berths. Of course a rush was at once made for the upper deck, and a large number of the passenger succeeded in reaching it, whence they were taken by a steamboat which happened to be close at hand. Several, whom the water surprised and confined in the ladies' saloon, were taken out through holes cut with axes over their heads. Others jumped upon the schooner; and others still jumped into the water, and were either picked up by small boats or drowned. At the time of our writing (Monday noon,) it is not possible to say how many were lost. A list has been published of over 200 saved, and descriptions are given of 12 bodies found. The boat still lies under water, except the state-rooms, which are partly filled. How many of those occupying the lower cabin were unable to escape, and found a watery grave, can not be ascertained until the boat is raised. Many are missing, for whom their friends are anxiously searching. Mention is made of four brothers, named Ladd, from Stonington, Ct., who are supposed to be lost; also of Margarett and Ellen Duncan, and Miss Delia Avery, who can not be found. The number lost is variously estimated, from 20 to 50, but it will probably be nearest the first figures. All the passengers' baggage, much of their clothing which had been laid aside for the night, and a valuable cargo of goods, was of course at once immersed. Some of it has been obtained, and more of it will undoubtedly be obtained in a damaged condition. Our friend, Dr. C. H. Stillman, of Plainfield, N. J., who was on board with his wife and two children, describes the scene throughout as most frightful. He occupied a state-room on the upper deck—the safest place on the boat—but had barely time to escape with his family.

Three of the bodies found were taken to Newburg, and seven to Fishkill, on the other side of the river. The Coroner's Jury at Newburg censure the pilot of the Empire, and attribute the collision to his carelessness or want of judgment. They think he could and should have gone astern of the schooner, and so prevented a collision.

Great Fire at St. Louis.—At ten o'clock on Thursday night, a fire broke out on board a steamboat lying at a wharf in St. Louis. The wind was blowing a gale, and the fire soon communicated to the adjoining steamboats and stores, and was not arrested until nearly half of the business part of the city was destroyed. Included in the buildings burnt, were five banking houses, and every insurance office in the place. Twenty-seven steamboats, lying at their wharves, caught fire, and shared in the general conflagration. Five newspaper offices, with all their contents, were burnt. The loss is estimated at five millions of dollars. There were three persons killed by an explosion on board the Alice steamboat, and Mr. Thomas B. Targee, an auctioneer, was killed during the fire in the city. He threw a keg of powder into a store for the purpose of stopping the flames at that point, but the explosion took place before he got away from the building.

Flood at New Orleans.—New Orleans is in danger of being inundated by the waters of the Mississippi. At the latest date, May 12, several crevasses had occurred, above the city, and the water was flowing out in torrents. Thousands of workmen have been employed to close the crevasse, and have not been able to make any successful headway. The water in the swamps and in the Second Municipality is gradually rising. People are daily moving out and abandoning their dwellings. Some were taking refuge in the second and third stories of their houses, using boats to go out and in. About 300 houses were surrounded by water. At last accounts some workmen employed at the crevasse were dying with cholera.

Fire at Watertown, N. Y.—An extra from the Northern State Journal gives the particulars of a disastrous conflagration which took place at Watertown, N. Y., on Sunday, May 13, destroying nearly all the business portion of the village, including three Banks, the Post-Office, three printing offices, Surrogate's Office, two hotels, and thirty stores, in all about one hundred buildings. The loss in buildings is estimated at $125,000. The amount of personal property destroyed is not stated. Insurance quite large, being in the neighborhood of $120,000. The fire originated by accident, in the wood-house of the American Hotel.

It is apprehended that several lives were lost; the remains of one human body were found where some stage carriages were burned, supposed to be those of a frail sister who had been refused admission during the evening where she had called for lodgings. Some six or eight horses were burned.

Included in the buildings destroyed, are the American Hotel and out-buildings; all Paddock's stores on Washington-st.; all Fairbank's block and stores beyond; all the block of stores opposite, on Court-st.; Woodruff's Iron Block; the Episcopal Church; the Columbian Hotel; the Northern State Journal office; the Democratic Union office; the printing office of Joel Greene; about thirty of the most extensive stores; the Post-Office and all its contents. The valuables of the Black River Bank were saved; also the valuables of Wooster Sherman's Bank, and Henry Keep's Bank, and the Surrogate's Office papers, all saved.

The latest accounts say there are several fortunate circumstances connected with the fire. Most of the property consumed was owned by men in comparatively easy circumstances. There were very few private dwellings destroyed. But for a timely shower of rain, the loss of property would have been much greater than it was. Besides this, there had been but a single arrival of Spring goods, and those were insured. Over $300,000 of merchandize, belonging to the Watertown merchants, was at Sackett's Harbor, and in two days would have been in the stores. And, lastly, nearly all the property destroyed was insured.

The Cholera.—In New York, last week, startling rumors of cholera were afloat. It seems, however, from investigations made by the authorities, that the accounts were greatly exaggerated, and that there is no occasion for alarm. Several persons occupying a damp basement in a filthy part of the city, were attacked with a disease resembling cholera. They were immediately removed to better quarters, the whole neighborhood was cleansed, and every precaution taken to prevent the spreading of the disease. Some of those attacked have died, but the physicians doubt whether their deaths were caused by the real Asiatic Cholera.

From the West and Southwest we continue to receive reports of the ravages of cholera. At Cincinnati it prevails to a considerable extent, but is said to be of a mild type, the proportion of deaths to cases being quite small. At St. Louis it is more plenty and more fatal, particularly among emigrants, and those whose circumstances render it difficult to take proper care of themselves. Farther South the disease has prevailed extensively for many weeks. In Texas, large numbers of the inhabitants, and many of the California adventurers, have fallen victims to it.

The Riot—Verdict of the Coroner's Jury.—A Jury, summoned by the Coroner of New York, have thoroughly investigated the circumstances connected with the late riot, and agreed upon the following verdict respecting the deaths which resulted therefrom. Two or three of the wounded have died since the verdict was delivered, and similar verdicts have been rendered in their cases:—

"We believe that George A. Curtis, John McDonald, Thos. Aylwood, Geo. Lincoln, Timothy Burns, Henry Otten, Geo. W. Brown, Wm. Butler, Geo. W. Taylor, Owen Burns, Thomas Belman, Neil Gray Mellis, Asa F. Collins, Wm. Harmen, Thomas Keirnan, Mathew Cahill, Geo. N. Gedney, came to their deaths by gun shot wounds from balls fired by the Military during the riot before the Opera House on Thursday evening, 10th May inst., by order of the civil authorities of the City of New York; and that the circumstances existing at the time justified the authorities in giving the order to fire upon the mob. We farther believe that if a larger number of the Police had been ordered out, the necessity of a resort to the use of the Military might have been avoided.

James H. Perkins, Foreman.

From California.—News has been received from San Francisco, California, to the latter part of April. The steamship California was still lying there, deserted by her crew. The Capt. offered $200 per month to sailors in vain. But it was thought she would be manned by amateur sailors, consisting of such as wish to get back home, and sail about the 20th of April. Emigration to the mines had commenced, and the number there from Valparaiso alone is represented as 3,500. Owing to the immense number of people arriving at San Francisco, the whole country was considered in a very insecure state. There was a great want felt for the presence of an adequate military force, and for the extension of the laws of the United States over the Territory, in the absence of which much trouble is anticipated.

Dreadful Shipwreck and Loss of Life.—The Quebec Gazette of May 12, says that Captain Marshall, of the bark Nicaragua, from Gloucester, brought up part of the crew and some of the passengers of the brig Hannah, of Marryport, Captain Shaw, sailed from Newry 3d April, for Quebec, which came in collision with the ice at 4 o'clock on the morning of the 29th April, when the passengers were in bed, foundering in about 40 minutes after. The captain, 1st and 2d mates, and a few others, left the ship in the life-boat immediately on finding that their ship was going down.

Capt. Marshall reports: April 20th, passed through a field of ice 50 miles S. E. of St. Paul's; from the above date, was detained by the ice until the 2d of May, when Cape Ray bore S. E. by E., distance 27 miles. April 29, strong gale S. S. E. and thick sleet, ship lying to windward of the ice; at 6 30, P. M., the snow cleared away, when I discovered a flag of distress on the ice—made sail and prepared to take the ice, by putting the fenders down; at 7 put the ship in the ice, and succeeded in getting about fifty-two people on board, leaving a large number still on the ice; clewed up all sails and got a rope fast to a pan of ice, and succeeded in taking thirty more in the ship's long boat, which they found on the ice, making in all one hundred and twenty-nine passengers and six seamen. No pen can describe the pitable situation and destitution of these passengers—parents with loss of children, children with loss of parents, and they themselves all but naked, and the greatest part of them frost-bitten. I am informed that fifty-five perished with the cold.

Breach of Marriage Promise.—We hear frequent complaints from broken-hearted damsels, but few men have the courage to apply for damages. At Pittsburg, Joseph Curp complained before Alderman Minow, of Jane Ebbets, who had for two years made various promises to marry him; that he had given her combs, trinkets, stockings, &c., nursed her when sick, and paid her doctor's bill when sick, but she positively refuses to redeem her pledge. When told that the Alderman could not compel the lady to marry him, he sued her for ten dollars, the doctor's bill.

A Mrs. Simpson, at Louisville, Ky., has sued a Mr. R. Price, for a breach of the tender vow. The damages are laid at $20,000.

NEWS FROM THE OLD WORLD.

The steamship Canada has arrived since our last, with seven days later news from Europe.

From Ireland, there are frightful accounts of sickness, starvation, and death.

In England, a great deal is said about the repeal of the Navigation Laws, the Bill to aid Ireland, and the Bill to Emancipate the Jews. It is thought they will stand or fall together. The markets are considerably deranged by the troubles on the Continent, but there have been no important changes in relation to American products.

In France, trade has improved wonderfully. Beside this, the most interesting topic is the expedition to Rome. It is said that on the arrival of the French troops before Rome, the new Government fled, and the people pronounced for the Pope. But there is yet a good deal of uncertainty about the whole matter.

Official notice of the intervention of Russia in Hungary, has been received at Paris. The number of men placed at the disposal of Austria is 80,000. Another account states the number at 150,000.

The war in Hungary, so far at least as Austria is concerned, is daily assuming a more serious aspect; the Austrians have been signally defeated, and driven to the edge of Hungary, if not out of the country altogether. The Sicilians, beaten at all points, have virtually submitted to the King of Naples and the French Admiral, having negotiated successfully for favorable conditions.

There has been a commotion in Berlin which was suppressed by the soldiery, but not until some blood had been shed.

SUMMARY.

Some important land cases have recently been decided in the United States District Court for the District of Louisiana. In the case of John McDonough vs. the United States, the Court rendered a verdict for plaintiff for $90,000, for land claimed in or about New Orleans, under Spanish grants. In the case of Simon vs. the United States, judgment was rendered for plaintiff for a large quantity of valuable land.

The Troy Budget urges the importance of a railroad between that city and Boston. The distance, through the valley of the Hoosick, is thirty miles less than the Great Western Road, via Springfield, which terminates at Albany. A tunnel, four miles in length, will have to be constructed. The books for subscription are open in Troy, and quite a large number have already taken shares.

Governor Ramsay, now on his way to Minesota, has been the artificer of his own fortune. Originally a mechanic's boy, he surmounted all the obstacles to distinction which beset a lad in that condition, and by his own unaided exertions, attained consideration and eminence in Pennsylvania, and is now the foremost man in the growing territory of Minesota.

The Milwaukie Wisconsin of May 9, says:—"We learn from every county in the State, that the wheat crop looks uncommonly vigorous and healthy. The remark is made by the farmers, that it never promised better; and it is estimated that at least one-third, and perhaps one-half more wheat will be gathered in Wisconsin during the coming summer, than in any previous season."

Miss D. L. Dix, the celebrated philanthropist, is making an effort for the establishment of an Insane Asylum under State patronage in Alabama. Miss Dix's remarkable success in other States, particularly in North Carolina, will no doubt secure legislative action on the subject at the next session.

A brig called the "Frederic," Capt. Splisola, off Puerto Anna, Nicaragua, was struck by a whale on the 14th of July. The whale knocked off the ship's keel, and several planks. The ship sunk, and with the cargo, valued at $40,000, was a total loss.

Rev. Jarvis C. Bacon, of the Alleghany Wesleyan Conference, preacher on Grayson Circuit, Va., has been arrested and committed for trial in that State, charged with the crime of circulating a Bible argument against Slavery, and loaning Frederick Douglass' Narrative "with felonious intent," &c., &c. If convicted, the penalty is imprisonment for one or five years.

Disastrous accounts are reaching St. Louis from the Plains. Four men who left Fort Laramie on the 24th of March, reached there on the 11th inst., and state that in consequence of there being no grass on the Plains, the animals of emigrant parties were dying of hunger. The parties were getting along slowly.

The New Bedford Mercury states that since the arrival of the Falcon, whaler, at that port, a few days since, it has leaked out that the cook, who shipped at Honolulu, brought with him $12,000 in gold dust, keeping his own secret. It was gathered at the placers in California last year.

Manitouwoc is probably the chief lumber manufactory in Wisconsin. At the recent opening of navigation, 3,000,000 feet were ready, and 800,000 shingles. The exports of timber for the whole season are estimated at 5,000,000 feet.

About the 1st of March the U. S. Dragoons had two battles with the Eutaw and Apachee Indians, near Taos, in New Mexico. The result of the first battle was two dragoons killed and eight Indians, in the next about 20 Indians only. Another battle was reported between the Eutaws and Apaches, in which 40 of the latter were killed.

John Allen, a blacksmith of Hamilton, U. C., was a drunken sot. He hammered and tippled until death took hold of him, last week, by means of three apoplectic fits. Verdict of the Jury, "Died of apoplexy, brought on by intemperance." Rum drinkers, take warning!

Eight persons were recently tried at Parersburgh, Va., under one indictment, for an attempt to burn the barn of Geo. Henderson. They were all found guilty.

Prince Albert, of Prussia, lately sued to be divorced from his wife, the Princess Mary, of Netherlands, on the ground of insuperable aversion; and the divorce was granted by the tribunal of Berlin on the 28th ult.

Hon. William B. Maclay, recently a Democratic member of Congress, from the city of New York, has purchased, in connection with his three brothers, very nearly, if not altogether, a whole county in the State of Illinois, at the head of navigation on the Illinois River. The tract was mostly purchased by soldiers' land warrants, which were purchased at a cost of not over sixty cents an acre. The land is said to be unsurpassed in America.

The Chinamen who were rescued from death by Capt. Rogers, of the ship Coquimbo, are to be taken back to China in the new ship Helicon, which is about to sail from Boston. Capt. Josiah Sturgis, of the Revenue cutter Hamilton, collected sufficient funds, in a few hours, to procure the Chinamen a passage in the Helicon, and to obtain such clothing and other articles as will make them comfortable on the passage.

A letter received from Camargo, Texas, says that Gen. Parades, at the head of 1,000 Indians, was commencing war against the whites, similar to that of Yucatan. San Luis was the seat of his operations. He has put to death 19 whites, consisting of French, Dutch, and Americans, and declares the extermination of the white race.

The Mount Vernon (Ia.) Advocate says that the army worm has made its appearance in that country, and that "great fears are entertained, owing to the lateness of the warm weather and smallness of the grain, that the wheat may be seriously injured in consequence."

Information has been received by the United States Government, and is in possession of the Department, of preliminary arrangements in progress for the formation of a Government in California, which it is said will be formed before the meeting of the next Congress.

John H. Hawkins, the celebrated temperance lecturer, and one of the seven original Baltimore Washingtonians, is now on a tour out West, and will attend the great national celebration of the Sons of Temperance at Cincinnati.

It is stated, in a letter received in this city from near St. Louis, that were all the California emigrants that have passed Independence and the Council Bluffs, up to May 1, to march in one train, the procession would reach three hundred miles!

The Cincinnati National Jubilee of the Sons of Temperance, which was advertised to take place on the 15th, is indefinitely postponed, in consequence of the alarm caused by the cholera.

From a census recently taken by order of the Greek Government, it appears that the total population of Greece, including Peloponnesus, Continental Greece, and the Cyclades, is 993,351.

A hurricane passed through Iroquois County (Ill.) about three miles South of Milford, on the 8th inst., prostrating several houses and a large amount of fencing. It was about one mile in width.

The schooner Fair Dealer, of Bristol, Me., went ashore on Salter's Island in a gale on Sunday night, May 3. All on board perished, save a small boy.

Reports have reached St. Louis from the Plains, which state that many of the California emigrants are dying on their way, principally by cholera.

Richard Dillingham, a Quaker, has been convicted and sentenced to three years' imprisonment at Nashville, Tennessee, for having in his possession three slaves whom he intended to carry to a free State.

The Cincinnati papers record the death of a young man named George, by inhaling chloroform. He had come to Cincinnati from Dayton, for the purpose of having an operation performed.

The City Council of Rochester (N. Y.) has decided not to grant licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors, by a vote of 10 to 7.

MARRIED,

In Berlin, N. Y., on the 5th of May, by Eld. J. L. Scott, Mr. Henry Estee, of Petersburg, to Miss Lucretia Green, of Berlin.

In Berlin, on the 6th of May, by Daniel B. Green, Esq., Mr. Oliver Wescott to Miss Sena Main, all of Berlin.

On the 13th inst., by Eld. John Greene, Mr. David G. Stillman to Miss Abby L. Wilber, all of Hopkinton, R. I.

At South Hampton, Peoria Co., Ill., on the 9th of the 5th month, 1849, by Eld. Samuel Davison, Mr. Daniel Hakes to Miss Mary Dennis, of the above place.

DIED,

At Mystic Bridge, Ct., May 13, after a severe illness of about 25 hours, Mr. Ethan Lanphear, in the 38th year of his age. The deceased became in early life a subject of saving grace, and united with the first Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton, R. I., with which he remained connected until the formation of the Church at Pawcatuck, when he united with that, and continued a member till his death. His principal aim, since he became a professor of religion, seems to have been to glorify his Lord and Master, and he had lately appeared more than usually devoted to the cause of religion. He leaves a wife, a widowed mother who is by this dispensation called to bury the last of her children, and a large circle of friends, to mourn their loss; but not as those who mourn without hope, for they trust he has gone to that "rest which remaineth to the people of God." E. G. C.

In Richmond, R. I., on the 14th instant, after a short sickness, Ruhamah Potter, wife of Jonathan Potter, in the 36th year of her age. She was a beloved member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in the above place. She has left a deeply-afflicted husband, with five children, also her aged parents and numerous relatives, to mourn her sudden removal to the world of spirits; but we believe their loss is her eternal gain. J. G.

At Shiloh, N. J., in March last, Mrs. Abigail Thomas, wife of James B. Thomas, aged about 60 years. On the 11th of May, Mr. James B. Thomas, aged about 65 years. On the 17th of April, of a protracted illness, Margarett D. Randolph. On the 20th of April, very suddenly, the wife of Mr. Richard B. Davis, formerly of Allegany Co., N. Y.

At Loredo, Texas, on his way to California, on the 2d of April, of cholera and typhus fever, Harlow Clark, son of Hampton and C. M. Clark, of New York, aged 25 years.

In New York, on the 18th inst., Mrs. Sarah Ann Greenough, wife of Charles C. Greenough, in the 27th year of her age.

In Williamsburgh, L. I., May 19th, Alida Adelaide, daughter of Benedict W. and Ann M. Rogers, aged one year and five months.

Central Association.

The Annual Meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist Central Association, will be holden with the First Church in Brookfield, N. Y., commencing on the fourth day of the week before the second Sabbath in June, 1849.

Western Association.

The Annual Meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist Western Association will be held with the 1st Church of Alfred, Allegany Co., N. Y., commencing on the fourth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in June, (20th day of the month,) 1849, at 10 o'clock, A. M. Introductory discourse by James Bailey. T. E. Babcock, Cor. Sec.

Notice—Western Association.

The attention of the churches of the Seventh-day Baptist Western Association is particularly directed to the Report of a Committee appointed at the last annual session to revise the Constitution. That Report was received and referred to the churches for individual action; and is, together with the Constitution as it now stands, published in the Minutes of the last session. It is very desirable that the matter should be brought before every church, where it has not already been done, and the result of the action forwarded to the approaching Anniversary of the Association. That the Constitution needs revision, must be evident to all who give it even a passing notice; and in all matters of constitutional reform a full voice should be heard. Will the churches speak out? T. E. BABCOCK, Cor. Sec.

The Young People's Mirror,

A handsome Quarto Volume, containing upwards of one hundred Engravings, having but ONE AIM, to advance the Interest, Happiness, and Welfare of the Youth of America, at the very small price of "FIFTY CENTS."

MINISTERS, Colporteurs, Postmasters, Teachers, Parents, and Guardians, are invited to aid in circulating this work among the young, for they may be assured that it will be precisely such a work as they will take pleasure in recommending to those over whom they severally exercise an influence. For example, the Minister in his Sunday School, and his pastoral visits among his flock; the Colporteur in his lectures, and in his visits of love from house to house; the Postmaster in his office, where the young are sent for letters; Teachers, who are constantly training the young mind for the future; and Parents and Guardians, who bear the solemn responsibility of moulding human character, and watching over and directing aright the expanding intellect of youth, may all present our enterprise directly to those for whose benefit it is chiefly intended, and through its instrumentality each may aid himself in the work in which he is engaged.

☞ Terms to Agents.—To those who are willing to aid in circulating the Young People's Mirror in the neighborhood, the Publisher will credit them with three copies for each dollar so received, and send them per mail as directed.

 Young people clubbing together in fives, and sending the Publisher two dollars, will receive five copies of the paper, mailed to one address. EDWARD WALKER,
114 Fulton-street.

COMMENDATIONS OF THE PRESS.

We commend this work to the attention of parents, as a valuable one for their children. Let them subscribe for it on the first of January, when the volume will commence. It will be a fine New Year present. The matter of it, we can say from our knowledge of Mr. L., will be such as to entertain and instruct the young.—Poughkeepsie Telegraph.

The "Mirror," we predict, will be a great favorite with our juvenile population.—Republican (Monticello, N. Y.) Watchman.

From the number before us, we have no hesitation in recommending it to all classes as a valuable publication.—Utica Observer.

If the number before us is a fair specimen, it must be considered the cheapest, and one of the most desirable papers for young people printed in the country.—Portland (Me.) Journal.

It promises to be a delightful periodical for youth.—Philadelphia National Eagle.

It is very neat in its appearance, is finely embellished, and is well filled with matter highly useful and interesting to the class for which it is intended.—Belfast (Me.) State Signal.

We most cheerfully commend the publication to parents and guardians as a valuable work for youth of both sexes. Fifty cents cannot be better expended, looking to interest and instruction.—Freeman's Journal, Cooperstown, N. Y.

It is well printed, admirably selected, beautifully illustrated, and we really think the best and cheapest of the periodical publications prepared for youth.—Bangor (Me.) Gaz.

The "Young People's Mirror" is a monthly periodical, well edited and liberally illustrated, which will come to be welcomed, we have no doubt, by many thousands of young readers. It is but fifty cents a year; and if it maintains the promise of its initial number, it is "bound to succeed."—Knickerbocker Magazine.

SHOULD MAN REJOICE?

Hail beauteous Spring! all nature at thy sight
Revives; with joy the little warbler sings—
Attuning his sweet, soft melody, he soars
On high, and wafts his praises up to God!
Earth meets thee in her richest robes attired,
And smiles with rapture at thy fond approach;
Her trees in stately stature stand erect,
And from their leaves soft whispers may be heard,
Which form at last a universal choir
In praise of nature and of nature's God.
Her murm'ring streams, as placidly they move,
Acknowledge God—for at His bidding they
The plains and valleys fructify around.
The daisy* smiles, as with the break of day
It opes, and welcomes the approaching sun.
The rose, with blushes on its youthful cheeks.
Expands—and silver'd o'er with morning dew,
It scatters round its odorous perfume.
And shall not man rejoice at Spring's approach,
When all around him smiles with mirth and joy?
When vegetation in its language speaks,
And brute creation joins the grateful theme—
Shall MAN not praise? Oh, let not man be dumb!
For him this universal earth was made—
For him the forest rears its mighty oak,
And ocean teems the treasures of rich lands;—
For him the feathered songsters, full of joy,
A concert form, so musical and sweet;—
And in subjection to his mighty will,
The earth and all that it contains is laid!
For him does Spring appear "in pride of youth,"
And Summer beameth forth its golden rays;
So Autumn comes with measured steps and slow,
And hoary Winter last makes his approach.
All these bring good to man—let man rejoice!
And look from "nature up to nature's God." W. B. J.

BROOKLYN, 1849.

* The daisy is frequently seen and spoken of, when its beautiful signification is seldom appreciated. It means the day's eye, or the eye of day. With the rising of the sun it opens, and with its setting it closes.

THE COLUMBUS OF JAPAN.

From the Honolulu (Sandwich Island) Friend.

While the great commercial and naval nations of the world are meditating some great expedition, our numerous whale-ships are really doing something, in the way of opening intercourse with the Japanese. The Manhattan made a far more satisfactory visit to Japan than the Columbus. During the last season for ships to cruise in the Japan Sea, not scores but hundreds of vessels spread their canvas within full view of the coast. Several whale-ships have fallen in with junks, exchanged civilities with them, and in some instances relieved those in distress.

Our readers may not be uninterested in the following facts and documents, relating to the adventure of a sailor belonging to the American whale-ship Plymouth, of Sag-Harbor, Captain Edwards. It appears that a man by the name of Ronald McDonald shipped on board the Plymouth when she sailed from the United States. After remaining in the vessel 2 years, while at Lahaina, in the fall of 1847, he requested his discharge, unless Captain Edwards would consent to leave him the next season somewhere upon the coast of Japan. McDonald is a son of Archibald McDonald, Esq., formerly in the employ of the Hudson Bay Company, at Fort Collville, Columbia.

On application to the agent of the Company in Honolulu, we learned that this young man received a good education, but instead of pursuing a mercantile life on shore, betook himself to the sea. Soon after the Plymouth left Lahaina, he began to make arrangements and preparations for penetrating the hermetically-sealed Empire of Japan. Captain Edwards allowed him to make choice of the best boat belonging to the ship. The carpenter partially decked her over.

Having gathered his all together, he embarked upon his perilous and adventurous enterprise. One of his shipmates has furnished us with an extract from his journal, giving an account of McDonald's embarkation:—

JAPAN SEA, TEE SHEE ISLAND, June 18, 1848.

Tuesday—At 4 o'clock this morning all hands were called, the reefs shook out of the topsails, and topgallant sails were set. We had a fine breeze on our starboard beam, steering for the Tee Shee Island. It was a beautiful morning, a light mist hung around the island, but as we neared the shore we could plainly see the green-covered hills. We stood in until 9 A. M., when all hands were called, and the main-yard was hove aback. We launched a boat, put water and provisions of different kinds into her. She was a center-board boat, partly decked over, and very strong for one of her kind. One of our crew was to be her only navigator.

After all his things were in the boat, he was towed astern by a line; two men stayed to help him to trim her. After the boat was trimmed, they came on board. He let go the line, and was clear from us forever! His little vessel dashed over the waves like an arrow. All hands had gathered aft to see the last of the bold adventurer. He took off his hat and waved it, but in silence. The same was returned from the ship's company. Soon the order was given to brace the main-yard, and the gallant ship was going in an opposite direction. From our ship's mast he was viewed with the naked eye, as long as he could be seen—then the spy-glass was passed from one to another, that they might have a last look at the little vessel. He was watched from the mast-head until he was gone from our sight forever.

Every man on board felt sad to see a shipmate leave the ship, under such circumstances. He was a good sailor, well educated, of firm mind, and well calculated for the expedition upon which he had embarked. His intentions were to stay at this island and learn some of the Japanese language, and from there go down to Jeddo, the principal city of Niphon, and if the English or Americans ever open trade with the Japanese, he would find employment as an interpreter. He had other intentions, which I never heard him mention only in a secret manner. The last we saw of the little vessel, she was standing in for a small bay on the north of the island.

He was a man of about five feet seven inches, thick set, straight hair, and dark complexion. It was his wish to be left here, and he agreed for the same, before we left port, a year before. He had a good voyage in the ship, which he forfeited for his boat and his little cargo—such as a quadrant, 'epitomy,' two pistols, two small kegs of water, keg of meat, barrel of bread, an anchor, 35 fathoms of tow-line, and oars. His own chest was nearly full of books of various kinds. No one can blame Capt. Edwards for leaving the man in such a manner, for he advised him until his boat was launched over the side, not to go on such a hazardous voyage; but no, his mind was not to be changed. E. P. F.

Every one who reads the account of McDonald's adventure, will, no doubt, be anxious to learn the fate that attends him. The letter to his father closes with an emphatic ——. We can furnish but a single item of intelligence to fill up that blank. Some days after his embarkation, while the whale-ship Uncas was cruising in that region, she picked up the rudder of his tiny craft, which we will venture to name the "Young Plymouth." Whether she reached the shore or was swamped in the surf, remains a profound mystery.

"THERE WERE GIANTS IN THOSE DAYS."

Professor Silliman, in one of his lectures, mentions the discovery of an enormous animal of the lizard tribe, measuring eighty feet in length, from which he infers that all animals have degenerated in size—and this supposition is fortified by a reference to the history of giants in the olden time. It appears from the list furnished by the Professor, that we of the present day are mere "Tom Thumbs" when compared with the huge individualities of antiquity. Here is the list:—

The giant exhibited in Rouen in 1735 measured over eight feet.

Gorapius saw a girl who was ten feet high!

The body of Grestus was eleven and a half feet high!

The giant Galbara, brought from Arabia to Rome, under Claudius Cæsar, was near ten feet.

Funnman, who lived in the time of Eugene II., measured eleven and a half feet!

The Chevalier Scorg, in his voyage to the Peak of Teneriffe, found in one of the caverns of that mountain the skull of a Guance, which had eighty teeth, and it was supposed that his body was not less than fifteen feet long!

The giant Ferragus, slain by Arlando, nephew to Charlemagne, was eighteen feet high!

In 1614, near St. Germain, was found the tomb of the giant Isoret, who was twenty feet high!

In 1599, near Rouen, they found a skeleton whose skull held a bushel of corn! and whose body must have been eighteen feet long!

Platerus saw at Lucerne, the human bones of a subject nineteen feet long!

The giant Buart was twenty-two and a half feet high; his bones were found in 1705, near the banks of the river Moderi.

In 1613, near a castle in Dauphine, a tomb was found thirty feet long, twelve wide, and eight high, on which was cut the words "Keutolochus Rex." The skeleton was found entire, twenty-five and a half feet long, ten feet across the shoulders, and five feet deep from the breast bone to the back.

Near Mazarine, in Sicily, in 1516, was found the skeleton of a giant thirty feet high! His head was the size of a hogshead.

Near Palermo, in Sicily, 1548, was found the skeleton of a giant thirty feet long.

A LONG "TRADING VOYAGE."

The ship Coquimbo, Capt. Rogers, from Calcutta, arrived at Boston on the 5th of May, having on board two Chinamen, who were taken from a small boat, in an exhausted condition, on the 14th of January. Their language could not be understood, neither could they understand the English language; and of course the crew remained in ignorance of their adventures. Soon after reaching Boston, however, they were visited by a Chinaman employed in a tea-store in that city, and he learned that the two men were natives and residents of the city of Sunning, China, a part of the country at a great distance from his own home, and where the dialect of the inhabitants is quite different from his own. It was with considerable difficulty that he could understand them, but he ascertained that they left their homes in a boat loaded with rice, for the purpose of trading "along shore." The wind came up and blew a gale, driving them far from the main land, until they finally brought up on a desolate and almost barren island abreast of the Maldive Islands. Here they remained 21 days, being unable to get off, and wholly destitute of any substantial food. At the expiration of this time, the Coquimbo hove in sight, when Capt. Rogers espied them through his glass, on the island, and took them on board his vessel as above stated. When picked up, they were much exhausted and emaciated. One of the men is 34 and the other 28 years of age. Both are married, and have each two children. They left their families in rather straightened circumstances, and express much anxiety on their account, fearing that they will suffer for the want of food and other necessaries of life. They state that Capt. Rogers treated them very kindly, providing them with comfortable clothing, &c. They are very desirous of returning to their native country, and express their willingness to work while here, and also to work their passage to any port in any vessel bound to the region of their home.

A NEW FACT DISCLOSED.—We were not aware, until recently, that the books of newspaper publishers are consulted to quite a large extent, by people in business, to ascertain the pecuniary standing of persons. Debts for newspapers come due once a year; and persons who pay up regularly for their papers, are regarded as prompt men, and worthy of confidence. To ascertain whether a man is good, they find out what paper he takes, and contrive in some way to peep into the account. Men who are good are sure to pay for their newspapers; and if they do not pay for these, they think them not good. We were forcibly struck with the idea. A pretty shrewd observer of human nature said in a newspaper office lately, "Give me a printer's books, after all, to tell whether a man's good—they are a complete thermometer, sir; a credit thermometer; we always know a man to be bad if he don't pay the printer."

HEAVY VERDICT.—On the 11th of February, 1848, Ezra S. Corning, of Chicopee Falls, was injured by a collision on the Connecticut River Railroad, so that, though at first he did not seem badly injured, he afterward suffered intense pain, lost the use of his limbs, and it was doubtful whether he would ever recover. He sued the Company, and the case was tried at Springfield, and resulted in a verdict of $9,045 for the plaintiff.

NORWEGIAN WATER TELESCOPES.

An instrument which the people of Norway have found of so great utility, that there is scarcely a single fishing-boat without one, is the water telescope or tube, of three or four feet in length, which they carry in their boats with them when they go a fishing. When they reach the fishing-ground, they immerse one end of this telescope in the water, and look through the glass, which shows objects some ten or fifteen fathoms deep as distinctly as if they were within a few feet of the surface; by which means, when a shoal of fish comes into their bays, the Norwegians instantly prepare their nets, man their boats, and go out in pursuit. The first process is minutely to survey the ground with their glasses, and when they find the fish swarming about in great numbers, then they give the signal and surround the fish with their large draught nets, and often catch them in thousands at a haul. Without these telescopes their business would often prove precarious and unprofitable, as the fish, by these glasses, are as distinctly seen in the deep clear sea of Norway as gold fish in a crystal jar. This instrument is not only used by the fishermen, but it is also found aboard the naval and coasting vessels of Norway. When their anchors get into foul ground, or their cables warped on a roadstead, they immediately apply the glass, and, guided by it, take steps to put all to rights, which they could not do so well without the aid of the rude and simple instrument, which the meanest fisherman can make up with his own hands, without the aid of a craftsman. This instrument has been lately adopted by the Scotch fishermen on the Tay, and by its assistance they have been enabled to discover stones, holes, and uneven ground, over which their nets travel, and have found the telescope answer to admiration, the minutest object in 12 feet water being as clearly seen as on the surface.

MATRIMONIAL INCIDENT.—A Cincinnati paper tells of a funny incident, which recently occurred in that city:—A sturdy youth from the country, with his sweetheart, a blooming lass, presented themselves at the Clerk's Office, to procure the necessary passport to enter the state of double-blessedness. The girl being under 18, and not having evidence to prove that she had received the consent of her widowed mother, the license could not be granted. Thus all their lively hopes were crushed; their joyous expectations disappointed. They were nonplused, and stood in mute despair until their sorrow touched the feelings of all present. Even the impassive heart of a lawyer was moved, and his brains at once set at work to remove the obstacle. He proposed to the young lady to choose a guardian from among those present. With blushing diffidence she scanned the apartment, until her eyes fell upon a nice-looking young man, who was forthwith appointed to the responsible office. She then humbly implored his consent, which was graciously granted. The document was secured, and, after many thanks to the lawyer and kind-hearted guardian, they departed joyfully, soon to realize the raptures of long-cherished affection.

STRANGE, BUT TRUE!—Some months ago, says the Rutherford (Tenn.) Telegraph, a man named John Scott, professing to be deaf and dumb, met with a serious accident in this place. Since that time, he has been treated by some of our citizens as an object of sympathy. He was writhing under the severest pain, and both deaf and dumb, he could only express it by signs. By degrees he recovered, until, with the assistance of crutches, he could walk his room. About this time, he was taken with the typhoid fever, which reduced him so low that, for a time, his life was despaired of. Up to Sunday night, there was no change, until some time during the night, Mr. Covington, the gentleman at whose house he is staying, was awakened by a noise in the sick man's room. Fearing something had happened to him, he went up immediately, and (strange as it may seem) the deaf and dumb man was talking, and could hear! as perfectly as any one. Since he began to talk, he says he was about four years old when he lost the power of speech and hearing, and has remained so for twenty-four years!

ROGER BACON A PROPHET.—In the works of Roger Bacon, who wrote in the 13th century, may be found in anticipation the invention of a steamboat, locomotive engines on railroads, the diving bell, the suspension bridge, and, it might almost be said, of the recent events of St. Jean d'Acre. His own words are these:—

"Men may construct for the wants of navigation such machines that the greatest vessels, directed by a single man, shall cut through the rivers and seas with more rapidity than if they were propelled by rowers; chariots may be constructed, which, without horses, shall run with immeasurable speed. Men may conceive machines which could bear the diver, without danger, to the depth of the waters. Men could invent a multitude of other engines and useful instruments, such as bridges that shall span the broadest rivers without any intermediate support. Art has its thunders more terrible than those of heaven. A small quantity of matter produces a horrible explosion, accompanied by a bright light; and this may be repeated so as to destroy a city or entire battalions."

CIVIL ENGINEERS.—The New York State Institution of Civil Engineers, was organized in January last, at Albany. Its objects are, to promote friendly intercourse among the profession, to collect drawings, models, manuscripts, and publications, for common reference, to discuss practical questions, and publish its proceedings. The Trustees, in their first report, state that eighty millions of dollars are already invested in works in this State, designed for the transit of property alone; that this sum was hazarded on the plans of civil engineers; that probably another two hundred millions will be expended on similar works within the next 25 years, and that hence the necessity for an effort to elevate the standard of professional excellence. The officers of the Institution are Chas. B. Stuart, President; Edward W. Serrell, Alex. Campbell, C. W. Wentz, and C. B. Rabbitt, Vice-Presidents; F. A. Utter, Actuary.

An English paper contains thirteen reasons given by a young lady for declining a match—the first twelve being the suitor's twelve children, and the thirteenth the suitor himself.

SIGNIFICANCE OF POLITENESS.—Mr. Willis, in the Home Journal, gives the following as one phase of American politeness:—

In the national principle of GET ON—with or without means—but, any how, GET ON! the art of persuasion has been pressed into the service of business. It was long ago found out in Wall-street, that politeness would help to get a note discounted, sometimes procure a credit, frequently stave off a dun. Being used more by those who had such occasion for it, than by those who effected their ends with good endorsements and more substantial backing, politeness has gradually grown to be a sign of a man in want of money. A gentlemanly bow and cordial smile given to a man in Wall-street, will induce him to step round the corner and inquire of some friend as to your credit—taking your bow and smile to be the forerunner of a demand for a loan.

HOE'S PRINTING MACHINE.—A Paris paper, Moniteur Industriel, of March 29, gives a brief sketch of Mr. Hoe's printing machine, now in use in that city. It speaks of the limitation of speed which none of the old presses could transcend, with the form upon a plane, because the cylinder could not press the sheet with sufficient force with any greater velocity of operation. But Mr. Hoe has changed all this, by carrying the form upon the cylinder, and placing four, six, or eight rollers for paper, so that by each revolution of the cylinder carrying the form, four, six, or eight sheets will be printed. With four rollers, the Moniteur Industriel says, Mr. Hoe can easily make 8,000 impressions per hour, and with six rollers he can make 12,000! The exclamation is the Frenchman's.

BIRDS.—On the night of the fire in Eutaw, thousands upon thousands of birds of all kinds known to the country, circled in wild confusion over the burning mass. The elements over head were one living, moving body of life and animation. The circle in which they moved extended for more than half a mile in every direction. Many were seen to dart headlong into the flames, while others dropped dead all around. Birds that only make their appearance periodically were there—out of time—and those that were believed to burrow, during a large portion of the year, joined in what seems to be a general jubilee of the inhabitants of the air. ## VARIETY.

The amount of drugs, medicines and chemical preparations imported into the city of New York during one year prior to the passage of the late law requiring them to be inspected, was upward of one million and a half in estimated value, more than one-half of which were worthless, impure articles. Since the law has been in force, the inspector in New York has condemned 13,000 lbs. of rhubarb; 2,500 lbs. of opium, 72 lbs. jalop, 1,400 of gambooge, 1,400 lbs. senna, 1,700 lbs. gum myrrh, beside numerous other articles in large quantities.

Bramboch, one of the persons condemned to death at Vienna for the murder of Count Latour, is the son of a female still living at a great age, who disguised herself and served as a soldier under Napoleon, and received from the Emperor, as a reward for her valor, the cross of the Legion of Honor. This woman has had 12 sons, eleven of whom were slain in battle, while the twelfth is to die the death of a criminal.

The number of steamboats on the Upper Lakes, up to the year 1825, was one. On the opening of navigation in the spring of 1849, there were on the entire length of the Lakes 145 steamers, 5 barks, 93 brigs, 548 schooners, and 128 sloops, with an aggregate tonnage of 123,426, one-fifth of the whole tonnage of the United States. Some of the steamboats are of nearly 1,000 tons burden, and of the most splendid and costly construction.

The mode of making tea in China is similar to that in which coffee is made in Turkey. The tea is put into the cup, boiling water is poured over it, and instantly covered, to prevent the escape of the aroma, with a lid, which is used as a spoon to sip the tea. They never use sugar or milk with tea in China.

The expiring words of Lord Tenterden, the celebrated Judge, are said to have been, "Gentlemen of the jury, you will now consider your verdict." Those of Lord Hermand, a Scottish Judge, were equally professional, "Guilty, but recommended to the mercy of the Court."

Lord Byron describes a party with which he dined, as follows: "Like most parties of the kind, it was first silent, then talky, then argumentative, then disputatious, then unintelligible, then altogethery, then inarticulate, and then drunk."

A Madrid paper mentions that the Pope having gone on board a Spanish ship off Gaeta, tasted the bread, and (according to custom) pronounced it excellent, and that the crew hastened to divide among themselves, as a sacred relic, the piece of bread which the Pope had touched.

The cholera is raging among the negro population at St. Mary's, La. Few white people are attacked by it, and the fact is accounted for by the difference in their habits of superior cleanliness and care.

A woman named Annan, whose husband had been sent to the Illinois penitentiary, committed a small theft for the purpose of joining him, and with her child of nine or ten months old, was sent to the same prison.

Swarms of locusts, or grasshoppers, have appeared in Texas, literally covering the ground in some places, and devouring the wheat and corn. In other parts of the State, the corn and cotton have been injured by the cut-worm.

A subscriber to the Rochester (N. Y.) Daily Advertiser stopped his paper, the other day, because one of the proprietors was subpœnaed as a witness in a suit by an adverse party!

It is said that flowers placed in soap suds will retain their freshness much longer than if put into pure water.

There are seven Sunday papers published in New York, which have a combined circulation of not less than thirty thousand.

The criminals of Cincinnati are placed in chain gangs and keep the streets in repair.

There are eleven health insurance offices in Boston.

TERMS AND VACATIONS.

The Academic Year for 1848-9, is divided into Three Terms of Fourteen Weeks each.

First, commencing Wednesday, Aug. 23, ending Nov. 29.
Second, " " Dec. 13, " March 21.
Third, " April 4, " July 11.

COURSE OF STUDY.

The classic course gives full facilities to Students for an advanced standing in College. The Ornamental and Scientific Departments are such as to meet the advancing demands of this educating age. Each member of the school will be required to write compositions, and read or speak select pieces, at stated intervals.

EXPENSES.

| | |
|---|---|
| TUITION, according to studies, | $3, $4, or $5 0 |

To Clergymen and their People.

ALL CLERGYMEN who will send their address to Messrs. Comstock & Company, No. 21 Courtland-street—(after the 1st of May No. 57 John-street)—New York, shall be furnished gratuitously, for their family use, with a Salve of most extraordinary merit for external sores or inflammations of long or short standing. In burns, or pains and swellings of nearly all descriptions, its effects are charming, and almost beyond belief. This Salve has already been used by quite a number of the clergy, for themselves or sufferers to whom they have given it; and they have called on or written to the proprietors to express their delight at its action, and a desire to have their names used in making known its virtues. The proprietors having realized a handsome sum by its sale, feel called upon by a sense of duty to their fellow-men to disseminate the knowledge of the existence of such a thing far and near, and to give it without charge to the reverend clergy without limitation. It is called CONNEL'S PAIN EXTRACTOR, and is owned solely by Messrs. C. & Co. All religious papers that will publish this a few times will be furnished with the Salve free, and they may also thereby relieve many suffering poor brethren from agonizing pain, and save them much expense. The names of nearly fifty clergymen recommending it, are to be seen at the office of C. & Co.

You will please observe, it is no "sovereign remedy for all complaints," but only intended for external applications in the following:—Burns, Scalds, Frosted parts, Chilblains, Chafe or Galls, Chaps, Tetter, Pimple, Blotch, Felon, Ulcer Sprains, Erysipelas, Cuts, Bruises, Ear and Toothache, Mumps, Sore Throat, Whitlows, Piles, Ringworm, Salt Rheum, Barber's Itch, Carbuncle, Eruption, Sore Eyes and Lids, Weak Sight, Sore Lips, Punctures, Biles and Warts, Fever Pains, Tender Feet, Inflammatory Rheumatism, Tic Doloureux, Ague in Face and Breast, Fever Sores, Old Burn Scars, Prickly Heat, Inflamed Skin, Broken Breast, Sore Nipples, Rough Hands, Blistered Surfaces, Dressing for Blisters, White Swellings, Cold in Wounds, Sore Corns, General Sores, Smallpox Marks, &c.

Though we have named numerous affections, experience has taught us that they are not too many. It will be necessary to know that this article is the only one we can recommend; but must caution against some imitation by like name. We will present it to the poor who have actual need of it.

Mail Line from New York to Boston.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN NEW YORK AND BOSTON, via Stonington and Providence.—Inland Route, without ferry, change of cars, or baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and MASSACHUSETTS, Capt. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 5 o'clock, P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock, P. M., or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities.

The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday.

The MASSACHUSETTS will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

N. B.—Passengers, on the arrival of the steamers at Stonington, proceed immediately in the splendid Railroad cars to Providence and Boston. A baggage-master accompanies the steamboat trains to and from Boston, to take charge of the baggage.

THE SECOND COMING AND KINGDOM OF CHRIST.

"This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts 1: 11.

It would seem proper here to try to correct a very popular error, viz. that before the second coming of Christ, the sword is to be beaten into plow-shares, the nations learn war no more, the people be all righteous, all know the Lord from the least to the greatest, the saints of God see eye to eye, the wolf dwell with the lamb, the Jews be gathered into the fold of Christ, the knowledge of the Lord fill the earth as the waters cover the sea, &c.

Now, I would gladly admit a complete fulfillment of all such glorious promises, after the "new heavens and new earth, WHEREIN DWELLETH RIGHTEOUSNESS," are created. 2 Peter 3: 13. It seems, also, that "all flesh," or all people, will then regard the Sabbath of the Lord. See Isa. 66: 22, 23. It does not appear, from reading this whole chapter, (2 Peter 3,) that the Apostle could even admit this earth, in its present unchanged and decaying state, which is "kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men," as the place to look for complete righteousness.

Again, if all are to know the Lord, from the least to the greatest, before Christ comes the second time, how can he "take vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ?" 2 Thess. 7: 10. Dan. 7: 21, 22, says, "I beheld, and the same horn [papacy] made war with the saints, and prevailed against them, until the Ancient of Days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." Here we see that war would be made upon the saints till the coming of Christ.

But if any still doubt that "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived," till Christ comes, they are requested to examine the following scriptures: Jude, from verse 14 to 18, "Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them," &c. See also Matt. 13: 30, 40, 41, 49. The tares and the wheat will "both grow together until the harvest." Matt. 24 and Luke 17, also show, that instead of expecting a day of millennial glory before Christ comes, it is to be as it was in the days of Noah and Lot. See also 2 Tim. 3d chap. "This know, also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false-accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away." Though such formal Christians as those now seen in these last days, were foretold by the Apostle, yet his advice to the pious is to withdraw or turn away from them.

This point being fully established, then, by the word of God, that not in this old earth, in its present unchanged and corruptible state, are we to expect universal and complete righteousness; but that after Christ comes, "to convince the ungodly," and "to destroy those that destroy the earth," and to establish his everlasting kingdom in the new heavens and new earth, this is to be the place "wherein dwelleth righteousness"—we will look a moment at

The conversion of the Jews.—We know that "blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fullness of the gentiles be come in." But though they have been broken off for a while, from the good olive-tree, that the gentiles might be grafted in, yet, "God is able to graft them in again." And I ask permission here to show, (though it may be a new idea to some,) that the Jews will be converted after the second coming of Christ—that his appearance will effect their conversion, according to Zech. 12: 10, "And I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and supplication; and they shall look upon him whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his first-born. . . . . And the land shall mourn, every family apart," &c., showing their conversion while in a scattered condition. But at what time was this to be?—when will they look on him whom they have pierced? Let John answer this question, (Rev. 1: 7,) "Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail (or mourn) because of him; even so, amen." This agrees with Matt. 24: 30, "And then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory." These scriptures show that it is to be at the coming or after the coming of Christ in the clouds of heaven, that God will pour upon that people the spirit of grace and supplication, which will effect their conversion. Paul also confirms this, (Rom. 11: 26, 27,) "And so all Israel shall be saved; as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and he shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob; for this is my covenant with them, when I shall take away their sins." This covenant refers to the "new covenant"—the law of God, written in the heart, and in the mind, when all shall know the Lord, from the least to the greatest. Jer. 31: 31, Heb. 8: 8. So, then, we will not say, "My Lord delayeth his coming," till after those scriptures are fulfilled which may be fulfilled after his second coming. Truly, there are signs given which were to be fulfilled, and still are fulfilling. The thrones of kings are being "cast down." Dan. 7: 9—14. And it is said that the gospel is already being preached in all nations. It is written, (Matt. 24: 14,) "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."

The manner of Christ's coming is so plainly revealed, that but little need be said on this subject, although there seem to be different views. Some say that his second coming was spiritual, at the destruction of Jerusalem, because that generation was not to pass away till all was fulfilled. They do not appear to look to see whether the word "generation" means the Jewish nation, or whether it means the generation of Christ's disciples, as it is said, "A seed shall serve him, and it shall be accounted to the Lord for a generation." See Psalm 14: 6, and 22: 30, and 24: 6. "A chosen generation." (1 Peter 2: 9.) But his coming was to be personal and visible, as expressly shown by the text at the head of this article. Acts 1: 11. No one will pretend to say, that he "so come in like manner," personally and visibly, at the destruction of Jerusalem, or at any other time or place since, as he was seen to go into heaven by some witnesses at Calvary. Why then will the Universalists advocate this doctrine? Others say that his second coming is spiritual, to every person when he dies. But if he has promised to be with his disciples "always unto the end of the world," and would never leave nor forsake them, how could he be said to come "the second time" to such as he had never left? Would this be to "so come in like manner," and in a way that "every eye shall see him?" No; this can not be. Let us agree, then, with the two witnesses in white apparel, (Acts 1: 10,) that his coming in the "clouds of heaven" will be personal, and visible, and certain. Others believe, (as I have for many years past,) that Christ will not personally come till after one thousand years spiritual reign of peace and righteousness. But I find, by searching the scriptures, that he will come before, or at the commencement of the millennium; as it is said, (1 Thess. 4: 16—18,) "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them (the raised saints) in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore, comfort one another with these words." This is the first resurrection; the dead saints raised, the living saints "changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye;" these shall live and reign with Christ "on the earth," (Rev. 5: 10,) in its renewed state, for one "thousand years," (Rev. 20: 5, 6,) and afterwards "forever and ever," (Rev. 22: 5.)

THE INDISPENSABLE ELEMENT IN ANY GREAT HUMAN CHARACTER.—But, sir, political eminence and professional fame fade away and die with all things earthly. Nothing of character is really permanent, but virtue and personal worth. They remain. Whatever of excellence is wrought into the soul itself, belongs to both worlds. Real goodness does not attach itself merely to this life, it points to another world. Political or professional fame cannot last forever, but a conscience void of offense before God and man, is an inheritance for eternity. Religion, therefore, is a necessary, an indispensable element in any great human character. There is no living without it. Religion is the tie that connects man with his Creator, and holds him to his throne. If that tie be all sundered, all broken, he floats away, a worthless atom in the universe, its proper attractions all gone, its destiny thwarted, and its whole future nothing but darkness, desolation, and death. A man of no sense of religious duty is he whom the Scriptures describe—in such terse but terrific manner—as "living without God in the world." Such a man is out of his proper being, out of the circle of all his duties, out of the circle of all his happiness, and away, far, far away, from the purposes of his creation.

THE QUAKER OF THE OLDEN TIME.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

The Quaker of the olden time;
  How calm, and firm, and true;
Unspotted by its wrong and crime,
  He walked the dark road through;
The lust of power, the love of gain,
  The thousand lures of sin
Around him, had no power to stain
  The purity within.

With that deep insight, which selects
  All great things in the small
And knows how each man's life affects
  The spiritual life of all;
He walked by faith, and not by sight,
  By love, and not by law;
The presence of the wrong or right
  He rather felt than saw.

He felt that wrong with wrong partakes,
  That nothing stands alone,
That whoso gives the motive, makes
  His brother's sin his own;
And, pausing not for doubtful choice
  Of evils great or small,
He listened to that inward voice
  Which calls away from all.

The following letter, written by one who was on board, gives a very graphic description of events connected with the wreck of the steamer Empire. The experience of the writer was doubtless very similar to that of others; and from reading it, and considering how many there were in the same circumstances, one may form some idea of the scene.

AN EVENING ON THE EMPIRE.

After a week's separation from my family, I rejoined them on board the steamer Empire, May 17th, intending to accompany them on a visit to our friends in Madison Co., N. Y.

What joyous anticipations filled our hearts, as we sat in our little state-room, at the prospect, so long coveted, and so long postponed, of seeing kindred near and dear to us. The tedious duties of seven long years had not, until now, afforded the opportunity of accompanying my wife to the home of her parents.

Excessively fatigued, I retired early to rest, but not to sleep. More than an hour I had lain wakeful, and not altogether free from anxiety, when I heard the pilot's bell for stopping the engine, and immediately after for reversing. While musing upon the cause, our boat seemed to touch what I supposed to be a pier, in the manner and degree usual in making a landing; but instantly followed from below a confused uproar, loud outcries, the trampling of many feet. Mrs. S. sprang first from her berth, though her cry of alarm brought me, not one-twentieth of a second after. Placing myself against the door, I drew on part of my dress, the while resisting her almost frantic efforts to escape from our room. The boat careened heavily; the noise and confusion in the state-room saloon and elsewhere was rapidly increasing. Begging my wife to dress herself, I hastily opened our door and stepped outside, closing it after me, that she might not be unnecessarily alarmed by what appeared unnecessary alarm in others.

It was evident, from the headlong haste of my neighbors—from their shrieks and ejaculations to God for mercy—that something more than usual must have happened. "Oh! save yourself—we are rapidly sinking," cried one to me, who had been to see for himself, and was returning in furious haste, to save, perhaps, a wife and children, from impending death. Not two minutes had elapsed since the shock. I had not left the door of my room; and instantly throwing it open, with all the calmness I could muster, I told Mary the boat was filling, and urged her to dress as soon as possible. I recollected that we were on the third story, and thought there was time sufficient to devote one minute more to prepare for the cool night air. I could not induce her, however, to do more than put on her dress over the robe de chambre. Being now fully prepared myself, I wrapped our little Emma, ten months old, in my cloak, and allowing Mrs. S. to precede me with Marian, a child of five years, we left No. 13; and not one person did we see, while traversing the long extent to the forward doors of the saloon. Over head, however, the loud tramp of men, and the shrieks of women, prepared us for the worst. But, oh merciful Heaven, may I never experience such another moment, although it was but a moment, as that when, on opening the door, I saw the waters of the Hudson but three feet below the deck on which we stood! A deathly revulsion made itself felt at the heart, in view of the prospect before us of immediate yawning and inevitable destruction. Neither of us said a word, but turned to the hurricane deck as our last resort, and felt that in a moment longer we would be struggling in the water for our lives. By the aid of a friendly hand above, first Marian, then Mrs. S., then the child, were placed on that frail floor, and I sprang up after them. Wrapping my cloak around the half-clad group, I now, with some calmness, surveyed the prospect, and endeavored to inspire hope and confidence in my poor Mary, by telling her how well I could swim, and my hope of saving her thereby until we might be rescued by boats.

Off our starboard bow, about one hundred feet distant, lay the schooner—the innocent cause of all this trouble—her sails hanging on the booms, and the immense pile of lumber composing her load, covered with those who had rushed on board before the recoil of the first shock. In close proximity to her, but farther from us, lay the Rip Van Winkle, to our anxious eyes apparently at rest. But her officers needed not the heart-rending cries for life, from more than a hundred voices, to stimulate their exertions. Alas! when a moment might be the difference between life and death to at least half the number, who can wonder that that cry was heard for miles, borne along the quiet waters of the Hudson, and through the rocky gorges of the Highlands?

Nearly all of the passengers were at the stern, awaiting the expected rescue. I preferred to remain on the part nearest the schooner, and nearest the numerous boards I saw floating between. In this state of suspense, it soon became evident that the Empire, if sinking at all, was sinking very slowly. We thought, after ten minutes' consideration, that her keel rested on the river's bottom.

Feeling now safe, I determined to revisit my state-room, and recover the rest of the articles left in it. (Mrs. S. had dropped and lost most of the clothing for herself and children on her way out.) Promptly deciding, I jumped down to the promenade deck, and reëntered the saloon. I soon came to water. The floor, for about half its length sternwards, was covered; but without hesitation I dashed on. By the light of those beautiful lamps, still burning amid the watery desolation around, I readily found the place; but the water had deepened to about 18 inches. Hastily picking up every thing I could find or fish up, I placed them in a band-box that was floating high and almost dry, and returned as quickly as I came. Had I known then, what I learned from a fisherman of Newburgh, who took me to the wreck the next morning, that the river was more than a hundred feet deep in that very place, I think I should not have attempted it.

The "gang-plank" of the Rip Van Winkle was soon a safe and level bridge from our tremulous floor to her main deck, and we were in safety.

MOUNTAINS—THEIR USES AND SIGNIFICANCE.

From a Review of Johnston's Physical Atlas, in Blackwood's Magazine.

The whole surface of the globe gives striking evidence of design, and of design contemplating the service of man. But one of the most remarkable evidences of that design, is given in the Mountain Map of the globe. Variety of temperature, the supply of water, and the change of level, are essential to variety of production, to fertility of soil, and to the vigor and health of the human frame. The expedient to meet them all is provided in the mountain districts of the great continents. A mountain chain girdles the whole of the mass of land from the Atlantic to the Sea of Kamschatka. Minor chains, some parallel, some branching from the great northern chain, and some branches of those branches, intersect every region of the globe. The whole bears a remarkable resemblance to the position of the spine in the human frame, with its collateral, muscular, and venous connection with the body. An outline view of the mountains of our hemisphere would be strikingly like a sketch of the human anatomy. The general formation of the countries North and South of those chains is nearly the same—vast plains, extending to the sea, or traversed and closed in by a bordering chain. The great Tartarian desert is a plain extending, under various names, five thousand miles from West to East.

Spain is a country of mountains, or rather a vast table-land, intersected by six ranges of lofty, ragged, and barren hills. Northern Africa is a basin of plants, surrounded by vast ridges. Morocco, Algiers, and Tunis, find in those hills at once their frontiers and their fertility. The Pyrenees form a chain of nearly three hundred miles long, and upwards of fifty broad—a province of mountains, intersected by valleys of romantic beauty and exuberant fertility. But the Alps, from their position between the two most brilliant nations of the continent, France and Italy—and from the extraordinary series of memorable events of which they have been the theater, since the earliest periods of European history, are the most celebrated range of mountains in the world. The higher Alps, beginning at the Gulf of Genoa, and extending North and East through the Grisons and the Tyrol, stretch between four and five hundred miles. They then divide into two branches, one of which reaches even to the Euxine. The breadth of the great range is, on an average, a hundred and fifty miles.

The Appenines, another memorable chain, also beginning at the Gulf of Genoa, strike direct through the heart of Italy, and end in Calabria—a line of eight hundred miles. Dalmatia and Albania are knots of hills; Pindus, and the mountains of northern Greece, are bold offsets from the eastern Alps.

Among those wonderful arrangements, the table-lands are perhaps the most wonderful. In the midst of countries where every thing seemed to tend to the mountainous form, we find vast plains raised almost to a mountainous height, yet retaining their level. This form peculiarly occurs in latitudes of high temperature. The center of Spain is a table-land of more than ninety-two thousand square miles—one-half of the area of Spain.

The country between the two ranges of the Atlas is a table-land, exhibiting the richest products, and possessing the finest climate, of northern Africa. Equatorial Africa is one immense table-land, of which, however, we can only conjecture the advantages. Whether from the difficulty of approach, the distance, or the diversion of the current of adventure to other quarters of the world, this chief portion of the African continent continues almost unknown to Europeans. The central region is a blank in our maps, but occasional details reach us of the plenty, the pomp, and even of the civilization and industry of the table-land. The center of India is a table-land, possessing, in that region of fire and fever, a bracing air, and a productive, though rugged soil.

The table-lands of Asia partake of the characteristic magnitude which belongs to that mighty quarter of the globe. That of Persia has an area of more than a million and a half of square miles. That of the Tibet has an area of six times the extent, with a still greater elevation above the level of the sea—its general altitude being about the height of Mount Blanc, and, in some instances, two thousand feet higher. The mean altitude of the Persian plateau is not above four thousand feet.

We have adverted to those formations of vast elevated plains in the midst of countries necessarily exposed to extreme heat, as one of the remarkable instances of providential contrivance, if we must use that familiar word in such mighty instances of design, for the comfort of animated being. We thus find, in the latitudes exposed to the fiercest heat of the sun, a provision for a temperature consistent with the health, activity, and industry of man. Persia, which, if on the level of the sea, would be a furnace, is thus reduced to comparative coolness; Tibet, which would be a boundless plain of fiery sand, exhibits that sternness of climate which makes the northern Asiatic bold, healthy, and hardy.

If the Tartar ranger over those lofty plains is not a model of European virtue, he at least has not sunk to the Asiatic slave; he is bold, active, and has been, and may be again, an universal conqueror. The same qualities have always distinguished the man of the table-land, wherever he has found a leader. The soldiery of Mysore no sooner appeared in the field, than they swept all Hindostan before them; the Persians, scarcely two centuries since, ravished the sovereignty of the Mogul; the tribes of the Atlas, even in our own day, made a more daring defense of their country, than all the disciplined forces of the continent against Napoleon.

The two most remarkable ranges of Asia are, the Caucasus, extending seven hundred miles from West to East, with branches shooting North and South; and the Himalaya, a mountain chain of nearly three thousand miles in length, uniting with the Hindoo Coosh and the mountains of Assam. This range is probably the loftiest on the globe, averaging eighteen thousand feet—several of the summits rising above twenty-five thousand. Many of the passes are above the summit of Mount Blanc, and the whole constitutes a scene of indescribable grandeur, a throne of the solitary majesty of nature.

But another essential use of the mountain chains is their supply of water—the fluid most necessary to the existence of the animal and vegetable world—and this is done by an expedient the most simple, but the most admirable. If the surcharge of the clouds, dashing against the mountain pinnacles, were to be poured down at once, it must descend with the rapidity of a torrent, and deluge the plains. But those surcharges first take a form by which their deposit is gradual and safe, and then assume a second form, by which their transmission to the plains is gradual and unintermitting. They descend on the summits in snow, and are retained on the sides in ice. The snow feeds the glacier; the glacier feeds the river. It is calculated that, without reckoning the glaciers of the Grisons, there are fifteen hundred square miles of glacier in the Alps alone, from a hundred to six hundred feet deep. The glacier is constantly melting, from the mere temperature of the earth; but, as if this process were too slow for its use, it is constantly moving downwards, at a certain number of feet a year, and thus bringing the great body of ice more within the limit of liquefaction. All the chief rivers of Europe and Asia have their rise in the deposits of the mountain glaciers.

In addition to all these important uses, the mountains assist in forming the character of man. The mountaineer is generally free from the vices of the plain. He is hardy and adventurous, yet attached to home; bold, and yet simple; independent, and yet unambitious of the wealth or the distinctions of mankind. Whether shepherd or hunter, he generally dies as he lived; and, though daring in defense of his hills, he has seldom strayed beyond them for the disturbance of mankind. The Swiss may form an exception; but their hireling warfare is not ambition, but trade. Their nation is pacific, while the individuals let themselves out to kill or be killed. The trade is infamous and irreligious, offensive to human feeling, and contrary to human duty; but it has no more reference to the habits of the mountaineer, than the emigration to California has to the habits of the clown of Massachusetts; the stimulant only is the same—the love of gold.

We have adverted to the mountain system of the globe, from its giving a remarkable illustration of the divine expediency. We judge of power by the magnitude of its effects, and of wisdom by the simplicity of its means. In this instance the whole of the results seem to arise from the single and simple act of raising portions of the earth's surface above the general level. Yet from this one act, what a multitude of the most important conditions follow!—variety of climate, variety of production, the temperature of Europe introduced into the tropics, health to man and the inferior animals, the irrigation of the globe, the defense of nations, and the actual enlargement of the habitable spaces of the globe, by the elevated surface of the hills—not to mention the beauty and sublimity of the landscape, which depend wholly on the colors, the forms, and the diversity of mountains.

MOTIVES TO LABOR.—"I have thought lately," says an accomplished authoress, "how exceedingly in advance of all others is the position of the Christian, inasmuch as he always has motives to work—great motives under all circumstances, and through all times, in some way or other. He is under obligations from which he can never be released, to do with his might whatsoever his hand findeth to do, and to work while the day lasts for his heavenly Master. It is a [illegible] thought—and then, that there is a rest which remaineth for the people of God."

EDUCATION—No. 2.

Are we, as a denomination, doing any thing proportional to the demands of the age, for the interests of Education? To answer this question intelligently, we must take a glance at things as they really exist in the denomination.

1. We have undertaken to sustain a Home Mission. This requires a number of laborers to be devoted in part or entirely to the missionary service. We have planted a mission in China, and have four laborers in that field. Indications of Providence seem to invite us to occupy other fields as missionary ground. Those already occupied are asking for more laborers. Many churches, professing the same faith with us, are springing up in the West, and many of the older churches, in consequence of an increase of numbers, are feeling the necessity of having other churches set off from them, that their influence may be more widely extended. These new churches want spiritual guides to aid in building up the Redeemer's kingdom. The pulpits occupied by our beloved brethren in the ministry, are from time to time being vacated, as the servants of God are gathered to their fathers. These vacated places must be filled. We have also a press, which, though sustained thus far mainly by individual enterprise, must very soon become denominational. The first steps toward accomplishing this object have been taken. As its sphere of action widens, it will require the constant services of a number of thoroughly-educated men. For it is to be remembered, that besides the preparation and printing of tracts, we owe it to ourselves and to posterity, to furnish immensely more in the form of a denominational literature than we now have. It is believed, that no people have ever taken a prominent position among the religious sects that divide the church, till they have provided themselves with a literature imbued with their peculiar views; and we need not hope to be an exception. He who does not appreciate this point, would do well to examine the text-books of the Colleges and Academies in our country, to say nothing of the books of the primary institutions. Take up any work on Moral Science, and read the chapter or section on the subject of the Sabbath; and can it be supposed, that while the whole literature of the land is directed against us, we, with nothing except a few fugitive tracts to meet it, can stand a fair chance with other denominations? We have miscalculated the influence brought to bear against us, in the text-books prepared for the young, if we do not have to contend against fearful odds. This must be met by a denominational literature of our own, or we shall be crushed by that of others. If this conclusion be mere fancy, we have much misjudged.

2. For sustaining some of the objects of enlightened Christian enterprise, above specified, we have been engaged, with no little zeal, in raising funds; and some of us have felt, occasionally, much solicitude, lest we should fail in raising a sufficiency. But have we not almost forgotten, while intent on raising funds, that men are quite as necessary as funds? It may well be asked, with much anxiety, where are the men, thoroughly trained, "armed with the whole panoply of Heaven," who have "studied to show themselves approved unto God, workmen that need not be ashamed," who are now ready to respond to the calls to enter into the harvest of the Lord? What provisions have we made to meet the constantly-increasing demand for laborers? What inducements do we present to the pious youth among us, to qualify themselves to meet the demands of the church—the wants of the moral world? Where are our Academies, our College, our Theological Seminary—our schools of the prophets? Verily, it seems as if we had neglected to dig deep, and lay broad the foundations upon which to erect a superstructure, that the shocks of time shall not demolish. If the denominational peculiarities which we are pledged to maintain, are worth sustaining at all, they are worthy of our best efforts towards placing them in a position that shall give them commanding influence in the world. We need hope for no miracle to be wrought in our favor. We are to prove our faith, and our love of truth, by our works—works well laid out, well arranged, well executed. But how can we work without qualified men? And how can we expect to have qualified men, such as the exigencies of the times call for, without the means of educating them? And how can we have the means of educating them, without institutions of the first grade, where a literary and scientific, as well as a theological and biblical education, can be secured? True, we have a number of Academies, that have attained no little respectability in the communities in which they are located; and prospects are very flattering that others will soon take a high stand among the academical institutions in our country. These are got up and sustained by individual enterprise, and are no doubt eminently useful in their sphere. They are doing a good work, in laying the foundation for a permanent love of literature and science among our industrious and enterprising youth. But be their respectability and usefulness what they may—and we are disposed to think very favorably of them, and bless God for their existence—yet they can not supply the want of a College and Theological Seminary. An institution, to meet the demands of the higher departments of a literary and scientific education, no less than a theological and biblical, must have a well-qualified corps of professors to fill the various chairs of instruction. It must be endowed with sufficient funds to place the professorships, and the interests of the institution, above the ordinary mutations of fortune. That we need such an institution, to educate young men for the ministry, and other responsible places of usefulness, we think no one will question, who has attentively observed the embarrassments under which we have been laboring for the past few years. True, some will get elsewhere, as others have done hitherto, that education which they would gladly get among their own brethren. Yet the insufficiency of inducements held out to our pious youth elsewhere, for calling out the educational talent of the young, are but too clearly manifest.

But we will not protract this train of thought at this time. We feel an irresistible conviction, that we owe it to the youth of our charge, to the sacred cause of truth that distinguishes us from others, to the imperious wants of our denomination, and to the progressive spirit of the age, to provide, as speedily as practicable, a collegiate and theological institution, that shall fully represent and sustain our views; that we are directing our efforts to comparatively little purpose, while destitute of this means of enlarging and perpetuating our schemes of benevolence; and that our embarrassments will continually increase, so long as we shall see fit to continue in such destitution. AN OBSERVER.

THE SABBATH AMONG MISSIONARIES.

The following Circular of Rev. J. W. Morton, a Missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church to the Island of Hayti, shows that the truth respecting the Sabbath is gradually working its way among Missionaries of the Cross as well as private Christians. Every example of the kind is calculated to magnify the Divine Law, and encourage the hearts of those who are laboring to illustrate and enforce its claims. God grant that such examples may be multiplied, until they shall become so common as not to occasion surprise.

Mr. Morton went out to Hayti as a missionary about two years ago, and since that time has preached the gospel there and succeeded in gathering a very interesting school. Some four weeks since he returned to this country, for the purpose of meeting the Synod under whose patronage he has labored. That body commenced its session in Philadelphia last week, and has not yet adjourned. In our next we shall give some account of its proceedings, particularly in relation to this case.

Circular.

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Jan. 18th, 1849.

MY DEAR BROTHER,—The mutual relation existing between us, as members of the same Synod, the glory of our common Lord, the interests of our Mission, and a sacred regard for personal character, all require, that the following statement be transmitted to you and my other co-presbyters, with as little delay as possible. If I am not actuated herein by a desire to promote God's glory and the salvation of men, may the Lord rebuke and forgive me, and "let the righteous smite me, it shall be a kindness!" May the Head of the Church grant to you, and to all the other members of Synod, a disposition to hear, with patience and candor, a narration of my recent experience, in which perhaps you may find things both "new and old."

My sentiments, in relation to the "Sabbath of the Lord our God," have undergone an important change; to which I now wish to call your attention. Our Confession of Faith, Catechisms, and Testimony, all teach that the first day of the week is, and has been ever since the resurrection of Christ, the Christian Sabbath. This doctrine alone, of all those contained in our Standards, though I did believe it till lately, I can no longer receive. As to the manner of sanctifying the Sabbath, I believe all that you and I have always contended for; but, for the present, I am constrained to believe, that the seventh day of the week is the only weekly Sabbath that God has ever appointed.

My attention was first called to this subject by Rev. W. M. Jones, Missionary of the Baptist Church, who has recently abandoned his earlier views and practice in regard to the Sabbath. He not only argued the question with me at length, but gave me some publications of the American Sabbath Tract Society, which, as they seemed to breathe a spirit of ardent piety and zeal for God's law, I read with attention. Both in my discussion with him, and in the reading of those tracts, I struggled with all my might to convince myself, from the Scriptures, of the divine appointment of the first-day, or Christian Sabbath. But though I did not then doubt it, I was astonished to find how hard it is to prove it.

I searched all the books I could find, bearing on this question, and discovered, what I had never noticed before, that the early French and Genevan Reformers, with Calvin at their head, had taught the abrogation of the fourth commandment, as a ceremonial institution; and that they contended for a Sabbath, or stated day of worship, under the gospel, only as a wise and necessary human arrangement. I found that even Turretin, at a later period, had taught that the fourth commandment is partly ceremonial, and that it was necessary to change the Sabbath from the seventh day, in order to put a difference between Jews and Christians. I found also in my books quotations, containing similar sentiments, from the celebrated Augsburg Confession. The only authors I could find who had attempted to prove, from the Scriptures, that the Sabbath has been changed from the seventh to the first day of the week, by divine authority, were, Turretin, and the framers of our Standards. These authors appeared to depend mainly for proof upon three texts of Scripture:—Acts 20: 7; 1 Cor. 16: 1, 2; and Rev. 1: 10. When I came to examine these texts, I was surprised and mortified, to find that they contain neither the word "Sabbath," nor any other synonymous with it. True, I had always thought that the "Lord's day," Rev. 1: 10, was the first day of the week; but my opponents contended that the terms refer more properly to the seventh, which God styles "my holy day," Is. 58: 13; and when I remembered "his challenging a special propriety in the seventh," I could not well deny it. Moreover, I could not find a single passage asserting that the first is holier than any other day of the week, or that Christians were, in the Apostles' days, in the habit of holding religious meetings regularly on that day. Neither could I discover that Christ or his Apostles had ever spoken, directly or indirectly, of keeping a day holy in honor of his resurrection; nor that that event, which is always held up as the occasion of the change of the Sabbath, is even once mentioned in connection with the first day, unless where it is recorded as a historical fact. On the other hand, I observed that Christ and his Apostles were accustomed to enter into the synagogues on the seventh day, or Sabbath, for public worship. Luke 4: 16; Acts 17: 2, and elsewhere.

Thus, my dear brother, I saw at this critical moment all Scripture evidence forsaking me, while every inch of ground on which I could set my foot was trembling. It seemed as if the thunders of Sinai were uttering anew their awful threatenings, while the "still small voice" of "Him that dwelt in the bush" was whispering in my ears:—"The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." Ex. 20: 10. "I am Jehovah, I change not." Mal. 3: 6. "Verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." Matt. 5: 18. Still I hesitated. For a moment I thought of "going down to Egypt for help." The Fathers, thought I, have fixed the interpretation of these texts in favor of the observance of the first day But immediately I heard a voice within me, saying, "Would you then observe a holy-day, whose appointment cannot be proved from the Bible, without the aid of human tradition? Could you admit the 'testimony of the Fathers,' to set aside one of the plainest injunctions of the moral law, that law that was written upon tables of stone, 'by the finger of God,' and styled by way of preëminence, 'the Testimony?'" No! I replied, with an involuntary shudder; and another flood of Scriptures came rushing in, like "deep waters," to the very soul. "The law of the Lord is perfect." Ps. 19: 7. "Forever, O Lord, thy word is settled in heaven." Ps. 119: 89. "Thy righteousness is an everlasting righteousness, and thy law is the truth." Ps. 119: 142. "All his commandments are sure; they stand fast forever and ever, and are done in truth and uprightness." Ps. 111: 7, 8. "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill." Matt. 5: 17. "Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid; yea, we establish the law." Rom. 3: 31. O, my brother, "the word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword."

You have now my reasons for embracing a doctrine which is confessedly at variance with our Standards. What I entreat of you is, that you will once more examine this subject for yourself, and see whether those Standards are consistent, on this point, either with the Scriptures, or with themselves.

You perhaps think that I have forsaken the "footsteps of the flock," and that testimony which has been sealed with the blood of martyrs. But tell me candidly, was there ever a martyr who died in defense of the first-day Sabbath? Or could you, my brother, collect from the Scriptures evidence of its divine appointment, clear enough to solace your soul in the midst of the flames? From my inmost soul I pity that Covenanter who may be called to testify, at the stake, to the change of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week. Remember, too, that I am now in the path that was trodden by the saints for more than four thousand years; and it is for you to show that that path was ever stopped up, unless by the presumption and inexcusable neglect of man. Truly, I am "compassed about by a great cloud of witnesses." I would follow the example of Jehovah himself, who "blessed the seventh day and sanctified it," and by whom "the Sabbath was made for man;" the example of Adam, Enoch, and Noah; of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and the twelve patriarchs; of Moses, Aaron, and those millions of Pilgrim Covenanters who united in its observance in the wilderness; the example of Samuel, David, and a host of other prophets; of Jesus Christ, our Divine Mediator, and "Lord of the Sabbath;" and of the Apostles of our Lord, together with the churches established and watered by them;—in one word, the example of all the saints, from Adam to the last Apostle; all of whom kept and honored the seventh day as "the Sabbath of the Lord their God," and, having finished their course with joy, are entered into that heavenly rest, of which the Sabbath was, and still is, an emblem.

I intend, if the Lord will, to be present at the next meeting of our Synod, and meet my brethren face to face. I expect, of course, nothing less than to be excluded from the privileges of the church, but I rejoice that I have learned to respect the discipline of the Lord's house. I desire, therefore, with a willing heart to approach the altar, and, if the Head of the Church require it, to be "offered upon the sacrifice and service of our faith," that God may be glorified in my salvation, and not in my destruction. God forbid, that either prejudice, willful ignorance, passion, or personal resentment, should fan the flames of that altar!

In conclusion, rest assured of my continued and unabated attachment to the cause of the Reformation, in general, and to the interests of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, in particular; and allow me to repeat what I have already intimated, that with every other doctrine contained in our Standards I am, so far as I understand my profession, entirely satisfied; nor have I abandoned this one, but from a firm conviction that it is not taught in God's word. I know well, that trials sore and many await me. God doth know, that my heart delighteth not in contention; but, my brother, have we not all "entered into a curse, and into an oath, to walk in God's law, which was given by Moses, the servant of God, and to observe and do 'all the commandments of the Lord our God?'" Neh. 10: 29.

Your brother in Gospel bonds,
J. W. MORTON,
Missionary of the Ref. Pres. Church

THE EASTERN ASSOCIATION.

The Eastern Seventh-day Baptist Association held its 13th Annual Meeting with the Church at Pawcatuck, R. I., commencing on fifth-day, May 24, and continuing till the evening of first-day, May 27.

Eld. Lucius Crandall preached the Introductory Discourse, from Luke 14: 28—"For which of you, intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it?"

After the discourse, the officers of last year took their places, the Rules of Order and the letters from the churches were read, and a committee to nominate officers was appointed. This Committee made their report in due time, and the officers for the session were appointed—DAVID DUNN, Moderator; C. M. Lewis and I. D. Titsworth, Recording Secretaries.

At an early stage of the meeting, Eld. H. Hawes, of Augusta, Me., presented his credentials as a delegate from the Baptist Free Mission Society. He was cordially received as a corresponding member, and participated in the deliberations of the session throughout.

The Report on the State of Religion, as prepared from the letters of the churches, exhibits a state of things by no means encouraging. A deep interest, it is true, seems to be felt in the benevolent and reformatory movements of the age; but there have been but few revivals, and only small accessions. In view of this, the report urges upon ministers and people the importance of seriously and prayerfully examining themselves, to discover the cause of declension.

A series of resolutions was presented by the Business Committee, and discussed at considerable length, and with deep interest, by the members of the Association. Among these resolutions was one instructing the Executive Committee to employ one or more missionaries to preach and distribute tracts in Rhode Island; another against Sunday Laws; a third urging the churches to maintain the Monthly Concert of Prayer for Missions, and to make monthly collections for the Missionary Association; a fourth upon the subject of family prayer; a fifth in relation to the proper manner of observing the Sabbath; a sixth in favor of appointing a committee to correspond with committees from the other Associations in relation to a school for the thorough education of young men looking forward to the ministry.

A Missionary Discourse was preached on Sabbath morning, after which a collection was taken for the benefit of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association, amounting to $101 30. On first-day, after a discourse by Eld. Hawes, the delegate from the Baptist Free Mission Society, a collection was taken for the purpose of aiding the church of which he is pastor to pay for its place of worship. A collection was taken for the Sabbath Tract Society on first-day evening.

—The above is only a brief and very imperfect sketch of the doings of the Association; but it is all we have time to prepare, or room to print, this week. We will endeavor to give the principal Reports and Resolutions next week.

THE AMERICAN SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION.—This Society celebrated its 25th Anniversary at Philadelphia last week. The receipts acknowledged for the past year, amount to $164,024 47, of which $31,189 10 was in donations and legacies, $128,093 70 for sales, $4,541 67 for rents, and $200 for loans. The Society is now indebted, for paper, binding, &c., $22,265 10, which, added to the amount of loans bearing interest, $44,160 29, exhibits a total indebtedness of $66,425 39. The Sunday-School Missionary Colporteurs have established 700 new schools, and have visited and revived 2,098 other schools, altogether embracing 25,181 teachers and 157,000 scholars. They have distributed, by sale and donation, nearly $23,000 worth of religious books for children and youth. Their salaries and expenses were $12,710 60. 88 new publications have been issued during the last year, and the new reading matter put in circulation amounts to nearly 400,000 volumes, 18mo, of 200 pages each. Of the whole number of publications of 72 pages issued the past year, two-thirds were written for the Society. The total value of publications distributed during the year was $130,543 89, a larger amount than has ever been circulated by the Society in any one year since its organization.

THE LIBERIA EMIGRANTS.—The bark Huma sailed from Savannah, Ga., on the 15th of May, with one hundred and eighty-four colored emigrants. The following account of them is given by the Secretary of the New York Colonization Society. What a piece of slander to say that such men cannot take care of themselves, and are not fit to stay in this country!

"Sixty-one of the emigrants are professors of religion; five of them are preachers; one hundred and five can read; thirty can write; twenty-four have purchased themselves, and paid an aggregate of $15,750, money made by their own industry; and forty-seven have been manumitted. The company is composed mostly of parents and children, and many of the families are large. There are sixty-six under ten years of age, and nineteen over fifty."

THE SIXTH VOLUME.—In answer to numerous inquiries upon the subject, we are now able to announce, that the Sixth Volume of the Sabbath Recorder, (which commences on the 21st day of June,) will be published by the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society. The paper will be greatly improved, and rendered in every respect more desirable than at present. Next week we shall be able to give an outline of the plan of operations. Meanwhile we hope the friends of the establishment will be looking about for new subscribers, so that the sixth volume may be commenced with a greatly increased list.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH AND SLAVERY.

The two General Assemblies of the Presbyterian Church were in session last week—the Old School at Pittsburg, and the New School at Philadelphia. The subject of slavery is giving them a good deal of trouble, as will be seen by the following extract from the records of one day's doings in each:—

On the second day of the Old School Assembly, a letter was read from the Delegate to the Maine General Conference, and accepted and ordered printed. A discussion had arisen on the question of continuing the correspondence of the Conference with ecclesiastical bodies holding Slavery as consistent with Christianity. The Delegate denied the charge that the General Assembly attempted to justify Slavery by the Bible. A large majority of the Maine Conference, however, desired to discontinue all correspondence with the General Assembly, under the belief that it was pro-slavery. A memorial on the subject of Slavery was submitted from the Presbytery of Coshocton, signed by about forty ladies and gentlemen. Another paper was submitted also numerously signed. Also, memorials from Michigan, Cincinnati, and Chillicothe—the latter on the subject of Slavery.

On the third day of the New School Assembly, a number of papers came up on the subject of Slavery and the Church. The Presbytery of Palestine threatened to separate from the Church unless something is done to relieve it from the odium of Slavery. The papers on this topic were referred to a Select Committee of seven. Some discussion, however, ensued. Rev. Mr. Leach, of Va., urged the indulgence of patience toward the Southern Church, in the hope that it would get rid of its own evils, and opposed the proposition to sunder the Church for anti-slavery reasons. But if this virulent spirit was manifested continually, he was of the opinion that the Southern Presbyteries would not always trouble the General Assembly with their presence. If the behest went forth that the Southern Presbyteries should break off all connection with Slavery, and they were to attempt to obey, (Mr. L. considered,) they would be acting in opposition to the laws of the land, and in many points the professors of religion would be obliged to flee the State. Pending this question, the plan for the division of the Church, proposed by some of the anti-slavery Presbyteries, was shown to be the constituting of two non-slaveholding assemblies and one slaveholding, out of the present Church.

HELP FOR IMMIGRANTS.—The Boston Olive Branch says that Thomas Mooney, Esq., the Irish historian, and a large number of influential native citizens, are taking such measures as may be in their power to aid the foreign immigrant, as he arrives at our Atlantic cities. Their plan is to raise funds sufficient to buy in Wisconsin, or some of our Western States or territories, small farms of some fifty acres each, on which to put a small house. On the arrival of immigrants who wish to go into the country, and who are too poor to help themselves, means are to be afforded to the immigrant family to move to one of these small farms, for which, by industry, it is expected the immigrant can easily make payment in five to ten years; thus restoring to the association the money they had expended, while it puts the otherwise helpless stranger and his family in the way of becoming good citizens, instead of locating themselves in cities, exposed to all manner of temptations, and making a miserable and precarious living from hand to mouth.

THE AMERICAN BAPTIST MISSIONARY UNION.—This Society held its Anniversary in Philadelphia last week. From the Report presented on that occasion, it appears that the receipts during the year ending March 31, 1849, were $105,256 29, and the expenditures $101,121 62—leaving a balance in favor of the Treasury of $4,404 47, with which liabilities existing at the beginning of the year have been reduced to $24,891 06. Of the receipts $7,500 were grants from the American and Foreign Bible Society, for Bible translation, printing, and distribution in Asia and Europe; $2,000 from the American Tract Society, for Tracts in Europe and Asia; and $4,000 from the U. S. Government, for civilization of the Indians of North America. Additions to the above, $5,000 have been received as a thank offering from two individuals, and constituting a special fund to be applied to promoting the preaching of the gospel among the Karens.

THE ST. LOUIS FIRE.—Later accounts from St. Louis show that this fire was more disastrous than at first represented. It is now said that about twenty lives were lost. The value of property destroyed will not fall short of six millions of dollars—an immense sum for that place.

A dispatch from St. Louis says that the dreadful effects of the conflagration are now beginning to be fully realized. Hundreds are reduced from opulence to beggary. Those of our citizens whose dwellings escaped the ravages of the flames, have provided with a liberal hand for their suffering neighbors; but still many are unable to find comfortable shelter for their families. The suffering among the poorer classes is heart-rending. Families are divided and scattered all over the city.

When the fire was discovered on board the White Cloud, it spread with such rapidity that it was impossible to check it, and the Edward Bates, lying alongside, was soon in flames. The moorings of both boats were immediately cut, and an attempt made to get them into the river, but the heat was so intense that it was found impossible to manage them, and they swung round among the other boats, setting them on fire. The boats were all so jammed together that they could not be got out in time to save them from the flames. The fire communicated to the piles of merchandise along the levee, and from these to the stores and warehouses fronting on the levee. Every possible human effort was made to stay the flames. Houses were blown up and torn down, and after hours of unceasing toil the fire was confined to its boundaries.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

By the arrival of the steamer Caledonia, we have news from Europe of one week's later date.

From Paris the report is still repeated that the rupture between the President and M. Napoleon Bonaparte is complete. A fierce quarrel, it is said, rages between them. Their quarrels increase the dangers which surround the bodies of the army. A serious riot has taken place in the barracks of the 7th Light Infantry stationed at the Hotel des Invalides. The regiment has been sent away from Paris. The same insubordination prevailed in many regiments; but the check which the French troops have met with in the Papal States has moved all France to the center, and touches the people upon their tenderest point—the glory of France in Italy.

In Italy, the advance of the French expedition toward Rome has been checked by the resistance of the Republicans of the Roman States. In two encounters the French were driven back with great loss, and Capt. Oudinot, a relative of the General was taken prisoner. Gen. Oudinot, unprepared for such a reception, has withdrawn his troops four leagues from the city, and there waits for reïnforcements and farther instructions from his Government. The French had 180 killed and 400 wounded. Gen. Oudinot had set out on his march for Rome, but met with more serious resistance than he expected. On the 26th ult. the Roman Constituent Assembly pronounced the following decrees: The Assembly, in consequence of the communications made by the Committee, commit to the Triumvirate, the office of saving the Republic and repelling force by force during the sittings. On the 27th, the Constituent Assembly resolved to adhere to their resolution of opposing the entrance of the French into Rome, and continue the preparations for defense. Orders have been issued to undermine the Melvien Bridge and the approaches on the side of the seaboard. Barricades with cannon are erected on the road, and the gates and streets that lead to Civita Vecchia. The long covered gallery erected by Pope Borgia, between the Castle of St. Angelo and the Vatican Palace, has been blown up with powder, and the materials used to block up the avenues to the city. A letter from an eye-witness gives the following account of the attack on the city: A company of the 1st battalion of Tiralleurs sent on to the gates of Rome, being received with musket shot, returned in good order; and soon after, part of the division advanced, and penetrated without difficulty into the encomte of the Capital, of which the streets were barricaded; but they were received by a well fed fire of musketry and a storm of missiles from the windows and roofs of the houses. The correspondent of the Daily News writing from Rome on the 3d inst., stated that the French did not enter Rome at all, and all the fighting took place outside the walls. The gates of San Pancrazio, Pertez, and Cabaltegri were the points of attack. A sortie was made by Garibaldi as the French advanced and the latter are said by the correspondent to have lost 600 killed on the spot. There were 452 Frenchmen taken prisoners, many of whom, when crossing the streets, were heard to declare that they had been tricked in the expedition by promises of being led against the Austrians.

The quarrel between the Parliaments throughout all the various divisions of Germany, and their respective princes has reached the highest pitch, and in Saxony a frightful conflict has already taken place. At Dresden, the people, or rather the Republican party, fought with the troops during seven hours, on the 5th ult., and a great loss of life occurred. The railways were displaced, in order to prevent troops from Berlin arriving; but a sufficient force of Prussians having come up opportunely, a momentary tranquility was secured by sheer military force. On the 7th the battle was again renewed, at 4 o'clock in the morning, and the most deadly warfare was going on in the streets, by the latest advices, up to 6 o'clock of that day. Intelligence from Dresden to the 8th states that hostilities still raged between the Royalists and the Insurgents, to the disadvantage of the latter, without any immediate prospect of their termination. The members of the Provincial Government had been outlawed and rewards offered for their apprehension. At Leipsic, also, disturbances had broken out, but after a short struggle between the military and the populace they were suppressed. Accounts from Berlin of the 8th state that an insurrection had broken out at Breslau on the 6th. On the 7th the troops and the people were fighting in the city. It was also rumored that an insurrection had broken out at Coblentz. The Danish war still continues, but it is conducted on both sides in a feeble and languishing manner. On the 7th inst. an engagement took place, in which the Danes were defeated. The loss on either side is not stated.

The Austrian Empire is in actual danger of dissolution, by the continued successes of the Hungarians. They are in possession of Gran and Raab. Ryraraw is in their possession. In the meantime Russia is advancing a large body of troops against the victorious Hungarians, for all accounts concur in representing the excitement of the Hungarians as raised to the highest pitch, and that something more than the united forces of Russia and Austria will be required to quell this national insurrection. Actual endeavors are being made to create a revolution in Gallicia, and in fact from Posen to Pesth the whole country is involved or on the brink of actual hostilities. The important fact is stated in the London papers of the 11th, that a joint note, the production of the Courts of Great Britain and France, has been addressed to the Cabinet of St. Petersburg, intimating their disapproval of the intervention of Russia in the Austro-Hungarian dispute, and insisting that such interference be withdrawn.

By the arrivals of vessels at Miramichi, N. S., we learn that more vessels have been wrecked and sunk by the ice. The crew of the Brien, Coverdale, from Sunderland, were picked up by a boat, their vessel having been cut through by the ice. Three other vessels were seen to go down. A vessel was also seen to go down off Newfoundland. The fate of the crew was not known.

A SINGULAR LAKE.—About ten miles to the Southeast of Saratoga Springs, N. Y., there is a small lake, well worthy the attention of the curious geologist. Around it, for a considerable distance, stretches a valley that shows many indications of having once been full of water, but which has been drained by the bursting of its Southern boundary towards the Mohawk River. In the center, deeply shaded by wood, lies the present lake, not more than a quarter of a mile in width, but about three miles in length. The shape is serpentine, and though several small streams empty into it, no outlet has ever been discovered. Very slight changes only are perceptible in the water-mark, even at the period of the spring freshets. No soundings have ever been made in it yet, although deep sea lines have been used. The shores are bold and perpendicular as a wall, descending downwards thus to an unknown depth. The mightiest ship that ever floated could touch the shore in any place without grounding. Its surface is as calm as a mirror, for it is seldom touched by the boisterous wind. The water, though seemingly clear, looks black, from the great depth, and the shadow of the trees on the shore.

It has nothing of the dish shape usually pertaining to lakes or to seas and oceans. It seems like an immense crevice in the solid crust of the earth's surface, thrown open by a convulsion in nature, as an earthquake, long centuries ago.

When our planet was young, it underwent shocks, such as would crumble the mountains that now bristle along, and to one of these awful convulsions this curious lake probably owes its origin.

DISTRESSING SCENE.—Coroner Osborne was called on the 18th inst. to a horrible scene on Van Rensselaer's Island, below Albany. In a shanty on the lower part of the Island he found Hiram Pangburn, a man about forty-two years of age, dying, and his elder brother, Abraham Pangburn, dead. Abraham had apparently died on Sunday, and decomposition had already set in. Hiram lingered through the night, but died at about 4 o'clock in the morning. The brothers were fishermen. They were intemperate, and had sold their nets and boats during the winter. They had no means of living, and yet it is believed that they had procured liquor a few days since, drank freely, and after the consequent exhaustion had been too weak to find shelter or food. There was no sign of provision on the premises, and no fire. The dying man was unable to speak, and could only raise his hand to his parched lips; and the Coroner brought some water in a shell (for there was not even a cup on the premises) to quench his thirst. The Coroner's Jury rendered a verdict of "Death from intemperance, exposure, and starvation." [Albany Atlas.

GREAT FIRE AT MILWAUKIE.—A fire broke out on Thursday, May 17, about 4 o'clock in the morning, destroying about $60,000 worth of property before it was subdued. The fire originated in the building occupied by Mr. Hawkins as a planing and stove factory, which was consumed together with the store of David Moore, Davis' livery stable, Ludingstone's brick building, occupied by the Sentinel, and Gazette; Davis and Moore's stage-house, barn and wagon shop (the loss on which was $8,000;) P. Davis' livery stable, including large quantities of hay, carriages, &c.; and all the buildings from Ludingstone's on the west side of Water-street, with the exception of Metcalf's meat market, and the saddlery of G. Dyer, which were saved. The fire is supposed to have been started by an incendiary.

ARRIVAL OF THE TRAPPIST MONKS BY THE CALEDONIA.—The Boston Traveler says:—Among the passengers who embarked from Liverpool in the steamship Caledonia for Boston, were the Abbot of Mount Millerry, and three brothers of Cisterian order of Trappists. They are accompanied by "Brother Macarius," and design to make all the necessary arrangements for the founding of two monasteries of their order, some where in North America. The Abbot, after arranging matters here, will return to Ireland, from whence in August, forty or fifty brothers, including four or five priests, will embark for this country. This party took passage for Boston, but landed at Halifax, and not returning before the steamer sailed, were left behind.

SENTENCE OF DRAYTON AND SAYRES.—In the Criminal Court at Washington, last week, Daniel Drayton was tried and convicted of transporting upward of seventy slaves, belonging to different owners from the District of Columbia. The Court sentenced the prisoner to pay a fine of $140 and costs in each case, and to be imprisoned until the said fines were all paid. Edward Sayres, convicted of the same offence in the like number of cases, was sentenced to pay a fine of $100 and costs in each case, and to be imprisoned until the said fines were all paid.

◆

SUICIDE OF DR. VALORUS P. COOLIDGE.—This hardened criminal committed suicide on the 18th inst., in his cell at the State Prison in Thomaston, Me. He had plotted with one of his fellow prisoners, whose term of service had just expired, for the murder of Flint, the chief witness against him for the murder of Mathews. Coolidge, finding that his letters, containing the plans for the murder of Flint, had been discovered by the Warden, put an end to his life, by taking poison.

CHOLERA ON THE WESTERN RIVERS.—A citizen of Washington, just from New Orleans, via the river route, gives a dreadful account of the ravages of the cholera along the western waters. He was a passenger on board of a boat where 37 persons died in a few days. He escaped the disease, while strong and healthy men were attacked and died in three hours. This gentleman is of opinion that the pestilence on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers rages to a far greater extent than is imagined in the North and East.

A telegraphic dispatch to the N. Y. Tribune, dated Philadelphia, Sunday evening, May 27, says that a serious riot occured in that city, about 6 o'clock, between a gang of Irishmen and negroes. An immense crowd collected at the scene of action; some were hurt on both sides. The sheriff, aided by the police, finally succeeded in dispersing the mob.

SUMMARY.

The steamboat Empire has not yet been raised. Several more bodies have been found, making the whole number about 25. Among them are the three brothers, Ladd, from Stonington, Ct. The conviction is deepening, that the pilot of the Empire was guilty of criminal neglect.

The Flood in New Orleans has not abated. All efforts to check the crevasse have proved unavailing thus far, but large numbers of workmen are still engaged.

The Cholera in New York seems not to be on the increase. All the cases which have been reported originated in those districts where destitution and improvidence prevail.

The people of St. Louis are at work in good earnest to purify their city, a work which should have been performed months ago. The People's Organ says that the price of lime has risen from eighteen cents to eighty cents per bushel, in consequence of the great quantity used. At Louisville, Ky., they have arrested the cholera by the use of the shovel and chloride of lime.

The Corporation of Charleston, S. C., are endeavoring to obtain water in sufficient quantity for the extinguishment of fires, by means of Artesian wells. In one instance, the earth has been perforated to the depth of 770, feet through a bed of marl, without reaching water. In others, the water has been reached at a much less depth.

The salvage on the ship Colchis, of Boston, which was abandoned off Nantucket, on the passage from Valparaiso for Boston, and afterward fallen in with by four Connecticut fishermen, in good condition, and towed into New London, has been settled by the underwriters paying about $25,000.

A writer in one of the New Orleans papers, speaking of the overflows of the Mississippi, and the means of preventing them, says that levees are not sufficient, and recommends that this Samson be shorn of its locks by diverting its energies into many channels.

Seven physicians of Milwaukee have signed an address which occupies a column of the Daily Wisconsin, exhorting the public to adopt the homeopathic system of treatment in case they are attacked by the cholera. They refer to the relative success of the two systems of homeopathy and allopathy in Europe in 1831–2.

The company which started from Jeffersonville for California have met with a sad fate. Advices have been received that nearly all of them were taken with cholera, which proved fatal to twelve. Most of the surviving members are returning home.

Father Mathew has written a letter to Ex-Mayor Brady, of New York. The letter is dated Cork, 26th of April. He says he shall take passage for this country, in the ship Ashburton, which was expected to sail form Liverpool on the 21st of May.

According to a letter from Stockholm, there has been discovered, it is asserted, in an old mansion formerly belonging to the family of the Count de Fersen, who was attached to Louis XVI., which is now under repair, a collection of diamonds, valued at between 8,000,000 (£320,000) and 9,000,000 francs.

There are 65,000 proprietors of real estate in Upper Canada; they occupy 9,613,591 acres, or about 133 acres each, on the average. In Ireland there are not 15,000 landed proprietors.

The steam boiler which is being made in Philadelphia, for the United States steam frigate now in process of construction at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, is composed of 75,000 pounds of pure copper, and will cost $30,000.

The Louisville Democrat states that every Treasurer of Kentucky, except the present one just appointed last winter, has been a defaulter.

The Louisville Journal, speaking of cholera, cautions its readers against the use of fresh fish, which, it says, are more poisonous than arsenic where the cholera prevails.

An entire family, consisting of eight persons, living within two miles of Yazoo City, were recently swept away by the cholera, between Saturday morning and the next Tuesday night.

It is reported, and generally believed, that the steamers California and Oregon, from San Francisco, have arrived at Panama—one on the 5th, and the other on the 8th inst. The news came by telegraph from New Orleans.

The store of N. Matsons, in Owego, N. Y., was entered recently with skeleton keys, and robbed of silver ware and dry goods to the amount of $8,000. Three hundred dollars reward has been offered for the apprehension of the thief and recovery of the property, or in proportion for either.

The ship Maria, from Limerick, with 111 emigrants for Quebec, is reported to have foundered in the ice in the Gulf of St. Lawrence—all lost, except thee of the crew and nine of the passengers.

The late Benjamin R. Nichols bequeathed to the Massachusetts General Hospital $6,000, the income to be applied the support of free beds; also $4,000 to the Farm School.

The Monitor, published at Hernando, Miss., says that the worms have taken all the cotton plants and vegetables in that vicinity which escaped from the late frost.

A house at St. Louis has started a "Pioneer Line" for California, passage $200, 100 lbs. baggage allowed, and provisions for 100 days furnished.

Wm. C. Macready, the playactor on whose account the New York Riot was got up, departed for England last week in the steamship Hibernia.

There occurred at Cincinnati, from Wednesday, May 2, to Tuesday noon, May 15th, 314 cases of cholera, and 71 deaths from this disease.

A gentleman from Chicago states that on the 6th inst., the snow in the fields adjacent to that city, was three feet deep.

Mrs. Monroe, 129 Washington Market Place, Philadelphia, was, on Thursday, delivered of four children.

The insurance offices in New York lost about $100,000 by the fire in St. Louis.

The N. O. Bulletin of May 18th, says: The most fearful instance of mortality caused by the cholera, that has ever come to our knowledge, occurred on the plantation of Mr. James Miller, Waterproof, La., during the last few days. We have been credibly informed, that thirty-nine out of forty negroes on the plantation died! The disease entirely baffled medical skill; medicine would not act at all; a hearty negro would be taken slightly ill, vomiting would ensue, without any purging, and in two or three hours the poor negro would be cold and dead.

The St. Louis Republican, of May 16, says: The steamer Timour brought down, Monday night, about sixty California emigrants, who have become discouraged at the long and tedious journey and the many hardships and difficulties to be encountered before reaching the goal of their bright anticipations.

We learn from the Salem (Mass.) Gazette, that a destructive fire has been raging several days in the woods on an island in Charles River, in Newtown. The fire is supposed to have taken from the cigar of some pleasure-seeker.

The next Congress will pass a law for taking the Census of 1850. Statistics of every kind ought to be attended to. There is no time so suitable for gaining general and valuable information, among other important information, the number of school-houses and number of pupils who attended them summer and winter, &c.

The British mail steamer Severn arrived at Mobile on the 21st inst., from Vera Cruz, bringing $147,000 in specie. The Severn left at Vera Cruz the United States ship Saratoga, to sail for Pensacola in a few days, and brig Heliford, to sail for New York on the 18th inst. These were the only American vessels in port.

Dr. Holland has started a new theory with regard to the functions of the hair. He says it is a safety-valve to the nervous system, forming a connection between the nervous organs and the great principle pervading the universe. He says the profuseness of hair is always proportionate to the prevailing vital energies.

On the 21st of May, the beautiful residence of Widow Freme, near Brattleboro', Vermont, was destroyed by fire. Mrs. Freme perished in the flames. All the barns and out-buildings were also consumed, including three valuable horses, carriage, &c. Four females saved their lives by jumping from a chamber window. One, however, was seriously injured by the fall.

At Clearspring, Md., six cows and three dogs have gone mad from the bite of a dog, four weeks ago, and it is feared that others will follow. Some of the families have been using the milk of the cows.

President Taylor has determined to dispatch two national vessels for the purpose of seeking out and succoring the expedition of Sir John Franklin, or, failing to find them, ascertaining their fate. Measures will speadily be taken for the accomplishment of this purpose.

In 1818 the Old Frontenac, Capt. Mackenzie, was the only steamboat on Lake Ontario. The fare from Kingston to Niagara or Toronto was $12. Now the Sovereign (old mail line) carries cabin passengers from Kingston to Hamilton (head of the Lake) for 25 cents, and steerage passengers for half price! Five dollars was the price last year, and five from Kingston to Montreal.

On the 22d of May, the Quincy Stone Bank, situated at Quincy, Mass., was robbed of $5,000 in Bank bills. Before breakfast the Cashier went to the Bank and distributed the money in the drawers and left. On returning a short time afterward, he found that some one had entered the Bank by removing a pane of glass and carried off the money.

The Quebec Gazette of the 16th inst. states that the bark Lord Byron has on board 17 of the brig Hannah's passengers, taken from a cake of ice. The Hannah was suddenly cut in two by an ice cake, and sunk, her passengers taking refuge on the ice, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, where nearly 100 perished.

The Young People's Mirror,

A handsome Quarto Volume, containing upwards of one hundred Engravings, having but ONE AIM, to advance the Interest, Happiness, and Welfare of the Youth of America, at the very small price of "FIFTY CENTS."

MINISTERS, Colporteurs, Postmasters, Teachers, Parents, and Guardians, are invited to aid in circulating this work among the young, for they may be assured that it will be precisely such a work as they will take pleasure in recommending to those over whom they severally exercise an influence. For example, the Minister in his Sunday School, and his pastoral visits among his flock; the Colporteur in his lectures, and in his visits of love from house to house; the Postmaster in his office, where the young are sent for letters; Teachers, who are constantly training the young mind for the future; and Parents and Guardians, who bear the solemn responsibility of moulding human character, and watching over and directing aright the expanding intellect of youth, may all present our enterprise directly to those for whose benefit it is chiefly intended, and through its instrumentality each may aid himself in the work in which he is engaged.

☞ TERMS TO AGENTS.—To those who are willing to aid in circulating the Young People's Mirror in the neighborhood, the Publisher will credit them with three copies for each dollar so received, and send them per mail as directed.

⁂ Young people clubbing together in fives, and sending the Publisher two dollars, will receive five copies of the paper, mailed to one address. EDWARD WALKER,
114 Fulton-street.

COMMENDATIONS OF THE PRESS.

We commend this work to the attention of parents, as a valuable one for their children. Let them subscribe for it on the first of January, when the volume will commence. It will be a fine New Year present. The matter of it, we can say from our knowledge of Mr. L., will be such as to entertain and instruct the young.—Poughkeepsie Telegraph.

The "Mirror," we predict, will be a great favorite with our juvenile population.—Republican (Monticello, N. Y.) Watchman.

From the number before us, we have no hesitation in recommending it to all classes as a valuable publication.—Utica Observer.

If the number before us is a fair specimen, it must be considered the cheapest, and one of the most desirable papers for young people printed in the country.—Portland (Me.) Journal.

It promises to be a delightful periodical for youth.—Philadelphia National Eagle.

It is very neat in its appearance, is finely embellished, and is well filled with matter, highly useful and interesting to the class for which it is intended.—Belfast (Me.) State Signal.

We most cheerfully commend the publication to parents and guardians as a valuable work for youth of both sexes. Fifty cents cannot be better expended, looking to interest and instruction.—Freeman's Journal, Cooperstown, N. Y.

It is well printed, admirably selected, beautifully illustrated, and we really think the best and cheapest of the periodical publications prepared for youth.—Bangor (Me.) [illegible]

The "Young People's Mirror" is a monthly [illegible], well edited and liberally illustrated, which [illegible] welcomed, we have no doubt, by many [illegible] readers. It is but fifty cents a year; and if it maintains the promise of its initial number, it is "bound to succeed."—Knickerbocker Magazine.

Miscellaneous.

From Pierpont's Poems.

JERUSALEM.

Jerusalem, Jerusalem,
How glad should I have been,
Could I, in my lone wanderings,
Thine aged walks have seen!—
Could I have gazed upon the dome
Above the towers that swells,
And heard, as evening's sun went down,
Thy parting camels' bells:—

Could I have stood on Olivet,
Where once the Saviour trod,
And, from its height, looked down upon
The City of our God!
For is it not, Almighty God,
Thy Holy City still—
Though there thy Prophets walk no more—
That crowns Moriah's hill?

Thy Prophets walk no more, indeed,
The streets of Salem now,
Nor are their voices lifted up
On Zion's saddened brow;
Nor are their garnished sepulchres
With pious sorrow kept,
Where once the same Jerusalem
That killed them came and wept.

But still the seed of Abraham
With joy upon it look,
And lay their ashes at its feet,
That Kedron's feeble brook
Still washes, as its waters creep
Along their rocky bed,
And Israel's God is worshiped yet
Where Zion lifts her head.

Yes—every morning, as the day
Breaks over Olivet,
The holy name of Allah comes
From every minaret;
At every eve the mellow call
Floats on the quiet air—
"Lo, God is God! Before him come,
Before him come, for prayer!"

* * * * * *

Jerusalem, I would have seen
Thy precipices steep—
The trees of palm that overhang
Thy gorges dark and deep—
The goats that cling along thy cliffs,
And browse upon thy rocks,
Beneath whose shade lie down, alike,
Thy shepherds and their flocks.

I would have mused, while Night hung out—
Her silver lamp so pale,
Beneath those ancient olive trees
That grow in Kedron's vale,
Whose foliage from the pilgrim hides
The city's wall sublime,
Whose twisted arms and gnarled trunks
Defy the scythe of Time.

The Garden of Gethsemane
Those aged olive trees
Are shading yet, and in their shade
I would have sought the breeze
That, like an angel, bathed the brow
And bore to heaven the prayer
Of Jesus, when in agony
He sought the Father there.

I would have gone to Calvary,
And where the Marys stood,
Bewailing loud the Crucified,
As near him as they could,
I would have stood, till Night o'er earth
Her heavy pall had thrown,
And thought upon my Saviour's cross,
And learned to bear my own.

Jerusalem, Jerusalem,
Thy cross thou bearest now!
An iron yoke is on thy neck,
And blood is on thy brow;
Thy golden crown, the crown of Truth,
Thou didst reject as dross,
And now thy cross is on thee laid,
The Crescent is thy cross!

It was not mine, nor will it be,
To see the bloody rod
That scourged thee, and which long hath scourged—
Thou City of our God!
But round thy hill the spirits throng
Of all thy murdered seers,
And voices that went up from it
Are ringing in my ears—

Went up that day, when darkness fell
From all thy firmament,
And shrouded thee at noon; and when
Thy temple's veil was rent,
And graves of holy men, that touched
Thy feet, gave up their dead.
Jerusalem! thy prayer is heard;
HIS BLOOD IS ON THY HEAD!

PREVENTION AND TREATMENT OF CHOLERA.

In compliance with a request from the Board of Health in New York, five physicians in their employ last week made a report upon the subject of cholera. After speaking of the importance of cleanliness, and urging the people to remove from their neighborhood every thing which would be likely to render the air impure, they say:—

Believing that much may be done in the way of prevention, if not cure, of the disease, in case it should unfortunately extend among us, the undersigned would offer a few suggestions of a general nature, founded on experience, leaving the application of them to the good sense and discretion of the community at large.

In the first place, they would advise particular attention to clothing. From the nature of the complaint, it is evident that much depends upon keeping the body protected from sudden alterations of temperature and moisture. Flannel next to the skin should be a universal article of apparel, and they would respectfully suggest to those charitable associations which are in the habit of supplying the poor with clothing, to make this an object of special attention.

In the second place, the diet should be particularly attended to. The undersigned would not recommend any sudden or great change in the ordinary modes of living, where those modes are temperate, and have been found to agree. Such changes, they believe, would do more harm than good. From the peculiar nature of the disease, however, it is well known that certain kinds of food are injurious, and, without going into particulars, they would merely state that all such articles as have a tendency to relax the bowels, ought to be avoided. All crude and raw vegetables, unripe fruits, as well as violent purgative medicines are calculated to do mischief. Excesses, either in eating or drinking, cannot be too religiously abstained from.

In the third place, attention to personal cleanliness, by the frequent use of the tepid bath, is particularly recommended.

In the fourth place, the preservation of a calm and composed state of mind is all important, and may do more than is generally supposed in preventing the onset of this disease. It is the result of experience that all epidemics are aggravated more or less by mental disturbance, whether in the shape of active panic or low despondency. To the cholera this is particularly applicable. While our citizens, therefore, use every prudential and precautionary measure, let them keep up a good heart and dispel all fear.

In the fifth place, with regard to the treatment of cholera, it may be observed that, as a general rule, the disease does not attack so suddenly as to preclude the possibility of calling in timely medical assistance. A relaxed state of the bowels for a longer or shorter period, gives notice of its approach. In all cases, therefore, when any disorder of this kind exists, common prudence will suggest the necessity of resorting to medical aid. If this be done in season, the disease may generally be promptly arrested. When professional aid cannot be immediately obtained, and where simple relaxation of the bowels exists, 20 or 25 drops of laudanum may be taken; to be repeated in one or two hours, according to circumstances. For young persons and children, the dose must be reduced according to the age—at the age say of 10 years, 8 drops, at the age of 2 or 3 years, 2 or 3 drops.

Where the symptoms are more severe, and the patient is cold, in addition to the laudanum, he should be put immediately to bed, between blankets, and every appliance in the shape of bottles of hot water, bags of hot salt or sand, frictions, &c., &c., &c., be diligently resorted to. A strong mustard poultice, too, should be applied over the region of the stomach, to remain on till it produces smarting of the skin. In addition to this, a little brandy and water should be given, with a view of restoring warmth.

ANTI-SLAVERY MEMORIAL.

The following Memorial, signed by fourteen elders and sixteen ministers, was presented to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America for 1849. It shows a state of feeling at the West from which good and important results may be expected at no distant day:—

We, the undersigned ministers and elders in the Presbyterian Church, would respectfully memorialize the General Assembly on the subject of "Chattel Slavery:"

1. We believe with the General Assembly of 1848, that "Slavery, as it exists in the United States, is a gross violation of the dearest rights of human nature, and utterly irreconcilable with the laws of God."

2. And since, "To the General Assembly belongs the power of deciding in all controversies respecting doctrine and discipline, of reproving, warning, or hearing testimony against error in doctrine or immorality in practice, in any Church, Presbytery, or Synod," (see form of government ch. 12, sec. 5,) we request the General Assembly to declare plainly and unequivocally, that slave-holding, as it is practiced in the United States, is a disciplinable offense, and recommend to the lower judiciary to take immediate action on the subject, and treat that sin as other gross offenses.

3. We wish the General Assembly to restore the note* appended to the answer of the 142d question of the larger Catechism, which has been omitted in the late editions of that work, by order of the General Assembly of 1816, or send down the question to the Presbyteries, "Shall the word 'slave-holding' be inserted immediately after the word 'man-stealing,' in answer to said question?"

We desire earnestly to express our conviction to the General Assembly, that the time has fully come when the interests of the Church imperiously demand of your body that some decided action be taken on the subject of this memorial. Never has there been a time when light was so rapidly spreading, and the spirit of free inquiry so generally prevailing; and when the high claims of God's law were so clearly understood, and the enormity of the crime of slave-holding so deeply felt. Not only the conscience of large portions of the Church, but the public sentiment of the world, loudly demands that the Church shall wash her hands from the blood of the slave, and divorce entirely and forever the holy religion of the Cross from all such connection with Slavery as in any way implies a participation in, or sanction of, this crying sin.

Your body has frequently spoken out against this sin, in the language of strong condemnation, but has as yet failed of taking any decided action for its removal from our Church. For the sake of consistency and the honor of the Church and the glory of God we ask—we beseech you to take this action now. Already has the Church lost much of her strength in the West, in consequence of this delay. Numbers have already seceded from us whom we love as brethren—many churches are split up and divided upon this question, and we cannot express to you our strong sympathies with those who are struggling to get clear from all responsibility in this sin. We deem it our duty to state distinctly to the General Assembly, that we believe the interests of the Church in the Western States call for a dissolution, in a body, of our connection with the General Assembly after the year 1849, if the proposed action be not now taken. Such an event we deeply deplore; its necessity we hope may never come.

* 1 Timothy 1: 10. "The law is made FOR MAN-STEALERS." This crime among the Jews exposed the perpetrators of it to capital punishment; Ex. 21: 16, and the apostle here classes them with sinners of the first rank. The word he uses, in its original import, comprehends all who are concerned in bringing any of the human race into slavery, or in retaining them in it. Hominum furis qui servos vel liberae abducunt, retinent, vendunt, vel emunt. Stealers of men are all those who bring of slaves or freemen, and keep, sell, or buy them. To steal a man, says Grotius, is the highest kind of theft. In other instances, we only steal human property, but when we steal or retain men in slavery, we seize those, who, in common with ourselves, are constituted by the original grant, lords of the earth. Gen. 1: 28.

CAMELINA STATIVA.—Some of the Georgia planters, for want of sufficient encouragement in the cultivation of the cotton plant, are beginning to give attention to the culture of Camelina Stativa, (or gold of pleasure,) an unctious seed resembling flaxseed, from which oil is expressed in the same manner as from flaxseed. The plant is a native of Siberia, but well adapted to our Southern climate. It is an annual, growing from two and a half to three feet high, and yields a large and certain crop. It is already in demand in this country.

SINGULAR CASE.—The marriage of Mr. Henry Apple and Mrs. Sarah Apple was solemnized at the Clerk's office in Indianapolis, Ind., on the 7th inst., by Judge Smith, one of the Associate Judges. Mr. and Mrs. Apple have been living together as husband and wife for some twenty years, and have raised a large family of children. Their re-marriage was made necessary by the following mysterious train of circumstance, Mr. John Apple, many years ago, left that country as a volunteer of the Black Hawk war. During his absence, a traveler passed through the country, who informed Mrs. Apple that her husband had been killed, that he, the traveler, had aided in burying him, and had marked, with an ax, the tree under which he was interred. Apple did not return, and no doubt was entertained by his wife or her friends of his decease. Time passed on, nothing was heard to discredit the traveler's story, and Mrs. A., after having continued for a proper length of time in a state of supposed widowhood, was formally married to Mr. Henry Apple, a farmer, with whom she has since lived. A few months since, it was authentically ascertained that John Apple was yet actually living! A divorce was obtained by Mrs. Apple, and she was re-married as above stated, to Henry Apple, the man with whom she has been innocently living for many years past as her supposed husband.

A YANKEE MOVE.—A New York paper says a strapping Yankee, having got out of employment in that big city, has hit upon a plan by which to raise the wind. He is a painter by trade, and goes with his pot and brush to a house and inquires who lives there, and at what time he will be home to dinner. Having found out, he stations himself at the door just about the time he expects the owner out from dinner, and commences painting the railing around the door step. The astonished proprietor comes out and finds a man painting his railing.

"Who gave you authority to paint this?"

"Nobody," says the Yankee; "but ye see, 'squire, I was comin' along and kind o' thought it would look a little better painted. Don't you think so?"

The proprietor gets a little wrathy, but the Yankee, taking it very coolly, keeps on his work.

"It will never do," says the proprietor, "to let it go so, half painted."

"I'll finish it cheap for ye," says the Yankee.

"Well, finish it."

And so he gets a good job. He has been practising in the neighborhood of Broome and Varick streets lately.

THE PINKS OF PROPRIETY.—There is a set of people whom I cannot bear—the pinks of fashionable propriety—whose every word is precise, and whose every movement is unexceptionable, but who, though versed in all the categories of polite behavior, have not a particle of soul or cordiality about them. We allow that their manners may be abundantly correct. There may be elegance in every gesture, and gracefulness in every position; not a smile out of place, and not a step that would not bear the measurement of the severest scrutiny. This is all very fine; but what I want is the gaiety of social intercourse—the frankness that spreads ease and animation around it—the eye that speaks affability to all, that chases timidity from every bosom, and tells every man in the company to be confident and happy. This is what I conceive to be virtue to the text; and not the sickening formality of those who walk by rule, and would reduce the whole human life to a wire-bound system of misery and constraint.

[Dr. Chalmers' Sermons.

ALFRED.—Alfred the Great had reached his twelfth year before he had even learned his alphabet. An interesting anecdote is told of the occasion on which he was first prompted to apply himself to books. His mother had shown him and his brothers a small volume, illuminated in several places with colored letters and such other embellishments as were then in fashion. Seeing that it excited the admiration of her children, she promised that she would give it to the boy who would first learn to read it. Alfred, though the youngest, was the only one who had spirit enough to attempt obtaining it on such condition. He immediately went and procured a teacher, and in a very short time was able to claim the promised reward. When he came to the throne, notwithstanding his manifold duties and a tormenting disease which seldom allowed him more than an hour's rest, he employed his leisure time in reading, for the best interests of the people he was called to govern; and the benevolence of his conduct is well known.

MANNERS.—I make it a point of morality never to find fault with another for his manners; they may be awkward or graceful, blunt or polite, polished or rustic. I care not what they are, if the man means well and acts from honest intentions, without eccentricity or affectation. All men have not the advantage of "good society," as it is called, to school themselves in all its fantastic rules and ceremonies, and if there is any standard of manners, it is one founded in reason and good sense, and not upon these artificial regulations. Manners, like conversation, should be extemporaneous and not studied. I always suspect a man who meets me with the same perpetual smile on his face, the same congeeing of the body, and the same premeditated shake of the hand. Give me the (it may be rough) grip of the hand, the careless nod of recognition, and when occasion requires, the homely but welcome salutation, "How are you, my old friend?"

AN INCIDENT OF THE WRECK.—After the Empire was struck, and while sinking, two mothers snatched what they supposed to be their own infants, and rushed upon deck and in their fright threw themselves into the water. One of the devoted parents held the child to her bosom, and both were saved; while the other sustained hers until it breathed its last, yet still holding on to the body until she was rescued. The surprise of the mothers may be imagined, when they discovered that in the confusion attending their escape they had each taken the other's child. And while the poor woman who had supposed that her little one was lost pressed to her bosom her own babe, the other was frantic with grief to find too late that she had preserved another's child and lost her own. A CURIOSITY.—Among the interesting old MSS. found in removing some old buildings in Philadelphia last week, is an agreement between Dr. Franklin and other Directors of the Franklin Library, and Robt. Greenward, Librarian, securing to him a salary of £8. The terms upon which the books could be borrowed are stated at "eight pence per book for all folios, six pence per book for all quartos, and four pence per book for all other books, and make good all damages." The Library was to be kept open on the last day of every week from 4 to 8 o'clock in the afternoon. The documents have been deposited in the Pennsylvania Historical Society.

BREACH OF PROMISE OF MARRIAGE.—The Kingston (Canada) Whig contains the particulars of a lawsuit, Miss Mary Whitelaw of Kingston (a young Scotswoman) against Rev. Thomas L. Davidson, Baptist preacher in Pickering. Davidson had proposed to marry her in 1845, had written her in the most affectionate style as his betrothed. Faithful to you will I be, "so help me God!" In 1847 he repeated his vows; but that year a Miss Winter, whose father had money, and who was handsome, took his attention, and he married her. Judge McLean charged the Jury, the reverend pastor made no defense, and the verdict was for the lady, $1,000 and costs.

CARROTS.—There is no root cultivated which yields so great an amount of fattening properties per acre as the carrot. Horses, however poor, if healthy, will get fat in a few weeks with carrots only. No hay, no water—in fact, they will not drink if you feed entirely on carrots. One bushel per day, with hay, will keep your horses in good working order, without corn. During the prevalence of the potato-ail, farmers should return to carrot culture. It is a sure and profitable crop if well cultivated.

VARIETY.

Latour Mauborg lost his leg at the battle of Leipsic. After he had suffered amputation with the greatest courage, he saw his servant crying, or pretending to cry, in the corner af the room. "None of your hypocritical tears, you idle dog," said the master, "you know you are very glad, for now you will have only one boot to clean instead of two."

The celebrated Dr. Rush was once asked by a student what per cent. he thought had been added to the period of human life by the skill of practitioners of medicine? He answered, "If by practitioners of medicine, you mean to include old women and nurses, I think the increase has been very considerable; but if you exclude them, very little."

Mr. Lindley, of London, says: "The coolness of night is to plants what sleep is to animals. This law may, to some extent, be violated for a time; but the plants cannot, on pain of loss of life, be deprived of their proper period of repose."

Nothing is a greater obstacle to the production of excellence, than the power of producing what is pretty good with ease and rapidity. He who, in his mind, has never formed the idea of some thing superior to what he is used to, will never arrive at any great degree of excellence.

If robbins and other small birds are encouraged to build near the habitations of man, they will prefer such locations to extensive forests and swamps, where hawks and crows and snakes are more apt to be their neighbors.

"Conscience!" said Mrs. Hopkins, indignantly. "Do you suppose nobody has got any conscience but yourself? My conscience is as good as yours—ay, better too—for it has never been used in the course of my life, while yours must be nearly worn out!"

A young gentleman of wealth and respectability, passing through one of the markets in Cincinnati, last week, saw a very pretty girl, fell desperately in love with her, proposed, was accepted, and married her the next day.

The number of robberies committed in London last year was 63,747, and the value of the property stolen was nearly a million of dollars. The number of persons taken into custody was 64,480, of whom 31,683 were discharged, and the remaining 27,274 convicted or held to bail.

To Clergymen and their People.

ALL CLERGYMEN who will send their address to Messrs. Comstock & Company, No. 21 Courtland-street—(after the 1st of May No. 57 John-street)—New York, shall be furnished gratuitously, for their family use, with a Salve of most extraordinary merit for external sores or inflammations of long or short standing. In burns, or pains and swellings of nearly all descriptions, its effects are charming, and almost beyond belief. This Salve has already been used by quite a number of the clergy, for themselves or sufferers to whom they have given it; and they have called on or written to the proprietors to express their delight at its action, and a desire to have their names used in making known its virtues. The proprietors having realized a handsome sum by its sale, feel called upon by a sense of duty to their fellow-men to disseminate the knowledge of the existence of such a thing far and near, and to give it without charge to the reverend clergy without limitation. It is called CONNEL'S PAIN EXTRACTOR, and is owned solely by Messrs. C. & Co. All religious papers that will publish this a few times will be furnished with the Salve free, and they may also thereby relieve many suffering poor brethren from agonizing pain, and save them much expense. The names of nearly fifty clergymen recommending it, are to be seen at the office of C. & Co.

You will please observe, it is no "sovereign remedy for all complaints," but only intended for external applications in the following:—Burns, Scalds, Frosted parts, Chilblains, Chafe or Galls, Chaps, Tetter, Pimple, Blotch, Felon, Ulcer, Sprains, Erysipelas, Cuts, Bruises, Ear and Toothache, Mumps, Sore Throat, Whitlows, Piles, Ringworm, Salt Rheum, Barber's Itch, Carbuncle, Eruption, Sore Eyes and Lids, Weak Sight, Sore Lips, Punctures, Biles and Warts, Fever Pains, Tender Feet, Inflammatory Rheumatism, Tic Doloureux, Ague in Face and Breast, Fever Sores, Old Burn Scars, Prickly Heat, Inflamed Skin, Broken Breast, Sore Nipples, Rough Hands, Blistered Surfaces, Dressing for Blisters, White Swellings, Cold in Wounds, Sore Corns, General Sores, Smallpox Marks, &c.

Though we have named numerous affections, experience has taught us that they are not too many. It will be necessary to know that this article is the only one we can recommend; but must caution against some imitation by like name. We will present it to the poor who have actual need of it.

Mail Line from New York to Boston.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN NEW YORK AND BOSTON, via Stonington and Providence.—Inland Route, without ferry, change of cars, or baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and MASSACHUSETTS, Capt. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 5 o'clock, P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock, P. M., or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities.

The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday.

The MASSACHUSETTS will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

N. B.—Passengers, on the arrival of the steamers at Stonington, proceed immediately in the splendid Railroad cars to Providence and Boston. A baggage-master accompanies the steamboat trains to and from Boston, to take charge of the baggage.

MISSIONS TO THE JEWS.

In a communication published in the Recorder a few weeks ago, I expressed my doubts of the propriety or necessity of sending missionaries to "meliorate the condition of the Jews," believing that the time has not yet arrived when we may expect the blessing of Heaven on such an undertaking. I think the purposes of God in dispersing the Jews, distributing them into every state and kingdom of the earth, and preserving them in that condition, is not yet accomplished, neither will be, till the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters do the seas, and peace and universal brotherhood reign throughout the earth.

The 26th Annual Report of the Society for Meliorating the Condition of the Jews, was presented at their Anniversary on the 10th of May. It does not change my opinion, and I should think was not very encouraging to the Society. No special report is given from their missionaries—where they have labored, what has been their success, or what number of converts, if any, have been made from Judaism to Christianity. It is only stated, that an auxiliary society has been formed, and that the Board will extend its operations to southern cities; that a large number of tracts have been issued; that the Jewish Chronicle continues to be published, reaching 2,000 copies per month. They have one convert, who is a student in the Theological School at Andover, in preparation for the ministry. But whether his conversion took place within the past year, or at some time previous, we are not informed. The treasury, though embarrassed, has paid its expenses, disbursing $3,208, and having $12 36 left on hand.

After the pecuniary business of the Society was closed, several speakers addressed the meeting. Mr. Bernard Stinehal, the Jew referred to above, whom the President introduced as a son of Israel according to the flesh, and such he hoped according to the promise, now rose to address the meeting. A resolution was offered by him to the effect that "the present is the most favorable period for preaching the gospel to the Jews, and the Christians of America are the people particularly designed by Providence to be foremost in this noble work." Reïterating the sentiments herein expressed, he proceeded to speak of the revolutions in Europe as tending to secure the religious freedom of the Jews. An important fact bearing on the conversion of the Jews, is that they are becoming dissatisfied with the teachings of the Talmud, in which they have been firm believers heretofore. They now receive and read the New Testament. Should we neglect to give our aid to this work, he saw that infidelity would take possession of their minds. To render this aid, we must send missionaries among them. Either missionaries or miracles must work the result. Which was it the most reasonable to believe would do so? Our contributions in money were especially wanted. In concluding his earnest remarks, he begged permission to remind Christians of the duty and importance of prayer in behalf of the Jews.

Rev. Dr. Bacon, of New Haven, Ct., found himself advertised to address this meeting, but without his consent. His principal subject was, "Is the condition of the conversion of the Jews from Judaism to Christianity, to be the dissolution of their distinct nationality?" He replied negatively. The Assyrian, he said, had passed away; the Egyptian had passed away; the Greek was as bad as extinct; the Roman found no representative in the Italian; but the Jew had maintained his nationality through all these changes. Why this, BUT that it was the divine will? In the time of Christ, the convert was not to throw off his nationality. Paul was a Jew still. The Jews needed to turn back from the teachings of the Rabbis to the teachings of Moses; and this was their restoration.

The Reverend Doctor, it appears, has at length discovered something of the "divine will" in the preservation of the Jews in their present condition. If so, he should be cautious in his movements, lest haply he be found fighting against that divine will. I see no reason to expect, at the present day, at least, the conversion of the Jews to Christianity. We see them dispersed agreeable to the ancient prophecies, and the express declaration of our Savior, "Ye shall be witnesses unto me to the uttermost parts of the earth." The next grand movement we are to expect concerning them, according to the predictions of the same inspired writers, is their restoration to Jerusalem. To many persons, I am aware that this is mysterious and doubtful; but, if I did not believe one, I could not the other. They are equally supported by the same authority; and I doubt not, in the fullness of time, will be equally verified. Then will the command, "Go ye into all the world," &c., become void and useless, for the knowledge of the Lord will cover the earth as the waters do the seas. Then "the watchmen shall lift up the voice, and together shall they sing; for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring forth Zion. Break forth into joy; sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem; for the Lord hath comforted his people; he hath redeemed Jerusalem. The Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God."

DOCUMENTS OF THE EASTERN ASSOCIATION.

In the brief sketch which we gave last week of the proceedings of the Eastern Seventh-day Baptist Association, we were not able to state even the substance of some of the documents presented. We think it best, therefore, to publish entire, this week, the Report on the State of Religion, the Resolutions presented by the Business Committee, and the Letter of the Delegate from the Baptist Free Mission Society.

Report on the State of Religion.

The Committee appointed to examine into the state of religion within the bounds of this Association, would respectfully submit the following Report:—

The letters from the churches generally indicate a low state of piety. Very few of them have been strengthened by additions to their numbers, while many of them have been actually diminished. Your Committee are not disposed to consider increase of numbers as always the best evidence of prosperity; but when there is any considerable loss in this respect, it ought to awaken solemn inquiry, whether it is not owing to criminal unfaithfulness, as it respects the use of the means which the Head of the Church has promised to bless to the enlargement of Zion. It is also discoverable, from the letters, that there is not generally that spirit of liberality in raising funds for the spread of the gospel, which our numbers and resources would seem to demand. This, in connection with the diminution of numbers, argues a state of things which calls loudly for humiliation before God, and for that repentance which needs not to be repented of.

Your Committee will not undertake to say what is the cause of this apparent leanness. It is, however, a matter for serious consideration, whether both ministers and people are not awfully guilty before God. The Most High spake by one of his prophets, saying, "The pastors have become brutish, and have not sought the Lord; therefore they have not prospered, and all their flocks are scattered." Ministerial unfaithfulness is doubtless one great cause of the diminution and scattering of churches, in view of which a jealous God will institute, sooner or later, a searching ordeal. Yet it behoves to be just as solemnly considered, that such unfaithfulness may exist because the people "love to have it so." Our churches may well examine themselves, whether they are not guilty of creating such a moral atmosphere as tends to chill the piety of their ministers, and render it, as it were, impossible for them to maintain that constant vigilance, without which the cause of God must suffer. Thus is verified the saying, "like people, like priest."

It is not thought necessary by the Committee to give extracts from the letters. Piscataway is the only church which has received any considerable additions. The gain or loss of the others may be learned by reference to the statistical table of the associational minutes.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Resolutions.

1st. To meet the suggestions contained in the report of the Executive Committee, touching missionary labor, Resolved, That said Committee be instructed to employ as their means will allow, one or more missionaries, to preach and distribute tracts in the fields specified in their report, and elsewhere, as they shall see fit to direct.

2d. Whereas, legislative enactments, imposing penalties for the neglect of religious observances, are direct violations of the guaranty of our National Constitution, that "Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof;" and of the constitutions of the several States, all of which embody substantially the same provision; and are at war with the genius of Christianity, which frowns upon the interference of the civil magistrate with things sacred; therefore—

Resolved, That it is the duty of Christians to labor for the repeal of all laws which enforce religious observances.

3d. Resolved, That civil legislation, making it a penal offense to perform worldly business on the first or any other day of week, is a violation of the guaranties of our National and State constitutions, inasmuch as it virtually prescribes a particular form of religious practice, prohibits the free exercise of conscience, and exacts an unwilling obedience from those who believe the State to have no right of jurisdiction over them in these respects.

4th. Resolved, That the churches composing this body be recommended to take up monthly collections for missionary purposes, and to observe the concert of prayer on the first Sabbath, or evening after the Sabbath, in every month.

5th. Resolved, That it is the duty of the Christian to maintain the regular and daily worship of God in his own house; and that the neglect of this duty is a deplorable feature in the characters of those professors of religion who are guilty of it, calling for the labor of "those who are spiritual," to correct the evil.

6th. Resolved, That the principles held by us as a denomination, require us to pay a strict and exemplary regard to the Sabbath; and that the loose manner of keeping it, which obtains with many who call themselves Seventh-day Baptists, is not only highly inconsistent, but wicked, in the sight of Him who requires us to "count the Sabbath a delight."

7th. Resolved, That the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association has a just claim to our contributions, and to our prayers to God for his blessing upon its labors; and that, in view of many extensive fields now opening for missionary labor, we will hail with joy, and with a ready disposition to aid the efforts it may make for a wider extension of its operations.

8th. Resolved, That the recent political changes in Europe give auspicious signs of the destruction of National Religious Establishment, and of the consequent removal of those fetters which have so long bound the conscience, and hindered free inquiry—furnish new and unlooked-for opportunities to propagate the gospel of salvation—and should cause a prompt and vigorous effort on the part of the Seventh-day Baptists to avail themselves of such opportunities.

9th. Whereas, The main object of church organization appears to be the concentration of effort; therefore—

Resolved, That it is the duty of church members to connect themselves with the churches in the vicinity where they reside; and we do hereby earnestly request the churches of the Association to advise their members to such a course.

10th. Resolved, That the Executive Committee be instructed to receive and examine any individuals who may be presented as beneficiaries for receiving aid from this Association in procuring a suitable education for the ministry; and that the brethren and the churches be requested to contribute for the purpose.

Mr. Hawes' Letter.

To the Eastern Seventh-day Baptist Association, convened at Pawcatuck, R. I., May 24th, 1849:—

In behalf of the American Baptist Free Mission Society, which I have the pleasure of representing, I take this opportunity of presenting the following communication.

Brethren, beloved in the Lord, although we have heretofore had with you but a very circumscribed acquaintance, yet it has been our privilege to know something of you, as a Christian denomination, and of your peculiar position in the community. If your position is rightly understood by us, there is but one point of difference between us—but one thing which prevents us from being one denomination. That you are truly sincere and conscientious before God, in your peculiar views upon the Sabbath question, we have no doubt; and that we are as sincere in entertaining those views on which you differ from us, we trust you will be ready to grant—praying for each other, that wherein we may be wrong, we may discover it, and be ever ready to embrace the right; for the time is approaching, when nothing but truth before his throne with honor can appear.

In all the persecutions and afflictions which have come upon you, by reason of your strict adherence to your peculiar principles, be assured, brethren, you have our kindest sympathies. The Free Mission Baptists are all agreed in their testimony against that spirit, and those sentiments, which go to prevent any of our fellow creatures, in this land of boasted liberty, from worshiping God according to their own sense of duty. All kinds of human oppression, we feel it our duty as Christians to repudiate. No one sin is more frequently and openly condemned in the word of God, than that of oppression. The gospel which we preach, is designed to promote peace on earth and good will to men—to all men; and we feel that of all the evils which have been recorded in the history of nations, there is no one of greater magnitude than that of American slavery. We feel, dear brethren, to call upon you to unite with us, in remembering those who are in bonds as bound with them. We doubt not that while you, as a people, are suffering under the penalties of those cruel laws, which would compel you, against your own consciences, to observe a certain day of the week as the Christian Sabbath, you will, with us, be ready to lift up your hands and your voices in behalf of those who are suffering under laws still more cruel and severe, making it even a crime for them to read the Holy Scriptures, which alone are able to make them wise unto salvation.

The Society which has chosen me to represent them in your body at this time, is strictly a Missionary Society, and its object is to propagate a gospel, which shall not only teach the servant to be obedient to his master, but shall teach all—slaveholders not excepted—to do justly and love mercy—to do unto others as they would that others should do unto them. We are called a Free Mission Society, because our treasury is to be kept free from the avails of slave labor, and because we recognize no helpers in our work except those who are willing to be known as friends to the oppressed, and in favor of equal rights. Believing that the position we have taken, and the principles we are inculcating, are such as will commend themselves to your Christian regard and confidence, we affectionately invite your coöperation with us, in the great work in which we are engaged. We have missionaries now in different parts of the United States, in Canada, and in Hayti; and we are now about to send one into the Southern States, acting under the high commission, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

We were much gratified in the visit with which we were favored by our worthy brother Griswold, who met with us as your messenger, and we would cheerfully invite a continuance of mutual correspondence. Our next meeting will be an adjournment of our Annual Meeting recently held at Charlestown, Mass., and will be held on Wednesday, the 6th of June next, at Utica, N. Y.

A DOMESTIC PICTURE.

BY RICHARD COE, JR.

Our Little Boy.

When the evening shadows gather
Round about our quiet hearth,
Comes our eldest born unto us,
Bending humbly to the earth!
And with hands enclasped tightly,
And with meek eyes raised above,
This the prayer he offers nightly
To the Source of light and love:

"Bless my parents, oh! my Father!
Bless my little sister dear;
While I gently take my slumber,
Be thy guardian angels near!
Should no morning's dawn e'er greet me,
Beaming brightly from the skies,
Thine the eye of love to meet me
In the paths of Paradise!"

Now a glad "good night" he gives us,
And he seals it with a kiss;
Naught of earthly sorrow grieves us
In an hour so full of bliss!
Now our arms about him wreathing,
One fond kiss before he sleep;
Soon we hear his gentle breathing
In a slumber calm and deep.

Our Little Girl.

Our tender babe! our bright-eyed one!
Our youngest, darling joy,
We teach, at evening hour, to kneel
Beside our little boy;
And though she cannot lisp a word
Nor breathe a simple prayer,
We know her Maker blesseth her
The while she kneeleth there.

And, oh! we love our little one,
So artless and so pure;
She hath so many winning ways
Our fondness to secure;
And while she thus in silence kneels,
Some angel-prompted tone,
Unheard by us, may mingle with
The prayer to Mercy's throne!

And she, too, fondly comes to us
With eyes of sparkling bliss,
And, like her brother, she receives
A good-night, parting kiss.
Nor aught of fear disturbs our breast
The while to sleep she's given,
For such as she will ever find
The guardianship of Heaven!

FAMILY PRAYER—AN ANECDOTE.

A pious tradesman, conversing with a minister on family worship, related the following highly instructive circumstance respecting himself:—

"When I first began business for myself, I was determined, through grace, to be particularly conscientious with respect to family prayer. Accordingly I persevered for many years in the delightful practice of domestic worship. Morning and evening, every member of my family was required to be present: nor would I allow my apprentices to be absent on any account. In a few years the advantages of these engagements appeared manifestly conspicuous; the blessings of the upper and the nether springs followed me; health and happiness attended my family, and prosperity my business. At length, such was my rapid increase in trade, and the necessity of devoting every possible moment to my customers, that I began to think whether family prayer did not occupy too much of our time in the morning. Pious scruples arose respecting my intentions of relinquishing this part of my duty: but at length worldly interest prevailed so far as to induce me to excuse the attendance of my apprentices; and not long after it was deemed advisable, for the more eager prosecution of our business, to make the prayer with my wife, when we arose in the morning, suffice for the day. Notwithstanding the repeated checks of conscience that followed this base omission, the calls of a flourishing concern, and the prospect of an increasing family, appeared so imperious and commanding, that I found an easy excuse for this fatal evil, especially as I did not omit prayer altogether. My conscience was almost seared with a hot iron, when it pleased the Lord to awaken me by a singular providence.

"One day I received a letter from a young man who had formerly been my apprentice, previous to my omitting family prayer. Not doubting but I continued domestic worship, his letter was chiefly on this subject; it was couched in the most affectionate and respectful terms. But judge of my surprise and confusion when I read these words:—'O, my dear master, never, never shall I be able sufficiently to thank you for the precious privilege with which you indulged me in your family devotions. O, sir, eternity will be too short to praise my God for what I learned there. It was there that I first beheld my lost and wretched state as a sinner; it was there that I first knew the way to salvation; and there that I first experienced the preciousness of 'Christ in me, the hope of glory.' O, sir, permit me to say, Never, never neglect those precious engagements. You have yet a family, and more apprentices: may your house be the birth-place of their souls.' I could read no farther: every line flashed condemnation in my face. I trembled; I shuddered; I was alarmed at the blood of my children and apprentices, that I apprehended was soon to be demanded at my foul murdering hands.

"Filled with confusion, and bathed in tears, I fled for refuge in secret. I spread the letter before God. I agonized; and—but you can better conceive, than I can describe, my feelings; suffice it to say, that light broke in upon my disconsolate soul—a sense of blood-bought pardon was obtained. I immediately flew to my family—presented them before the Lord; and from that day to the present, I have been and am determined, through grace, that whenever business becomes too large to permit family prayer, I will give up the superfluous part of my business, and retain my devotion. Better to lose a few shillings than become the deliberate murderer of my family, and the instrument of ruin to my own soul."

THE WIDOW'S PRAYER ANSWERED.

A correspondent of the Tract Magazine gives the following account as she had it from the lips of a pious widow of her acquaintance:—

"One evening we were eating our supper; we had nothing but bread, and of that not sufficient to satisfy our hunger. 'Mother,' said little John, when he was finishing his last morsel, 'what shall we do to-morrow morning? there is no bread in the house; we shall have no breakfast.' I answered him, 'Do not fear, John; God has not forsaken us; let us pray to him, and be assured he will remember us.' I made him kneel down by my side, and prayed to God, that he would in his goodness have pity upon us, and give us bread for the morrow. I then put my child to bed, telling him to go to sleep quietly, and to depend upon his God, who never forgot those who put their trust in him. I myself went to bed, firmly believing that my God had heard my prayer, and, commending myself to the protection of our Lord Jesus Christ, I slept comfortably till four in the morning, when John woke me; 'Mother,' said he, 'is the bread come?' Poor little fellow! he had but a scanty supper, and was very hungry. 'No,' I answered, 'it is not yet come, but be quiet, and go to sleep again; it will come.' We both went to sleep; I was awakened a little before six in the morning, by some one rapping at my window. 'Dame Bartlet,' said a woman, 'you must get up immediately, Mrs. Martin's dairymaid is taken very ill, and you must come and milk her cows;' here then was bread for us. I went to Mrs. Martin's, and milked her cows, and afterwards sat down in the kitchen to breakfast; but I thought of my child, and could not eat. Mrs. Martin observing me, said, 'You do not eat your breakfast, Dame Bartlet.' I thanked her, and told her I had left a little boy at home in bed, very hungry; if she would permit me, I should prefer carrying my breakfast home to him. 'Eat your breakfast now,' was the kind answer of Mrs. Martin; 'you shall carry some breakfast home to your little boy besides.' Mrs. Martin then gave me a basket of provisions, sufficient for myself and child for two or three days. As I returned home, I could not but thank my God, and feel grateful to him, and my kind benefactress; I rejoiced my little boy's heart by a sight of my breakfast. He got up directly, eager to partake of Mrs. Martin's kindness; after a good breakfast, I made him kneel down again by my side, whilst I returned thanks to our gracious God, who had heard our prayers the evening before, and who had given us a kind benefactress. When we rose, I took him in my lap, and said to him, 'Now, John, I hope what has happened to us will be remembered by you through your whole life. Last evening we had eaten all our bread, we had none left for this morning; but we prayed to God that, through his mercy, and for the sake of his Son Jesus Christ, he would give us our daily bread. God has heard us, and has given us bread; may this teach you through life to put your trust and faith in your heavenly Father. I most earnestly pray to God that you may never forget this.'"

Dame Bartlet concluded her interesting narrative by adding, "And, madam, I have never wanted bread since. I am blessed in my son, who is now a man; he is dutiful and good to me, and has never forgotten the pains his mother took with him in his childhood, nor the exhoration I then gave him, to trust in God."

USES OF THE BLACK CURRANT.

The Black English Currant is represented to have qualities that entitle it to extensive propagation. A kind of wine has been manufactured from it, which is celebrated for its medicinal properties. The Boston Medical Examiner, quoted by Fessenden, said of this wine, "It has all the good properties of the best Port, without any of its heating or constipating effects. We could name several instances, where, in great debility and exhaustion, after protracted and severe fever, and from other causes, nothing else could be thought of or taken with pleasure or advantage, in which this wine proved grateful to the palate, and most friendly to the stomach; in which, indeed, it was the principal means of conducting the patient to health and strength. Its use has been attended with remarkable success in the early stages of cholera and dysentery; and again in the later stages of these diseases, after the symptoms of inflammation or febrile excitement had ceased. It has been strikingly remedial in the low stages of typhoid and billious fever. We have not room to enumerate many other morbid affections, in which this wine has proved useful. In sore throat, it has, for many years, been considered almost a specific remedy."

These opinions are confirmed by other testimony. Kenrick, in his American Orchardist, says: "From the black currant a jelly is made, of considerable medicinal efficacy; a wine is also made from them, which possesses far superior medicinal virtues to Port wine. The jelly has been highly recommended for disorders of the throat, and as a necessary article in the stores of ships sailing to the East Indies. A liquor is prepared from the black currant, which, Mr. Forsyth states, is possessed of great medicinal efficacy in obstinate coughs, &c. The currants for this purpose are bruised, and, being placed in a jar, whiskey or any other species of alcohol is poured over them; the jar is then covered close for a fortnight; after this, the liquor is strained and bottled."

The jelly from the black currant is farther described as being fine for the table, and the wine as of peculiar flavor, which, to those long accustomed to its use, is delectable.

He who forgets the fountain from whence he drank, and the tree under whose shade he gamboled, in the day of his youth, is a stranger to the sweetest impressions of the human heart.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, June 7, 1849.

MR. MORTON AND THE SYNOD OF THE REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

Last week we published the Circular of Rev. J. W. Morton to the members of the Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, setting forth his views in relation to the Sabbath. As we then intimated, his trial for the heresy supposed to be contained therein, took place at the session of the Synod in Philadelphia. The following account of it is prepared from a report of the proceedings published in the Philadelphia Daily Sun:—

In the afternoon of the first day of the session, May 23d, after reading the minutes of the morning, David Scott stated that J. W. Morton was not a member of the Pittsburg Presbytery, as he was dismissed more than eighteen months since. The Moderator decided that J. W. Morton is a constituent member of this Synod as its Missionary. The Moderator then announced the Standing Committees, after which David Scott rose and stated, in substance, that J. W. Morton had made known a change of views in regard to the Sabbath, maintaining that the seventh day of the week is still the Lord's day, and moved that a committee of three be appointed to confer with Mr. Morton, and to report what should be done in the case—said report to be presented to-morrow afternoon, at the commencement of the session.

At three o'clock P. M., May 24th, the Committee appointed to confer with J. W. Morton, reported, by preferring a libel against him, which, after various motions, was at length sustained as relevant—a copy of the libel directed to be served on Mr. Morton, with citation to appear for trial to-morrow afternoon. It was intimated that he would then have liberty to argue the relevancy of libel.

May 25th, 3 P. M.—Order of the day, the trial of J. W. Morton, called for. Libel read. It charges him with maintaining, that the first day of the week is not the Christian Sabbath.

The Moderator reminded the Synod, that it was now a judicial court, for the trial of charges alledged against an individual.

Mr. Morton was asked if he was ready for trial; he answered, that he was ready.

Mr. Morton asked whether he was charged with denying the existence of the institution, or its divine appointment.

The Moderator could give no farther information than was contained in the libel.

Mr. Morton stated, that he had denied, and does deny, that what is called the Christian Sabbath is of divine appointment—and he pleads the irrelevancy of the libel, for the Old Testament laws respecting the weekly Sabbath are uniform and definite.

The Moderator stated that this court, sitting in judgement, cannot hear any thing impugning the standards.

J. M. Wilson stated that Mr. Morton had said that he intended to plead against the relevancy of the charge from the standards.

The Moderator stated that Mr. Morton was to prove either, 1st, that an appropriation of the first day of the week to secular purposes is not sinful; or, 2d, that he is not guilty.

R. L. Wilson asked if it was not a good evidence if Mr. M. could show that the day had no warrant.

Mr. Sommerville said there were two questions to be asked, 1st, Is a thing right in itself? In this case appeal must be made to the Bible; 2d, What does the Reformed Presbyterian Church believe to be right? In this case appeal must be made to the subordinate standards. This is the question in the present instance. This is not a court of review discussing the propriety of altering the standards.

J. R. Wilson said that it was right to plead to the relevancy of the libel in this way. For example, suppose a man denies that the deacon has power over all the temporalities of the church, and he is libeled for the error, he would have a right to endeavor to show by the word of God, that he is correct. He would not contend against this, although he did not believe that he could sustain his position.

The Moderator decided that Mr. Morton had no right to prove that the Sabbath was not of divine appointment. An appeal was taken from his decision. The Synod sustained the Moderator, but it was evident that a good number of the members did not vote.

Mr. Morton then declined the authority of the court, protested against any future action in his case, and appealed to the head of the church, for reasons to be given before the rising of this court.

Moved by David Scott, that the appointment of Mr. Morton, as Missionary to Hayti, be revoked. Carried.

Moved by David Scott, that he be suspended from the exercise of the ministry and the privileges of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. Carried.

Such is the report of the case furnished by the daily papers; and it is in the main correct, as we are informed by those who witnessed the whole proceeding. For the farther elucidation of the subject, we have obtained, and copy below, the Libel preferred against Mr. Morton, and Mr. Morton's Reasons for Protest and Appeal—the latter document not on record any where else.

LIBEL PREFERRED AGAINST J. W. MORTON.

Whereas, denying that the first day of the week is the day on which the Christian Sabbath should be kept, is a heinous sin and scandal, contrary to the Word of God, and the Profession of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, founded thereon—(Acts 20: 7, "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread," &c.; Shorter Catechism, "From the beginning of the world to the resurrection of Christ, God appointed the seventh day of the week to be the weekly Sabbath, and the first day of the week ever since, to continue to the end of the world, which is the Christian Sabbath,")—yet true it is, that you, Rev. J. W. Morton, are guilty of the scandal above stated, in so far as you, the said J. W. Morton, at Port-au-Prince, Hayti, 17th of January, 1849, did publish a Circular, in which you oppugned and denied that the first day of the week is the Christian Sabbath, which being found relevant, and proved against you, you ought to be proceeded against by the censures of the Lord's House.

A true copy. By order the Synod.
[Signed] JOHN WALLACE, Ass't Clerk.

REASONS OF PROTEST AND APPEAL.

I do respectfully protest against the action of Synod in my case, on the 25th of the present month, and appeal therefrom to the Lord Jesus Christ, the King and Head of the Church, for the following Reasons:—

1st. Because I was not allowed to prove the irrelevancy of the charge made against me, by an appeal to the Bible, "the only rule of faith and manners."

2d. Because I believe that the statements, on the subject of the Sabbath, set forth in our subordinate standards, are inconsistent with one another, and in part contrary to the Word of God; yet it was by these unscriptural portions, that I was tried and condemned.

Brethren, I entertain no hard feelings towards you. My daily prayer to God is, that you may be saved, and led into all truth. I did hope that you would hear and consider the claims of the Lord's holy Sabbath, when presented in a mild and affectionate manner. But either I have failed to present the question with sufficient tenderness, or you have determined to avoid all discussion in regard to it.

It grieves me to the soul to bid you farewell. Both God and man will bear witness, in the day of final reckoning, that you have trampled down, by the resistless force of an overwhelming majority, one who was endeavoring with both hands to hold up the standard of the great Covenant God of our fathers. But though for the present cast down, I am not dismayed. The Sabbath of the Lord is a richer treasure than the richest you can either give or take away. "Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy; when I fall, I shall arise; when I sit in darkness, the Lord shall be a light unto me. I will bear the indignation of the Lord, because I have sinned against him, until he plead my cause, and execute judgment for me; he will bring me forth to the light, and I shall behold his righteousness."

Brethren, I shall meet you before the judgment seat of Christ, on that day when he shall come "with ten thousand of his saints." "Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, amen." J. W. MORTON.

PHILADELPHIA, May 29th, 1849.

—There, reader, you have the facts connected with the trial and suspension of a Minister of the Gospel—a Missionary of the Cross—by the highest judicatory of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. We scarcely know what to say in the way of comment. The proceedings throughout strike us as a flagrant outrage upon the principles of Justice and Christianity. When Mr. Morton went to Hayti, less than two years ago, he had the confidence of his brethren, and was regarded by them as a fit person to establish a new missionary station. While laboring there, circumstances transpired which called his attention to the subject of the Sabbath, and he became convinced that he ought to keep the seventh day of the week. Immediately he addressed a Circular to his co-presbyters, stating the change which had taken place in his views, and affectionately inviting them to investigate the subject. Five months afterward, he meets them assembled in the capacity of a Synod. And how do they treat him? Do they, in the spirit of Christian brotherhood, endeavor to show him his error, and persuade him to come back to what they profess to regard as the truth? Not at all. Their first step is to accuse him, in the public assembly, of heresy; and there, one would naturally suppose, the Circular, upon which the accusation was based, should have been read, but it was not. The next step is to appoint a Committee to consider and report upon the case. They present a libel, charging him with "heinous sin" for "denying that the first day of the week is the day on which the Christian Sabbath should be kept," "contrary to the Word of God and the Profession of the Reformed Presbyterian Church." And there, again, one would naturally suppose, an opportunity should have been given the accused to show that his doctrine is not contrary to the Word of God, or to any part of the "Profession" based on the Word of God; but no such opportunity was given. Then Mr. Morton declines the authority of the Court, and appeals to the Head of the Church, for reasons to be subsequently presented. But when those reasons, written out in the briefest manner possible, are presented, they are not entertained, or allowed a place on the records of the Court. Finally, the poor victim of ecclesiastical tyranny is suspended from the ministry and the privileges of the church, without being permitted in any way to state the position which he occupies, or the considerations which have led him to it.

And all this is done by the Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. Reformed from what, pray? Not from Popery, surely, for here is the very essence of Popery. Not from Presbyterianism of the older sort, we hope, for to that we have never dared to attribute such monstrous usurpation. Upon what the church which does such things is a reformation or improvement, we must confess ourselves unable to see. Many a time have we listened to homilies in favor of Presbyteries, Synods, and General Assemblies, based upon the notion that they give accused persons better chances of a fair trial than they would have in congregations. But if this be a specimen of the action of such bodies, we beg to be delivered from their jurisdiction.

A QUERY.

Suppose some dozen or twenty persons, members of half a dozen different Seventh-day Baptist churches, should be brought together, either by accident or design, at some village distant from any of the churches to which they respectively belong. For example, say two members of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in New York, two from the Plainfield Church, three from Pawcatuck, four from 1st Hopkinton, two from Waterford, two from Piscataway, and five from Shiloh, twenty in all, happen to be brought together in Philadelphia. The Sabbath comes on, and they obtain a place for holding meeting. It is found that in the company is one regularly ordained minister, who conducts the religious exercises for them. So far, all very well. After preaching, some one proposes to celebrate the Lord's Supper; and it is found that in the company are two deacons, who can be called on to assist in serving the elements. The query is this, Is it right—is it according to gospel order, for them to proceed according to the proposition, and have the Lord's Supper administered, although they are no regularly constituted church, but intend, all of them, to return to their respective homes the following week?

Now, Mr. Editor, if you, or any of your correspondents, will decide this question in the affirmative, and show good reasons for the decision, I may hold my peace; but if you decide it in the negative, I may have something farther to say. I will only add, that my object in proposing this query is to obtain light upon a question which has not a little perplexed me.

ALPHA.

THE ENGLISH ANNIVERSARIES.

The Benevolent Societies of Great Britain have their "May Meetings," which are similar in many respects to the Anniversaries held in this country. From a report of them, prepared by a correspondent of "The Independent," we gather the following facts.

The Annual Meeting of the Baptist Missionary Society was first in the order of time. A Report was read on the occasion, from which it appears that the Society has in Continental India 35 missionaries, and 67 native teachers and preachers. In Ceylon and other East India islands, 6 missionaries, and upwards of 40 teachers. In connection with these are 1,800 church-members, and 4,000 children under instruction. In India, 102 schools. The volumes of Scriptures printed up to 1837, 240,065; between 1837 and 1847, the number printed amounted to 503,205; together, 743,270. Since 1847, the issues have been 133,000 volumes. Apart from their special work, the missionaries have accomplished literary labors which appear to be almost incredible. They have written and published fourteen grammars and nine dictionaries—mostly in languages not previously possessing these elementary works. The labors of the Baptist missionaries in the West Indies are well known. The missions to Africa, which to some extent grew out of the West India mission, present some striking results. Though only seven years have passed since their commencement, many thousands of persons have been clothed and taught, and a written language, and parts of the life-giving Word, presented to tribes of Africans. The financial portion of the Report is painful. Though there has been a diminution of expenditure to the amount of nearly £1,000, yet there is an addtion of £1,500 to the debt—the total of which is more than £5,000.

The Baptist Irish Society held a meeting, at which some very interesting facts connected with Ireland were brought to light. During the terrible famine of 1847–8, the officers of this Society were enabled to minister to the necessities of many by a special relief-fund, which was most carefully administered. The readiness with which Bible-readers and missionaries were received was the subject of special notice, and certainly denotes a marked change in the spirit of the Irish people. One of the speakers remarked, that while the Eastablished Religion had failed, and had no hold upon the people, Popery had overacted itself; religion as thus presented had failed; civil government had failed; insurrection had failed; and the Irish were shut up to the remedy of the Gospel. A speech of Rev. W. Hamilton described the process which had been going on in the midst of the Irish population. Formerly not only the Romish priest but the Episcopal clergyman had counteracted the labors of those who would present simple scriptural truth to the Irish. A change for the better had taken place; the kindness shown to them in their deep distress had proved to the Irish that Protestants were not naturally their enemies; hence many had, without solicitation or inducement, become hearers of the Word. Striking instances of the happy results were given. This Society has in Ireland 15 churches, 15 missionaries, and 16 Scripture-readers; 30 schools, and upwards of 2,000 scholars; during the year 138 members had been added to the church. The income is small—being under £3,000. Pressed by the peculiar claims of the period, the Committee had exceeded the income of the year by upwards of £1,000.

The meeting of the Baptist Home Missionary Society gave occasion to exhibit the ignorance and practical heathenism which so largely prevails, particularly in the rural districts of England. Glancing at some of the facts showing the moral condition of the rural population, the chairman pointedly said, "Your income, I am told, is but £4,000 per annum. It ought to be £40,000. I can assure you, that unless we individually, as members of a Christian church, feel it our duty to extend this cause at home, we shall not prosper abroad." The central stations of the Society, supported either in whole or in part from its funds, are 111, the subordinate stations 186. By this agency the Gospel is preached to about 23,000 persons weekly, in the small towns, villages, and hamlets of the country. The number of schools is 115, of scholars, 7,000; and about 1,000 teachers are engaged in this labor of love. The number of additions to the churches during the year has been 562; the total number 4,335. The income £4,644; expenditure £4,645.

The British and Foreign Bible Society held its 45th Anniversary in Exeter Hall, London, on the 2d of May. The entire receipts of the year ending March 31, 1849, amounted to £95,933 6s. 1d.—being an increase over the receipts of the previous year of £5,786 17s. 9d. The amount applicable to the general purposes of the Society was £25,574 14s. 4d., including £7,636 16s. 3d. special contributions in aid of the extended circulation of the Scriptures on the Continent, and £31,993 15s. 5d. free contributions from auxiliary societies—showing an increase in this item of £695 11s. 1d. The receipts for Bibles and Testaments amounted to £43,328 11s. 10d. The issues of the Society for the year amounted to 1,107,518—namely, from the dépôt at home, 802,133; from the dépôts abroad, 305,385. The total issues of the Society since its formation had been 21,973,355. The expenditure during the past year had been £88,831 1s. 2d. The engagements of the Society at home amounted to upwards of £30,000, and those abroad to nearly £30,000 more.

WORK OF GRACE ON A MISSIONARY SHIP.—In the Baptist Missionary Magazine for May, we find an interesting letter from Rev. L. Jewett, one of the missionaries who went out to Madras in the ship Bowditch, last fall. In the early part of the voyage, the captain would not allow the missionaries to say a word to the sailors on religion, nor permit religious services on deck; saying that it was of no use to try to convert sailors. When they had been out about three months, he sent them word that they had "full permission to visit the forecastle, and warn every man to flee from the wrath to come." On the 18th of January the brethren resolved to spend the day in prayer; and soon after the exercises had commenced the captain sent them word that he had found the Redeemer.

"Captain P. said he had been told by sea-captains, that missionaries go to India to live a life of ease; and he believed it was so. But as he walked the deck he saw that we were happy, while he was unhappy; this first awakened him. While reading Pilgrim's Progress, which was lent him, he used to say to himself: 'There go Bunyan's pilgrims—they are going to heaven; I wish I were going with them.' Thus he was led from step to step, till, on his knees, on the 18th of January, 1849, he found Christ precious to his soul." From that time all things on board the ship wore a new aspect. The sailors were allowed to attend service regularly, and several of them were converted, including one young man, the son of a missionary formerly employed at Cape Town by the London Missionary Society.

THE SECEDERS FROM THE ENGLISH CHURCH.—The Independent says that Mr. Shore still lies in prison, but the Committee appointed at a grand meeting in Exeter Hall to manage his case, have determined to pay his "costs," and thus effect his release. Mr. Noel has addressed a letter to the Bishop of London, informing him that he has taken the oaths of dissent, and has preached and performed other acts indicative of his position. He says that he cannot take advantage of the bill now before Parliament for the "relief" of seceding clergymen, for that would be "to purchase exemption from legal penalties by consenting to deposition from the ministry;" and he cannot admit that in "ceasing to be a minister of the establishment" he has "ceased to be a minister of Christ." He concludes by saying, in substance, that though he attaches no special importance to episcopal ordination, he yet recognizes its validity, and cannot therefore regard himself as a layman. He shall continue accordingly to exercise his right of preaching and administering the sacraments; and if he is to be imprisoned for it, he is willing to abide the issue.

INSTRUCTING THE COLORED PEOPLE.—The Southern Baptist Triennial Convention has been engaged in considering the education of the colored population of the South. The report of the Committee gave rise to a protracted debate, the stumbling-block being the conflict with the laws of some of the Southern States, which forbid the education of slaves, and do not allow them to assemble together for religious worship. Nevertheless, the Convention passed the following important resolution:—

Resolved, That we regard the religious instruction of our colored population as a duty imperatively incumbent upon us as Southern Christians; that we regard the preaching of the Word of God as the best means of discharging this duty, and we earnestly recommend to our churches to devote a stated portion of their public exercises to the particular instruction of colored persons in the truths of the Bible.

THE METHODIST CHURCH SOUTH.—The Southern Christian Advocate says that there are nineteen Annual Conferences in the Methodist Church South, covering the Southern States and the Indian Territory. The superintendence of the whole is in the hands of four bishops; the regular pastoral and missionary work is intrusted to the care of 1,476 traveling preachers, being an increase during the past year of 73. The total number of superannuated preachers is 108, and of local preachers 3,026, a decrease of 116, though some of the Conferences give no returns. The total number of members is 491,786, viz.: whites 354,258, colored 134,153, Indians 3,375, exhibiting upon the returns of last year, an increase of 26,232. The missionary collections of the past year are reported from sixteen of the nineteen Conferences, and amount to a little upwards of $65,000. Putting down the Conferences not reported, according to the returns of the previous year, the aggregate missionary revenue will stand at about $67,000, an improvement of more than $4,000 upon last year's operations.

CHURCH CONSECRATION AT JERUSALEM.—On Sunday, Jan. 21, the house of worship erected by the members of the Church of England at Jerusalem, was consecrated by Bishop Alexander, with all the forms of that Church. The Syrian Bishop, with some priests and deacons, attended, and expressed himself deeply interested by the service. There were also some Armenian priests present; but the Armenian Patriarch, who had in a manner accepted the Bishop's invitation, did not come, being indisposed. Some Greek Catholic priests were present, but none of the dignitaries. The Bishop used a Collect prepared for the occasion, concluding thus:

"Bless all thy servants by whose common care this tabernacle has been reared among the ruins of Jerusalem; prosper their work, and give success to their endeavor to lead the sons and daughters of Abraham to their Redeemer. Bless all those that pray for the peace of Jerusalem; and grant, O Lord, that all those for whose good this pious work is intended may show forth their thankfulness, by making a right use thereof, to the glory of thy blessed name, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

A NEW MORAVIAN MISSION.—Rev. H. A. Graves, of Boston, who has been spending the winter in the island of Jamaica, for his health, writes to the Watchman and Reflector, under date of March 7:

"I passed an evening during last week with a company of Moravians, who are to embark in a few days for the Mosquito shore, as pioneer Missionaries. It is remarkable how these excellent people seek out the darkest, most unattractive spots on the earth, to labor for their Master. Rev. Mr. Pfeiffer and wife, the eldest of this company, are natives of Germany, but have labored in this island for nearly twenty years. They are tried and most worthy missionaries. The others are young men directly from Europe; one of them being a native of Labrador, and educated partly in Scotland. What a transition! from frigid Labrador to torrid Mosquitia! and as a Christian Missionary!"

RELIGION AMONG THE NOBILITY OF ENGLAND.—Within a few months past, meetings have been established in London among some of the nobility. An English journal mentions the following incident connected with these meetings:

"Within the last six or seven weeks, the lady of a distinguished Peer has thrown open her drawing-room once every week, for the purpose of holding devotional meetings, on the part of persons of her own rank in society. As many as a hundred noblemen, and gentlemen, mostly Members of Parliament, with their wives or other near relations, meet together on these occasions, and spend the evenings in purely christian intercourse. Prayer and praise, and the reading of a chapter of the Bible, by one of the clergymen present, with a few expository observations, constitute the services of the evening."

ALEX. CAMPBELL ON EMANCIPATION.—The founder and leader of the numerous sect known as Campbellites, has spoken out very plainly and worthily on the subject of emancipation in Kentucky. The following are his words:—

"A time has come in Kentucky, when the Christian population of that noble and rapidly advancing State will speak out like Christians at the polls, and demonstrate its love of liberty and right, by extending them to every thing in the form of man, that breathes its air or treads its soil. It will be her greatest honor, as I am sure it will be her greatest interest, to be first in this great work." ALEXANDER CAMPBELL.

TRAVEL ON THE HUDSON.—Steamboat fare between New York and Albany is cheap enough this season to suit the most economical. Fifty cents is the common price of passage, and there are boats of an inferior quality running for less. The Oregon and the Isaac Newton are the favorite night boats, and they run in connection, leaving New York on alternate evenings. Of day boats, the Hendrik Hudson is considered the best, and she leaves Albany on Monday morning, New York on Tuesday morning, and so on through the week.

THE CHOLERA seems to be decreasing in the South and West, and increasing at the North. At Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Brooklyn, and the adjacent cities, cases are frequently occurring; but they are generally of a mild type. The weather of last week, in New York, was exactly adapted to foster the disease, and the number of cases increased from half-a-dozen to twenty per day. We agree with a remark in one of the daily papers relative to these facts, that "there is abundant reason for being circumspect in diet, regular in hours of rest, abstinent from stimulants, moderate in exercise, and regular in ablutions, but no reason at all for getting into a panic."

THE CREVASSE at New Orleans remained unchecked at the last reports, and it was thought that two weeks would be required to stop it. A dispatch dated May 30, says that "already half the city is inundated; the inhabitants are flying from their homes, and business matters are being wound up."

THE FOREIGN NEWS, which will be found in another column, shows that the great struggle in Europe is not yet ended. The impression which prevailed a month ago, that the Pope would soon be reinstated at Rome, seems not to have been well-founded. Students of prophecy will find much to reflect upon in the movements going on throughout Europe.

THE FOREIGN NEWS.

The steamship Niagara arrived at New York since our last, bringing seven days later news from Europe. The following summary of movements on the Continent embraces all that is really important. It will be seen that the French and Neapolitan troops are held in check by the heroism of the Romans—that the temporal power of the Pope is not likely soon to be restored—that there is a state of confusion and insurrection throughout Europe quite as threatening as at any former period.

The elections in France on the 13th passed off without a single violation of good order. No definite opinion can yet be formed as to the relative success of parties. No doubt is entertained but there is a large majority in favor of peace and order.

The French expedition to reïnstate the Pope had not effected an entrance into Rome at the last advices.

The Neapolitan army has not been more successful, having been defeated in an attack on the 5th ult.

All accounts concur, that it will be impossible to restore the temporal power of the Papacy in any form. We have before us most frightful details of priests having been dragged forth from their hiding-places by the populace, and put to death—their bodies have been hacked into the smallest pieces, and then cast into the Tiber. The combined powers of Europe will scarcely be able even to set up his Holiness again on the throne of the Vatican. The tide of feeling has overflowed him, and the Romans seem now bent on excluding Sacerdotal and Political authority for ever.

The war in Hungary assumes no new feature—the fighting goes on unremittingly, and the fortunes of the Hungarians are reported to be in the ascendant. They are said to be within a few days' march of Vienna, to which point the Russians are pressing forward as rapidly as possible. It is thought that the strong protest of France, seconded probably by England, may have the effect to check the advance of the Russians.

Sicily is again in a state of insurrection.

It is stated that the Danish question is all but settled. The only positive facts are, that the Danes have suffered another defeat, and that Lord Palmerston has intimated that the attention of the British Government is still directed to that quarter, with a view to effect a restoration of peace.

The plot gradually reveals itself in Germany. The sovereigns have evidently combined for the overthrow of the Liberalists.

There has been a formidable disturbance at Dusseldorf on the Rhine, but it has been suppressed.

At Frankfort the riot was becoming more revolutionary and anarchical every day. All the moderate men have in consequence left.

The California Overland Emigration.—The St. Louis Reville, of May 23, says that Mr. Alding, a member of the Ottawa (Illinois) company of emigrants, had just returned to that city from St. Joseph. He states that there exists the greatest dissatisfaction among the emigrants who have not yet left St. Joseph. Difficulties and quarreling, growing out of the general discontent, were occurring daily among the emigrants. Many companies have disbanded, and are selling out their outfits at any cost to raise the means to return home. The perfect sacrifice of property is an evidence of the dissatisfaction which exists. Auctions are had daily, where a person might procure himself a complete outfit, including clothing, saddles, &c., &c., at a less price than they could be procured in any Eastern city. Many emigrants also, whom extravagancies have plunged into pecuniary difficulties, have had their equipments seized by the Sheriff and sacrificed at auction. The general impression at St. Joseph seems to be, that the emigrants will not only experience a great many difficulties and troubles in the journey, but that many heavily laden wagons will have to be left behind. The majority of wagons, it seems, have started out over-loaded. A teamster was engaged with his wagon to accompany one party with a load of corn to a distance of about 100 miles back of St. Joseph. He fulfilled his contract, and in returning, literally filled his wagon with bacon and provisions of every description, which had been cast on the road-side from overloaded wagons.

Cholera Precautions.—Two or three precautions are most important to be borne in mind. 1. On the appearance, or reported appearance of the epidemic at any place, every one should avoid the excitement of alarm or panic, for this will make any one the more readily susceptible of an attack of the disease. 2. In case of an attack, immediate attention should be given, in the first stage of the complaint, viz: the diarrhœa. Dr. Drake, of Cincinnati, who had much experience in treating the disease in 1832-33, and who then wrote and published a treatise upon it, says that this is not a premonitory symptom, but the disease itself—that it may generally be arrested, if attended to in that early stage, but that it cannot be successfully treated unless the patient will lie by. It is at the peril of his life that he continues on his feet. Mr. Cist of the Advertiser, (Cincinnati,) expresses the opinion, that no disease which has destroyed as many lives as the cholera, is as easily manageable, if promptly attended to. He says that in 1832, nine of his family were taken down with it, and by careful and judicious treatment, all recovered. [Western Recorder.

Shooting a Crazy Man.—As A. T. Penniman of Canton, Mass., was going into Boston, early the other morning, a stranger seized his horse by the bridle, and demanded to ride. Mr. P. supposing him to be a highwayman, discharged a pistol at him, and riding on, gave the alarm at the first house on the road. Search was made, and the wounded man was found near the scene of the occurrence described above. He turned out to be a peddler, who had been seen in that vicinity for several days previous. He is supposed to be insane. He will probably survive his wound.

Incidents of a Cruise.—The United States ship Independence, just retured to Norfolk, sail-from Boston on the 29th of August, 1846. During her absence she has been at sea four hundred days, and in foreign ports five hundred and ninety-five days, and has sailed altogether very near fifty-seven thousand miles. Her greatest run was 277 knots by the log, or 279 by observation, equal to 320 statute miles, during 24 consecutive hours. She ran 272 knots, under royals, lower and topmast studding sails. Her greatest speed during the cruise was 13 1-2 knots, and 13 knots under royals. The port of Mazatlan was blockaded by the Independence during the thirty-five days she was anchored there in 1847. From November 12, 1847, to May 7, 1848, she held military possession of Mazatlan, in conjunction with the frigate Congress.

Surgical Operation.—The New London Daily Chronicle tells of a successful operation recently performed by Dr. Albert Utter, of that city. It seems that a child of Mr. Lewis Daniels, one year old, had been afflicted for a month with an ailment in the throat and head, causing severe suffering and frequent bleeding. The occasion of this was not discovered, after careful and repeated examinations by physicians, and the case was considered hopeless. Doctor Utter saw the child, and became convinced that there was some hard substance lodged in the cavity communicating with the nose. With the consent of the parents, he cut a passage to it with a lancet, and drew out thence the jagged shell of a walnut more than three-fourths of an inch in diameter. The child is said to be doing well.

Building Association.—The Cincinnati Building Association has purchased thirty-six acres, about ten miles down the river, at $100 per acre. It is beautifully situated on the river and canal. It is to be divided into 200 lots, which will be sold at auction to the members, in order to make them pay according to their respective values. The first cost of the lots will be about $20 each. It is in contemplation to establish a foundry, roll-mill, cotton factory, &c., so that all can find abundant employment on the ground. The laborers will own these establishments and make the money, instead of capitalists. In addition to these advantages, they can purchase all goods and groceries at 25 per cent. discount; enjoy all the advantages of city and country, and be relieved from the disadvantages of both.

The Empire.—A dispatch to the Sunday Herald, dated at Newburgh on the evening of the 2d inst. says:

"The body of Delia Avery was recovered from the ladies' saloon of the Empire this afternoon. She was from Preston, Conn., and in company with the Ladd family, of Stonington, Conn. Her age was 33. Upon her person was found $118.48, chiefly in gold. Her brother, Oliver P. Avery, is here, and will take the remains of his sister to Preston for interment. In the ladies' saloon, from which Miss Avery was taken, there are yet several feet of water. The after lower cabin has not been reached. When the boat will be raised so as to float, it is impossible to tell. The work has been slow. The whole number of bodies found is 23."

◆

How to prevent the Cholera.—A correspondent of the Journal of Commerce says that a town in Tennessee has entirely escaped the scourge of the Cholera the past winter, not a case of it having occurred there, notwithstanding every other town in the vicinity suffered from it severely. This has been attributed, and no doubt correctly, to the free and universal use of quick-lime, fresh from the kilns, which was scattered through the gutters, cellars, privies and yards. Its disinfecting properties seizing, with avidity on all impure and deleterious gases, are well known, and where plentifully used, will no doubt under ordinary circumstances of prudence and cleanliness preserve the health of any cities and villages in the United States.

◆

Destruction of Slave Factories.—A Liberia letter, from Capt. Carlton of the bark Nehemiah Rich, says: "The English have destroyed all the slave factories at Galenas, and burnt the whole place down. They were to march on the slave factory at New Cess on the 1st of March, and I have not a doubt that ere this the last remnant of the slave factories between Palmas and Sherbro is forever effaced from that part of the country. All the citizens in Liberia are in high spirits from the flattering success the President has met with in his late tour. Trade was rather dull, but they were looking forward to the future with flattering prespects."

◆

Escape of a Convict Wife in her Husband's Attire.—A Mrs. McAdams was, a few weeks since, convicted of the crime of murder before the Circuit Court of Madison County, Miss. Her husband was allowed to visit her in prison frequently, and at last dressed her in a suit of his own clothes, by means of which she effected a passage from the prison. She was traced as far as Vicksburgh, where she took passage in a steamboat, and, from the last accounts, had not been arrested.

◆

Post-Office Trial.—A man named Wm. Robinson has been recently sentenced to three years' imprisonment at Windsor, Vt., for claiming and taking a letter directed to a namesake at East Windsor, Conn., and which contained a check on the Suffolk Bank for $175. He had previously taken out the letter, and returned it as not belonging to him. The agents of the Post Office Department followed him up, caught him in Canada, just as he had spent all the money, and brought him back.

◆

Miss Beecher and Western Schools.—Miss Catherine Beecher has lately made a visit to Milwaukie, to promote the cause of popular education. In addressing a few friends of the cause at that place, she explained the views and plans of the National Board. They are aiming, first to supply well-qualified teachers from the East, who are trained for the purpose. Next, they wish to secure to Woman her profession of teaching—the only liberal profession open to her. And, thirdly, not to remain dependent on the East for teachers, but to encourage high schools in the West. A committee of citizens were appointed at once to procure suitable premises for such a school in Milwaukie.

CHOLERA TREATMENT.

Important facts in the treatment of Asiatic Cholera, from the pen of H. G. O. Dwight, American Missionary at Constantinople:

"Where the cholera is raging we are continually hearing of persons who are well in the morning and are in their graves before night; and it is not to be doubted that there are some cases in which the very first attack of disease is the collapse, from which recovery is rare; but I can say with truth, that in every instance of these sudden deaths by cholera in which I have been able to investigate the circumstances, I have found the individual had been laboring under diarrhea for some days previous; generally this is so slight as not to be much noticed. It is attended with no pain, and no sickness of stomach, perhaps, and gives the person no particular inconvenience, but it is this very diarrhea which is insidiously preparing the system for the most dreadful onset of disease. Whenever the cholera is prevailing in any place, it should be a rule in every instance to stop the SLIGHTEST diarrhea immediately. For this we have a remedy always at hand. Opium, in some form or other, must be used immediately, and without fear. In the form of laudanum, perhaps it may be used most conveniently. At such times, it should be found in every house; every one in the family should give notice immediately when the first symptom of diarrhea makes its appearance. In mild cases, six drops of laudanum for an adult will be sufficient to check the disease. The dose should be repeated every four hours, until the diarrhea is stopped. This is a most important direction. I have used it with the best effect in many severe cases. When there is much pain and tendency to cramps and coldness in the extremities, a mixture of equal parts of laudanum, tincture of camphor, and tincture of rhubarb, eighteen drops, may be given an adult at a dose in mild cases. To be increased according to circumstances.

American Education Society.—This Society held a meeting in Boston last week. The Annual Report states the following facts:—New applicants received, 103. Whole number aided during the year, 396. In the Classical course, 186; in the Theological course, 210. Increase above last year, 31. Number aided at the West, 23. Sixty-three have entered the ministry this year. Ten, who were brought into the ministry by the Society, have embarked during the year as Missionaries to foreign lands. Balance on hand at the beginning of the year, $4-788 14; Receipts during the year, $27,301 79—making the resources of the year, $32,089 93. The receipts exceed those of last year $2,-327 65. Disbursements, $27,764 33—being $464 54 more than the receipts. Balance now on hand, $4,325 60.

SUMMARY.

Messrs. John V. de Grasse, of New York, and Thomas J. White, of Brooklyn, two colored medical students of Bowdoin Medical College, Brunswick, Me., have received the degree of M. D. at the close of the last term. Notwithstanding the doors of the Medical Colleges of this city were barred against them, they have pursued a regular medical course, and now have their diplomas in hand, intending to go to work in their respective cities. They are young men of intelligence and moral worth.

A letter dated Watchman's Cape, Coast of Patagonia, March 9, states, that on the 4th of March there was a severe gale at that place. The French ship La Tour d'Averne, was driven ashore, and the mate and eight men, being all there were on board, were drowned. Three schooners parted their chains; one was able to get clear, and returned in three days. The other two were lost.

The remaining portion of the Central Railroad of New Jersey is about to be completed to Easton, Pa. The whole distance from the city of New York to the Delaware at Easton, will be 75 miles. The Company are at present running over about 40 miles of the road from Elizabethport, and the remaining distance is being surveyed, with a view of putting it immediately under contract, to be completed the present year.

At St. Louis, on the 29th of May, the steamer San Francisco collapsed a flue while she was leaving port for Missouri. Mr. Parker, the mate, was badly scalded, and many persons were blown overboard, several of whom are supposed to have been drowned. The steamboat Cora, lying alongside, was much damaged, and the captain and crew were more or less injured by the explosion.

St. Joseph's Academy and school attached, near Dubuque, Iowa, was recently destroyed by fire. The Sisters of Charity, 23 in number, who were residing upon the premises, lost nearly all their personal apparel and household goods. The books and other effects of the students were saved. The entire loss is estimated at $1,700.

The wife of Rev. Wm. Scudder, of the Ceylon Mission, recently deceased of cholera, while on the passage from Madras to Ceylon. She was the second daughter of the distinguished musical composer and musician, Prof. Thomas Hastings, of this city, and went out under the auspices of the A. B. C. F. Missions, something more than a year since.

The Detroit Daily Advertiser of the 25th, says that on the last trip of the Sultana up, a company of forty English families were on board on their way to Kent Co., Michigan. They were accompanied by a physician, and were a highly respectable class of people. They intend locating on some desirable tract of land, and immediately commence clearing up for farming.

At Binghampton, N.Y. the late Postmaster, Mr. Park, having refused to surrender the office to Mr. Cooke, his successor, as directed by the Postmaster General, the latter has opened an office, and is regularly receiving and dispatching the mails. At the same time Mr. Park continues the old office open, but does not seem to have much custom.

The St. Louis Republican says a large number of counterfeit ten dollar notes on the Jefferson County Bank at Watertown, N. Y., have recently been put in circulation in that city. The notes have a good appearance, are countersigned and registered by E. Sloan of the Controller's Office.

Father Chiniquay's mission to the Roman Catholic Parishes of Lower Canada, in many of which he pointed out, with native fervor and eloquence, the lasting evils of intemperance, has been productive of the most beneficial effects. A list of SEVENTY-SIX parishes is published in the Montreal Herald of the 30th ult., in not one of which have the magistrates recommended any person for a tavern license this year.

Mr. Lawrence, a merchant in New York, who died last week of cholera, was insured in the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company, $4,000. His annual payment was due four days previous to his death, when the Agent called upon him for it. He put it off for "a few days," but died without effecting the renewal. That slight delay of a "few days" has deprived his children of $4,000.

Two columns of the London Morning Chronicle of May 15, are filled with the evidence in a case at Hastings, where Mrs. Mary Ann Geering is in jail on a charge of poisoning her husband, Richard Geering of Guestling, aged 56, and her own sons, George, aged 21, and James, aged 26, all of whom are dead. Her son Benjamin vomited the arsenic and is alive.

The New Haven Palladium says, that, as Miss Agnes Wylie, of Thompsonville, was gathering flowers on the banks of the Connecticut river, last Friday, her foot slipped, and she was precipitated from a height of fifteen feet into the stream, striking her head on a projecting rock, which doubtless caused her death before she reached the water.

A colored man, accompanied by a white woman, who had eloped from the northern part of the State, and arrived in Cincinnati on the 16th ult., were both seized with cholera on the 17th, and both died and were buried in one grave on the same day! A sad finale to a strange elopement.

The papers contain reports of a famine prevailing at Gaspé, New Brunswick. Two persons have died of starvation, and many others are in a most enfeebled state, and not expected to live. Dispatches have been sent to the Executive for assistance.

Rape is punishable with death, in the Canadas. At Hamilton, (U. C.) a Dr. Bill was recently sentenced to be hung on the 8th of June next, for taking advantage of a woman named Phebe Fordham while entrusted with him as a medical man.

The steam boiler that is being made in Philadelphia, for the U. S. steam frigate now in process of construction at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, is composed of 75,000 pounds of pure copper, and will cost $30,000.

While the cholera was raging in St Louis, the people in parts of the city kept tar barrels constantly burning to purify the atmosphere, and it is said that the places where these sanitary fires were kindled were free from visitation of the pestilence.

The Bishops of the five British North American dioceses propose to meet at Halifax, Nova Scotia, on Ascension Day next. This will be the first Episcopal Synod in the Colonial (Protestant Episcopal) Church.

James Brown, sentenced by South Carolina law to be hung on the 2d of July, for negro stealing, escaped from the Sheriff while on his way to Camden; and had not been found at the latest date.

The Annual Meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist Western Association will be held with the 1st Church of Alfred, Allegany Co., N. Y., commencing on the fourth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in June, (20th day of the month,) 1849, at 10 o'clock, A. M. Introductory discourse by James Bailey. T. E. Babcock, Cor. Sec.

Christian Psalmody.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office. It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Railroad from Albany West.

ON and after Tuesday, May 1, 1849, six trains will leave the depôt of the Albany and Schenectady Railroad Company daily, Sundays excepted, viz:

At 6 o'clock, A. M., for Buffalo, through in 15 hours; at 7 o'clock, A. M., for Schenectady; at 9 o'clock, A. M., for Buffalo, through in 18 hours; at 12½ o'clock, P. M., for Schenectady; at 2 o'clock, P. M., for Buffalo, with emigrants and express freight, through in 23 hours; at 7 o'clock, P. M., for Buffalo, through in 18 hours. Passengers for Saratoga Springs and Whitehall can take any of the trains for Schenectady and Railroad or Stages by Plank Road route to Saratoga. Baggage cars and through baggage men run the whole distance between Albany and Buffalo. Baggage taken free by Railroad wagons between steamboats and Railroad.

Mail Line from New York to Boston.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN NEW YORK AND BOSTON, via Stonington and Providence.—Inland Route, without ferry, change of cars, or baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and MASSACHUSETTS, Capt. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 5 o'clock, P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock, P. M., or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities.

The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday.

The MASSACHUSETTS will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

N. B.—Passengers, on the arrival of the steamers at Stonington, proceed immediately in the splendid Railroad cars to Providence and Boston. A baggage-master accompanies the steamboat trains to and from Boston, to take charge of the baggage.

The Young People's Mirror,

A handsome Quarto Volume, containing upwards of one hundred Engravings, having but ONE AIM, to advance the Interest, Happiness, and Welfare of the Youth of America, at the very small price of "FIFTY CENTS."

MINISTERS, Colporteurs, Postmasters, Teachers, Parents, and Guardians, are invited to aid in circulating this work among the young, for they may be assured that it will be precisely such a work as they will take pleasure in recommending to those over whom they severally exercise an influence. For example, the Minister in his Sunday School, and his pastoral visits among his flock; the Colporteur in his lectures, and in his visits of love from house to house; the Postmaster in his office, where the young are sent for letters; Teachers, who are constantly training the young mind for the future; and Parents and Guardians, who bear the solemn responsibility of moulding human character, and watching over and directing aright the expanding intellect of youth, may all present our enterprise directly to those for whose benefit it is chiefly intended, and through its instrumentality each may aid himself in the work in which he is engaged.

☞ Terms to Agents.—To those who are willing to aid in circulating the Young People's Mirror in the neighborhood, the Publisher will credit them with three copies for each dollar so received, and send them per mail as directed.

⁂ Young people clubbing together in fives, and sending the Publisher two dollars, will receive five copies of the paper, mailed to one address. EDWARD WALKER,
114 Fulton-street.

COMMENDATIONS OF THE PRESS.

We commend this work to the attention of parents, as a valuable one for their children. Let them subscribe for it on the first of January, when the volume will commence. It will be a fine New Year present. The matter of it, we can say from our knowledge of Mr. L., will be such as to entertain and instruct the young.—Poughkeepsie Telegraph.

The "Mirror," we predict, will be a great favorite with our juvenile population.—Republican (Monticello, N. Y.) Watchman.

From the number before us, we have no hesitation in recommending it to all classes as a valuable publication.—Utica Observer.

If the number before us is a fair specimen, it must be considered the cheapest, and one of the most desirable papers for young people printed in the country.—Portland (Me.) Journal.

It promises to be a delightful periodical for youth.—Philadelphia National Eagle.

It is very neat in its appearance, is finely embellished, and is well filled with matter highly useful and interesting to the class for which it is intended.—Belfast (Me.) State Signal.

We most cheerfully commend the publication to parents and guardians as a valuable work for youth of both sexes. Fifty cents cannot be better expended, looking to interest and instruction.—Freeman's Journal, Cooperstown, N. Y.

It is well printed, admirably selected, beautifully illustrated, and we really think the best and cheapest of the periodical publications prepared for youth.—Bangor (Me.) Gaz.

The "Young People's Mirror" is a monthly periodical, well edited and liberally illustrated, which will come to be welcomed, we have no doubt, by many thousands of young readers. It is but fifty cents a year; and if it maintains the promise of its initial number, it is "bound to succeed."—Knickerbocker Magazine.

Miscellaneous.

SIMPLE AFFINITY.

Some water and oil
One day had a broil,
As down in a glass they were dropping,
And would not unite.
But continued to fight,
Without any prospect of stopping.
Some pearlash o'erheard,
As quick as a word,
He jumped in the midst of the clashing,
When all three agreed,
And united with speed,
And soap was created for washing.

THINGS IN CALIFORNIA.

Lieut. Edward Beale, U. S. N., and Wm. Parrot, U. S. Consul at Mazatlan, arrived at New York, May 29, bringing news from San Francisco to April 13th. They came to Panama by the steamship Oregon. The following facts were obtained from Lieut. Beale, by a writer for the N. Y. Tribune:—

There were about 75 vessels lying in the Bay of San Francisco, and others were arriving every day. With very few exceptions their crews desert immediately upon their arrival, and they are unable to leave. The town is crowded with people, and about two-thirds of the inhabitants are living in camp. The houses are all filled to overflowing, and the smallest rooms rent for $3 a day; good board at the hotels is $10 a-day. Gen. Smith is living for the present in the old house of the Hudson's Bay Company. One of the volunteers of Stevenson's regiment, who made enough at the diggings to purchase a frame house in the place, offered to rent it to him, but coolly demanded $18,000 a year, giving Gen S. one day to decide on the offer.

The snow was melting very fast, and the placers were almost entirely clear. Companies were leaving San Francisco daily for the diggings, and miners constantly arriving with the products of their labors; the fare to Sutter's Fort varied from $25 to $50, according to the style of conveyance. There was a great deal of drinking and gambling going on in San Francisco. Many of the gamblers who followed the American army through Mexico have gone on to California, and by means of monte, roulette, and faro tables, fleece the natives very extensively.

Lieut. Beale speaks in high terms of the order maintained by the population on the placers, as well as in the more settled parts. There are few disturbances of any kind, and owing to the strict administration of extempore justice, crimes have become less frequent. The only punishment is hanging. When a person commits any theft or outrage, he is brought before a Jury of twelve men selected for the purpose, who go through the regular forms of trial, and, if convicted, he is at once executed. Three men have lately been hung at the diggings, one of them for stealing a horse.

The last heard from Col. Fremont, he was on the Gila with his company. The report of his arrival in California is incorrect. Mrs. Fremont was at Panama, and would leave in the first steamer for San Francisco.

Lieut. Beale left St. Louis, on his way out, on the 1st of November last. He was the bearer of dispatches, and had a body of 25 men under his command. After reaching Santa Fe he took the Gila route, and on this part of the journey underwent the most terrible sufferings. The party was visited by the Winter storm among the mountains, which proved fatal to so many of Fremont's men, and nine soldiers perished with cold and exposure. They were several times attacked by Indians, and some of the troops were severely wounded. Lieut. Beale's appearance bears token of the hardships he has undergone.

He brings with him a lump of pure gold, weighing eighty ounces, and consequently worth nearly $1,500. It was found at the dry diggings by a man named Weaver.

The following items are made up from information given by Mr. Parrott, and should be received, evidently, with some grains of allowance:—

The riches of California do not consist in gold alone. All the precious metals are there found, in greater or less profusion, as well as the rarest and most valuable jewels. Two mines of silver have been lately discovered, one of which is known to but few persons, who jealously keep the secret. Platinum is also known to exist in considerable quantities. A rough diamond, nearly the size of a hen's egg, has been found by one of the miners in the Sacramento Valley. Gen. Vallejo, who was his informant, says that it was brought to him by the finder, who demanded $180,000 for it. Emeralds of large size are frequently met with, but their value is scarcely known. Three or four new quicksilver mines have been discovered, one of which, a very rich deposit, lies between the valley of Santa Clara and San Joaquim. The Forbes mine, however, is the only one worked as yet. The extent and value of these quicksilver mines is not equaled by any other locality in the world. Beds of coal have also been found, near the coast, but cannot of course be worked under the present state of things.

Mr. Parrott says that in the Sierra Nevada, to the north-east of San Francisco, there is a volcano in active operation. On the 3d of March, the heaviest snow-storm in the memory of the inhabitants took place.

There are but fifty women in the town of San Francisco, twenty of whom are Americans. The arrival of a ship-load of female emigrants would be a cause of public rejoicing, and all the single ones would receive offers before they landed.

The price of lots in the town is enormous. The sales take place, however, with little regard to the title of the property, and as there are two or three separate claims upon a great part of it, this may lead to great difficulty in the future. Sometimes, the same land is sold to different parties by two Alcaldes.

Nearly the whole of Capt. Sutter's 40,000 bushels of grain rotted in the field, for want of hands to harvest it. The price of Flour at the diggings when Mr. Parrott left was $3 per lb. though at San Francisco it was down to $10 per bbl. There was not much sickness at the diggings, except scurvy and a few cases of fever. There was also some scurvy at San Francisco, owing to the want of vegetable food, the cultivation of the soil being entirely neglected.

CAUSES OF DIVORCE.

The following statement of the causes for which absolute divorces are now granted by the laws of the several States of this Union is attached to the report recently made by Mr. Cornell to the New York Legislature:—

Maine.—Desertion five years, joining Shakers, imprisonment in the State prison or penitentiary five years, drunkenness three years.

New Hampshire.—Desertion or absence, not heard of for three years, three years neglect of family, extreme cruelty.

Massachusetts.—Imprisonment seven years.

Rhode Island.—Desertion five years, habitual drunkenness, neglect of family, extreme cruelty; and also for any other gross misbehavior and wickedness, in either of the parties, repugnant to and in violation of the marriage covenant.

Connecticut.—Desertion, three years absence, not heard from in seven years.

Vermont.—Desertion three years, cruelty, imprisonment three years, absence seven years, neglect.

New Jersey.—Desertion five years.

Pennsylvania.—Desertion two years, cruelty.

Ohio.—Desertion three years by either party, extreme cruelty, gross neglect, habitual drunkenness, three years actual imprisonment.

Indiana.—Cruelty, habitual drunkenness, two years imprisonment, and any other cause where the court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, shall deem it reasonable, report that a divorce should be granted.

Illinois.—Desertion two years, cruelty, drunkenness, two years imprisonment for crime.

Michigan.—Desertion two years, habitual drunkenness, imprisonment three years.

Virginia.—Desertion, cruelty, drunkenness.

Delaware, Maryland, and Georgia.—Divorces in these States seem to be left entirely to the Legislature.

Tennessee.—Desertion, cruelty, drunkenness.

Kentucky.—Desertion three years, felony, neglect to live with wife or husband, joining any sect which disavows marriage.

North Carolina.—Desertion, drunkenness, or any other just cause, in discretion of court.

Louisiana.—Desertion five years, cruelty, imprisonment for infamous crime.

Mississippi.—Desertion five years.

Missouri.—Desertion two years, cruelty, habitual drunkenness two years, vagrancy, charging wife with infidelity.

Arkansas.—Desertion one year, cruelty, imprisonment for felony, drunkenness for one year.

Wisconsin.—Desertion two years, drunkenness, cruelty.

NOTE.—The causes mentioned above are all grounds for absolute, not limited divorce.

Adultery and impotency are, of course, grounds of divorce in all the States.

A CHOCTAW WEDDING.

Having often been an eye-witness to these weddings, I will endeavor to give, as near as possible, a true account. In the first place, the girl is bought with a hog, or eight or ten yards of cloth, it does not make any difference what kind; her uncle receives it, the parents have nothing to do with it; if she has no uncles, her brothers will receive the amount; the day is appointed, and notice is given to the relatives of the girl to make bread, one or two dozen banaba, whichever they prefer, and bring it with them. The night before, it is all put together and saved for the next day, then they all commence making "hog and homony." Next morning, the friends and relatives of the bridegroom all meet at a certain place, and escort the groom to the house of the bride. When they get in sight of the house, the bride's friends take her by the hand, and run, as "for life and death." The groom party coming up, find them gone—there are certain women of the party appointed to run after them, some eight or ten; the balance of the company run along also, for the fun of it, but must not interfere. Some times the bride's party get such a start of them, the men run and head them, and chase them; they will then change their course in running, and then they are overtaken, and such a scuffle between the women as you never heard of, some will pull the girl, her friends will pull her back, and they will almost fight for her; finally they give up—the groom's friends lead her back rejoicing. But where is the groom all this time? When he arrives at the house, he is shut up in it; he does not see any of the fun. They lead the girl into the yard and set her down, his mother or sisters spreading something for her, such as a skin or cloth, and all the groom party throw something on her head: beads, binding, handkerchiefs, or one or two yards of cloth, and those that made the bread divide, or rather snatch, to see who can get the most. And then they lead her in where the groom is, and set her down by his side, and give them a bowl of tahlobo to eat, with one spoon, the groom taking the first mouthful; if the bride does not take a mouthful, soon after, it is left untouched, the door also is closed on them, the company at the same time are feasting out of doors. A certain man being appointed to dish out for them, the feasting being over, another scuffle follows, to bring the bride out of the house, some times a weak door is broken down, and she is led out, and set down in the yard, and the usual things, as before mentioned, are thrown on her head, and she is led back into the house; it occupies nearly all day; by this time, the people disperse rejoicing—the groom stays all night, and very early, before the sun is up, he must run home. About nine or ten o'clock, the girl and some of her friends start for his home, with a pan of tahlobo, having prepared it the day before. When they come in sight of the house, his mother or sisters meet her and lead her into the house; the husband must in all cases have a dress and a handkerchief ready for her, and his sisters give them to her. They then bring corn to her, and she must try her best, what good tafala she can make; the near relatives present will make her some presents, and she returns home without him, but in the evening he goes to her home and remains with her, if he chooses, at the same place, or moves, if her friends are willing. So ends the wedding. [Choctaw Tel.

The expense to the city of New York for bringing home from Mexico and burying the remains of Colonel Baxter and Lieut. Chandler was $3,980; medals for the New York volunteers, $3,994; and their "reception" when they returned home, cost the city $1,200! In all, over $9,000! The city tax this year is $3,100,000!

A SUBSTITUTE FOR WHITE LEAD.—A medal of 3,000 francs ($600) has been given for an invention which promises to be of great benefit to humanity. This is the substitution of a preparation of zinc in place of white-lead, and in colors of which lead and copper form the base. The poisonous effects of white-lead on the men who work in it have always been known, and have led to experiments with the oxide of zinc, for the purpose of substituting it instead of lead. Zinc, too, was known to be more durable, and to hold its color better. But there was no cheap process by which it could be manufactured, and the prejudices and habits of workmen were opposed to it. The celebrated chemist, Guyton-Morveau, succeeded so far as to establish a manufactory of white-zinc at Dijou. But the discovery made no progress, and was never brought into general use. At last, in 1846, M. Leclaire undertook to introduce it into his own widely-extended business. He had to contend with formidable obstacles. He had to establish the manufacture of white-zinc on a large scale, to show that it was not only handsomer and easier to use, but also cheaper; that it dried in a shorter time, and did not change color even under the influence of sulphuretted hydrogen. He had to demonstrate that it did not injure the health of the workmen; that nothing similar to the frightful colics, produced by white-lead, was occasioned by its use or manufacture. He had to discover the method of compounding colors with this base, instead of those in which white-lead was an essential ingredient. He undertook to apply this substitution to copper as well as to lead, and met with entire success. M. Leclaire has also obtained a product in zinc for artistic painting, which deserves the name of snow-white, which has been applied to it.

OSCILLATION OF THE LOWER EXTREMITIES IN WALKING.—We are indebted to the brothers Weber, for an important discovery in the theory of walking and running in man. It consists in having demonstrated, by experiments, that the lower limbs, when put in motion, oscillate in a pendulum-like manner around the trunk, by the action of gravity. Limbs of different lengths, both of living men and of bodies, were made to oscillate; and in every case it was found that the durations of these oscillations were proportional to the square roots of the oscillating limbs. These movements, then, are effected independently of our will; a fact which explains the perfect regularity with which the steps succeed each other in a child as well as in an adult, in the idiot as well as in him whose will and sensibility have received full development. The action of the muscles, therefore, is little or nothing in the execution of these movements. The leg raised, and then left to itself, accomplishes the step by the sole influence of gravity. The head of the thighbone suffers a very slight friction only in rotating in the cotyloid cavity, where it is retained by atmospheric pressure, which thus assists in accomplishing these movements. The whole weight of the limb does not press against the sides of the hip-joint: the head of the thigh-bone remains fixed in this cavity by atmospheric pressure, and hence the effect of gravity upon the member is destroyed.

◆

CLEANSING THE TEETH.—In order to preserve the teeth, it is of the utmost importance that they should be kept always clean. Multitudes seem to think that they may use their teeth during a whole life without ever cleansing them, and when they discover they are going to decay, express great surprise that their teeth do not last good like other people's. How can they expect them to remain perfect, if nothing is ever done to protect them from the action of acids produced by the particles of food that decompose after having been lodged between and around the teeth for weeks and months? The only wonder is, that the teeth last as long as they do. There is no more propriety in neglecting to clean the teeth, than there would be in neglecting to wash the cups that are used from day to day on your tea-table. Not a day should be suffered to pass without the teeth being thoroughly cleansed with a brush. Reader, if you have not been in the habit of cleansing your teeth, go immediately to a skillful dentist, and have them cleansed. After that, by spending one minute a day in washing them, you may keep them white and clean all your life; and the comfort arising from a clean mouth will amply compensate you for all trouble. [Blaisdell.

◆

THIMBLE MAKING.—The Journal of Commerce says that if a lady could see the processes through which her thimble passed from the solid bar of silver, to the convenient instrument she uses, she would be astonished.—The bar of silver is welded into a long ribbon, which is cut into small pieces, each of which is to make the barrel of a thimble. The top is cut out of another strip of iron or silver, the rim is hammered around a bar of iron and soldered, and after the top is soldered on, the whole thimble is put upon a turning lathe and chiseled, inside and outside—it is then marked with the needle holes by a little roller pressed against it, and finally polished and ornamented by various instruments. We have omitted several processes through which it passes. Altogether they cannot be less than twenty, and after all, the thimble is sold at a very small advance on the weight of the silver.

◆

A HARD CASE.—We wish to put on record in a few words the facts in a case tried in the Supreme Court of Mississippi; the decision of which is an outrage on every principle of justice and humanity, and would disgrace a Congo chief. "A gentleman there had a son by one of his slaves, and desiring that it should not meet the common fate of all who are of African blood, he took the mother and child to Ohio, and there liberated them. Soon afterward he died, leaving his property to his son, but his distant relatives maintained that this act was null, and through a decision of the Mississippi Supreme Court obtained not only the property of the deceased, but the mother and child who had been made free."

◆

Dr. Mars, of New York, died of cholera, one day last week. He had been troubled with a diarrhea for three or four days, which he had neglected, and after he was seized with the more violent symptoms, death speedily ensued. Such cases should serve as a warning to all who feel themselves affected in the slightest degree. The first stage of Cholera, which is that of common diarrhea, may, in nine cases out of ten, be promptly checked.

PRAYER FOR SLEEP.

In a beautiful hymn composed by Sir Thomas Brown, as a half adieu for each night to the world, are these striking lines:—

"Sleep is death. O make me try,
By sleeping, what it is to die;
And as I gently lay my head
On my grave as now my bed;
Howe'er I rest, great God, let me
Awake again, at last with thee,
And thus assured, behold I lie
Securely—or to wake or die,
These are my drowsy days; in vain
I do now awake to sleep again,
O come that hour, when I shall never Sleep again, but wake forever."

◆

EARNESTNESS IN THE PULPIT.—It is recorded of the devoted John Welch, that he used to keep a plaid upon his bed that he might wrap himself in it when he rose during the night for prayer. Some times his wife found him on the ground, weeping. When she complained, he would say—"Oh! woman! I have the souls of three thousand to answer for, and I know not how it is with many of them." Possessed with such a sense of responsibility to God and to the people of his charge, how can any true minister of the cross withhold himself from an earnest devotion to his work of arousing souls, and pointing them to Christ? He feels his momentous responsibility during the week, while preparing the beaten oil for the sanctuary. It is ever with him. It haunts him in the silent watches of the night. It absorbs his thoughts; and speaks out in every fervid utterance of his closet.

◆

HUGE MUSICAL MACHINE.—A monstrous musical box, which it requires ten horses to draw, is described as follows in a New York letter to the Philadelphia Ledger:—

"A curious affair on wheels, constructed by Mr. Henry Erben, the organ builder, and intended for the circus of Spaulding and Rogers, now in Ohio, passed through our streets to-day. It is nearly as high as a two story house, and is intended as a substitute for a whole band of musicians. The noise it makes is horrible—a mixture of gong, bagpipe, and the feline falsetto. If the driver should refuse to 'move on' for a quarter, it would be worth while to give fifty cents to 'progress' out of earshot. It is called the Appollonian."

◆

A SINGULAR REQUEST.—Since the conviction of Conrad Vinter, for the murder of Mrs. Cooper, in Baltimore County, and his confinement in his cell, awaiting the expiation of his crime upon the gallows, he passes most of his leisure hours in performing on the accordeon. Fearing that all hope for commutation of his punishment from the forfeiture of his life upon the gallows to the Penitentiary for life is in vain, he is composing a dirge, which he asks permission to perform, on his way from his cell to the place of execution. A most singular request, truly; and one which will no doubt be readily complied with.

VARIETY.

Dr. Johnson, speaking of a lady who was celebrated for dressing well, remarked, "The best evidence that I can give you of her perfection in this respect is, that one can never remember what she had on." Delicacy of feeling in a lady, will prevent her putting on any thing calculated to attract notice; and yet, a female of good taste will dress so as to have every part of her dress correspond. Thus, while she avoids what is showy and attractive, every thing will be adjusted so as to exhibit symmetry and taste.

A neat, clean, fresh-aired, sweet, cheerful, well-arranged, and well-situated house, exercises a moral as well as physical influence over its inmates, and makes the members of a family peaceable, and considerate of the feelings and happiness of each other; the connection is obvious between the state of mind thus produced, and habits of respect for others, and those higher duties and obligations which no law can enforce.

The foreign clearances from the United States, during the year 1848, were 18,329 vessels, of an aggregate burthen of 3,865,000 tons. Their crews consisted of 170,000 men, and 7,250 boys. Only 9,695 were American vessels. The clearances from Boston were 2,840; from New York, 2,343. The number of foreign arrivals was 17,274; of which 2,923 arrived at Boston, and 2,870 at New York. Last year the number of vessels built in the United States was 1,851, of which 254 were ships.

The receipts of foreign money at the Suffolk Bank, Boston, in the year 1848, were over one hundred and seventy millions of dollars; and the amount received from January 1st, 1849, to May 1st, exceeded sixty millions of dollars.

To Clergymen and their People.

ALL CLERGYMEN who will send their address to Messrs. Comstock & Company, No. 21 Courtland-street—(after the 1st of May No. 57 John-street)—New York, shall be furnished gratuitously, for their family use, with a Salve of most extraordinary merit for external sores or inflammations of long or short standing. In burns, or pains and swellings of nearly all descriptions, its effects are charming, and almost beyond belief. This Salve has already been used by quite a number of the clergy, for themselves or sufferers to whom they have given it; and they have called on or written to the proprietors to express their delight at its action, and a desire to have their names used in making known its virtues. The proprietors having realized a handsome sum by its sale, feel called upon by a sense of duty to their fellow-men to disseminate the knowledge of the existence of such a thing far and near, and to give it without charge to the reverend clergy without limitation. It is called CONNEL'S PAIN EXTRACTOR, and is owned solely by Messrs. C. & Co. All religious papers that will publish this a few times will be furnished with the Salve free, and they may also thereby relieve many suffering poor brethren from agonizing pain, and save them much expense. The names of nearly fifty clergymen recommending it, are to be seen at the office of C. & Co.

You will please observe, it is no "sovereign remedy for all complaints," but only intended for external applications in the following:—Burns, Scalds, Frosted parts, Chilblains, Chafe or Galls, Chaps, Tetter, Pimple, Blotch, Felon, Ulcer, Sprains, Erysipelas, Cuts, Bruises, Ear and Toothache, Mumps, Sore Throat, Whitlows, Piles, Ringworm, Salt Rheum, Barber's Itch, Carbuncle, Eruption, Sore Eyes and Lids, Weak Sight, Sore Lips, Punctures, Biles and Warts, Fever Pains, Tender Feet, Inflammatory Rheumatism, Tic Doloureux, Ague in Face and Breast, Fever Sores, Old Burn Scars, Prickly Heat, Inflamed Skin, Broken Breast, Sore Nipples, Rough Hands, Blistered Surfaces, Dressing for Blisters, White Swellings, Cold in Wounds, Sore Corns, General Sores, Smallpox Marks, &c.

Though we have named numerous affections, experience has taught us that they are not too many. It will be necessary to know that this article is the only one we can recommend; but must caution against some imitation by like name. We will present it to the poor who have actual need of it.

Mail Line from New York to Boston.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN NEW YORK AND BOSTON, via Stonington and Providence.—Inland Route, without ferry, change of cars, or baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and MASSACHUSETTS, Capt. Frazée, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 5 o'clock, P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock, P. M., or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities.

The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday.

The MASSACHUSETTS will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

N. B.—Passengers, on the arrival of the steamers at Stonington, proceed immediately in the splendid Railroad cars to Providence and Boston. A baggage-master accompanies the steamboat trains to and from Boston, to take charge of the baggage.

The Sabbath Recorder.

THE SABBATH AS A PREPARATIVE FOR HEAVEN.

The substance of a sermon preached at Boston before the "American and Foreign Sabbath Union," by Rev. Dr. Sprague, of Albany. Reported for "The Independent."

TEXT.—Heb. 4: 9.—"There remaineth therefore a rest for the people of God."

In connection with—

Exod. 20: 8.—"Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."

This leads us to consider the happiness of heaven as a state of rest, and the keeping holy the Sabbath as the divinely-appointed means of preparing for heaven. This view of the value of the Sabbath as a means of preparation for heaven rises infinitely higher than any estimate of its value from the benefits it confers in reference to the present world. The Christian honors the Sabbath for all the reasons that commend it to the patriot, the philanthropist, and the political economist; but all these sink into insignificance when compared with its influence upon man's eternal welfare.

1. The Sabbath is a noble and beautiful symbol of heaven. God has made every thing that exists a teacher for man. The sun, moon, and stars have a language; the trees, the birds, the storm, give lessons of wisdom. Man can be no where that he may not hear his Maker's name. The return of the Sabbath reminds even the thoughtless man that there is a heaven; and if a heaven, there is a hell; and there must be qualifications required to escape from one and enter the other, and no more time ought to be lost in securing that blessing; and he feels the rebuke of the Sabbath for his indifference.

2. The Sabbath powerfully counteracts the influences around us which are adverse to our obtaining heaven. One of these hindrances is ignorance. Religion requires us to believe, on the testimony of God, many things which we cannot fully understand; and yet it is necessary that we should know the testimony; that the objects of faith should be objects of knowledge. We must know that God requires us to believe before we can believe it; and we must know what God requires us to do before we can do it. How can a man exercise repentance until he knows how, why, and for what he is to repent? The obedience which is required is not a cold calculation how far he must go in order to be able to face the future; but a cordial and earnest desire to do the will of God. Now, suppose the Sabbath to be blotted out, how much would men know of religion? You might supply every family on earth with a Bible, and still have a world of heathen on your hands if you had no Sabbath. In how many ways does the Sabbath teach! The Sabbath lesson of the pious mother to her household, the training of the Sabbath-school, and the instructions of the sanctuary would all disappear with the loss of the Sabbath. Suppose even a Christian exiled from the privileges of the Sabbath, what a poor proficient would he be in religious knowledge. But suppose him converted and placed in a world where there is no Sabbath, and he never would be more than a babe in knowledge of divine things.

The greatest obstacle in the way of attaining heaven seems to be worldliness. This is idol-worship, as intense, though not so gross, as that which prevails in pagan lands; and this passion must be broken down, or man can never be fitted for heaven. What can cast down that idolatry? Nothing but the Sabbath. Rarely is it done, even in a single instance, by any other means. Tell me not that the devotees of the world have the Bible. How is a man the better for having the Bible shut up and laid away on his shelf? But habit of decency leads him to observe the Sabbath, and then to visit the sanctuary, where the bow drawn at a venture may send an arrow to his heart, and there will be found a fresh traveler on the way to heaven. But how small a number would ever have broken away from the world were there no Sabbath; and how necessary is the Sabbath for this very purpose, even to the Christian. Perhaps you are a poor man, and have to work hard to earn your bread; perhaps you are a rich man, and have as much as you can do to take care of what you possess; perhaps you are a lawyer, or a judge, or a statesman, and the cause of your clients, or the interests of justice, or the concerns of your country seem to require all your thoughts. At what rate would you get on in the way to heaven if it were not for the Sabbath breaking in upon your toil and care, and making a breathing-time for rest and opportunity to visit the sanctuary to get a fresh taste of God's kindness and a foretaste of the joys that are to come in heaven? After you have spent the whole day as God would have you spend the Sabbath, do you not feel new strength for your duties, while your hopes are quickened for a better world? You know it is as much as you can do to go on and make advances in the divine life with all the helps that God has granted; and what would you do if there were no Sabbath? We complain and grieve that the love of many waxes cold through the influence of the world; what would become of us all if the Sabbath were blotted out?

3. The Sabbath enlists the social principle of our nature in aid of the preparation for heaven. God has so ordained it that the highest happiness of man is always social. The joys of the little child are never full until he has shared them with his playmate or told them to his mother. The philosopher who has discovered a new way in the starry heavens is not satisfied until he has made it known to the world. To this principle belong all the tender sensibilities of man; this soothes his sorrows and heightens his joys; this aids in all great purposes. Nothing truly noble can be undertaken without it. The Sabbath turns all this to the best account to aid in the preparation for heaven. It sanctifies the kindness of the family circle; it sheds a halo of divine beauty over the charities of neighborhoods; it ennobles the ties of kindred as it engages them in coöperation for this great end; it gives earnestness to prayer; it lends power to the Word of God; it elevates the office of the ministry; it is preëminently a social institution, drawing its chief value from the social principle, and in return elevating that principle to a likeness of heaven.

4. The Sabbath furnishes a medium of intercourse between earth and heaven. Talk not of the mysteriousness of the intercourse. If the intercourse of man with man is a reality, so is the intercourse of man with God. There is not a moment of time in which prayer is not going up to the ear of God. These form innumerable connecting points between earth and heaven; but on the Sabbath all these voices unite in one offering. The experience of the Psalmist, which led him to say, "Thy way, O God, is in the sanctuary," is as truly realized now as it was in the temple-worship. He sends his angels, too, as ministering spirits in the assemblies of the saints. The Sabbath brings us to Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels—to the general assembly of the first-born, and to God the judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus, the mediator of the new covenant. Can it be otherwise than that we should, under its influence, forget the things that are behind, and press forwards and upwards to a better life?

LASTLY. The Sabbath schools the spirit in the exercises and employments of heaven. Heaven, though a place of rest, is not a place of inaction. There is perfect peace, perfect security, perfect satisfaction, perfect joy; but there is no pain, nor weakness, nor weariness—no cloud over the scene, no wasting of the powers; they cease not day nor night in their heavenly employment of devotion and beneficence. Now the Sabbath, properly kept, engages the soul in these very exercises, according to their lower state of being, and by it we are practicing lessons for heaven. In searching out the works and will of God, in visits of mercy to the children of want or darkness or sorrow, in exercises of devotion and praise, in the communion of saints, we are participating on earth in the very employments and joys of immortality.

But these benefits will not result unless the Sabbath is remembered and kept holy. There is a regard for the Sabbath which does not make it holy. A sense of decency, or the power of habit, or the voice of conscience may restrain the body and not reach the spirit.

How important are the efforts now made to restore the Sabbath. Amid so many blessed institutions which are now about to give you a jubilee week, and make your city like Jerusalem when the tribes go up, it is delightful to witness the perfect harmony that exists throughout all, as all are aiming at one great end. And this Society is the faithful friend and minister of them all. In vain will you send forth ministers and Bibles and tracts; they will be of no avail if there is no Sabbath for man.

"ONLY FIVE MINUTES TO LIVE."

The solemn hour will come to every one of us, when we shall have only five minutes to live. We may not know when that dread moment will arrive, but it will come to each one. And then, at the end of five minutes, we shall pass that mysterious boundary into the solemn world of spirits! How little think the multitude of that last five minutes! How urgently does it warn each one to prepare for it, whether it may come sooner or later!

"You have only five minutes to live," said the sheriff to a young man condemned to die. The sheriff took out his watch and said, "If you have anything to say, speak now, for you have only five minutes to live." The young man burst into tears, and said, "I have to die. I had one little brother; he had beautiful blue eyes and flaxen hair, and I loved him; but one day I got drunk, for the first time in my life, and coming home I found my little brother gathering berries in the garden, and I became angry without a cause, and killed him with one blow with a rake. I did not know anything about it until the next morning, when I awoke from sleep and found myself tied and guarded, and was told that when my little brother was found his hair was clotted with blood and brains, and he was dead. Whisky has done it. It has ruined me. I was drunk but once. I have only one more word to say, and then I am going to my final Judge. I say it to young people—never! never! never! touch anything that can intoxicate!" As he pronounced these words, he sprang from the box, and was launched into an endless eternity.

I was melted to tears at the recital and the awful spectacle. My little heart seemed as if it would burst, and break away from my aching bosom, so intolerable were my feelings of grief. And there in that carriage, while on that cushioned seat looking with streaming eyes on the body of that unfortunate young man, as it hung writhing between heaven and earth, as unfit for either place, there it was that I took the pledge never to touch the hurtful poison!

Long years have passed away. White hairs have thickened around these temples, then so ruddy and so young, but I have never forgotten the last words of that young man. And I have never violated the pledge. When the tempter has offered the sparkling goblet, the words of that young man have seemed to sound in my ears again. [Juv. Miss. Mag.

THE WAY TO WIN.—At one of the anniversaries of a Sunday School in London, two little girls presented themselves to receive a prize, one of whom had recited one verse more than the other, both having learned several thousand verses of Scripture. The gentleman who presided inquired, "And could n't you have learned one verse more, and thus have kept up with Martha?" "Yes, sir," the blushing child replied; "but I loved Martha, and kept back on purpose." "And was there any one of all the verses you have learned," again inquired the president, "that taught you this lesson?" "There was, sir," she answered, blushing still more deeply, "In honor preferring one another."

FIT EMBLEM OF MAN.

See, how beneath the moonbeam's smile
You little billow heaves its breast,
And foams and sparkles for a while,
And murmuring then subsides to rest.
Thus man, the sport of bliss and care,
Rises on time's eventful sea;
And having swelled a moment there,
Thus melts into eternity! [H. More.

PEACE! STUBBORN WILL.

Peace! stubborn will—
Peace! restless heart, forget thy grief, and think
Upon the bitter cup which He did drink,
Meekly and still.

Thou bearest nought
Of anguish, that thy Saviour did not know;
He suffered all thy sorrows, save the wo
Thy sin has wrought.

O, trust His word
When unseen foes assail; there was an hour
Of gloom and darkness, when the fiend had power
To tempt the Lord.

Lean on His breast
When earthly love forsakes thee, and the charm
Of friendship dies away; His holy arm
Will give thee rest.

BIBLE DISTRIBUTION IN FRANCE.

The French Bible Society held a meeting at Paris early in May of 1849, which the following account is given by a correspondent of the N. Y. Recorder :—

An interesting report was read, and among others the following anecdote was related as given by a colporteur. On asking admission to a house in Paris, the servant inquired what was his business. "To sell Bibles," replied the colporteur. "You need not come in here then," said the servant, "for my master does not believe in the existence of either a God or a devil." After arguing the matter for some time, however, the colporteur was admitted into the presence of an old man seventy-two years of age. After listening to the business of the colporteur, he said, "Well, I am glad to see you. I am now an old man; I feel I must soon die, and I want to hear something about the world to come." After some conversation, in which he made the colporteur relate his Christian experience, he said, "Yes, I will buy your Bible; and what is more, I will give for every year in which I have done nothing for the cause of Christ (and that is all my life,) £1 into the treasury of your valuable Society. Here are £72. And call again soon, I pray you, to tell me more of the way of salvation.

A few remarks were then added by a gentleman present upon the adaptedness and efficiency of the colportage system; in illustration of which he had adduced two instances which had fallen within his knowledge. One of a devoted Christian, who, though not an employed colporteur, determined to give one day a week to the good work. He entered one village, determined to speak to every one he met upon the great subject of their soul's salvation. The first person he encountered was the village curé, to whom, according to his resolution, he spoke, telling him that his express object in coming into the village was to sell the Word of God.

"I am glad of it, sir," said the curé; "it is a good work, and may God bless you in it."

"Then probably you will use your influence with your parishioners to favor my design."

"Oh, no," replied the curé, "I could not do that, for much as I like your circulation of the Work of God, you are, I imagine, a little of what is heretical in your ideas."

"How so, my friend? have you not told me that you believed in salvation only through the blood of Christ?"

"Yes."

"And justification only by faith in him?"

"Yes."

"Then where do we differ?—this is the foundation of all I hope and all I preach."

"Well, sir, I buy of you a Testament for myself, but I can commit myself no farther."

"Well, but you can buy some for your personal friends; do you not wish them enlightened?"

"Well, sir I believe I will buy two more."

And so the good man persevered until he sold to the curé his stock of twenty-seven Testaments.

Another colporteur, bent upon the same glorious errand, entered another village, and found the whole population collected in the streets and public squares, for the celebration of some grand fete. As he approached the crowd, an old man came forward, laid his hand on his arm, and said :

"Step aside, sir, I beg of you, for I wish to speak to you. I know who you are and what is your occupation."

"But sir, I have not the pleasure of knowing you."

"Then let me tell you my history. A few years ago I went to Paris on business, and while there, stopped at a stand of old books, to glance over their titles, to see if any would interest me. I saw a Bible; and taking it up very indifferently, I read the title page once or twice, and was about laying it down again, when a gentleman beside me whispered, 'Buy that book and read it—it will do you good.' I looked up, but he was gone. He did not stop to add a word, nor even did he look back to see if his advice was followed. Moved by curiosity, I bought the Bible; and, sir, from that day to this, it has been my constant friend and counselor, and God has, I trust, blessed its truths to the salvation of my soul. I am old and infirm, and can't do much for the Saviour's cause; but soon after I came home, I collected a class of young men who meet at my house night and morning for instruction out of my Bible. They all became much interested in it, and begged me to procure them each a copy of the sacred Word. I told them I had none but my own precious one, and that I could not part with; but perhaps they could procure one in the village. They made inquiries, but not a single copy of the Testament was owned in the place. Then said they, 'We must send one of our number to Paris to buy some.' But they were poor, and travelling such a distance would be expensive. What was to be done? At length it was resolved that each should bring of his week's earnings the few pence he could afford to lay aside, and thus raise the necessary means. It is now eighteen months since we have been laboring for this object; and now, just as we are ready to put our plan in execution, God has sent you to us, and blessed be his holy name."

It is needless to say that the colporteur gladly supplied them with the number of copies required, and entreated them to persevere in the good work thus happily begun.

A GAME OF FREEDOM.

'Truth is strange; stranger than fiction.'

A short time since, several American ship-masters were assembled in one of the public houses of a large commercial port in the Island of Cuba, and were passing a leisure afternoon, by watching with much interest a game of Billiards between a Spanish merchant, a resident of the place, and an American ship-master, both of whom were considered very skillful players. Several games were played, and fortune favored the American captain; at last the stakes against the Castilian had become quite large, and vexed at his ill-luck and loss of reputation as a skillful player, he proposed to stake his servant boy, a lad of about ten years of age, against the sums due the captain—valuing the lad at $275. 'Take him, take him,' was the cry from every quarter of the room, 'and, if you win the boy, we will redeem him, and make him free.'

The offer was accepted, and the games commenced mid a numerous company of spectators, whose curiosity was excited by the singularity of the stake, and the skill of the players.

The Spaniard's luck seemed to change, and he was evidently leading his opponent, when, too confident of his skill, or excited by the interest manifested around him, he lost his lead and missed a high count he had hoped to make. Now came the moment of either success or defeat to the American, for the balls lay just in a position when a skillful player, aided by good luck could, by one stroke of the mace, count out, but to an unskillful player it would result in a loss of his lead.

The captain hesitated but for a moment, and slowly, yet firmly, drawing home his mace, he struck the ball so firmly and so fairly that he made seven, and won the game.

A shout of triumph went up from the spectators, while the Spaniard, with true Castillan fidelity to his pledge, went immediately to the proper officer, and made the legal transfer of the boy. The American captain, assisted by several of the merchants, immediately made up a purse to redeem the boy, and secure him his freedom, by sending him from the island. For humanity's sake, we wish the captain had made a free will offering of the lad to freedom, but he consented to take considerable less, however, than the value of the boy.

The sum was at once raised, and the boy sent on board a vessel bound to the United States, and now walks the streets of Portland a freeman.

With his long hair and light complexion, he would not here be taken for a colored person; and we doubt not that friends here may be found, who will give a good education, and thus make him mentally, what nature physically has intended he should be, a freeman. [Port. Adv.

THE WALDENSES.

We copy from the Worcester Spy a report of Dr. Baird's lectures on these interesting people :—

The Waldenses are found, not in Switzerland, as many suppose, but in Italy, 200 miles from Geneva. The live in the kingdom of Sardinia. Their country is 18 miles in length, and from 12 to 14 miles in width. Its population is 26,000; 20,000 of them are Protestants, and 4,000 Catholics. To this spot they are confined by law, and are forbidden to hold property in any other part of Italy.

The ancestors of the Waldenses, took refuge in these valleys, in the first centuries, from the persecutions which arose under the Roman Emperors. Amid all the changes of the world, they retained the truth, in its purity, in their mountain fastnesses. In the 11th century, the dukes of Savoy, at the instigation of the popes, commenced their wars of extermination. In 220 years, they passed through 34 wars, and still preserved their national existence. They owed their safety to their position. The old men, woman, and children, were sent to the mountain tops to pray, while the young and strong fought. In one battle 300 of the Waldenses repulsed 8,000 of the invaders. As the enemy defiled along the narrow valleys, rocks were thrown from the overhanging precipices, and many were killed. Cromwell interfered to save them, but at his death, their enemies renewed the attack. The most destructive war, was in the time of James the second. The troops of Louis XIV. attacked them in 1688, and 1,400 were slain. The remaining 3,500 went to Switzerland, in mid-Winter. They were kindly received by the Bernese, and remained with them three years and a half. William Prince of Orange, then sent Col. Arnaud to persuade them to return to their own country. He placed himself at their head, as both minister and leader, and they reconquered their country. Peace was declared in 1692. Since that time, they have not suffered from war, but have been greviously oppressed. Their taxes were far higher, in proportion, than those of the other Italians. They were not allowed to proselyte, but priests were sent among them, to win over their children. These attempts rarely succeeded. When the reformation commenced, the Waldenses sent a committee to Luther, to ascertain his religious views. When informed, they replied that his doctrines were the same they had held for centuries.

From that time they have kept up a communication with Switzerland. Their ministers are educated in that country. The use the French language in their pulpits. Seven young men are supported in their colleges, by the interest of a fund created in Calvin's time. The contributions for their assistance from Protestant countries since that time, would probably not vary much from a half a million. Col. Beckwith, an Englishman, who now resides among them, has done much for their benefit. He has given them about 30,000 dollars, and has built for them 165 school houses.

They have 15 parishes, a college, with 50 students, and a grammar school. Their national flag is a burning lamp surrounded with stars, and encircled with the beautiful and appropriate motto, Lux lucet in tenebris. The king of Sardinia has, during the past year, granted them what they never possessed before, religious liberty. They are now endeavoring to restore the Italian language in their pulpits. God has evidently preserved them to be indeed a light shining in a dark place, that through their influence the true Gospel may be spread in Italy. They send by the lecturer, their salutations to the American churches, and ask their prayers and aid in their great work.

THE CHOCTAW NEW TESTAMENT.

The New Testament was printed in the Choctaw language during last summer, by the American Bible Society, under the supervision of the Rev. Alfred Wright. The following extracts of a letter from Mrs. Wright, after her return with her husband, will show how precious the Word of God is to those sons of the forest :—

"I wish you could witness the joy of the Christian Choctaws. In a letter from an elder of a church 90 miles from us, dated Dec. 6, after expressing his joy at our safe return, the writer says: 'It rejoices my heart very much that the great work of translating the New Testament into Choctaw, has been accomplished. Thanks be unto God. I look upon this as one mark of the mercy and love of God to the Choctaw Christians. When will the Old Testament be translated into the Choctaw tongue?'

"Mr. Fisk told me, [he is a native licentiate,] that the Sunday after he received a copy, he commenced reading the fifth chapter of 2d Corinthians, and when he had read one or two verses, Bospotota, one of the elders, could hold still no longer, but exclaimed, 'Okokko! that is so sweet to me; oh that the books would come, that I might read for myself.'

"Special prayer meetings were held in several of the settlements during our absence to pray for us, and for the completion of this work. It affected us deeply to hear their thanksgiving poured out on our safe return. One of our best men prayed fervently, as follows, but it loses much in putting it into English:

"'Our Heavenly Father, what shall we say to thee for all thy great goodness. We asked thee to take care of our pastor and his wife. We asked thee to give him thy strength that he might be strong. We asked thee to give him thy wisdom that he might be wise to preach in our own language, the good Word which tells us how to be like Jesus, how to love him, how to believe on him, how to be holy. Our Father who sits in heaven, from thy dwelling place above didst hear us; our eyes look upon the face of our beloved friends; our guide stands before us, our eyes look upon the blessed book which he holds in his hands. We rejoice, we give thanks, our hearts are warm, we rejoice exceedingly. (Here his feelings overcame him so that he could hardly proceed.) But we are like children who are never satisfied, we want more now; give us thy Holy Spirit to fill our hearts so full of love that they will run over. Our hearts are like the ground was this summer when there was no rain, hard and dry. Give us thy Spirit like rain from above, so that this good seed, thy holy word, may fall upon our hearts softened as the earth after a shower.'"

A SMOKING DISCIPLE.

I fell in with several such lately, and they seemed so much interested and delighted in the matter, and withal were so regular and systematic about it, that I thought, perhaps this belongs to discipleship. Knowing that I had an old volume that gave the earliest and most accurate account of the disciples, and that had kept the run of them for about four thousand years, I hastened to look into it. I found a good deal about smoke, such as "a smoking furnace," "a smoking mountain," and one about "a bottle in the smoke," but as for a smoking disciple, or a disciple in a smoke, as may be seen in our days, I could not find any account of any such thing.

Not being willing to give the matter up, I considered that some of the old saints lived hard upon a thousand years, and that if they were like some of the modern ones, they would like something to while away the time, so I looked again, but I could not find a Patriarch with a pipe in his mouth; not one! But smoking is a very great comfort to a body, they tell me, and as I knew the prophets were often in trouble, I thought to be sure I should find as much as one with a cigar—but I did not find him. And the Apostles, they too had great need of consolations, for they were [illegible] cold, and hunger, and thirst, and stripes, and prison, &c., and I looked sharp, but could not find so much as a tobacco box among them.

A TOUCHING THOUGHT.—To an afflicted mother, at the grave of her deceased child, it was said, "There was once a shepherd, who under pastoral care was over [illegible] day. One sheep would neither [illegible] nor follow him; he took up her little lamb in his arms—then the sheep came after him."

EDUCATION—No. 3.

From what source, then, are the laborers to come, who shall respond to the varied calls for missionaries, pastors of churches, and preparers of a denominational literature? And by what means, and where, shall they receive that higher finish of education, indispensably required in fitting them for their respective stations? Shall they enter upon those very sacred duties without the necessary qualifications, or shall they go among strangers to get that education which is denied them at home? Or, what is more probable, shall the supply of laborers be far less than the demand?

Two conclusions seem manifest:—

1. But few will be willing to encounter the responsibilities of a missionary, or of the pastor of a church, without literary and scientific, theological and biblical attainments superior to any that can be secured at any academy. That man's mental vision is not very clear, who, in the light of the present age, does not perceive, that should he enter upon the duties of the ministry without thorough mental training, and extensive intellectual acquisitions, he would subject himself to embarrassments sufficient to crush the spirit of any being not possessed of superhuman powers. He must know, that he who would instruct others must himself be instructed. He must know, that the youth every where throughout this broad land are being educated, and that the unlettered public man is not only likely to subject himself to contempt, but also the cause that he tries to advocate. He must know, that wherever vice, prejudice, and superstition, the offspring of ignorance, have taken firm root in any nook or corner of this or other lands, it will require almost Herculean power to tear them from their deep foundations, mellow the soil, and implant, in their stead, the germs of faith, hope, and charity. He ought to know, that the more ignorant, degraded, and sensual any people are, the greater the labor required to elevate them, and the greater the talents required of the laborer. Surely, it can not be deemed an inconsiderate conclusion to affirm, that it is but little less than folly and presumption, for a young man to wish to be ordained to the work of the ministry, who has not attained to a very thorough scholarship. Some there may be, who, either too indolent to apply themselves, vigorously and perseveringly, to what may seem to them to be the dull drudgery of literature, or too selfish to expend the necessary time and means to get an education, will plead the experience of the past against this conclusion. It is readily conceded, that there are among us some efficient ministers, who entered upon their ministerial duties without previously securing those attainments that are ever desirable. But be it remembered, that the advantages of an extensive and thorough education were not seen and felt a few years ago as they are now, and the facilities for securing such an education were, at the same time, very limited. Hence men entered the ministry with such qualifications as the times afforded, and it is granted that very many whose education extended but little beyond the first rudiments of English studies, have, by hard study, and persevering application, nobly sustained the Redeemer's cause, and consequently acquired a well-deserved and permanent reputation. They have, however, labored under numerous embarrassments, which they have sorely felt, and often acknowledged. Be it remembered, also, that qualifications which might have met the wants of a past generation, can not meet the wants of the present, much less of the future. This has been sufficiently shown in another place. Hence it follows, that the past experience of the church can not give us correct data for an accurate judgment in relation to the present or future. The increasingly large number of elements that enter in, to modify the present and future, must be taken in connection with the facts of the past, before the data for correct computation can be complete.

2. Comparatively few will go elsewhere to get an education. Some will do it. There will occasionally be a young man of extraordinary energy, of devoted application, and great moral worth, who, seeing clearly the wants of the denomination, and the importance of superior mental culture, will surmount every obstacle, and become an educated man. But can we reasonably expect that the number of such will be equal to the real wants of the denomination? Far from it; particularly so, since by neglecting to provide the means for securing, at home, the higher qualifications here contemplated, we seem practically to deny the necessity of such qualifications. Hence, is it not reasonable to fear, that the benevolent institutions that we have undertaken to sustain, will languish for want of sufficiently qualified laborers? By what means do we propose to energize our exhausted powers, to enlarge and perpetuate our schemes of Christian philanthropy? It may be replied that our trust is in God, who will train up and qualify laborers for us. To this, it may be, with propriety, answered, that "faith without works is dead." Surely, we have no adequate means for calling out the talents of the denomination. Nor can we have, without an institution for education of the highest grade. Many a young man, whose spirit has been fired with zeal for the cause of humanity, has finally settled down in comparative inactivity, because he saw not among us the way open for a successful preparation for the work that he had at heart.

But, again, some will go elsewhere to get an education. And have we not just reason to apprehend that some of them may, while among strangers, be induced to change their religious creed, and abandon the Sabbath. We may retort upon such, that "they were never very zealously attached to the Sabbath cause, and can be spared as well as not." Doubtless the retort, in some instances, would be just, but in others we may well spare our censures, and seriously consider the question whether we have not been quite too remiss in our duty to them. It need not be thought passing strange that, now and then, a young man who never had many encouragements to get an education, and who perhaps has some times been ridiculed by his own brethren for his folly, should change his creed, while all the influences by which he is surrounded are adverse to his former belief in relation to the Sabbath. Brethren, we misjudge if we suppose that truth has power to make its own conquests, while the professed holders of that truth are inactive. We mistake if we suppose that without a college and theological seminary, we can retain a respectable position among the denominations of the land, or even secure an increase to our numbers proportional to the increase of other denominations. It is a truth beyond controversy, and it is in vain to shut our eyes to its reality, that we are surrounded by obstacles on almost every side, that we are impeded at almost every step, by the disadvantages to which we are subjected in respect to our educational interests.

To all this it may be replied, that, admitting the necessity of an institution among us, such as is now proposed, we must, notwithstanding, do without it, because the funds required to put it into operation, and give it an adequate and permanent endowment, can not be secured. We are, in point of wealth, not equal to the emergency. This reply is either correct, or it is not correct. To ascertain its correctness, or incorrectness, shall next employ our attention.

An Observer.

THE CENTRAL ASSOCIATION.

We had the pleasure of attending, last week, a very interesting Session of the Central Seventh-day Baptist Association, held with the 1st Church in Brookfield, N. Y. It commenced on fourth-day, and its business was completed on the afternoon of sixth-day, although meetings for preaching were continued until the following first-day. The attendance, both on the part of delegates from abroad and residents in the vicinity, was good, and evinced a commendable and gratifying interest in the cause with which the Association is identified.

The Introductory Discourse was preached by Eld. Eli S. Bailey, from the 3d verse of Jude—after which Martin Wilcox was chosen Moderator, and Charles Potter and Gurdon Evans, Clerks.

The Letters from the Churches show that revivals have been enjoyed in several places within the bounds of the Association, but that generally a low state of religious feeling exists. This circumstance is very properly and feelingly alluded to in the Report on the State of Religion, which we copy below, and to which we solicit particular attention.

The Reports from the Missionaries employed within the bounds of the Association do not exhibit that amount of labor performed which we had hoped to hear of. Still something has been done in assisting the Church at Otselic to maintain the ministry of the Word, and in sending a brother to preach occasionally in destitute parts of Lewis and Jefferson Counties. For the coming year, the Association has instructed Bro. Joshua Clarke to spend as much time as he can at Otselic and vicinity. It has also directed that nine months' labor be expended in destitute places in Oswego, Jefferson, Lewis, and St. Lawrence Counties, to which field Br'n Joel Greene and Enoch Barnes were designated.

The subject of Foreign Missions was brought up during the Session of the Association, and seemed to awaken much interest and feeling, which, we hope and believe, will not die away with this meeting, but will lead to efficient action in future. The Mission in China evidently has a strong hold upon the hearts of our brethren in the Central Association, and they desire to see it liberally sustained and gradually enlarged. With this view, and in view also of the low state of the Missionary Association's Treasury, a resolution was passed urging a considerable increase of missionary contributions, and that immediate measures to secure this end be adopted in all of the churches. The opening and inviting field for missionary labor in the island of Hayti, W. I., was also taken into consideration. Many of the delegates expressed their conviction, that the time has come when we ought to enter that field. A resloution was passed calling attention to the subject, and recommending the churches to prepare for that work.

Eld. Enoch Barnes, formerly a preacher of the Methodist denomination, but lately a preacher among our churches in Jefferson County, attended the meeting of the Association; and, in conformity with the custom in such cases, he was examined by the Presbytery in relation to his religious experience and doctrinal views. The examination proved quite satisfactory, and Bro. Barnes was formally acknowledged by the Association as a minister of the Gospel, and received the hand of fellowship from Eld. Eli S. Bailey on behalf of the body.

The subject of Education, and the necessity of a denominational institution in which a thorough collegiate and theological education can be obtained, came up in connection with a letter from the Cor. Sec. of the Eastern Association. A committee of five was appointed to confer upon the subject with brethren from the other Associations. We are not able to give their names to-day.

Delegates were appointed to visit each of the sister Associations at their next meetings—E. S. Bailey and V. Hull to the Western Association, Gurdon Evans to the Wisconsin Association, Joel Greene to the South-Western Association, and Enoch Barnes to the Eastern Association.

The next Annual Meeting of the Central Association is to be held with the Church at Adams, to commence on the fourth day of the week before the second Sabbath in June, 1850; Varnum Hull to preach the opening discourse, and Enoch Barnes alternate. A Semi-Annual Meeting of the Association, (for missionary purposes,) is to be held with the 1st Church in Verona, on the fifth day of the week before the second Sabbath in January, 1850; Joel Greene to preach the opening discourse, and Joshua Clarke alternate.

In compliance with a resolution of the Association, a Missionary Discourse was preached on Sabbath day, by Eld. Joel Greene, and a collection taken amounting to something over fifty dollars.

The following Reports must close this hasty sketch of what we regard as a very profitable meeting.

Report on the State of Religion.

The Committee on the State of Religion submit the following Report, viz: That the letters from the churches show that, as an Association, our spirituality is far below its proper standard. Still, a few of the churches have enjoyed seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. In these letters there is a general expression of desire for a more prosperous condition in spiritual things. We deeply regret that we cannot present, for the encouragement of our brethren generally, a more cheering account of ourselves; and we are exceedingly mortified, that while we profess to derive all our doctrines, and learn all our religious duties, from the Word of God, and testifying by our profession, as we do, against the errors of the church, and corruptions of the world, we should be so negligent in the cultivation of that pure spirituality within ourselves, by which only we can effectually rebuke the errors and corruptions which we denounce; that while our position in the world, as a religious community, and the indications of Providence, demand of us great zeal and liberality, we should be so insensible to these just and important claims of our gracious Redeemer. May the Lord speedily, universally, and effectually revive his work among us.

W. B. Maxson, Chairman.

Report on Publications.

The Committee on Publications beg leave to report: That they have looked over the field which naturally comes under their observation, and find some very encouraging facts. They learn that the American, Sabbath Tract Society is actively engaged, as heretofore, in the printing and circulation of books and tracts to vindicate the claims of the true Sabbath—a work in which it is entitled to our hearty sympathy and cordial co-operation. They also learn, that the Seventh Day Baptist Publishing Society has been organized, in accordance with a Constitution prepared by the Convention to which this Association last year appointed delegates—that the Society is about to commence operations by taking charge of the denominational paper, the Sabbath Recorder—and that the paper is to be considerably enlarged and improved, rendering it still more worthy of a liberal patronage. In view of these facts, we would propose the following resolutions:—

1st. Resolved, That we recommend each church, within the bounds of this Association, to adopt some mode of raising a yearly contribution to the funds of the American Sabbath Tract Society.

2d. Resolved, That we advise our brethren throughout the Association to patronize the publications of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society, and especially to exert themselves to increase the circulation of our denominational paper, hereafter to be published by that Society.

Report on Education.

Your Committee on Education ask leave to report, That the examination of this subject has afforded them much heart-felt pleasure—pleasure, however, not entirely unmixed with regret. Many brethren of this Association are making unwearied exertions to promote the interests of Education among us, and appear to withhold no efforts to place their own children and friends in a position to enjoy as good advantages as our schools afford them. Their money or sympathy is not withheld from the support of our institutions of learning, and we feel assured that many are heartily engaged in promoting and sustaining this important and deeply interesting object. During the past year, there has been a steady increase in the number attending our Institutions within the bounds of this Association, by which those engaged in sustaining them feel encouraged to continue their efforts in this cause, asking the prayers of our brethren for its advancement. Yet while they are thus encouraged to persevere, there seems to be a lack of interest and coöperation on the part of some, indeed a large portion of our brethren, which is deeply to be regretted. Your Committee would urge upon such a prayerful consideration of the bearing which education must have upon the advancement of truth in the world. No arguments appear to be really necessary to convince any one of its great importance. God, in his providence, chooses to work by means, making his children the honored instruments in promoting the cause of truth; and intellectual power, properly sanctified by the grace of God, appears to be the strong arm by which the sword of the Spirit is to be most effectually wielded. The Macedonean cry is coming up to us from almost every land; but how can we give effectual aid to our perishing fellow beings, unless first trained to wield the weapons of truth. We hold that an educated ministry loses much of its efficiency, unless sustained and directed by intelligence in the church. What avails it, to possess the means of disseminating truth, unless we have a disposition to do it; and what can stimulate us more powerfully to action, than an extensive knowledge of the world around and within us. We would then urge upon the members of the Association the necessity of interesting themselves in the work of general Education.

A communication from the Corresponding Secretary of the Eastern Association has been referred to us, relative to the appointment of a committee to correspond with committees from the other Associations, on the subject of a College and Theological Seminary for our people, and we would recommend that a similar committee be appointed by this body to confer with them.

Also, a rather informal request or desire has reached us from the Baptist Free Mission Association, engaged in establishing a college at Cortland Centre, N. Y., that they may receive our sympathy and patronage in supporting their schools. We would recommend that the above committee ascertain the advantages offered at that institution, and report on the propriety of complying with their wishes.

G. Evans, Chairman.

Light in Spain.—Mr. James Thompson, writing from Madrid to the editors of Evangelic Christendom, sends a translation from the Spanish of "Two Prayers in use by some Spaniards before and after reading the Scriptures, on Sunday." These prayers are remarkable for their clear, evangelical character, for the just estimation of the Scriptures which they express, and for their fervent supplications both for Divine illumination in the reading of the Scriptures and for their diffusion among the Spanish people. They are remarkable likewise for the specific acknowledgement of national sins which they contain, to wit: cruelty to the Jews, faithlessness to the Moors, the mode and object of the conquest of America, injury to the Africans in the horrible traffic in slaves, the cruel treatment of Spanish Protestants, the sanctioning of the Inquisition, and finally, "in giving the name of Christian religion to the combination of idolatries, superstitions, hypocrisies and deceptions taught and practiced" in Spain. These prayers are privately distributed.

The Missionary at the Custom House.—following is in circulation:—"An American Missionary recently entered a box of Bibles at the Custom House at Constantinople, valuing them at a certain amount; but the Turkish officials, who are in the practice of affixing a sliding scale of valuation to suit themselves, regardless of invoices or oaths of importers, appraised the Bibles at double the value placed upon them by the missionaries, and demanded the ad valorem duty of 7 per cent. on the valuation. In this dilemma, the missionary availed himself of a regulation of the Turkish law, which permits duties to be paid in kind, and paid them in Bibles, five out of every hundred. After that he had no more trouble. He paid what duty he liked. They wanted no more Bibles."

Help for Italy.—The opening of evangelical labors has led to the formation at Geneva of a Protestant Society, of which Col. Tronchin is President, for the printing and circulation of Protestant books in the Italian States. They have already printed the first and second volumes of D'Aubigné's History of the Reformation, and desire aid from this country to print the third and fourth. They wish likewise to publish biographies of Italian martyrs, with some of the writings of Savonarola, and such others as may be approved by D'Aubigné, Gaussen, La Harpe, &c. The Committee of the American Tract Society have resolved to appropriate $1,000, as soon as it shall be contributed for that purpose, and will be glad to receive contributions so designated by persons interested in that object.

Bible-burning in Belgium.—The Canadian Bible-burners are not alone in their glory. A letter from Belgium, in Evangelic Christendom for May, mentions the burning of a Bible by a Catholic priest, who was enraged at finding the book in the house of one of his parishioners, The priests of Belgium have an equal horror of tracts. "From the moment that a tract enters a house," cried a vicaire of the same vicinity, in his sermon, "the devil enters too, and remains as long as the tract is kept." With admirable consistency, so the narrative proceeds, "he said also that he would pray to God two hours every day, until the Holy inquisition was restored." And this occurred in a large and populous commune.

A Knotty Question.—A writer in the Church and State Gazette, London, raises a question, the solution of which is as difficult as it is important. It seems that the authorities of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States have made a valid appointment of Rev. Dr. Boone as Bishop of China, and he has been for some years a resident at Shanghai, within his diocese. And lately, the Church of England, by law established, acting through the British Queen as its acknowledged head, has made an equally valid appointment of Rev. Dr. Smith as Bishop of Victoria, to reside at Hong-Kong, in China, having a territorial jurisdiction, it is supposed, precisely coëxtensive with Bishop Boone's. Now the question arises, How is the jurisdiction of the two bishops to be kept distinct, so that conscientious Episcopalians may know that they are enjoying valid ordinances, and putting forth canonical obedience, so as to be sure that they are in the right way to be saved?

Baptisms among the Indians.—The Indian Advocate says:—"It is with gratitude to the Great Head of the Church, that we are permitted to report interesting revivals at two of our stations this month, and the baptism of at least twenty-two converts. Fifteen of these are reported among the Creeks, and seven among the Weas. This is the first revival which has ever occurred in this latter tribe, and is the first fruits of seed which has been sown with patience and hope for many anxious years; and fully proves the truth of the promise: 'In due time ye shall reap, if ye faint not.'"

Suicide.—Mr. David Sweet, formerly of Alfred, N. Y., but recently of Townsend, Sandusky County, Ohio, while on his way, with his wife, to visit the place of his former residence, soon after leaving Rochester, exhibited signs of insanity; and in a little time the evidences were clear and unmistakeable, that reason had in a great measure fled. After leaving Dansville for Alfred, he committed suicide by making an incision in his neck with his pocket knife Of the particulars of the affair, the writer of this is not informed.

N. V. H.

Sentiments of Pius IX.—Rev. Mr. Balch, a Universalist minister, visited the Pope last winter. While waiting in the ante-chamber he had some conversation with "Father Grassi," the priest who was to present him. Among other subjects, the Freedom of the Press come up.

"This the Priest thought had been productive of much evil, and would be of more. 'The Lord have mercy upon us,' said he, in a manner of deep sincerity. I complimented the liberal measures of the Pope. He shook his head, saying, 'He had seen his mistake. They people are not prepared for freedom. They are not satisfied with what the Pope has given, (why should they be?) The success of the revolutionists in France has excited all Europe. Everything is unsettled. We live in a fearful age.' And again he sighed faintly, 'May the Lord have mercy upon us.'"

A Hardy Soldier of the Cross.—A correspondent of the Indiana Christian Herald, in giving an account of the meeting of the Logansport Presbytery, says that most of the members have enjoyed good health during the past year. One of them, in a private circle, made the following statement relative to himself:—

"I have been in Indiana for forty-six years; in the Wabash valley thirty-one years; in the ministry something more than twenty years; but I have never had the head-ache, tooth-ache, ear-ache, or back-ache; I have preached daily for three months at a time, but never was fatigued; I have preached eight sermons in three days, but never was so fatigued that I could not have preached again immediately; and I can make long journeys or short ones, without any oppressive sense of weariness."

Jesuits at Work.—The papers have a translation of a letter, signed by Metternich, and believed to be really his, which shows that ancient fox to be at work in the affairs of Europe, aided by his old allies, the Jesuits, of whom he says:—

"The Jesuit fathers have done their duty; they have organized in silence all the French clergy into a vast electoral committee. The majority of the peasants obey blindly the village curate; the army and the working class are greatly influenced by the Napoleonian propagandism; and among the most incorrigible republicans, there exist, as always, schisms and personal hatreds. We have seen what the traveling members of the Society of Jesus are capable of doing at the time of the presidential election, where it gave a crowning proof of its influence.

The Cholera.—The official reports for this city, up to noon of Monday, June 4, gave 65 cases and 25 deaths. Since that time the daily reports have been as follows:—

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Tuesday, | June 5, | at noon, | 39 cases; | 11 deaths. | |
| Wednes., | " 6, | " | 60 | " | 10 " |
| Thursday, | " 7, | " | 38 | " | 19 " |
| Friday, | " 8, | " | 26 | " | 12 " |
| Saturday, | " 9, | " | 40 | " | 19 " |
| Sunday, | " 10, | " | 16 | " | 10 " |
| Monday, | " 11, | " | 24 | " | 12 " |

There have been a number of cases reported in Brooklyn; on Saturday, June 9, 4 cases were reported, 2 deaths. In Cincinnati, there were, from noon June 8 to noon June 9, 32 cases, 8 deaths. In St. Louis, in the same time, there were 26 interments of cholera cases. At Boston there were 3 or 4 cases reported. The Boston Journal of Thursday says: "We learn from a gentleman who left new Orleans on the 17th ult., that the cholera was raging in that city at that time to as great an extent as at any previous period this year. The New Orleans papers maintain a complete silence on the subject, though for what reason it would be hard to conjecture. The fact that the cholera is raging in that city is well known to every merchant having business connections in New Orleans. Many Boston merchants connected with the New Orleans trade, have large consignments of goods there, which cannot be sold, owing to the entire prostration of business by the prevailing epidemic.

The literary world and a host of juvenile readers will learn with sorrow, that the celebrated Maria Edgeworth, the once popular novelist, is dead. She died after a few hours' illness, Monday, May 21, at Edgeworthtown, in the County of Longford, Ireland. She was in her 83d year.

The Legislature of Connecticut has just passed a law, transferring the power of granting divorces from the Legislature to the Superior Court. 552 divorces have occurred in that State in five years.

The cupola on the third Presbyterian Church, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, was struck by lightning on the 29th ult., and caught fire. The rain soon extinguished the flames.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the arrival of the steamer Europa, we have foreign advices to the 26th of May. We give a summary of the news brought by her. The danger and probability of a general European war seems to be greater now than at any previous time during the year.

The most important news from England is of an attempt to assassinate the Queen. Shortly after six o'clock on the evening of the 19th, her Majesty and Prince Albert, whilst returning in an open landau from Hyde Park down Constitution Hill, to Buckingham Palace, an Irishman named John Hamilton fired a pistol at the Queen, from within the railings of Green Park, just as the carriage was passing the curve of the hill close to the triumphal-arch. He was instantly taken into custody, and great excitement ensued. The Queen and Prince were not injured, and did not appear much alarmed.

From France it appears that a great part of the soldiery voted for Red Republican candidates. Nine Socialists are returned from Paris. Red Republicans are returned from Lyons. Marshal Bugeaud has been ordered to Paris, where there are said to be signs of insurrection. Coquerel, the Protestant Unitarian advocate of Church and State, and of the compulsory restoration of the Pope, is re-elected. It is expected that all the Cabinet except Odilon Barrot and Tracy will retire on the assembling of the Chambers. The Italian expedition has swamped them.

The cholera appears to be increasing in Paris. The number of hospital cases reported from the 1st to the 15th of May inclusive, was 26,272 sick, and 12,806 deaths—being an increase of about 25 per cent.

From Rome accounts are received to the 10th. Large bodies of men continue to arrive in the city from the mountains to fight for the Republic. Gen. Oudinot had given notice to Naples that he should not again attack the city. Garibaldi, one of the Triumvirs, has marched an army into the Neapolitan territory, and the Neapolitan army have in consequence abandoned Frascuti and retreated from the territory of the Republic, to defend Naples. The Spanish forces have been defeated at Fluminico.

The Roman Minister of Foreign Affairs has issued an address to the whole Catholic world, in which he complains that combined Europe is trying to impose on three millions of Romans a government they have pronounced as forever fallen.

Pius IX., on learning the resistance of the Romans, is said to have declared that he would not return to Rome at such a price, and to have sent a message in consequence to the King of Naples and to General Oudinot to induce them to retire.

The Austrian troops have entered Bologna, and committed great cruelties. On the other side, the scales of success between the Hungarians and Austrians seem to hang in equipoise. The Russians are advancing toward Vienna. The Neapolitans have met a decided repulse from Palermo, and all Sicily is again in a ferment.

The King of Prussia has formed a new ministry, under Detmold. He ordered fifty-five of the Prussian Deputies in the Frankfort Assembly to retire, but they refused, and appealed to the Assembly, which sustained them, 289 to 2. Chaos seems to have come again in Germany.

The Emperor of Russia has recognized the French Republic, and has simultaneously issued a manifesto announcing his determination to interfere in the Austrian and Hungarian quarrel, in which he speaks of the mission of his "God-preserved nation, and in the name of the Almighty Leader of battles and Lord of victories, commands his armies to move forward for the extinction of rebellion, and destruction of audacious and evil-intentioned men." The Emperor of Austria had gone to meet the Czar of Russia at Warsaw.

It is reported from numerous sources, that the Hungarians, under Bem, surprised a body of 30,000 Russians in the defiles of Rothenthrum, and completely disarmed them, driving them back on Crawcaw. The revolution will thus be transferred to Poland. It is said the Hungarians took 60 guns and a great quantity of ammunition and forage.

Father Mathew sailed in the Ashburton, on the 26th of May, for this country.

Considerable quantities of gold had arrived at Hong Kong, China, from California, and several vessels were being fitted out laden with goods for San Francisco.

THE "EMPIRE"—CORONER'S VERDICT.—The Coroner's Jury at Fishkill, on the east bank of the river, protracted their inquiries until Monday noon, June 4, when they rendered their verdict as follows:—

"That the deceased persons came to their death on the night of Thursday, May 17th, 1849, by drowning aboard the steamboat Empire, which was sunk in the Hudson River, near Newburg, by coming in collision with the schooner Noah Brown; that the said steamer was coming up the river, and the said schooner going down, beating against the wind; that the Jury believe that said collision was occasioned by the lack of vigilance on the part of Levi Smith, pilot of the said steamboat, not seeing the said schooner soon enough to avoid her, and by the conduct of Richard Robinson, captain of said schooner, in adhering to the custom of the river, that a sailing vessel on the wind meeting a steamboat may keep her course; while, if he had sooner gone about, he might have avoided said collision."

Another body has been found, that of Miss Delia Avery, of Connecticut, one of the company of Mr. Ladd.

The Grand Jury for the U. S. District Court have indicted the pilot for manslaughter, and have presented to the Court a general representation of the evils of running these long boats on the river in the night-time, at the full speed of 16 miles per hour. They also urge that conversation in the pilot's room ought to be prevented, and that the captains of steamboats ought to be men of practical experience in the navigation of the river.

"They also present, that in their opinion the rule of law which requires steamboats, which are always regarded as vessels going before the wind, and consequently under complete control, to clear an approaching vessel on a tack, by passing under her stern, should be rigidly enforced. The observance of this obviously proper rule, in every case, would beyond all doubt effectually prevent any contact or other calamity of so serious a nature as to endanger life."

FROM HAYTI.—The schooner King Philip arrived at Boston on the 5th inst. She sailed from Miragoane May 15, bringing news from Port-au-Prince to the 12th. Nothing new had transpired at the capital since the return of the President. All was apparently quiet. The monopoly law was still in force, much to the detriment of the merchants there, who were at their wit's end as to how they should pay for the cargoes of provisions sent out to them. Business was dull. The currency was bad enough, twelve and a half paper dollars being equal to one of specie. From a Bermuda paper we gain some additional particulars of the battle between the Haytiens and the Dominicans. In the last battle, which was near Arna, the Haytiens were completely hemmed in, and two entire regiments captured. Also five hundred horses. The loss of life on the Haytien side was very large. It is also stated that the Dominican fleet had put to sea in pursuit of the Haytiens. Neither fleet is, however, on a very magnificent scale.

BOSTON PROJECT OF A RAILROAD TO CALIFORNIA.—A public meeting in Boston has appointed a committee to present Mr. Degrand's project of a railroad from St. Louis to San Francisco, to the President, and to ask the aid of the government. It proposes that a company be chartered, with a capital of $100,000,000; of this, $2,000,000 is to be paid in by private subscription, and the remainder to finish the road, not exceeding $98,000,000, it is proposed to borrow of government, in stock payable in London. It is also proposed that Congress shall give to the Company a strip of land ten miles wide, north of the track, and shall grant the right to take gravel, stones, &c., from the public lands, to construct the road. To secure the loan of United States' stock, and the carrying out of the company's contract, it is proposed that the United States shall take a mortgage of the road and its property.

SUMMARY.

The Romney (Va.) Intelligencer mentions the circumstance that on Saturday night week, eight negro men belonging to citizens of Hampshire County, absconded, and although liberal rewards had been offered for their apprehension, no tiding had been received of their arrest. The Leesburg (Loudoun) Whig also states, that a number of negroes (slaves) have absconded from that County, whom, on being arrested in Maryland, exhibited free papers so well executed as to lead to the belief that they had been systematically supplied, and the road through Maryland to Pennsylvania made plain to them.

Buffalo was visited by a thunder storm on Saturday last, during which the main tower of St. John's Church was struck with lightning, and considerably damaged. The choir of the church were rehearsing at the time, immediately under a portion of the tower, but sustained no other injury than a severe shock, and something of a fright, as the fluid passed off on the outside. Two or three persons in the vicinity of the church were prostrated by the concussion.

The New-York and New England Telegraph Company is now engaged in constructing a line of Telegraph between New York and Boston, under a charter from the Legislature of New York, making use of Bain's invention, which has been patented by our government. The whole line is under contract, and is expected to be completed and go into operation in August. The section between New York and New Haven is nearly finished, and will probably be in operation in the course of the present month.

A communication in the Boston Courier, from the late editor of that paper, states, that Mr. William Carter, of Cambridge, has a healthy and well-formed calf, having a coat of wool instead of hair! There is no perceptible difference in the appearance of the animal's hide from that of a sheep of the same age. Like the sheep, the face and the lower part of the legs are covered with short and not very pliant hair; the rest of the body has a covering of wool, which, to all appearance, may afford as liberal a fleece as a true Saxon or Merino.

The Albany Evening Journal describes a counterfeit $5 note, purporting to have been issued by the Troy City Bank. It has a vignette of Manhatta, (a man seated on the earth with a stream of water passing out of a vessel under his left arm) There are two portraits on either side of the vignette—the one on the left side is that of Jefferson. The Bank has never issued any notes with such a vignette, or such portraits.

The Arkansas Intelligencer of the 19th ult., tells an extraordinary tale concerning a new gold "placer" in that State, near the Arkansas River, which was first discovered some twenty years ago, and the extreme richness of which has but now been disclosed. Mining parties have already been fitted out, full of hopes of success, the particulars of which we will notice when the proper proof is presented.

An Irishman named Delany was knocked down and robbed of $15 near Wilmantic, Conn. On examination of his head, the skull proved to be fractured in one place on the back part larger than a dollar piece, from which, subsequently eleven pieces of bone were taken, and three other flesh wounds were discovered in the same region. He is likely to recover. Dennis Daly and John McDonald have been arrested on charge of having committed the outrage.

An alarming sickness is said to prevail in Blairsville, Penn., which has attacked some thirty or forty of the citizens and proved fatal to six. The sickness by some is supposed to have originated from some poisonous Root Beer, made and vended by a citizen of the town, who was himself the first to fall a victim. Others suppose it to be a malignant fever.

Gen. Edmund P. Gaines died of the cholera, at New Orleans, on the 6th inst. He was 72 years of age.

The ship Portsmouth, just arrived at Warren from a whaling cruise, reports that on the 18th of March, lat. 57 S., long. 74 W., she experienced a severe gale. While scudding before it, a dense cloud gathered in the West, out of which issued a violent hurricane and many balls of fire. One of these struck the cutting pendants at the main-mast head, and fell in fragments on the deck, setting fire to the mast-head and rigging, and doing other damage. We do not remember ever to have heard of such an occurrence at sea.

The Taunton Gazette of the 7th says that the steam saw-mill belonging to the Steam Mill Company, situated on the Taunton Great River, in Dighton, was destroyed by fire on Wednesday. Loss estimated at $10,000. Insured as follows: $1,500 in the New England Office, Concord, N. H.; $1,200 in the Bowditch Office, Salem; $1,350 in the Marblehead Office, and $1,000 by the Bay State Company, in Chelsea.

Mr. Cheney, writing from Panama to the New Hampshire Gazette, gives the "latest." He says there is but one cart in the city, and that was constructed by a Yankee. The wheels are made of four-inch plank, entirely solid, and tired with thin iron. The whole establishment is of mahogany, and is a curious affair. A pair of bulls are pressed into service, the yoke being tied to their horns, and the concern is used to transport water into the city, for which the owner gets ten dollars a day. No wheel carriage, with the exception of carriages for cannon, was ever used in Panama before.

The South Boston Gazette is indebted to a friend for the following particulars:—A month or two since, the lady of Mr. Edward Lowell, of Gardiner, Me., presented her husband with two girls and a boy at a birth. In honor of the three towns adjacent, the girls were called Hallowell and Augusta, and the boy Gardiner. The town of Gardiner, on hearing the particulars, presented the mother with a beautiful cradle, capable of holding all three. The town of Hallowell then presented a mammoth baby-jumper, big enough for the three. The citizens of Augusta have not yet made their present.

The Directors of the Bank of Commerce in this city have passed a resolution that they will issue no notes after the 31st of October next, nor any kind of paper credits to circulate as money. This is in view of the provision of the State Constitution, going into operation on the 1st of January next, rendering personally liable for the debts of the bank all stockholders, to the amount of their stock, in all banks issuing circulating notes.

Capt. Simon Parkhurst, of Royalton, Vt., chanced to drop some beans in a hill of cucumbers, and the vine-plants in the hill with the beans were unmolested by the bugs, while the others were destroyed. He is satisfied, by the trial which he has made, that beans growing with the vines will keep off bugs. If so, it is easily done, and a general knowledge of it may be very useful.

According to a moderate calculation, ten millions of volumes are printed every year in Germany. There are upwards of a thousand German authors' names in the semi-annual catalogue of the Leipzig book fair. It is computed that the number of authors now living in Germany, who have published one or more books, exceeds fifty thousand!

A dispatch from St. Louis, of the 28th ult., says: The burnt district is being rapidly cleared, and preparations are making for the rebuilding of stores and houses. The western waters being in good navigable order, boats are arriving and produce pouring in, and the levee is assuming its wonted life and activity. The hotels are crowded by many who are en route for El Dorado.

House's new telegraph has been constructed between Boston and Providence, and will commence operations in a few days. From Providence it is now being rapidly built to New York, by the way of Springfield, Hartford, and New Haven. It is constructed in the strongest and most perfect manner. It is intended that the new line shall be finished through by the 1st of July.

We understand that Messrs. J. W. Foster, of Ohio, and J. D. Whitney, of Massachutts, have been appointed United States Geologists, to take charge of and complete the survey of the mineral lands bordering on Lake Superior. This survey had been heretofore conducted by Dr. C. T. Jackson, of this city.

The amount of wool exported from the State of Michigan in the year 1847, exclusive of the amount manufactured into cloth for home consumption, was 968,416 pounds, valued at $213,851 50. The exports for the year 1848, it is expected, have exceeded those of 1847. The number of sheep in the State is estimated at 400,000 to 500,000.

The Charleston Mercury states that the nefarious slave-trade is again very active in Cuba, several thousand slaves having been landed within the last two months, and other thousands being shortly expected. The Captain General's fee is generally understood to be three doubloons a head, or $51.

The Catholic fast of Friday in each week, has been abolished at Cincinnati, as it had been previously at St. Louis, during the prevalence of the cholera—meats, especially if smoked, being considered of less danger than fish and vegetables.

The Government has ordered a reconnoisance to be made from Fort Smith to the Bay of San Francisco. Lieut. Simpson, of the Topographical Engineers, assisted by Lieut. Hagen, have been ordered upon this service. This reconnoisance, in connection with those heretofore made by Fremont, will enable Congress to decide upon a route for a Pacific Railway.

Ten thousand emigrants from Germany have been engaged by the North American Land Company, acting in conjunction with companies in London and Germany, and will arrive in this country during the present year.

The cotton factory owned and operated by S. P. Irwin & Co., known as the Ashland Mill, was entirely destroyed by fire on Tuesday last. Insured for 17,000, as follows: $8,000 at the Providence Offices; $5,000 at the manufacturers', Boston, and $4,000 at the Ætna, Hartford.

On Saturday evening last, near Binghamton, a team crossing the track of the railroad was struck by the locomotive, one of two women in the wagon was killed, and the other had both legs broken. The horse was also killed, and the driver badly injured.

The Steubenville Union says that a Dr. Crawford of Bloomfield has been detected in several forgeries, obtaining thereby some $8,000 from a number of Banks in his neighborhood. He has absquatulated, and $500 reward is out for him.

A slave was condemned to be hung in Fauquier County, Va., the other day, for stealing a quantity of bacon from a meat-house.

There were 75 deaths from Cholera in St. Louis for the week ending June 4.

The price of bricks at St. Louis is becoming extravagantly high, in consequence of the late fire there. The Reveille says the prices which were 5 or 6 dollars a thousand before the conflagration, have already advanced to $11.

The venerable Dr. Miller has resigned his Professorship in the Princeton Theological Seminary. But the Presbyterian Assembly have voted him the salary and dignities of the office for life—he to teach when agreeable.

Nearly one hundred thousand of the new gold dollar pieces have been already coined at the mint. The first one was struck on the 8th ult.

The entire consumption of wheat in the British Empire is about 30,000,000 of quarters in a year.

The boiler of the new ferry-boat Argo exploded on Wednesday, week before last, as the boat was leaving Detroit; in consequence of which accident, Mr. Foster, the builder of the boat, was killed, and Mr. Towner, the engineer, was severely injured.

Another new planet has been discovered by Sig. Esparis, a Neapolitan astronomer. This is the ninth new heavenly body which has been added to the solar system by the discoveries of the last four years.

On the 21st ult. 100,000 pounds of lead ore, estimated to contain also $7,000 worth of silver, were shipped from Little Rock; the ultimate destination being Liverpool.

Isaac Newman, a veteran of the Revolution, died at Broadalbin, Fulton Co., on the 30th ult. in the 99th year of his age.

The Rhode Island papers announce the death of Dutee J. Pierce, a distinguished lawyer of that State, and formerly a member of Congress.

Two steamers, the Hudson and Saratoga, ran together on Lake Erie, on Sunday last, by which both of them were much damaged, and two colored cooks killed.

Nashville papers of the latest date say that ex-President Polk is lying dangerously ill.

There is no prospect of stopping the crevasse near New Orleans soon.

Y., commencing on the fourth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in June, (20th day of the month,) 1849, at 10 o'clock, A. M. Introductory discourse by James Bailey. T. E. BABCOCK, Cor. Sec.

Christian Psalmody.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office. It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to GEO. B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Railroad from Albany West.

ON and after Tuesday, May 1, 1849, six trains will leave the dépôt of the Albany and Schenectady Railroad Company daily, Sundays excepted, viz:

At 6 o'clock, A. M., for Buffalo, through in 15 hours; at 7 o'clock, A. M., for Schenectady; at 9 o'clock, A. M., for Buffalo, through in 18 hours; at 12½ o'clock, P. M., for Schenectady; at 2 o'clock, P. M., for Buffalo, with emigrants and express freight, through in 23 hours; at 7 o'clock, P. M., for Buffalo, through in 18 hours. Passengers for Saratoga Springs and Whitehall can take any of the trains for Schenectady and Railroad or Stages by Plank Road route to Saratoga. Baggage cars and through baggage men run the whole distance between Albany and Buffalo. Baggage taken free by Railroad wagons between steamboats and Railroad.

ALBANY, April 30, 1849. E. FOSTER, Jr.,
Secretary Albany and Schenectady R. R. Co.

Mail Line from New York to Boston.

REGULAR MAIL-LINE BETWEEN NEW YORK AND BOSTON, via Stonington and Providence.—Inland Route, without ferry, change of cars, or baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and MASSACHUSETTS, Capt. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 5 o'clock, P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock, P. M., or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities.

The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday.

The MASSACHUSETTS will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

N. B.—Passengers, on the arrival of the steamers at Stonington, proceed immediately in the splendid Railroad cars to Providence and Boston. A baggage-master accompanies the steamboat trains to and from Boston, to take charge of the baggage.

Constitution of a Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society.

ART. 1.—This Society shall be known by the name of "The Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society."

ART. 2.—The object of this Society shall be to print and publish such periodicals, books, &c., as shall meet the wants of the Seventh-day Baptist Denomination, and promote the cause of Christ generally.

ART 3.—Each contributor of five dollars may become a Member of the Society, and each contributor of twenty-five dollars may become an Honorary Director, with the privilege of participating in the deliberations of the Board of Managers.

ART. 4.—The Society shall hold an Annual Meeting, at which it shall elect a President, a Vice President, a Corresponding Secretary, a Recording Secretary, and a Treasurer, who, together with four others elected for the purpose, shall constitute a Board of Managers to conduct the business of the Society, having power to make their own by-laws, and to fill any vacancies that may occur in their body.

ART. 5.—The Board of Managers shall meet quarterly for the transaction of business, at such time and place as shall have been appointed at a previous meeting. The Recording Secretary shall call extra meetings of the Board, whenever any three members of the Board shall request him to do so.

ART. 6.—The minutes of each meeting of the Board shall be signed by the Chairman and the Recording Secretary.

ART. 7.—The first Annual Meeting of the Society shall be held in the City of New York on the fourth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, 1849, (25th day of the month;) and subsequent Annual Meetings may be held at such times and places as the Society shall direct. At these meetings the Board of Managers shall present a Report of their transactions, together with the Treasurer's account.

ART. 8.—Should there at any time, on the presentation of the Annual Report of the Board of Managers, be a surplus on hand, over and above what may, in the judgment of the Board, be required to meet the wants of the establishment, the Society shall divide such surplus in equal sums among the following benevolent objects, viz: Missions, the circulation of religious Tracts, the education of candidates for the ministry, and the support of indigent superannuated ministers or their widows and orphans. Should the Society for any reason ever be dissolved, its property, if any, shall be divided in the same manner as above provided in case of surplus.

ART. 9.—This Constitution may be altered at any Annual Meeting of the Society, by a vote of two-thirds of the members present.

DERUYTER INSTITUTE.

REV. JAMES R. IRISH, Principal.

SPEAK GENTLY TO A LITTLE CHILD.

Speak gently to the little child, so guileless and so free,
Who with a trustful, loving heart, puts confidence in thee.
Speak not the cold and careless thoughts which time has taught thee well,
Nor breathe one word, whose bitter tone distrust might seem to tell.

If on that brow there rest a cloud, however light it be,
Speak loving words, and let him feel he has a friend in thee;
And do not send him from thy side till on his face shall rest
The joyous look and beaming smile that mark a happy breast.

Oh, teach him!—this should be our aim—to cheer the aching heart,
To strive where thickest darkness reigns, some radiance to impart;
To spread a peaceful, quiet calm, where dwells the noise of strife,
Thus doing good, and blessing all, to spend the whole of life;

To love with pure affection deep, all creatures great and small,
And still a stronger love to bear for Him who made them all.
Remember, 'tis no common task that thus to thee is given,
To rear a spirit fit to be the habitant of Heaven.

LIEUT. BEALE'S OVERLAND JOURNEY.

Lieut. Beale was sent, early in November last, as a bearer of Dispatches, from our Government to the United States officers in California, and upon the Pacific. He was entrusted with communications to Col. Washington at Santa Fé, Col. Mason in California, and Gen. Lane in Oregon, and was required to pass through the extensive regions beyond the Mississippi to reach his destinations. He left Fort Leavenworth, on the Missouri, the 20th of November, with a command of 17 mounted men, all raw recruits, and a few adventurers.

After a tedious and fatiguing journey, they reached Bent's Fort, and learned that Col. Fremont and his party had passed about ten days before. In crossing the Toas or Ratons mountains they encountered all the severities of Winter in those difficult and gigantic passes, covered with snows of an unusually cold and inclement season. Many of their mules perished from the rigors of the weather and march, and a number of the men were frostbitten and disabled from farther service.

Upon arriving at Santa Fé, which he reached on the 25th of December, Lieut. Beale give permission to such of his men as were unwilling to proceed to return, and seven did so. He was unwilling to be accompanied in the dangers and trials before him by any upon whom he could not rely with implicit confidence. To supply the defficiency, Col. Mason allowed him to enlist eight additional mounted men who were desirous of engaging in the expedition.

With this force Lieut. Beale started from Santa Fé on the 11th of January, and was soon destined to encounter the most trying difficulties. The Sierra de los Membres, a vast range of lofty mountains, enveloped in snow storms, and the route was most hazardous and oppressive. So intense was the cold, that several mules were frozen to death, at night, even under tents, and covered with blankets. The fortitude of a number of the men failed, and a sergeant and six privates deserted. Of these, as well as of the seven who had previously left, no subsequent information has been received. They no doubt perished under the violence of the weather or were assassinated by the Indians who infest those regions.

Lieut. Beale now pressed on with indomitable resolution, through indescribable difficulties, to the head waters of the river of Gila. Passing to the southern side, he followed the trail which winds in a zig-zag manner along the precipitous side of the lofty monntains that prevail in this region. This section of country has been falsely said to furnish opportunities for a good road or roads to California. From Lieut. Beale's description, it is a continuance of the most rugged and inaccessable mountains, with vast gorges, peaks and declivities, covered perpetually with snow, and presenting barriers to be passed only by incredible exertions.

No track for a wagon or any wheel vehicle can ever be made along this route. The men could only press along the ascents by the aid of their hands as well as feet, and the tenacious mountain mules were often precipitated from the declivities, and rolling down the extensive slopes were crushed to pieces, with every bone broken, and even their saddles so destroyed that they could not be farther used.

This route crosses the head waters of the Gila frequently, so as to avoid the barriers which constantly jut upon and overhang the stream. That river, in this portion of its extent, is not susceptible of even canoe navigation. Its current is of arrowy swiftness, shooting over rocky and irregular falls, with short serpentine windings, through narrow and dangerous cannones, that produce whirlpools and cascades, which would engulf any water-craft entrusted to its control.

After descending the Gila to its confluence with the Colorado, and the latter stream to within 50 miles of the Gulf of California, Lieut. Beale and his little party struck out, northward, across the intervening desert for San Francisco. This desert is very extensive and more barren than that of [illegible]. The weather here was intensely hot, and greatly afflicted the men, who had been suffering amid the frosty rigors of the mountains, but now found themselves in an [illegible] desert, deprived of water, except such as they bore with them.

A travel of one hundred and twenty miles brought them, however, on the first of April, in sight of the welcome dwellings of San Francisco, and in the vicinity of these gold regions that surpass in prolific wealth, the Hesperian Gardens of antiquity. [Mobile Register.

A NEW RACE.—A hitherto unknown race of people has been discovered, it is said, in the interior of Africa. The men are tall and powerfully built, standing 7 to 7 1-2 English feet in height, and black in color, although destitute of the usual character of negroes in features. Mehemet Ali sent an expedition up the "White Nile," in search of gold, and there found this new race of people—1,500 of whom [illegible] to [illegible] down to the [illegible] of the river [illegible] day. The name of the king [illegible] by the people is Bari, and its [illegible]. They raise [illegible] tobacco, [illegible].

CULTURE AND PRESERVATION OF POTATOES.

Having last year, notwithstanding the severe drought, succeeded in growing and preserving a fine healthy crop of potatoes, I have decided to furnish you with an account of the circumstances under which they were produced and my opinion relative thereto, for insertion in your journal, should you deem it worthy of a place therein.

About the first of May, I planted five acres in the following manner: The soil was a dry, micaceous, sandy loam, gradually rolling, with a southern exposure; the seed used was both white and purple Mercers, principally large ones, cut in three slices, and rolled in gypsum, and allowed to lie but a few hours after cutting. The field was old sward, chiefly of moss and garlics; the manure applied was entirely from the yards, made from the cow and horse stables, and from the sties, about twenty-five two horse loads per acre, spread broad cast before the plow—the land having been heavily limed for several years previous. The planting process commenced with the tillage, by dropping the pieces of tubers, (prepared as above,) about one foot apart in the bottom of every other furrow, which was five inches in depth and ten inches wide, strewing them with ashes and fine charcoal, from a locomotive in which pine wood was consumed, about twenty bushels per acre; the plowing was performed in the usual manner, in lands of 25 yards each.

Immediately after planting, the ground was thoroughly rolled. After it had lain a few days, it received repeated harrowings, lengthwise of the furrows, in the warm part of the day, which was continued until the tops were two inches in height, after which they remained without tillage until they were some eight or ten inches high, when the cultivator was passed between the rows, and the weeds, if any, removed.

They then received a light top dressing of gypsum, after which they remained till fit to harvest, which was done as soon as the skins of the new tubers were firmly set, but before all the tops were entirely dead. We began to dig about the first of September, before the autumnal rains commenced. They were put in a dark, cool cellar, and spread on the ground floor, about eighteen inches thick, where they remained for two months, when they were assorted and placed in bins about four feet deep, there to remain until marketed in the spring. They have so far kept perfectly, not a trace of disease being visible in the entire crop.

The yield was about two hundred and fifty bushels per acre, which was a far greater product than I anticipated, on account of the excessive drought. The whole expense of the tillage of this crop did not exceed four cents per bushel, independent of the planting and harvesting, which cost not less than ten cents a bushel, making the aggregate cost of producing the five acres—including the seed at eighty cents per bushel—two hundred and thirty-nine dollars. Potatoes of the quality of mine are now worth eighty cents per bushel, in the Philadelphia market, which would make the net value of the crop seven hundred and sixty-one dollars. Truly, this is not so lucrative as some of the miners of California have represented the rinsing of gold to be; nevertheless, I think the Mercers well roasted, set quite as well upon an empty stomach as gold ore; and judging from the effect produced upon the morals of the nations in which the precious metals are found most abundant, I much prefer being classed among the cultivators than the miners.

A MAGDALEN ASSOCIATION.

The Rosine Association, in Philadelphia, for the reformation of young women who have led immoral lives, gives an example worthy of imitation in every city. Witness the result of its efforts for the last year:

Sixty-four women have been received into the house of the Association, taken from scenes of vice and pollution, from the gaming-table and the drunkard's bar; from courses leading to the alms-house and the prison, and placed in a position where they had the opportunity of receiving a degree of education, a knowledge of tailoring, mantua-making and sewing generally, and of being instructed in household duties. To these have been added the advantages resulting from the almost daily association with the members, familiar reading of the written Gospel, and the spoken Word, through the living instrument. Many of these have appreciated their privileges, and it is hoped their future may be an enduring record of the blessings that may be derived from a residence for a season in the "Rosine home." Within the past year one of the inmates has married respectably, and gone West; and a number are situated in families where there good conduct entitles them to respect. Two have been received again by their friends; the future opens brightly before them. Three who have been under the care of the Association are now church members; two of the inmates became qualified to work upon their own account, and have received a compensation for their labor. The managers have paid upward of two hundred visits to the homes of misguided women, and succeeded in reclaiming several. Through the intelligence office of the Association, situations have been procured for one hundred and seventy-seven women and children.

During the year, 1,001 garments have been made in the house; $1,888 11 have been received towards the funds of the society, and $1,725 98 expended. Four hundred and eighty ladies are members, each paying one dollar. The sales in the store of the Association have amounted to $2,000.

PRAIRIE LIFE.

The Boston Traveler publishes a letter, dated "Wolf River, 25 miles west of St. Joseph, May 4th," and post marked St. Joseph, the 8th. It gives some incidents of camp life and affords a glimpse of its troubles. The writer says, they arrived at St. Joseph in six days from St. Louis, and then commenced their camp life:

"The day was very warm. There was a thunder storm in the fore part of the evening, and about 10 o'clock the weather changed and became very cold, and it rained nearly all night. This being the first time any of us had tented, we were a sorry looking set in the morning. Mr. V., Mr. P., and myself set ourselves to and got breakfast. The first thing after breakfast, we pitched our tent in the woods, on the territory of the Pottowattomie Indians. The next day we went to get the mules [which had been pastured for some time, a few miles from the camping ground.] They were as wild as wild asses' colts. Captain V. and myself, being the only men accquainted with horses, it was thought we were also acquainted with the long eared animals; but I must confess I was ignorant of muleology. Captain V. lassoed one of them, and he threw himself some three or four times before we got the bridle on him; we tied up seven of them, by 11 o'clock, and started for a blacksmith. The next day we had a hard day's work; worked all day harnessing the mules; we had them down something like a hundred times in the course of the day, hitched them to our wagons, and started with four wagons. Since starting, we have lost a fine mustang pony, which cost us $60; he had more speed than anything we could muster, and has gone on ahead for California. We have heard from him once; he was pulling for Fort Laramie at the top of his speed. My bedding consists of a buffalo robe, two blankets, and a hair pillow. Some nights these are not sufficient, and I am obliged to add my cloak. The weather thus far has been more changeable than any I ever experienced. The Pottowattomie Indians around us are not hostile but very thievish, and we are obliged to keep a strict watch every night.

PALACE OF THE INQUISITION.

"I found my way at last into a quiet garden with a bubbling fountain in the center, which seemed the very spot for sacred meditation; but around the garden was a low building with grated windows. The rough walls of the rooms within were covered with inscriptions marked with a bit of charcoal—some ascriptions of praise—some bitter and complaining. In one I read, 'Let us pray to God that the good people may have pity.' In another, 'Take away oppression, O God.' 'Too long have I been confined here at the caprice of calumniators without admission to the sacraments.' 'How much have I suffered here!' Here beneath a death's head and cross-bones was written, 'O mori!' Here, 'Scipio Gaetani—eight years have I been imprisoned here.' There was one short but expressive sentence in the English language: 'Is this the Christian faith?' In one prison a heavy trap-door was lifted from a dark opening, exposing a deep black vault; below in a corner lay a mass of bed-clothes and tattered garments, among which I recognized a worn, dirty strait-waistcoat, apparently intended for a female. In several of the rooms were pipes through which, probably, food was given to the wretched inmates.

"In another part of the building a dense crowd was assembled around the entrance to a vault, which seemed to pass beneath the whole palace. I made my way through the mass and down the rough steps, and recognized, by the light of the torches upon the walls, heaps of human bones scattered over the floor. Others were protruding from the wall of earth at the side, yet untouched; and although it was difficult to distinguish in this confused mass sex, age, or even the different parts of the body, one at least seemed to be that of a female; and and the seventeen thigh bones which might be counted here and there, told the story of nine poor victims." [Cor. N. Y. Tribune.

THE SNOW FLEA.

In the National Intelligencer we find a communication from Mr. Josiah F. Polk, giving a description of what he calls the Snow Flea, seen by him in the winter of 1826, in the neighborhood of Grand River, in the State of Michigan. He says: "I found them to be exceedingly minute, apparently destitute of members, but in constant elastic motion. They would spring up to the height of 18 inches or more. When I first observed them (the latter part of November) they did not exceed in size the point of the smallest needle. I watched them through the coldest winter I ever witnessed, and carefully observed their progress to maturity till the month of May, when that which in December was a shapeless and scarcely visible creature, became a perfectly organized fly, with legs, wings, and antennæ. The body was slender, and more than a quarter of an inch long. The wings were longer. Perhaps the whole length was two to three-fourths of an inch. When I first saw them, the snow was but a few inches deep, and although it increased to three feet or more in depth, those little creatures, by their perpetual motion were always on the surface; but how they contrived to maintain their locality amid the furious winds, is to me a mystery. Afterward on Rock River, in Wisconsin, in time of summer, I saw myriads of the flies. Various insects have been known to exist in snow. One kind, somewhat resembling a spider, is not uncommon as far North as Sweden and Norway."

CURIOUS CASE OF INSANITY.

At No. 16 Center-street, New York, on the 22d of May, a fire broke out, in the third story, which was extinguished without material damage to the building. It appears that this story was occupied by a man named Thomas Danon, as a looking-glass and picture frame manufactory, and also as a lodging room. For some days he had manifested evidences of insanity, but the inmates of the house supposed it was brought about by an improper use of liquor. On the Sunday night previous, a noise resembling that of men wrangling was heard, and upon repairing to the room it was discovered that he was alone, and after expostulating, he was induced to retire. While alone, on the day of the fire, he stripped his person until perfectly nude, and varnished his body. He then took his clothing, trunk, and a quantity of picture frames, and piled them up in one corner of the room, setting fire to the pile. As soon as it began to burn briskly, he threw himself upon the burning pile, and in an instant his whole person was enveloped in flame. He then rushed to the window, and kicking out the sash, climbed to the roof by the gutter of the eave, the varnish on his body still burning. He was discovered by John McCluster, who hastened to the top of the house, and succeeded in arresting the flame, not, however, until he was so badly burned that life was despaired of. He is represented to have been a young man of steady and industrious habits, and the causes which led to this alienation of mind are unknown.

THE CHAMELEON AND THE PORCUPINE—A FABLE.—A chameleon once met a porcupine, and complained that he had taken great pains to make friends with everybody, but, strange to say, he had entirely failed, and he could not now be sure he had a sincere friend in the world. "And by what means," said the porcupine, "have you sought to make friends?" "By flattery," said the chameleon. "I have adapted myself to all I met; humored the foibles of every one. In order to make people believe that I like them, I have imitated their manners, as if I considered them models of perfection. So far have I gone in this, that it has become a habit with me, and now my very skin takes the hue and complexion of the thing that happens to be nearest. Yet all this has been in vain, for everybody calls me a turncoat, and I am generally considered selfish, hypocritical, and base." "And no doubt you deserve all this," said the porcupine. "I have taken a different course; but I must confess that I have as few friends as you. I adopted the rule to resent every injury, nay, every encroachment upon my dignity. I would allow no one even to touch me without sticking into them one or more of my sharp quills. I determined to take care of number one; and the result has been, that, while I have vindicated my rights, I have created a universal dislike. I am called old touch-me-not, and, if I am not as much despised, I am even more disliked than you, Sir chameleon.

PRINCIPLES.—A lad drove his team four miles to a mill to get a load of flour, to haul to the canal. When he arrived at the mill, the miller told him that they had no loadings; the mill was out of repair, but he would help him to a load, so that he might not lose his half day's work, which would amount to one dollar. Said he, "You may drive across the way to the distillery, and load, and I will pay you just the same price for hauling the load of whisky that we do for hauling a load of flour.

The lad thought a moment and said, "I don't know what father will say, but our horses don't haul whisky," and so he wheeled them off, and drove home and told his father.

"Right," said the father, "you've done right, John. It's money well spent, John. Support your principles any where and every where, and be kind about it, but decided."

BOSTON MERCANTILE LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.—The 29th Annual Report of this Society shows it is in a very prosperous condition. It numbers 1,145 members. It possesses an invested fund of $16,100. It has a library of 5,819 books, 579 of which have been added during the last year. Its fine course of lectures the last season paid expenses and left a net profit of $1,115 49 in the Treasury. It takes 28 daily, 61 weekly and semi-weekly newspapers, and 21 standard Reviews and Magazines. Its expenditures, aside from its lectures, were $3,727 80, and its receipts $3,879 23, saving it clear of debt and above board.

VARIETY.

It is a terrible thought to remember that nothing can be forgotten. We have somewhere read that not an oath is uttered that does not vibrate through all time, in the wide-spreading current of sounds—not a prayer lisped that its record is not also to be found stamped on the laws of nature, by the indelible seal of the Almighty's will.

There is no death-bed, generally speaking, so full of terrors as his who has lived all his life partly under the influence of conscience, but not wholly. The voice of conscience, though many times disregarded, has never been wholly drowned. And now that it has gained a hearing, it speaks in a tone of thunder.

The ancient town of Raynham, Mass., is in Bristol county, near Taunton; it has neither trader, lawyer, doctor, nor post-office, and is the seat of the oldest forge in America. It was built in or about 1670, by James Leonard, from Pontypool in Wales, and having been repaired from generation to generation, is now in full tide of successful experiment, turning out anchors which are in request by ship-builders from Bath to Baltimore.

The trial of John W. Crafts for conspiring to wreck the ship Franklin, which was begun in the U. S. District Court at Boston above six weeks ago, was terminated by a verdict of acquittal. The Jury were nine hours in deliberation. It is understood that the case will next be tried in suits for the insurance.

"I never knew any man," says an old author, "who could not bear another's misfortunes perfectly like a Christian;" which reminds us of the old lady who thought every calamity that happened to herself a trial, and every one that happened to her friends a judgment!

The Hallowell Gazette, in commenting on practice of "sitting at church in prayer time," says: "We remember of a good minister, who once prayed fervently for those of the congregation who were 'too proud to kneel and too lazy to stand.'"

General Fessenden, of Me., once doubted whether a little boy, who was offered as a witness, understood the nature and obligations of an oath, and proposed to examine him on that point. "My boy, can you repeat the Lord's Prayer?" "Yes, sir," was the instant reply; "Can you?"

In a speech recently delivered by Lord Brougham, in the British Parliament, he stated that £180,000,000 had been already invested in railroads in Great Britain, and that £150,000,000 would have farther to be paid up, to make good existing subscriptions.

From a recent exhibit of the Methodist Book Concern in New York, its assets appear to be $643,217 60, while its liabilities amount to only $8,403 94. The profits of the concern are annually divided among the several Conferences.

The Cincinnati Commercial says that a Mrs. Tuxford of that city, having been slandered by a school teacher named Singer, went to the school, and cowhided him in the midst of his pupils.

One hundred and fourteen Scotch immigrants, in good health, principally farmers and mechanics, and mostly Protestants, arrived at Boston on the 1st.

The total income of the British "Wesleyan Missionary Society," for the year 1848, was £104,136, equal to about $500,000.

The Young People's Mirror,

A handsome Quarto Volume, containing upwards of one hundred Engravings, having but ONE AIM, to advance the Interest, Happiness, and Welfare of the Youth of America, at the very small price of "FIFTY CENTS."

MINISTERS, Colporteurs, Postmasters, Teachers, Parents, and Guardians, are invited to aid in circulating this work among the young, for they may be assured that it will be precisely such a work as they will take pleasure in recommending to those over whom they severally exercise an influence. For example, the Minister in his Sunday School, and his pastoral visits among his flock; the Colporteur in his lectures, and in his visits of love from house to house; the Postmaster in his office, where the young are sent for letters; Teachers, who are constantly training the young mind for the future; and Parents and Guardians, who bear the solemn responsibility of moulding human character, and watching over and directing aright the expanding intellect of youth, may all present our enterprise directly to those for whose benefit it is chiefly intended, and through its instrumentality each may aid himself in the work in which he is engaged.

☞ TERMS TO AGENTS.—To those who are willing to aid in circulating the Young People's Mirror in the neighborhood, the Publisher will credit them with three copies for each dollar so received, and send them per mail as directed.

 Young people clubbing together in fives, and sending the Publisher two dollars, will receive five copies of the paper, mailed to one address. EDWARD WALKER,
114 Fulton street.

COMMENDATIONS OF THE PRESS.

We commend this work to the attention of parents, as a valuable one for their children. Let them subscribe for it on the first of January, when the volume will commence. It will be a fine New Year present. The matter of it, we can say from our knowledge of Mr. L., will be such as to entertain and instruct the young.—Poughkeepsie Telegraph.

The "Mirror," we predict, will be a great favorite with our juvenile population.—Republican (Monticello, N. Y.) Watchman.

From the number before us, we have no hesitation in recommending it to all classes as a valuable publication.—Utica Observer.

If the number before us is a fair specimen, it must be considered the cheapest, and one of the most desirable papers for young people printed in the country.—Portland (Me.) Journal.

It promises to be a delightful periodical for youth.—Philadelphia National Eagle.

It is very neat in its appearance, is finely embellished, and is well filled with matter highly useful and interesting to the class for which it is intended.—Belfast (Me.) State Signal.

We most cheerfully commend the publication to parents and guardians as a valuable work for youth of both sexes. Fifty cents cannot be better expended, looking to interest and instruction.—Freeman's Journal, Cooperstown, N. Y.

It is well printed, admirably selected, beautifully illustrated, and we really think the best and cheapest of the periodical publications prepared for youth.—Bangor (Me.) Gaz.

The "Young People's Mirror" is a monthly periodical, well edited and liberally illustrated, which will come to be welcomed, we have no doubt, by many thousands of young readers. It is but fifty cents a year, and if it maintains the promise of its initial number, it is "bound to succeed."—Knickerbocker Magazine.
